Sixth. Encouragement of conservation practices in this country and of better farming methods in foreign countries: The American farmers made a remarkable record in World War II. They produced enough food not only to feed the American people better than ever before, but they produced food for our armed forces in the field and even more food to aid in feeding our allies.

But the necessities of wartime farming resulted in a relaxation of many soil-conservation practices. President Truman believed that America must expand its soil-conservation program as soon as possible to prevent future dust bowls. No more could we risk a return to the dust storms of the depression days of 1929–30.

The President also wanted America to demonstrate its modern farming techniques in other countries and thus spur greater agricultural production. In this way world food production could be increased more rapidly, and the strain taken off our own economic and agricultural resources.

Nothing was done by the Eightieth Congress on the soil-conservation proposal. But it did give the administration authority to aid foreign farmers.

Seventh. Allocation and inventory controls: Shortages have been the rule in the American postwar economy. Steel is scarce. Lumber is in short supply. Grain supplies are at low levels.

The President realized that the law of supply and demand eventually will resolve the problems created by shortages. But the President also realized that the law of supply and demand takes time.

So President Truman recommended controls on important goods to relieve current shortages in basic industries. Allocation and inventory controls could assure enough lumber and steel for the housing industry, steel for important defense projects and grain for bread rather than for livestock. Congress did not act. Nothing was done.

Eighth. Extend and strengthen rent control: The President urged better rent controls in order to protect the millions of tenants in this country. The President saw that the present legislation, with such loopholes as the provision for gunpoint voluntary rent increases, must be improved greatly to give the tenants sound protection. Literally millions of families had been victimized under the weak provisions of the mock rent-control law passed by the first session of the Eightieth Congress.

In the second session, after almost 3 months of hearings and debate, the Congress enacted a measure extending rent control another year to March 31, 1949.

Congress did not follow President Truman's request to strengthen rent control in either act. The final bill included provisions for "voluntary rent increases," gave more power to local boards, and decontrolled the use of building materials for amusement facilities.

President Truman signed the bill because he said it was "better than no rent control at all." He added:

> The bill does not carry out all the recommendations I have made to the Congress for stronger rent-control legislation and will not give tenants all the protection they should have during the present housing shortage.

And while this mock control bill was being passed, the Republican leadership continued to ignore the President's request for an investigation of the real-estate lobby.

Ninth. Selective rationing: High prices are rationing goods for too many American families. High meat prices make meat, which should be a staple, a luxury in many families. Men must forego needed clothing because of high prices.

Obviously, such rationing by price is not the American way of doing things. President Truman suggested a democratic way to distribute scarce goods. He recommended selective rationing.

This was what the President wanted to do:

When supplies of, say, pork chops got short, the President could impose rationing. If shoes became scarce, they could be rationed.

The President did not ask for over-all rationing such as was necessary in wartime. The President did ask for authority to stop run-away inflation on goods basically affecting the cost of living.

The Senate Banking and Currency Committee held hearings for several weeks in January and February on the President's anti-inflation program.

Workers, bankers, businessmen, housewives, students, veterans—persons from all walks of American life were heard. The witnesses agreed that inflation was here, that it was bad for the American economy to let prices run wild, and that something should be done about high prices.

But the committee failed to recommend any legislation following the hearings. In addition, the committee did not issue a formal report on the hearings.

A subcommittee of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee considered a plan to give the President stand-by meat-rationing authority. But this proposal was defeated by a 3-to-2 vote of the subcommittee.

The House Banking and Currency Committee did not hold any hearings whatsoever on anti-inflation legislation.

The Congress did enact one anti-inflation measure. This was the bill passed December 19, 1947, the closing day of the special session.

The principal provision of this Republican-sponsored measure called on the President to negotiate voluntary agreements with industry to hold prices in line.

When this measure was passed, the leaders in Congress explained that they wanted to see what effect it would have on high prices before considering mandatory allocation, rationing, or price ceilings.

The President has attempted to negotiate voluntary agreements with several industries, including bakers, brewers, and steel makers.

But so far only one industry has signed a voluntary anti-inflation agreement—that being the freight-car building group. Obviously few of America's working men and women are concerned about the mounting cost of freight cars.

Recently, the Joint Committee on the Economic Report issued its analysis of the problems of inflation. The high lights of the report were:

First. Price, wage, and allocation controls in time of peace were opposed.

Second. Government spending was called one of the principal reasons for the present inflation.

Third. No public works projects should be undertaken at present.

Fourth. Corporate taxes should not be increased.

Fifth. Excise taxes directly affecting the cost of living should be removed.

Sixth. Reclamation and drainage projects should be completed to provide more farm land.

Seventh. More study should be given to credit controls.

Eighth. Fertilizer production should be increased.

Ninth. Victory gardens should be planted.

Tenth. Grain should be conserved.

Eleventh. Housewives should shop more intelligently, use substitutes for high-priced foods and cooperate in food-saving measures.

Twelfth. Production should be increased.

Thirteenth. Thrift should be encouraged.

That was the record of action—and inaction—of the Eightieth Congress on the important inflation problems. This record can be summed up in three words: Nothing was done.

TAXES

President Truman opposed over-all tax reduction, pointing out that the prudent, businesslike thing was to reduce the national debt during the present era of Democratic prosperity. But Congress voted to cut income taxes and total revenue by about $5,000,000,000. The Republican leadership refused to consider that increased demands were to be made on the Treasury of the United States and went ahead with this unwise plan. It would seem that political considerations and not the national welfare were paramount.

The President recommended the following tax program to Congress in his state of the Union message January 7:

> I recommend * * * that, effective January 1, 1948, a cost-of-living tax credit be extended to our people consisting of a credit of $40 for each individual taxpayer and an additional credit of $40 for each dependent. Thus the income tax of a man with a wife and two children would be reduced $160. The credit would be extended to all taxpayers, but it would be particularly helpful to those in the low-income group.
> It is estimated that such a tax credit would reduce the Federal revenue by $3,200,000,000. This reduction should be made up by increasing the tax on corporate profits in an amount that will produce this sum—with appropriate adjustments for small corporations.
> This is the proper method of tax relief at this time. It gives relief to those who need it most without cutting the total tax revenue of the Government.
> When the present danger of inflation has passed we should consider tax reduction based upon a revision of our entire tax structure.

But Congress passed its own tax-reduction bill over the President's veto. In these critical times the Government's income was reduced by at least $5,000,000,000.

The passage of this tax bill will prevent the Federal Government from making large payments on the national debt. The measure also endangers a balanced budget. With Government expenses continuing high because of the European recovery program and the defense program, the tax cut may even mean deficit financing.

Even the strongest supporters of the Republican tax bill now concede that it may be necessary to increase taxes very soon because of high but necessary Government expenditures.

The proponents of the tax reduction measure have defended it on the grounds that most of its benefits went to the lower-income groups.

But a comparison of tax cuts under the President's and the Republican's plans shows:

A man with a wife and two children, whether he earned $3,000 or $25,000 a year, would get an additional $160 spending money under the President's plans. But the Republican measure worked this way:

A man with a wife and two children who made $3,000 a year got a tax reduction of only $90 a year under the Republican bill.

A family of four with an income of $4,000 a year got merely a $114-annual-tax-reduction under the Republican bill.

But a family of four with an annual income of $25,000 got $3,045 more take-home pay under the Republican bill.

And a man with a wife and two children who had an income of $50,000 a year received $7,533 more take-home pay under the Republican measure.

Thus it is evident that the President's measure would have given real help to the common man, but that the Republican tax-reduction bill gave the real relief to persons in the higher brackets, the privileged few.

In his message vetoing the tax bill on April 2 the President said:

> It is bad policy to reduce taxes in a manner which would encourage inflation and bring greater hardship, not relief, to our people. It is bad policy to endanger the soundness of our national finances at a time when our responsibilities are great in an unsettled world.
> I am confident that the men and women of our country prefer the maintenance of our national strength to a reduction in taxes under the present circumstances.

Later the Senate was told of a broadside request by the Republican National Committee asking that a substantial portion of the tax reduction be contributed to the party treasury. This apparently was a bill for services rendered.

HOUSING AND RENT CONTROL

President Truman repeatedly has urged Congress to pass housing legislation. Since the end of World War II the President has recognized the increased need for Federal aid and encouragement to solve the housing shortage. But the Republican leaders of the Eightieth Congress bowed to the lash of the real-estate lobby and did nothing.

The President set forth his latest housing recommendations in a special message to Congress on February 23 in which he proposed:

> I recommend that the Congress enact at the present session legislation directed toward five objectives.
> 1. To continue and strengthen rent control.
> 2. To stimulate a higher volume of home building on a sustained basis, with special emphasis on rental housing, and with proper safeguards against possible inflationary effects.
> 3. To reduce building costs.
> 4. To assist communities in providing low-rent housing for families in the lowest income groups.
> 5. To aid cities in rebuilding and modernizing run-down areas.

Congress continued rent control, with a weak weaseling bill, through March 31, 1949. The President signed the bill as the lesser of two evils, declaring it was "better than no rent control at all."

The other parts of the President's housing program are embodied in the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill.

This measure was reported by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee in April 1947. But the bill did not pass the Senate until almost a year later.

The Joint Committee on Housing studied the housing problem for more than 6 months and concluded that the T-E-W bill would go a long way toward easing the shortage of homes.

But continued opposition of one group delayed the housing legislation month after month. That group was the real-estate lobby. The National Association of Real Estate Boards charged that the housing bill was socialistic and communistic.

And what are the details of this legislation that is so roundly condemned?

Most of the provisions of the bill aid, rather than harm, the real-estate interests. Then why does the real-estate lobby continue to fight the legislation?

One section of the housing bill provided that 100,000 units shall be built annually for 5 years with Government funds. This was the public-housing section.

This public housing would be financed by the Federal Government but managed by local governments. The units would be rented by persons with low incomes—those who cannot afford to buy or rent houses and apartments built by private industry.

Private industry will be busy for 10 to 15 years trying to meet the demand for housing from middle and high income groups. Private industry has never been interested in building or able to build the kind of low-rent housing President Truman has proposed.

This public housing proposed by the T-E-W bill would aid the groups hardest hit by the housing shortage. The proposal would not harm the building industry. Construction of houses and apartments for low-income groups has never been undertaken by private industry because profits from such work are little or nothing.

The other sections of the housing bill would aid the real-estate interests. Some of these proposals are:

First. The Housing and Home Finance Agency would study means of lowering production costs of housing.

Second. Efforts would be made to overcome the shortage of building materials.

Third. Mortgage insurance programs of the Federal Housing Administration would be extended.

Fourth. Financial aids would be extended and broadened for manufacturers of housing and for large-scale site construction of lower-cost housing.

Fifth. A program of yield insurance would be encouraged to guarantee return to builders of apartment houses.

Sixth. A long-range farm housing program would be started.

Seventh. A Federal-city slum clearance program would be developed.

When this sound legislation was sent to the House in April, the House Banking and Currency Committee held long hearings to review all the housing arguments. Finally, in the closing days of the session progressive Democrats managed to persuade a few Republicans to vote, 14 to 13, to include the T-E-W provision passed by the Senate in the bill reported out by this House Committee.

But the House leadership was still opposed to the public-housing features of the bill.

The House Republican leaders ordered the Rules Committee to drag out a decision on whether to bring the bill up on the floor for a vote.

Then after these delaying tactics the Republican leaders ordered the Rules Committee to kill the housing bill. The committee obeyed by voting 6 to 2 to table the measure June 16.

Once again the House leaders refused to let democracy take its course through full and open floor debate of a bill that already had been approved by the proper committee.

The Rules Committee, set up to schedule legislation for floor debate, has been turned into a policy-making body by the GOP leaders.

After the committee voted to table the bill, the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee introduced a new housing bill containing all the provisions to help the real-estate interests but omitting the public-housing section that would aid the people who most need help.

The House Republican leadership had succeeded in burying adequate, effective housing legislation.

The Congress did pass one so-called housing bill. It contained one worthwhile provision for Federal insurance of loans for nonprofit veterans' housing cooperatives.

It also gave substantial help to private building financing agencies by permitting the Government to buy mortgages guaranteed by the Veterans' Administration and the Federal Housing Administration from banks and other financial groups which have lent money to veterans buying homes. Net effect of this is to help banks get rid of mortgages on high-priced homes sold to veterans at present exorbitant prices. This was a boon to the real-estate lobby.

Even Republicans have admitted that this bill is a sham.

It sends something smaller than a midget to do a man's job.

Insofar as constructive, adequate legislation to solve the housing problem, the action of the Congress can be summed up in these words: Nothing was done.

NATIONAL HEALTH PROGRAM

A national health program, with national medical insurance as its cornerstone, has been part of President Truman's legislative program since 1946 but the Republican Congress saw no need to protect or improve the Nation's health.

The President has recognized that millions of Americans are denied medical care each year because they cannot afford it. The President believed Americans should pay for their medical care in the same way in which they provide for their old age—through an insurance plan.

President Truman made his latest plea for a medical program in his state of the Union message January 7. The President said:

The greatest gap in our social-security structure is the lack of adequate provision for the Nation's health. We are rightly proud of the high standards of medical care we know how to provide in the United States. The fact is, however, that most of our people cannot afford to pay for the care they need.

I have often and strongly urged that this condition demands a national health program. The heart of the program must be a national system of payment for medical care based on well-tried insurance principles. This great Nation cannot afford to allow its citizens to suffer needlessly from the lack of proper medical care.

Our ultimate aim must be a comprehensive insurance system to protect all our people equally against insecurity and ill-health.

A few committee hearings were held on the health-insurance program during the Eightieth Congress. But the Congress adjourned without taking any action on the President's recommendations.

When the Republicans in Congress did talk about a health program, they discussed a measure sponsored by the chairman of the Senate Republican Policy Committee.

This Republican legislation would have given some aid only to the very poor persons who were in need of help. The Republican bill was a dole for the unfortunate.

Under the Republican measure, the average working man would not be able to be provided adequate medical care by a Federal-insurance program.

The Republican leadership in both Houses refused to consider even their own pitifully inadequate bill to put a few Americans on a medical dole.

The Republican leadership refused to consider the realistic medical insurance program advanced by President Truman. The Republicans called the President's insurance program socialistic.

It should be pointed out that the 1944 Republican Party platform said:

We pledge our support * * * of these * * * programs relating to health and the stimulation by Federal aid of State plans to make medical and hospital service available to those in need.

But—nothing was done.

FEDERAL AID TO EDUCATION

The American education system is in the midst of a crisis. The shortage of teachers continues. Many school buildings are inadequate. States are unable to raise sufficient funds to educate their children. Yet the Eightieth Congress did nothing to correct the situation.

President Truman has been concerned with the threat of inadequate education to the fundamentals of democracy. He has warned Americans many times that they must improve their school systems.

The President said in his state of the Union message January 7:

Another fundamental aim of our democracy is to provide an adequate education for every person.

Our educational systems face a financial crisis. It is deplorable that in a Nation as rich as ours there are millions of children who do not have adequate schoolhouses or enough teachers for a good elementary or secondary education. If there are educational inadequacies in any State, the whole Nation suffers. The Federal Government has a responsibility for providing financial aid to meet this crisis.

The President recognized that the Republican inflation had contributed much to bad school conditions.

More money is being spent for schools today than 7 years ago. But school conditions are worse today than they were 7 years ago.

Funds spent on schools have increased by 66 percent in the past 7 years. But, at the same time school expenses have increased 86 percent, due to inflation.

The inequalities in school systems are shocking, due to the difference in taxable wealth in various parts of the country. In many areas schools are supported through almost confiscatory taxes. Yet these areas still are unable to build adequate school systems because of their low incomes.

A comprehensive survey of American schools by the National Education Association showed that Federal aid to education was the only answer to the school problem in the United States. The NEA heartily endorses Federal aid.

The President recommended help for American education along the lines of the Federal aid to education bill passed by the Senate early in April.

This measure authorized the expenditure of $300,000,000 in Federal funds to bolster the schools in every State.

The States would be allowed to distribute the Federal funds in the same way that State and local money is allocated.

In no way would the legislation have interfered with schools administered by the States and the cities. The sole purpose of the bill was to equalize and improve American education.

The Senate acted wisely in approving the measure and sending it to the House.

However, the House Education and Labor Committee held no hearings on the measure.

As a result, the House failed to act on the Federal aid to education legislation.

As the House refused to act on the Federal aid to education bill, President Truman made another plea for its enactment in a speech in Los Angeles. He said:

I appointed a Commission to make a survey of the educational situation in this country. That Commission made a formidable report and pointed out exactly what the condition in the schools in this country is—what the conditions are today. And I made a recommendation to the Congress that the Federal Government make a contribution to the support of the schools of the Nation. No action—no action. It is the most disgraceful thing in this country that the teachers in this country are not adequately paid.

There are conditions in nearly all the public schools in the country where the teacher has so many pupils under her care that she doesn't even have time to learn their names. Something must be done about that.

The bill has passed the Senate. It wouldn't take 10 minutes for it to pass the House if they weren't roosting on it over there. They should stay in session until they pass the bill for the assistance of education in this country.

Despite these moving pleas, despite the action of the Senate, despite the urgency, the Eightieth Congress failed to act. Nothing was done.

SOCIAL SECURITY

The social-security laws are one of the major accomplishments of the Democratic administration. The laws are providing an excellent way for millions of Americans to assure themselves of an income during old age.

But it has been apparent almost since the social-security legislation became effective in 1935 that more workers must be brought under the laws.

Household workers should be covered. Farm laborers should be included. The self-employed should be given the benefits of social security.

In addition, existing benefits should be increased because of the high cost of living. But the Republican Party did nothing to aid the American people achieve real security.

On several occasions President Truman has urged Congress to broaden the Social Security Act. The President said in a special message to Congress in May:

I urge, therefore, that the Congress take early action on the following recommendations:

1. More adequate benefits under old-age and survivors insurance.
2. Extended coverage for old-age and survivors insurance.
3. Extended coverage for unemployment insurance.
4. Insurance against loss of earnings due to illness or disability.
5. Improved public assistance for the needy.

But instead of signing bills extending social security the President has been forced to veto legislation curbing social security.

President Truman vetoed two bills concerning social security. The Congress passed both over his veto.

The one measure bars newsboys from participation in the social-security program.

The other denies social-security benefits to 750,000 salesmen. A rider designed to sugar-coat the action was attached to this bill to increase payments to dependent children by $3 a month and to the aged and blind by $5 a month.

The President could not sign these bills because they restricted rather than extended social security.

The House passed a social-security bill that Republican leaders said was an answer to the President's demands.

But the House measure was shamefully inadequate. The bill would extend social-security benefits to city and State employees and to persons working for nonprofit organizations.

However, these workers would not be allowed to come under social security unless their employers agreed to the coverage. But while these people needed this economic protection it was a paltry gesture.

The House bill totally ignored the millions of household workers, farm laborers and self-employed persons who make up the largest classes not now covered by social security.

Rather, the House bill offered social-security benefits only to a few relatively small groups of workers.

But even this meager bill failed to be enacted by the Congress. The Senate Finance Committee said it could not find time in the closing days of the session to consider social-security legislation—to think about the welfare of the people.

It is important to note the 1944 Republican Party platform that stated:

We pledge our support of * * * extension of the existing old-age insurance and unemployment insurance systems to all employees not already covered.

And in contravention of its party pledge and failing to consider the needs of the people the Republican Party in control of the Eightieth Congress did nothing.

THE LABOR DEPARTMENT

The Democratic Administration has sought to improve the condition of labor in the United States. Both President Roosevelt and President Truman tried to strengthen the Labor Department in their attempts to aid the workingman.

But in 1947 the Republican Congress started to dismantle the Labor Department.

The Republican Congress took the United States Conciliation Service out of the Labor Department and set it up as a separate agency. This has cost taxpayers many, many additional dollars.

The Republican Congress slashed Labor Department funds for general operation, staff and research in fiscal 1948 by 25 percent.

The Republican Congress slashed grants to States for operation of free employment offices by 18 percent in fiscal 1948.

Funds for the United States Employment Service in fiscal 1948 were cut in half by the Republican Congress.

Funds for the Bureau of Labor Statistics in fiscal 1948 were slashed by 40 percent.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics is recognized by labor and management alike as the Nation's only reliable authority on the cost of living. But evidently the Republican Congress did not want to see the way the Republican inflation was running wild in America.

As a result of slashes in BLS funds the consumers' price index had to cut its surveys, which formerly included 73 large and small cities, to 34 large cities. Wholesale-price studies were crippled. Funds to report on industry, wages, and production were cut in half.

President Truman said of the Republican program to make the Labor Department ineffective:

They're not satisfied to take the brake off prices. They tore the speedometer out of the car so that they couldn't see how fast it was going.

President Truman declared in his budget message submitted to Congress January 12, 1948:

The reduced appropriations to the Department of Labor in the fiscal year 1948 have impaired its capacity to perform some of its statutory functions. I am recommending increases in the Department's total appropriation for the fiscal year 1949 sufficient to enable it to carry out efficiently its statistical and labor information services to the general public and to the labor mediation and regulatory agencies, and also to carry out adequately its functions in connection with the administration of the State employment offices.

But the Republican Congress continued to whittle away at the Labor Department in 1948.

President Truman asked that the United States Employment Service and the Bureau of Employment Security be made permanent agencies of the Labor Department. At present the USES is temporarily under the jurisdiction of the Labor Department. The Bureau of Employment Security is part of the Federal Security Agency

The Congress turned down the President's proposals on the pretense that no changes in the executive department should be made until the Hoover Commission on the Reorganization of the Executive Department reports in 1949.

However, a few days later Congress legislated through an appropriation bill the transfer of the United States Employment Service from the Labor Department to the Federal Security Agency. President Truman's veto of this bill was overridden.

The Republican House cut BLS funds again in 1948. Another 40-percent reduction was ordered. Over-all Labor Department funds were slashed by 25 percent.

But at last the Republican leaders in the Senate realized that not even business could stand these cuts in BLS funds. Seventy-five percent of the persons or organizations using BLS figures represent big business.

The BLS has become the national authority on the cost of living. The recent General Motors wage agreement, keyed to the BLS cost of living index, is a good example of the confidence America has placed in the agency.

The Senate succeeded in restoring many of the cuts made by the House in the fiscal 1949 budget for the Labor Department.

But the Labor Department remains crippled from the disastrous 1947 fund cuts that forced the Department to fire 3,000 of its 7,000 employees. The Department is now the smallest in Washington.

All of these actions should be remembered in the light of the Republican Party platform of 1944 which said:

The Department of Labor has been emasculated by the New Deal. Labor bureaus, agencies, and committees are scattered far and wide, in Washington and throughout the country, and have no semblance of systematic or responsible organization. All governmental labor activities must be placed under the direct authority and responsibility of the Secretary of Labor.

THE MINIMUM WAGE

The Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 was among the most important legislation enacted by Congress in recent years.

The measure set the workweek at 40 hours. It also established a minimum wage of 40 cents an hour.

In 1938, a 40-cent minimum wage was adequate. But in 1948 a 40-cent minimum is far from adequate. The cost of living has increased by almost 70 percent since 1939. Today it takes about 75 cents to buy what 40 cents did in 1938. But the Congress did nothing in this important field. With the economic facts before him, President Truman called for a 75-cent minimum wage time after time in the past 2 years.

The President said in his State of the Union message January 7:

Another basic element of a strong economic system is the well-being of wage earners.

We have learned that the well-being of workers depends on high production and consequent high employment. We have learned equally well that the welfare of industry and agriculture depends on high incomes for our workers.

The Government has wisely chosen to set a floor under wages. But our 40-cent minimum wage is inadequate and obsolete. I recommend lifting the minimum wage to 75 cents an hour.

The House Education and Labor Committee held hearings on minimum wages and other aspects of the Wage-Hour Act for almost a month last fall. Witness after witness told of the need for increasing the minimum wage. Most persons agreed that 75 cents an hour would be a sensible 1948 minimum wage. However, the House committee failed to act on the problem of a higher minimum wage. No formal report was ever issued on the hearings.

The Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee held hearings in April and May on the Wage-Hour Act. The Republican wage-hour bill before the committee was sponsored by Senator BALL. The bill provided that the minimum wage should be increased—but only to 60 cents an hour. In addition, the measure would set up industry committees that could determine whether the minimum wage might be lowered to 50 cents or raised to 70 cents in certain areas.

The effect of the Republican minimum-wage bill was to hold back benefits to workers in the South in other areas where labor is paid less than in the concentrated industrial sections of the country.

However, the Senate committee did not report a minimum-wage bill. So Congress adjourned without taking any action on the important question of minimum wages.

Do the Republican leaders think that $16 a week is adequate pay at today's prices?

As in other important fields affecting the welfare of the people—nothing was done.

FARM PROGRAM

Since 1933 the Democratic administration has realized that a prosperous farm economy was necessary to a prosperous America. For the past 15 years the Democratic administration has worked constantly to improve farming and farm living in this country. Republicans in the Congress have done little more than "me-too" administration policies.

Democratic administrations encouraged soil conservation. Crops were insured. Farm prices were supported. Electricity was made available to thousands upon thousands of farms. Loans were made to permit persons to buy farms and to let farmers improve their homes and land. And Democratic support of farm cooperatives have improved the farmers' economic situation.

All these things are part of the great record of Democratic aid to the farmer.

Most persons have agreed that the present farm programs are good ones. But President Truman has insisted that there was room for improvement in the American farm program. He has insisted that we go forward to an even better over-all farm program.

Accordingly, before the end of World War II, experts in the Agriculture Department were at work developing a postwar farm program.

More than a year ago the President and the Secretary of Agriculture outlined a peacetime farm plan.

The important principle of the program was: American agriculture should be keyed to a policy of abundance. Abundant production would aid everyone: the farmer, the worker, the businessman, the consumer.

The President has listed the details of the Democratic farm program many times in recent months. He sent this four-point agricultural plan to Congress in May:

> First, the Congress should enact legislation providing on a permanent basis for a system of flexible price supports for agricultural commodities:
> Second, I urge that the Congress give full support to the continuance and expansion of our program of soil conservation.
> Third, I recommend that the Congress continue and strengthen programs to assure adequate consumption of agricultural products.
> Fourth, we need to consider other means for assisting farmers to meet their special problems. For example, we must support and protect farm cooperatives. We must continue to work toward a sound system of crop insurance.

The President's program would modernize the agricultural plans that have grown through the years. Many aspects of the farm program need modernizing. For instance, the present parity formula is based on 1909–14 farm prices and expenses. Since then the tractor and other machinery have become commonplace on most farms. Their impact on farm prices and expenses should be considered.

Both House and Senate Agriculture Committees spent many days considering a modern farm program. Last fall members of the committees toured the country and talked to farmers in the fields. Page after page of committee testimony showed the need for a 1948, not a 1914 or a 1933, farm program.

But floor action on a new farm program was delayed for weeks. Finally the House acted June 12. But its farm bill was disappointing.

The measure passed by the House merely extended present farm legislation until June 30, 1950. The present laws are good, but new, modern ones would have been better.

The House action was significant in view of the 1944 Republican Party platform that condemned the Democratic farm program. The platform called it confused, unreliable, impractical. Thus they voted "me too" on the Democratic program, now that the wisdom of such a plan was proved. Unfortunately they did not vote for continued progress.

When President Truman announced in May that he was going to send his formal request for a modernized farm program to Congress in a few days, the Senate Agriculture and Forestry Committee got busy.

The committee reported its long-range farm program May 17, less than a week after the President sent his special message on farm problems to Congress.

The President had succeeded in prodding the Senate committeee into action. And the Senate committee's bill was almost a carbon copy of the sensible farm program proposed by the President.

The Senate Agriculture and Forestry Committee reported a realistic, modern farm bill early in the second session of Congress. Some of the high lights of the measure were:

First. Abundant production would be assured.

Second. Agricultural income would be maintained on a flexible parity base.

Third. Marketing procedures would be improved.

Fourth. Production quotas, marketing agreements, and crop loans would be worked out.

Fifth. Conservation practices would be encouraged.

Sixth. Farm cooperatives would be strengthened.

These provisions indicated that the Senate committee had closely followed President Truman's recommendations.

The Senate passed this farm program that followed most of President Truman's suggestions. But the House refused to go along with the Senate in enacting a realistic farm program.

The result was that the farm legislation finally passed by Congress merely extended existing laws until June 30, 1950, and postponed a long-range farm program until that date.

The Eightieth Congress ignored the 1948 needs of the American farmer.

The Senate failed to ratify the International Wheat Agreement. This harms both the American farmer and America's role in world affairs.

The agreement was drawn up at a conference in March in Washington under the auspices of the United Nations. Under its terms, it had to be ratified by July 1, 1948.

In general, the agreement provided for ceiling prices at which wheat may be sold on the international market. The agreement also set out a quota system under which countries in need of grain would be reasonably assured of supplies.

The agreement would have helped the farmer by stabilizing and guaranteeing international trade in wheat for several years to come.

The ratification of the agreement by the United States would have been further evidence of America's intention to participate actively in the United Nations and in world affairs.

The Senate neglected its duties to the American farmer and to world peace by refusing to consider the International Wheat Agreement.

RECLAMATION

The Democratic Party has worked unceasingly to develop the West through reclamation projects. But the Eightieth Congress blinded itself to the necessity of furthering the program.

President Truman said in his state of the Union message January 7:

> We must expand our reclamation program to bring millions of acres of arid land into production and to improve water supplies for additional millions of acres. This will provide new opportunities for veterans and others, particularly in the West, and aid in providing a rising living standard for a growing population.

Fairly adequate Department of Interior funds were voted during the second session of Congress. It was encouraging to see that drastic attempts at slashing appropriations for reclamation work were not made as they were in the first session of the Eightieth Congress.

However, the Congress made repeated attempts to restrict the reclamation legislation. It voted into an appropriation bill a provision which would have the effect of firing two reclamation officials who were following the law and the 160-acre reclamation limitation rather than circumvent the law, as some persons wanted them to do.

Further, the Eightieth Congress did nothing to increase materially the scope of reclamation projects. It merely voted to continue existing work.

RIVER DEVELOPMENT

The Tennessee Valley Authority is known throughout the world as one of the great accomplishments of the Roosevelt years. The TVA developed an unprosperous region of the United States into one of the finest areas in the country within only a few years.

Both President Roosevelt and President Truman have urged that the TVA formula be applied to such other river basins as the Columbia and the Missouri.

President Truman said in his state of the Union message January 7:

> We should achieve the wise use of resources through the integrated development of our great river basins. We can learn much from our Tennessee Valley experience. We should no longer delay in applying the lessons of that vast undertaking to our other great river basins.

Hearings were held during the Eightieth Congress on the TVA and the application of similar programs to other river basins. But Congress took no action looking toward the development of other rivers.

In fact, the House voted to prohibit the TVA from building a steam-generating plant to increase the output of electricity in the area. The Senate restored the funds for the plant, but in its final action, the Eightieth Congress gave TVA a distinct set-back when it voted to eliminate the steam-generating plant from the agency's 1949 appropriations.

This action by the conference committee on the TVA legislation was a victory for the power lobby. The project was opposed by these lobbyists simply because it was a public-power project.

The United States needs more power to run its plants, to light its homes. The power shortage is acute in America.

But the Eightieth Congress refused to give one section of America more electrical energy, and voted against the South and against public power.

THE ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

The United States has needed the St. Lawrence seaway for many years both from the standpoint of national defense and from the standpoint of world commerce. Business, labor, and agriculture would be benefited greatly throughout the Midwest if the seaway were constructed. But the Eightieth Congress refused to pass this important legislation.

President Truman supported the St. Lawrence project. He said in his state of the Union message January 7:

> The St. Lawrence waterway and power project is needed for both transportation and industry. As an important step in advance planning the Congress should now authorize this project in order that international treaty provisions and other arrangements can be worked out.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee reported a St. Lawrence seaway bill in 1947.

The Senate spent long hours debating the measure in February 1948. But the project was defeated when it came to a vote.

BUSINESS MONOPOLY

Throughout its history the Democratic Party has defended the common man against the vested interests of big business. But the Eightieth Congress consistently sought to aid the big business interests.

President Truman continued the fight for free competition when he declared in his state of the Union message January 7:

> Growth and vitality in our economy depend on vigorous private enterprise. * * * Competition is seriously limited today in many industries by the concentration of economic power and other elements of monopoly. The appropriation of sufficient funds to permit proper enforcement of the present antitrust laws is essential. Beyond that we should go on to strengthen our legislation to protect competition.

However, the Eightieth Congress took no action to curb monopolies.

Congress failed to act on the O'Mahoney-Kefauver bill to plug the loopholes in the antitrust legislation. The measure would make it illegal for one company to purchase the assets of another where such a deal would lessen competition or create a monopoly.

The Senate Judiciary Committee took no action on this measure. The House Judiciary Committee reported the bill. But the House Rules Committee refused to clear it for floor debate.

The House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee reported a measure that would seriously damage the necessary functions of the Federal Trade Commission.

The measure, the O'Hara bill, would strip the Commission of its power to issue cease and desist orders. The FTC would have to go to the Federal Courts to stop unfair trade practices.

The measure would destroy the Commission's essential functions in the field of enforcement of antitrust legislation.

It is fortunate for the American people that this legislation was never passed by Congress.

The Senate appropriated $50,000 to a special committee to investigate the Federal Trade Commission.

It is interesting that this committee was set up after the Supreme Court outlawed the basing point system used by so many businesses to keep prices uniform and high. The Federal Trade Commission has been opposing these basing point techniques.

Apparently the Republicans plan to investigate the Federal Trade Commission for opposing price-fixing.

RAILROAD RATE FIXING

Antitrust legislation has been enacted by Congress to protect the people from the encroachments of dangerous monopolies. And no industry should be given special treatment and be exempt from antitrust laws.

But the Eightieth Congress acted against the people when it passed the Reed-Bulwinkle bill which would exempt railroads from antitrust laws. The measure would allow railroads to agree on rates among themselves. It would allow the railroads to increase rates without due regard for the public.

President Truman vetoed this legislation. He said:

> By sanctioning rate control by groups of carriers, this legislation would represent a departure from the present transportation policy of regulated competition.
> This, I believe, would be a serious mistake, with far-reaching effects on our economy.

The President opposed this legislation because it would weaken antitrust legislation. It would give special privileges to a huge American industry. It would allow the railroads to set exorbitant rates, to discriminate against certain sections of the country in fixing rates.

Democrats both in the Senate and the House explained the dangers of the Reed-Bulwinkle bill during floor debate on the Presidential vetoes.

But special interests won out in this fight just as they have triumphed in so many others during the Eightieth Congress.

Both the Senate and the House voted to override the President's veto. The Senate acted June 16 and the House June 17.

Thus the Congress further weakened antitrust legislation that needs strengthening, not tearing down.

MOORE-RIZLEY NATURAL-GAS BILL

Since 1938 the Federal Power Commission has had jurisdiction over natural-gas rates. The Commission has attempted to set rates that would be fair both to the consumers and to the owners of natural-gas fields and pipe lines.

But attempts were made during the Eightieth Congress to restrict the authority of the FPC. The proponents of the legislation regarding FPC authority wanted to let natural-gas producers charge more for their product. The Moore-Rizley bill, which attempted to increase rates in this way, was passed by the Republican-controlled House last year.

However, the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, with the active help of the Democratic members, acted wisely this year in refusing to report the Moore-Rizley measure.

When the committee killed the bill, it acted in the interests of the people who use natural gas rather than in the interests of natural-gas lobbyists.

It is encouraging to find this isolated example of Republican concern for the plain people of the country.

THE CIVIL-RIGHTS PROGRAM

Early in 1947 President Truman appointed a commission of 15 Americans to study the problems of civil rights in the United States.

The commission spent several months surveying and discussing the problems of civil rights. Last November the commission made its recommendations on civil rights to the President.

President Truman used the civil-rights report as a basis for his special message to Congress, February 2. He said:

> The protection of civil rights is the duty of every government which derives its powers from the consent of the people. This is equally true of local, State, and national governments. There is much that the States can and should do at this time to extend their protection of civil rights. Wherever the law enforcement measures of State and local governments are inadequate to discharge this primary function of government, these measures should be strengthened and improved.
> The Federal Government has a clear duty to see that constitutional guaranties of individual liberties and of equal protection under the laws are not denied or abridged anywhere in our Union. * * *
> I recommend, therefore, that the Congress enact legislation at this session directed toward the following specific objectives:
> 1. Establishing a permanent Commission on Civil Rights, a Joint Congressional Committee on Civil Rights and a Civil Rights Division in the Department of Justice.
> 2. Strengthening existing civil-rights statutes.
> 3. Providing Federal protection against lynching.
> 4. Protecting more adequately the right to vote.
> 5. Establishing a Fair Employment Practices Commission to prevent unfair discrimination in employment.
> 6. Prohibiting discrimination in interstate transportation facilities.
> 7. Providing home-rule and suffrage in Presidential elections for the residents of the District of Columbia.

8. Providing statehood for Hawaii and Alaska and a greater measure of self-government for our island possessions.

9. Equalizing the opportunities for residents of the United States to become naturalized citizens.

10. Settling the evacuation claims of Japanese-Americans.

The record of the Eightieth Congress on civil-rights legislation is a complete blank. The Congress failed to enact any of the President's 10 recommendations.

STATEHOOD FOR HAWAII AND ALASKA

President Truman urged that Hawaii and Alaska be admitted as States, but no action was taken by the Congress.

The President said in his state of the Union message January 7:

We should also consider our obligation to assure the fullest possible measure of civil rights to the people of the Territories and possessions. I believe that the time has come for Alaska and Hawaii to be admitted to the Union as States.

The 1944 Republican Party platform stated:

Hawaii, which shares the Nation's obligations equally with the several States, is entitled to the fullest measure of home rule looking toward statehood; and to equality with the several States in the rights of her citizens and in the application of all our national laws. * * *

Alaska is entitled to the fullest measure of home rule looking toward statehood.

The House passed a bill opening up the way for statehood for Hawaii. But the Senate failed to act on the measure.

Although hearings were held on the question of Alaskan statehood, neither House took any action on the problem. Nothing was done.

THE BUDGET

The Republican Party platform of 1944 declared:

We shall eliminate from the budget all wasteful and unnecessary expenditures and exercise the most rigid economy.

Last February the Republicans promised to cut the Federal budget for the 1949 fiscal year by $2,500,000,000.

But instead they started to appropriate more, not less.

The Work of the Senate Committee on Appropriations and the Savings Resulting From the Economy Program of the Eightieth Congress, Second Session

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. STYLES BRIDGES

OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Saturday, June 19 (legislative day of Tuesday, June 15), 1948

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement on the work of the Senate Committee on Appropriations and the savings resulting from the economy program of the second session of the Eightieth Congress.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF HON. STYLES BRIDGES, REPUBLICAN, OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, CHAIRMAN, SENATE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS, RELATIVE TO WORK OF HIS COMMITTEE AND TO SAVINGS RESULTING FROM THE ECONOMY PROGRAM OF THE EIGHTIETH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

As the second session of the Eightieth Congress comes to a close, I want to make a brief accounting as chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee of its accomplishments. Despite the many pressures to spend, the Congress, by and large, has made a good fiscal record, and this at a time when the public and the national interest dictated heavy appropriations for foreign aid and national defense.

The pressures that the Congress resisted were brought by many of the bureaucratic agencies of the Government itself, some subtly and others blatantly. Other groups and special interests outside the Government, organized powerfully, pulled every trick in the bag to get appropriations for pet projects, and, fortunately for the people, as well as to the great credit of Congress, many of them failed.

Almost every witness who came looking for something avowed loudly his interest in economy in the Federal Government. They were all for economy, but for the next fellow's project, not theirs. In fact, their pleas ran so true to pattern that they became known to the committee and staff as "economy—but men."

A fundamental change must take place in the public's attitude toward the Federal Treasury before spending can be curtailed as drastically as it should be. People must realize that they as taxpayers must foot the bill for every demand for service or construction that they as citizens make upon their Federal Government.

The economy issue in reality lies with the people. We of the economy-minded group can only see to it that they get their dollar's worth, that they are not bilked for more than a reasonable cost for what they want, and, insofar as possible, that the pay rolls are not deliberately loaded. Beyond that we cannot go. If the majority of the people want something, it is our job to see that they get it. The democratic process demands it. But we long for the day when the American people, giving more than lip service to economy, shall raise their voices at every appropriation hearing in protest against unnecessary spending.

SUMMARY OF APPROPRIATIONS ACTION

During this session the Congress passed 15 regular appropriations measures dealing with the customary appropriations made every year, and also passed 6 additional appropriations measures dealing with supplemental, deficiency, emergency, or similar types of appropriating legislation.

For the 15 regular appropriations measures involving budget estimates of $25,477,477,126, the Congress appropriated $23,684,799,395, accomplishing a saving of $1,792,677,311.

In the six supplemental and deficiency appropriations laws, involving budget estimates of $9,947,768,097, the Congress appropriated $8,998,964,536, accomplishing a saving of $948,803,561.

Together, all appropriations during the present session totaled $32,683,763,931, a saving of $2,741,481,292 under the budget estimates of $35,425,245,223.

I attach herewith a complete tabulation of each bill passed by the Appropriations Committees during the present session. This includes the budget estimates, House and Senate action, and final appropriations.

CONTRACT AUTHORIZATIONS—THE OTHER SIDE OF THE FISCAL PICTURE

Contract authorizations are defined as "statutory authorizations under which contracts may be entered into or other obligations incurred in advance of appropriations for the payment of indebtedness arising under such contracts or other obligations." In short, this fiscal device permits advance planning for its needs on the part of the Federal Government, and it establishes a limit beyond which the executive departments and agencies may not go in the letting of contracts for which future appropriations must be made.

A tabulation setting forth the record of the Congress during the second session of the Eightieth Congress is attached. At first glance, these figures would indicate that Congress was more generous than the President's budget estimates on a simple comparison of estimates against actual appropriations granted. Such is not the case, however, when the difference is analyzed.

Of the $946,417,199 of increased contract authorizations, $822,000,000 is for vital aircraft procurement to enable this Nation to meet any possible threat from the air by ruthless aggressors. This additional sum was almost unanimously voted by the Congress despite the reluctance of the administration to recognize the immediate necessity for the creation and continuing support of a 70-group air force as a minimum peacetime security essential. Thus, once again, as in the months immediately preceding the last war, the Congress insisted upon an augmented and more adequate program of national defense.

At the time that I presented the national defense supplemental appropriation bill for action by the Senate I stated:

"By our action upon this bill, we shall help to determine what weapons this country will have at its disposal in the period 1951–53. We are warned that it is in that period that Russia may have erased the great military advantage which we now hold by virtue of our exclusive possession of the atomic bomb.

"The question before us is, at that future date, when our monopoly of atomic weapons may be reduced to preponderance or even to equality, what physical guaranty of this country's security is to exist in its place? In one sense, the action which we take is conclusive and irrevocable, because if the Congress should determine not to provide the means for commencing now the procurement of weapons and the training of units for a possible crisis in 1952, we shall have determined beyond recall that weapons and units which take 4 years to produce and train shall not be ready at that future date. In another sense, our action is not conclusive and irrevocable, because if we do now appropriate funds adequate for the so-called 70-group air force program, we shall still retain the power to review subsequent appropriations for this program. If, by some happy, unexpected turn of international affairs, the tensions which now hold the world in the grip of fear should be relaxed, this program could be abandoned or reduced and further drains upon our resources eliminated." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 5396. The entire text of this speech appears on pp. 5396 ff. of the May 6, 1948, RECORD.)

Of the balance of the contract authorizations voted, the largest single increase is for the National Military Establishment, amounting to $160,000,000, and directly related to the national defense needs of the country. Reductions in other bills account for the final net increase over all in contract authorizations as compared with budget estimates.

In the light of the circumstances described above, it is contended that Congress succeed in making a proper determination of the limits beyond which the Federal Government could not be committed for future appropriations in payment of contract authorizations.

OBSTACLES TO ECONOMY

I personally, as chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, and many others, sincerely wish that the budget reductions might have been considerably larger. However, before any judgment is passed, it will be wise to recall some of the obstacles that stood in the path of greater economy.

Foremost among these are those commitments of the Government which we felt obligated to honor. The interest on the national debt of $5,250,000,000; the necessity for augmenting our armed services for which $11,400,000,000 was appropriated; the cost of foreign aid, amounting to over $6,000,000,000; our veterans' assistance programs, aggregating another $5,000,000,000—these are appropriations from which only a small per cent of reduction could be struck from the budget estimates.

PREVIOUS COMMITMENTS HAMPER CUTS

There are other categories of spending which are more or less obligatory. One of these is in the field of contract authorizations by which previous sessions of the Congress have authorized the lettering of contracts which must be paid in this present Congress. We have no choice in this matter.

Then there are these measures which, through laws enacted by previous Congresses, morally commit the present Congress to appropriate funds in payment of promised subsidies, for grants-in-aid, and for programs in which the Federal Government matches State funds.

For example, in just one bill, the supplemental Federal security appropriations measure, of the total budget estimates of $993,708,460, public assistance grants amounted to $797,000,000 or 80 percent; public employment and unemployment compensation grants amounted to $145,650,000 or another 14.6 percent; maternal and child welfare grants amounted to $22,000,000 or another 2.2 percent, and mental health grants amounted to $11,401,000 or another 1.1 percent. Thus, roughly $976,000,000 of the $993,000,000 budget estimate—or 98 percent—represents grants to States for various purposes. Unless the basic laws are altered, the Congress cannot make large-scale reductions in these items without impinging on commitments of previous Congresses. This also applies to a greater or lesser degree to most of the appropriations measures and is thus an important consideration in determining reductions in appropriations.

DEFICIENCIES IN THE APPROPRIATIONS PROCESS

Again this year, as was true last year, the Appropriations Committees have been plagued by a vast number of deficiency and supplemental appropriations measures. The total number of such items considered by the Senate Committee on Appropriations came to 586. And just as I did last year, I feel it my duty to call to the attention of the Senate the flagrant misuse of this device by the executive agencies in order to receive additional funds for which adequate amounts had been appropriated previously. The use of deficiency appropriation requests in time or matter of emergency is justifiable and proper. The misuse and abuse of this method, as is being practiced yearly by Government agencies, is both an affront to the Congress and a constant danger to the Nation's financial balance. It is next to impossible for the Congress to prepare a legislative budget which can have any final validity if from the beginning of the session until the end, the very last day of the last week, as has happened this year, we are confronted with new and revised appropriation requests.

This last-minute jam of supplemental and deficiency appropriations has complicated work of this Congress immeasurably. I cite the situation because it has interrupted the work of the Senate Appropriations Committee whose problems have been increased unnecessarily by the irresponsible budgetary practices of many of the departments and agencies of the executive branch.

Year after year they indict their own administrative management with frantic requests for supplemental and deficiency appropriations. Is our Federal budget process a loose-leaf binder to which new pages of spending can be capriciously added at will? Why go through the sham of a budget at all if departments and agencies can spend the people's money without heed to budget limitations because they know they can put in for supplementals and deficiencies when they have exceeded their limits?

Instead of a budget message from the President which constitutes a firm financial program for the anticipated needs of the fiscal year that lies ahead, the Congress is faced with the necessity of considering a series of new requests including many items that were not presented in the original budget document.

Taken together, those supplemental requests constitute disjointed after thoughts on the part of the agencies. To be specific, even while we were holding the final session of our hearings on the final appropriations measure before our committee, the Bureau of the Budget was working overtime preparing deficiency messages and forwarding them to our committee for consideration. And I do not doubt that the agencies have in the Bureau of the Budget a great many other petitions for additional funds which the Bureau of the Budget has not yet had an opportunity to pass on to the Congress.

This is hand-to-mouth budgeting and bad management. It assumes that every day is budget day. It shows a complete lack of administrative planning and absence of an integrated budget program. It defeats economy and makes a farce of serious and sincere efforts to work for it.

LONG-RANGE FINANCIAL PERSPECTIVE NEEDED

Nor is there any good reason why the exact amount of money that will be required in terms of appropriations cannot be determined by the Government when it is enacting the basic legislation authorizing these expenditures.

This will probably necessitate the creation of a governmental device comparable to the legislative councils that now exist in many progressive States. The Government would be considerably aided by studies and analyses of all legislation, both existing and proposed, that involves appropriations of public funds. When bills are offered there is a crying need to know their fiscal implications.

Much of the legislation presently on the books has never been fully analyzed. No one has the slightest conception of the interrelationship and effect of similar or possibly conflicting pieces of legislation. No one has the remotest idea as to the ultimate costs of long-term legislation.

Barring the possibility of establishing such a council, it is my suggestion that every committee of the Congress could help the situation greatly by making an estimate of the immediate and over-all fiscal impact of each bill that is reported. Both the Congress and the people want to see where we are heading financially.

INFLATED BUDGET REQUESTS

Frequently agencies of the Government, realizing that their appropriations may be sharply reduced, present grotesquely inflated requests. For example, the individual units of the armed forces, in making their estimates for new military construction, compiled a total construction request of about $2,000,000,000. In all fairness, it must be said that the services themselves recognized the ridiculous nature of this claim and very sharply curtailed their request before sending it to the Bureau of the Budget.

AGENCIES FAIL IN ATTEMPTS TO DETERMINE NEEDS

Still another difficulty in reducing appropriations to rock-bottom figures is the inability on the part of the agencies and the Bureau of the Budget to determine their actual needs.

Federal agencies frequently exhibit an apparent disregard for even the most ordinary attempts at economy. Consider just one field—housing. The Governor General of Panama came before the Senate Appropriations Committee recently and asked for funds for experimental houses for Americans in Panama. They would cost up to $25,000 a family unit. Other testimony revealed that quarters for housing Army families in Alaska exceed even that amount, in some cases reportedly running as high as $74,000 per family unit. Multiple-unit housing projects for the Atomic Energy Commission at Oak Ridge, Tenn., run over $16,000 per family unit. With due regard to geographical difficulties, it does not seem desirable nor necessary that the Federal Government should squander funds at excessively inflationary levels to provide housing for Government personnel, particularly when thousands of veterans are still searching frantically for adequate housing.

Even the Office of the Housing Expediter has a housing problem. They testified recently that the Public Buildings Administration forces them to move at least one of their offices every month, and in one instance forced them out of one office and then 6 months later pushed them back into exactly the same office space. This one move cost several thousand dollars.

OUR EXPANDING PAY ROLL

One of the largest factors in the over-all cost of government is the compensation of employees, i. e., labor. It would normally be expected following the expansion attendant upon a great conflict such as World War II that the Federal pay roll would show a consistent decline. Before the war we had fewer than a million Federal employees, but during the war the total rose to more than 3,700,000.

As of the latest date available, there were over 2,000,000 Federal employees. More recently, under one pretext or another, the Federal pay roll has been increased every month in spite of the efforts of the Congress to call a halt to a further increase in Federal employment. Through a series of manufactured emergencies and the pretense of greater responsibilities the executive branch has sought to justify an increase rather than a decrease in the total number of Federal workers. For example, in the month of April a substantial number of new employees was hired for new jobs, and this new recruitment was not confined to one or two agencies which could point to special seasonal needs but occurred in a large number of the agencies.

Recently the House Committee on Post Office and Civil Service issued a statement exposing the Federal agencies for attempting to soak up unused 1948 appropriation grants by loading the pay rolls. This same committee determined that Federal employees engaged in the specialized field of personnel work had increased in 7 years from 6,721 to 24,288, an almost fourfold increase, although total employment in Government service has only doubled.

Some time ago I was informed that a Federal job seeker would have to go to over 175 offices to file his application for a position in the larger Government agencies and bureaus here in Washington. Perhaps that explains why in one small agency alone there are 113 different steps in personnel placement although not a single one of these involves the actual hiring and firing of an employee.

It is, indeed, shocking to learn that the greatest government on the face of the earth cannot manage its personnel more efficiently. This is a continuing problem for the Senate Committee on Appropriations because every unnecessary employee constitutes a burdensome and unwarranted drain on the taxpayers of this Nation and means the expenditure of funds for unproductive work. In a government of this size it is not possible to detect and to eliminate every trace of nepotism and pay-roll padding, but so long as I am chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations it shall be my endeavor to restrict the granting of funds to provide for only the soundest kind of personnel management in the Government's service of the people.

UNIFICATION VERSUS ECONOMY

When the armed services were before the first session of the current, or Eightieth Congress, urging the need for unification, one of the strongest arguments in favor of such a radical departure from the traditional independence of the several armed services was the notion that great economy would result. Congress heeded this plea, but the promises made so freely last year have yet to be redeemed. Instead of less, we are asked to appropriate more for a unified National Military Establishment, and all indications are that future sessions of the Congress will be called upon to make even greater appropriations for security purposes. In my judgment the armed services generally are very remiss for not having made even a slight start in the direction of achieving any of the economies they so loudly promised when the subject of unification was in the pending legislation stage. Indeed, it is to be questioned whether the Department of National Defense is not merely to date a costly superstructure imposed upon the previous departments with no real unification yet discernible.

I personally, and I believe the Congress, expect definite savings as a result of unification. Evidence of these savings should begin to be apparent this year. Next year's budget for the armed services should indicate substantial progress in the direction of real and lasting economy.

UNUSUAL AND COSTLY INTERPRETATIONS OF THE LAW

Sometimes an unusual or unlooked-for interpretation of a law involves widespread unnecessary expenditures. This is particularly true of certain training activities of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act which, while justified on occupational training grounds are not justified on the basis of hobbies or leisure-time activities. These activities, which are now under scrutiny by the Bureau of the Budget, involving avocational and recreational purposes, are costing the Government more than $200,000,000 a year.

The methods by which Federal funds can and are squandered seem as endless as they are unique. Perhaps the photographs taken by the Farm Security Administration are the prize of the lot. These inane pictures—150,000 of them, costing the Government $750,000—were displayed on this floor recently and contained such intriguing titles as "Men Picking Their Teeth" and "Jack Dwyer Taking Off His Coat in a Saloon." I have in my files another agricultural masterpiece, a booklet which discusses the sex of a watermelon. Still another gives the fascinating details on fleas in North America.

APPROPRIATIONS LOG-JAM

Again this year we have been faced with the necessity of passing a large amount of appropriations legislation without sufficient time to examine many of these measures with the thoroughness desired. This deplorable situation is not attributable to any individual or group of individuals; rather it is occasioned by the intricacies of the legislative system; the immensely increased size of the Government in recent years; the refusal of many of the agencies to limit their budget estimates to their actual needs; our emergence as a great world power, with all its implications; our pressing problems of postwar readjustment at home.

All of these have combined to place a tremendous load on the Appropriations Committees. Because of these factors, hearings are necessarily longer and more thorough, yet many of the actual hearings of the Senate Appropriations Committee are crowded into the final weeks of the normal session. I regard it as highly essential that some method be evolved by which the Senate Appropriations Committee be enabled to distribute its hearings more equally during the course of the session.

ECONOMY ACHIEVEMENT OUTSTANDING

Considering all these circumstances, I view the economy achievement of the present session as remarkable, indeed. The urgent necessity for increased spending in certain fields, such as for our armed forces, was all too apparent. Demands for new Government assistance have increased alarmingly. Strong, militant pressure groups have had their effects. This Congress, perhaps more than any previous peacetime Congress, has been beset on every side in new ways to spend the people's dollar. In view of the present inflationary trends, this was undeniably harmful to our economy.

It was not without justification that the Joint Committee on the Economic Report said last January:

"Our people and our Government, both executive and legislative, may well be criticized for trying to carry on at the same time so many huge programs as those represented in our expansion of business transactions, our expansion of residential housing, our support of veterans' education and rehabilitation, our Government public-works program, our huge Military Establishment, and our economic support of free peoples throughout the entire world. Liberal credit policies on the part of private and public agencies alike, and the maintenance of low interest rates have encouraged the expansion of these programs. We do not intend to criticize these programs or question their desirability. We merely point out that the attempt to carry them all on at once, with very little restraint in the field of consumer spending and liberal credit policies, is the basic reason for inflation, which otherwise could hardly coincide with a large Government surplus."

Fortunately we have been blessed with another year of unprecedentedly large revenues from which to pay our expenditures, which are still outrunning our appropriations. Because of this we have been able to reduce both the debt and taxation. The hour may not be too distant when these revenues will be sharply reduced. Should that hour arrive, our Federal structure will be forced to recognize new demands for public expenditures. It must not find our fiscal condition weakened through wasteful and extravagant spending. For this reason, while I applaud the accomplishments of those who wish to economize, I exhort them to continue these efforts with renewed vigor in the future.

Review of Legislation Relating to Health

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON
OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, among the many important fields of legislative jurisdiction assigned to the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is that of public health.

This committee, of which I am chairman, has an outstanding record during the Eightieth Congress of consideration of significant legislative measures relating to various public health activities.

All of the 46 bills which were introduced and referred to the committee prior to the closing day of the session have been given careful consideration by the committee, and the best of the suggestions contained in these bills have been incorporated into the legislation reported favorably to the House by the committee.

Of the above total, 14 bills were favorably reported by the committee and 12 of these have already become public law. It is clear that there has been enacted into law a substantial amount of the legislation referred to the committee during this Congress. This, in my opinion, is a commendable record.

I should like briefly to review some of the more important measures.

The bill, amending the Public Health Service Act to provide for a National Heart Institute, as introduced by me, was approved June 16 and became Public Law 655.

This act amends the Public Health Service Act for the purpose of improving the health of the people of the United States through the conduct of researches, investigations, experiments, and demonstrations relating to the cause, prevention, and methods of diagnosis and treatment of diseases of the heart and circulation; assisting and fostering such researches and other activities by public and private agencies, and promoting the coordination of all such researches and activities and the useful application of their results; providing training in matters relating to heart diseases, including refresher courses for physicians; and developing, and assisting the States and other agencies in the use of, the most effective methods of prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of heart diseases. In carrying out this objective the amendment provided for the establishment in the Public Health Service of a National Heart Institute and made appropriate amendments to various provisions of existing law.

As to the need for study and research in this field, there is no question. Heart disease long since has become the number one cause of death. An institute in the field of heart research comparable to the cancer, mental health, and dental institutes has been vitally needed to provide us with the trained doctors and technicians for engaging in this research and in using the knowledge thus gained in striving to solve the problem of heart disease mortality.

Legislation in this field was supported by the American Heart Association, the National Research Council, the American Medical Association, and many others qualified in the field.

It is another great stride in the advances being made in the care and prevention of human suffering through legislation resulting from the action of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in previous Congresses, such as the National Cancer Institute and the Institute of Mental Health.

Another bill along the same lines as that creating the National Heart Institute was H. R. 6732, which, owing to the pressure of business in the closing days of the Congress, was not taken up, and remains on the House Calendar.

This bill provided the creation within the Public Health Service of additional institutes whose work will be aimed, primarily, at important diseases affecting our population. This bill was introduced following hearings on a number of other bills relating to poliomyelitis, cerebral palsy, spastic paralysis, and other diseases affecting the neuro-muscular and skeletal systems. The various proposals in these other bills for extensive research in different fields were combined in H. R. 6732 to provide a framework for conducting research and training activities similar to that being administered by the Public Health Service in the fields of cancer, mental health, and heart disease. It is to be hoped that action on legislation along these lines will not long be deferred.

H. R. 3934, a bill to amend the Public Health Service Act with respect to venereal-disease rapid-treatment centers, also has not yet become public law. This bill was passed by the House June 8 and reported favorably by the Senate June 10.

The primary purpose of this bill was to make part of the Public Health Service the authority of the Service to operate, and make grants to the States and localities for the operation of, venereal-disease rapid-treatment centers. This authority is now given the Public Health Service by language in the annual appropriation bills. It is hoped and expected that legislation along this line will soon be forthcoming.

There can be no question of the need for further expansion of the 1938 legislation sponsored by this committee in this field to meet the shocking prevalence of these diseases.

Several bills were reported by the committee, some becoming law, amending and modifying the provisions of the Hospital Survey and Construction Act which was sponsored by the committee in 1946.

These were:

H. R. 4816, amending the hospital survey and construction provisions of the Public Health Service Act (title VI of that act) to set a minimum of $250,000 on the annual construction allotment for any State. At present that act provides that any State with an approved plan for construction of hospitals and public-health centers is entitled to an annual allotment out of which Federal assistance is payable to public and other nonprofit agencies for construction of hospital facilities. The amount of this allotment is determined by a formula written into the law based on population and per capita income. This formula limits the allotments of a few States to amounts altogether insufficient to undertake any adequate hospital-construction program. This legislation was passed to correct this situation.

H. R. 6339, approved June 19, became Public Law 723.

The purpose of the act was to amend the hospital survey and construction provisions of the Public Health Service Act so as to restore to eligibility to participate in Federal grants for hospital construction a State which has ceased to be eligible for such grants because of its failure to enact, prior to July 1, 1948, legislation requiring compliance with standards of maintenance and operation by hospitals receiving such grants. Under present law, States which have not enacted such legislation by July 1, 1948, are permanently barred from thereafter participating in the benefits of the hospital-construction program. The bill restores such a State to eligibility upon enactment of such legislation.

H. R. 5889, extending the provisions of title VI of the Public Health Service Act to the Virgin Islands, was approved June 19, and became Public Law 713.

The bill amends the hospital survey and construction provisions of the Public Health Service Act—title VI of the act, as amended by the Hospital Survey and Construction Act, volume 60, Statutes at Large, page 1040—so as to make the Virgin Islands eligible for grants under those provisions for the construction of hospitals, the same as other Territories and possessions of the United States.

H. R. 5807, amending the Hospital Survey and Construction Act was passed by the House on June 16 and awaits action in the Senate.

The purpose of the bill is to permit Federal aid in the building of hospitals whose sponsors, believing that such aid would be forthcoming under the hospital survey and construction provisions of the Public Health Service Act, began construction before the administrative machinery to handle their applications for assistance could be established by their States.

Just as in the passage of the original legislation of 1946, the committee is of opinion that all appropriate aid should be given for the establishment of adequate hospitals in communities throughout the land for the assistance of our people and for the use of the medical profession in providing the utmost help in aiding and preventing human suffering.

Other bills reported by the committee and becoming law related to improved organization of the Public Health Service the better to administer its responsibilities and to render assistance to the medical profession.

This is a record, indeed, of which I am extremely proud. Some of these measures have not yet become law and, as chairman of the committee, I shall push vigorously their enactment. Continued study also is being given by the committee of other fields where initial or amending legislation seems appropriate as the committee is fully conscious of its continuing responsibility to provide legislation that will promote the health and welfare of our citizens, and thereby supplement the fine service to humanity being rendered by the medical profession throughout the Nation.

Summary of Major Legislation, Eightieth Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROBERT A. TAFT
OF OHIO
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Saturday, June 19 (legislative day of Tuesday, June 15), 1948

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the right to insert in the RECORD a summary of the accomplishments of the Eightieth Congress.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY OF MAJOR LEGISLATION, EIGHTIETH CONGRESS (JANUARY 3, 1947, TO JUNE 20, 1948)

In its first session, Congress considered a total of 7,970 measures introduced in House and Senate and enacted into law 395 public bills and 131 private bills. The President vetoed 32 measures, 17 public and 15 private acts of Congress. Of the 17 public acts vetoed, 6 were regular vetoes of which Congress sustained 5 and overrode 1. The remaining 11 were "pocket" vetoes, which could not be acted upon by Congress because of the close of the session. The full list of public laws enacted in the first session appears in the issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD DAILY DIGEST for December 29, 1947.

In its second session, Congress considered 3,871 measures introduced in House and Senate and enacted into law 505 public bills and 327 private bills. The President vetoed 43 measures, 14 public and 29 private acts of Congress. Of the 14 public acts vetoed, 9 were regular vetoes of which Congress sustained 4 and overrode 5. The remaining 5 were "pocket" vetoes, which could not be acted upon by Congress because of the close of the session. The full list of public laws enacted in the second session appears in the issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD DAILY DIGEST for July 20, 1948.

The Eightieth Congress as a whole received 56,428 Presidential nominations and confirmed 54,796 of them.

Major legislation is reported below:

AGRICULTURE

Agricultural Act of 1948

(Public Law 897. Approved July 3, 1948)

Interim price supports continue through the calendar year 1949 to secure the largest possible farm production and to sustain farm income. Provision is made for a long-range price-support program beginning January 1, 1950, including general revision of the parity formula. Interim price support at 90 percent parity is given to cooperating producers of cotton, wheat, corn, tobacco, rice, and peanuts and to noncooperating producers at 60 percent of parity. Price support for other commodities whose expanded production is required by the Secretary of Agriculture is set at not less than 60 percent of parity; milk and milk products, hogs, chickens, eggs, and Irish potatoes harvested prior to January 1, 1949, are supported at 90 percent of parity. The wool price-support program is continued through June 30, 1050. The Department of Agriculture is directed to operate its lending and purchasing program to bring the price and income of producers of other agricultural commodities to a fair parity relationship with commodities specifically enumerated in the act. The President is authorized to restrict importation of foreign agricultural commodities if such imports interfere with the price-support program.

Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act Amendment

(Public Law 720. Approved June 19, 1948)

Title I of the act is amended to increase the interest rate on insured loans by one-half of 1 percent in order to activate the program by making such loans more acceptable to private lenders who had been reluctant to accept prior low-interest rates. Provision is made for redemption of nondelinquent insured mortgages and for advances to protect insured loan security.

Commodity Credit Corporation Act

(Public Law 806. Approved June 29, 1948)

The Commodity Credit Corporation is reincorporated under Federal charter to continue the comprehensive farm price-support program and the program of purchasing agricultural commodities for farm price support as well as for foreign aid. Capital stock of $100,000,000 is authorized.

Farm Labor Supply Camps Act

(Public Law 298. Approved July 31, 1947)

To aid localities to continue farm labor supply camps and facilities in the areas in which they are needed Congress authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to dispose of such camps and required purchasers to operate and maintain them for the purpose of housing persons engaged in agricutural labor.

Farmer-Debtor Relief Act

(Public Law 495. Approved April 21, 1948)

Congress extends until March 1, 1949, the period in which petitions may be filed providing for farmer-debtor relief by scaling down secured debts and extension of same by agreement. Failing agreement, the farmer is given an absolute stay with right of retention of the mortgaged property during the stay period, and permission to repurchase the property at an appraised value.

Federal Crop Insurance Act

(Public Law 320. Approved August 1, 1947)

A sounder approach to the stabilization of rural economy is assured by placing the crop insurance program on a county basis and extending such insurance only to countries in which income from insured crops is of primary importance. The Federal Government is thus enabled to study closely the operation of the program and extend coverage in accordance with experience and future needs. Insurance for the 1948 crop would be made through associations and cooperatives operating within local-insurance areas.

Foreign Farm Labor

(Public Law 893. Approved July 3, 1948)

The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to recruit foreign agricultural workers within the Western Hemisphere and Puerto Rico for farm employment in the United States until June 30, 1949. The Government is permitted to advance transportation and subsistence costs, providing employers reimburse these costs.

Government-Owned Alcohol Plants

(Public Law 890. Approved July 2, 1948)

As a means of handling agricultural surpluses and of supplementing supplies of alcohol, this measure provides for the transfer of three Government-owned alcohol plants to the Department of Agriculture, thereby preventing loss of these research and production facilities to our national industrial potential.

Livestock Disease Control

(Public Law 8. Approved February 28, 1947)

In order to protect livestock and related industries of the United States the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate with Mexico in eradicating foot-and-mouth disease or rinderpest in Mexican cattle so as to prevent the disease from increasing and spreading across United States borders to western meat-producing States.

Livestock Disease Control

(Public Law 496. Approved April 24, 1948)

In a further effort to prevent the spread of foot-and-mouth disease to United States cattle, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to establish research laboratories within or without the United States for the study of animal diseases.

Marketing Agreements Act

(Public Law 305. Approved August 1, 1947)

This act provides more flexibility in the financing and administration of marketing agreements and provides for a continuity of operation not authorized in prior laws. Minimum standards for quality and maturity of commodities were not continuously administered. The present law remedies this by providing that the Secretary of Agriculture shall maintain quality and maturity standards above or below parity and continue operations in the public interest.

Meat Inspection Service

(Public Law 610. Approved June 5, 1948)

This act provides that the Federal Government, rather than plant owners, pay costs of meat-inspection services, except payments for overtime.

Oils and Fats Production Census

(Public Law 243. Approved July 25, 1947)

To aid in stabilizing the fats and oils production trades Congress authorizes the Bureau of the Census to collect and publish monthly statistics on the quantities and kinds of oil and fat products processors have on hand or in transit to consuming establishments. The prior lack of current statistics such as are provided for the benefit of other industries hampered production and marketing of these basic commodities.

APPROPRIATIONS

All appropriations were carefully scrutinized to insure effective continuation of sound projects and to eliminate those which had doubtful value to efficient operation of the Government. Many reductions were effected by coordinating overlapping and duplicating programs thus making such programs more efficient by simplifying administration and centralizing operations. Without curtailing funds for the essential activities of Government, economy and a better balance has been achieved between service rendered and the cost of such service. Following is an official table prepared by the Senate Committee on Appropriations showing the appropriation measures, together with the increase or decrease between the amount requested and the amount appropriated:

Summary of budget estimate, appropriations enacted, and savings effected by the Eightieth Congress [1]

[1] "Permanent appropriations" are not included in these tables. These involve income and expenditure transactions of a special nature within the knowledge and control of the executive departments. They are spread over the fiscal year and the exact sums cannot be known until reported from time to time. For example, included in "permanent appropriations" are the funds for "refunding internal-revenue collections." Refunds on individual taxes will result this year from discrepancies on withholding taxes and from refunds in connection with tax reduction. The amount of individual incomes in 1948 will determine the amount of tax refunds. In addition, Congress this year placed "refunding internal-revenue collections" on an indefinite basis rather than on a specific direct appropriation.

[2] All columns do not add up to totals owing to elimination of fractional parts of a dollar.

[3] To the savings of $3,032,867,283 in the regular and deficiency appropriations of the first session, there may be added $4,017,332,946 of rescissions of authorized and contemplated expenditures canceled by congressional action, making a total of $7,050,200,229.

[4] The "supplemental" appropriations included here were not sent from the Bureau of the Budget in the usual form of supplemental bills. The "regular" appropriation bills were split into sections by the Congress in order to facilitate handling. The second section of each of these three bills was designated "supplemental" to distinguish it from the first section.

AVIATION

Aid to Transoceanic Aircraft

(Public Law 738. Approved June 22, 1948)

To provide search and rescue, communication, and air navigation facilities and meteorological services for aircraft, the Coast Guard is authorized to maintain floating ocean stations in regularly traversed areas.

Alaskan Airports

(Public Law 562. Approved May 28, 1948)

The Administrator of Civil Aeronautics is directed to construct and maintain two public airports in Alaska adequate for the needs of the air commerce of the United States servicing the Territory and foreign countries by way of Alaska.

Congressional Aviation Policy Board

(Public Law 287. Approved July 30, 1947)

Congress established a temporary Congressional Aviation Policy Board to survey and report on development of a national aviation policy adequate to meet the needs of national defense, interstate and foreign commerce, and the postal service; and to provide for formulation and clarification of national policies affecting aviation. The Board submitted its findings in Senate Report 949, "National Aviation Policy," March 1, 1948.

Federal Airport Act Amendment

(Public Law 486. Approved April 17, 1948)

As a defense measure, the Federal Airport Act is extended to include the Virgin Islands in a system of aid to public airports.

Federal Airport Act Amendment

(Public Law 840. Approved June 29, 1948)

The Administrator of Civil Aeronautics is authorized to reimburse municipalities for rehabilitation and repair of public airports damaged by Federal agencies as such rehabilitation and repair progresses or at the termination of the work. This enables municipalities unable to defray current expenses to proceed with repairs.

Increasing Membership of Advisory Defense Group

(Public Law 549. Approved May 25, 1948)

In recognition of the increasing importance of science to national defense measures, the appointment of two additional members to the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics from the ranks of science is herein authorized.

International Aviation Facilities Act

(Public Law 647. Approved June 16, 1948)

To protect and support United States-flag air carriers, this act authorizes, among other things, the Civil Aeronautics Administrator and the Chief of the Weather Bureau to construct and maintain airport properties in foreign countries wherever necessary. Many countries in which United States planes operate are unable financially or technically to provide necessary facilities.

Surplus Airport Act

(Public Law 289. Approved July 30, 1947)

Under this act, Congress permits transfer of surplus airports and airport facilities without cost to any State, municipality, or tax-supported institution when used for the benefit of the public without discrimination. Harbor or port terminals including necessary equipment should first be offered for sale or leased to States or political subdivisions thereof. The Federal Government reserves the use of airports and facilities in case of national emergency.

Training of Air-Traffic Control-Tower Operators

(Public Law 815. Approved June 29, 1948)

The Civil Aeronautics Administrator is authorized to conduct a training program for air-traffic control-tower operators, both civilian and governmental, in which State and local subdivisions would cooperate with Federal agencies.

BUSINESS AND INDUSTRY

Business Census

(Public Law 671. Approved June 19, 1948)

In order to aid business and labor, the Bureau of the Census is directed to collect and publish statistical data periodically relating to manufacturers, mineral industries, distributive trades, and other businesses beginning with 1949. Such censuses would indicate location of markets, the places where consumers are buying, labor supply, source of raw materials, consumer needs, location of new plants, wholesale and retail establishments, and other information essential to the operation of the free-enterprise system.

Export-Import Bank Act

(Public Law 89. Approved June 9, 1947)

To secure a more effective exchange of commodities between the United States, its Territories and insular possessions, and foreign countries, the Export-Import Bank is reincorporated as an agency of the Government, given broader powers of financial operation, and its operation extended through June 30, 1953.

Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation

(Public Law 363. Approved August 5, 1947)

This act authorizes the FDIC to retire its capital stock by payment to the Treasury, retaining a capital surplus of $1,000,000,000, and the borrowing power of the Corporation is increased to $3,000,000,000 to provide adequately for continuation of bank-deposit insurance.

Federal Reserve Banks

(Public Law 41. Approved April 28, 1947)

Federal Reserve banks are authorized to purchase and sell Government securities direct from the Treasury to permit the Treasury to obtain funds quickly to meet temporary situations or contingencies. This enables the Treasury to operate on a smaller cash reserve and results in a substantial saving of interest.

Interstate Commerce Act Amendment

(Public Law 662. Passed over the President's veto June 17, 1948)

In order to maintain a national transportation policy adequate to meet commercial and national defense requirements, to provide efficient public service, and to eliminate unfair or destructive competitive practices among carriers, the Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized to approve carrier agreements when the agreements conform to national transportation policy. Such agreements when approved may be put into force without liability under antitrust laws.

Reconstruction Finance Corporation

(Public Law 548. Approved May 25, 1948)

Lending powers of the RFC are extended through June 30, 1954, with succession of the Corporation continued through June 30, 1956. Capital stock authorization is set at $100,000,000, and the total amount of loans, investments, purchases, and commitments made subsequent to June 30, 1947, is limited to $1,500,000,000. RFC organization and powers are further amended. The Veterans' Housing Act of 1948 (Public Law 864) provided a $500,000,000 additional authorization for veterans' housing.

Stabilization Act of 1947

(Public Law 395. Approved December 30, 1947)

For the purpose of stabilizing the economy of the United States, the President is authorized to continue export controls, to allocate transportation facilities, to encourage the greater production and conservation of food and agricultural commodities, to approve the making of voluntary agreements in industry, business, and agriculture, and to regulate speculative trading on the commodity exchanges.

State Conversion of Federal Savings and Loan Associations

(Public Law 895. Approved July 8, 1948)

This act enables any Federal savings and loan association to convert itself into a State-chartered institution under specified conditions if 51 percent of the members or shareholders so desire. Federal insurance of accounts may be continued after conversion.

Temporary Free Importation of Lead

(Public Law 725. Approved June 19, 1948)

Import duties on various crude forms of lead are suspended until June 30, 1949.

CONSERVATION AND FLOOD CONTROL

Disaster Relief

(Public Law 825. Approved June 29, 1948)

The amount available for disaster loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is increased from $25,000,000 to $40,000,000. This necessity arose mainly because of the widespread and acute housing shortage caused by floods in the Northwest section of the country.

Emergency Flood and Power Fund

(Public Law 790. Approved June 26, 1948)

In order to assure continuous operation of irrigation and power systems maintained by the Bureau of Reclamation an emergency fund is authorized for the Commissioner of Reclamation for use in such emergencies as hydroelectric-power-system failure and canal-bank or dam breaks resulting from unusual flood or weather conditions.

Emergency Flood Control Act

(Public Law 102. Approved June 23, 1947)

The sum of $15,000,000 was authorized to be immediately expended by the Secretary of War, supervised by the Chief of Engineers, for emergency repair, restoration, and strengthening of levees and other flood-control works threatened or destroyed by recent floods.

Flood Control Act Amendment

(Public Law 397. Approved January 19, 1948)

This act directs the Secretary of Agriculture to make surveys and reports on watersheds where the Secretary of War is authorized to make official investigations of streams.

Forest Pest Control Act

(Public Law 110. Approved June 25, 1947)

To preserve forest resources of the United States, enhance forest growth, and protect forests from the ravages of pests and diseases, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, directly or in cooperation with States, Territories, individuals, or organizations, to conduct surveys on all forest lands, appraise infestations, and determine measures to remedy such infestations. Not only will this program retard forest losses and aid in flood control, but lumber industries and employment of persons in lumber and allied industries will be made more secure.

Interstate Oil Compact Act

(Public Law 184. Approved July 12, 1947)

This act enables oil-producing States to extend conservation policies with regard to oil and gas and by joint agreement to secure enactment of legislation preventing wasteful and destructive practices in production methods. The compact includes an interstate commission to foster these objects.

New England Water Pollution Compact

(Public Law 292. Approved July 31, 1947)

Congress approved extension of the authority for the New England States to enter into an agreement to reduce pollution of interstate streams, ponds, lakes, and tidal waters.

Pacific Marine Fisheries Compact

(Public Law 232. Approved July 24, 1947)

Consent and approval of Congress was granted to the fisheries agreement entered into by the States of California, Oregon, and Washington to promote better utilization and conservation of their Pacific fisheries resources by an interstate commission and other measures.

River and Harbor and Flood Control Acts of 1948

(Public Law 858. Approved June 30, 1948)

In order to improve river channels and harbors and to alleviate the menace of floods, this act authorizes $30,444,000 for rivers and harbors projects, $62,000,000 for flood-control projects, and $37,000,000 for related projects, a total of $129,444,000.

Synthetic Liquid Fuels

(Public Law 443. Approved March 15, 1948)

This act authorizes an increase in the appropriation for research and for operation of synthetic fuels demonstration plants from $30,000,000 to $60,000,000 in order to discover methods of conserving oil reserves for peacetime economy and national defense.

GOVERNMENT COMMODITY AND OTHER CONTROLS

First Decontrol Act

(Public Law 29. Approved March 31, 1947)

Congress discontinued as of March 31, 1947, broad war powers granted to the President in the Second War Powers Act to control motor and water carriers, requisition property, assign priorities, and waive navigation and inspection laws. Portions of the act were continued through June 30, 1947, to permit allocations to be completed on articles committed for foreign consumption prior to March 24, 1947.

Second Decontrol Act Extension

(Public Law 606. Approved June 4, 1948)

Under the Second Decontrol Act (Public Law 188, 80th Cong., 1st sess.) a reduced list of materials and facilities in short supply at home and abroad were continued under control to promote production in the United States and to assist export of products required for production in foreign countries of critical material urgently needed in the United States. By this act controls are continued until June 30, 1949, on tin and tin products, antimony, fats and oils, rice, nitrogen fertilizer, nitrogenous compounds, and pig tin. Authority to grant export priorities and use of rail transportation equipment and facilities are extended.

Sugar Act

(Public Law 388. Approved August 8, 1947)

This act of Congress is designed to meet postwar adjustment problems in the production and distribution of sugar and to stabilize the sugar producing, refining, and importing industries by placing producers on a tonnage rather than a percentage basis. The United States market is divided among the several domestic sugar-producing areas. Allocations to certain foreign producing areas are made in accord with their historic relation to the domestic market to stabilize their economy and for the best interests of the United States.

Sugar Control Act

(Public Law 30. Approved March 31, 1947)

Sugar, remaining in scarce supply, was continued under moderate controls until October 31, 1947, in order to insure proper distribution. Inventory controls were authorized, except for household users, until March 31, 1948. Allocation and pricing powers were placed under the Secretary of Agriculture who was directed to watch the sugar situation and to remove all controls when he determines that supplies are adequate.

Termination of Certain War Emergency Acts

(Public Law 239. Approved July 25, 1947)

This act of Congress ended a large number of war emergency measures rendered unnecessary by the termination of hostilities. Many of these measures related to authorizations for use of wartime appropriations.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION AND GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

(See also Labor)

Air Parcel Post Service

(Public Law 819. Approved June 29, 1948)

The law creates a new air parcel-post service for mailable matter weighing from 8 ounces to 70 pounds.

Armed Services Procurement Act of 1947

(Public Law 413. Approved February 19, 1948)

The armed services are directed to return to peacetime purchasing procedures through the advertising bid method in placing contracts for a majority of supplies and services.

Civil Service Retirement Act Amendment

(Public Law 426. Approved February 28, 1948)

Civil service retirement benefits are liberalized in this act by increasing annuities of retired personnel on the roll as of April 1, 1948, by 25 percent or $300 per annum, whichever is smaller, and the beneficiary may elect to provide benefits for a surviving spouse of one-half of the annuity but not to exceed $600 per annum. Employees not yet retired will receive future pension increases ranging from 2 to 25 percent. Employees at least 55 years old and retired after 30 years of service receive larger pensions than in the former law. Benefits are provided for widows and children under 18 of deceased Federal employees. No limit is placed on the number of years which may be counted toward retirement.

Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government

(Public Law 162. Approved July 7, 1947)

In order to secure more efficient service in the transaction of public business by Government bureaus, agencies, and boards, a 12-member bipartisan commission is created to study organization and methods of operation. The Commission is composed of six members from private life and two each from the Senate, House of Representatives, and the executive branch of the Government and will report its recommendations to Congress for action within 10 days after the Eighty-first Congress is convened and organized.

Federal Bureau of Investigation Retirement Act

(Public Law 168. Approved July 11, 1947)

In consideration of the rigorous and dangerous duties performed this act provides greatly liberalized retirement privileges for agents, inspectors, Assistant Directors and the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation who have reached the age of 50 years with 20 years of service.

Federal Investigatory Personnel Retirement

(Public Law 879. Approved July 2, 1948)

Retirement annuities are liberalized for Federal agents whose duties of criminal investigation and apprehension involve hazards at age 50 after 20 years' service in that position.

Government Employees' Annuities

(Public Law 263. Approved July 30, 1947)

Employees separated from Government service with less than 10 years of service are permitted to withdraw the full amount of money previously deducted from their salaries for retirement purposes with interest at 4 percent.

Mileage Allowance for United States Marshals and Deputies

(Public Law 673. Approved June 19, 1948)

A 7-cents-per-mile allowance for United States marshals and deputies for travel on official business is granted.

Payments for Improper Removal From Government Service

(Public Law 623. Approved June 10, 1948)

In the interests of strengthening the civil service, this act provides that persons unjustly discharged from Federal employment shall, after appeal and reinstatement, receive pay for time lost through no fault of their own.

Postal Rate Revision and Federal Employees' Salary Act

(Public Law 900. Approved July 3, 1948)

The annual rate of pay of postal employees is increased by $450 and that of Federal, legislative, and judicial employees by $330. The hourly rate of pay of certain postal employees is increased by 25 cents and that of all other Government employees by 20 cents. Certain postal rates are revised upward, effective January 1, 1949.

Puerto Rico Organic Act

(Public Law 362. Approved August 5, 1947)

This act expands the powers of self-government of the people of Puerto Rico by authorizing them to elect their own Governor who is empowered to appoint the heads of all executive departments, except the auditor and members of the supreme court who will continue to be appointed by the President of the United States.

Seniority Rights of Disabled Veterans in Postal Service

(Public Law 739. Approved June 22, 1948)

Veterans in the postal service having 10-point disability preference may transfer without loss of seniority.

War Claims Act of 1948

(Public Law 896. Approved July 3, 1948)

A War Claims Commission is established to have jurisdiction over war claims and report to Congress. Return of property to Germany, Japan, or its nationals, vested in the United States after December 17, 1941, is prohibited; proceeds from liquidation of such property shall be used to pay war claims. A measure of emergency relief is given to American citizens who, in the national interest as determined by our Government, remained in the Philippines, Guam, Wake, Midway, or any Territories or possessions of the United States who were interned and suffered at the hands of the Japanese.

HOUSING

Disabled Veterans Housing

(Public Law 702. Approved June 19, 1948)

Veterans requiring regular, frequent, or periodical use of a wheel chair because of service-connected disability may receive assistance in acquiring housing suitable to their needs. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is authorized to pay 50 percent or not to exceed $10,000 of the cost of the housing and the necessary land.

Federal Home Loan Bank Mortgages

(Public Law 311. Approved August 1, 1947)

Congress broadened existing law by authorizing Federal home loan banks to accept mortgages having a 25-year maturity (former law 20 years) as mortgage collateral.

Housing and Rent Act of 1947

(Public Law 129. Approved June 30, 1947)

In order to spur the building of immediately needed housing, Congress removed Government controls on construction and extended rent controls until March 1, 1948. To insure tenants against undue increases in rent after March 1, 1948, provision was made for negotiated rent increases not to exceed 15 percent in return for protection to tenants in their occupancy by a lease to run to December 1948.

(Public Law 464. Approved March 30, 1948)

Rent controls are extended in this act to April 1, 1949, with provision for voluntary leases through 1949 carrying increases of up to 15 percent. The Court of Emergency Appeals is directed to issue orders approving or disapproving decontrol recommendations of local rent boards in case the Housing Expediter does not adopt these recommendations.

Low-Cost Housing and Slum Clearance

(Public Law 301. Approved July 31, 1947)

(Public Law 366. Approved August 5, 1947)

In order to further relieve the housing shortage, Congress authorized the Federal Housing Administrator, under title VI of the National Housing Act, to increase mortgage insurance for private home building by $200,000,000. In addition $750,000,000 in mortgage insurance was made available to veterans to purchase permanent housing, including housing built by the Government during the national defense and war period.

National Housing Act Amendment of 1947

(Public Law 394. Approved December 27, 1947)

Congress authorized the Federal Housing Administrator to further increase insurance of mortgages on new residential construction under title VI of the National Housing Act by $750,000,000, bringing the total authorization to $4,950,000,000.

National Housing Act Amendment of 1948

(Public Law 468. Approved March 31, 1948)

The emergency home mortgage insurance program is extended for a temporary period pending study of a long-range program and an additional $400,000,000 mortgage insurance authorization under title VI of the National Housing Act is provided.

Veterans Housing Act of 1947

(Public Law 85. Approved May 31, 1947)

Congress authorized expenditure of $35,500,000 additional for housing construction for distressed families of servicemen and veterans. The housing program for veterans' families in educational centers had been deplorably slow and provision was made in this act to speed up and complete construction for student veterans and their dependents.

Veterans' Housing Act of 1948

(Public Law 864. Approved July 1, 1948)

To aid veterans by encouraging banks to make housing loans, a new market for the sale and purchase of mortgages under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act is authorized by amendment of the National Housing Act. Banks are permitted to sell such mortgages to a subsidiary of Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Federal National Mortgage Association, which is authorized to have outstanding obligations for mortgage operations of 40 times the amount of its capital ($20,000,000) and surplus ($1,000,000). Incontestability of veterans' loans under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act is established. Special 95 percent loans are authorized on nonprofit cooperative housing corporations whose membership consists primarily of veterans of World War II.

Veterans Permanent War-Housing Sales

(Public Law 689. Approved June 19, 1948)

In this act of Congress veterans purchasing Federal permanent war housing of not more than four-family dwelling units on an individual dwelling-house basis for their own occupancy are to pay a price not exceeding the cost of such property to the Government or the long-term market value, whichever is less.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS AND FOREIGN TRADE

Assistance to Devastated Countries

(Public Law 84. Approved May 31, 1947)

Congress authorized expenditure of $350,000,000 to send essential supplies to war-devastated countries. Such supplies were limited to medicine, food, clothing, fuel, fertilizer, pesticides, and seeds. A substantial portion of this fund was earmarked for the care and feeding of children.

Caribbean Commission Membership

(Public Law 431. Approved March 4, 1948)

Congress authorizes cooperation with Great Britain, France, and the Netherlands in the Caribbean Commission to promote scientific, technological, and economic development in the Caribbean area and to facilitate the use of resources and concerted treatment of mutual problems.

Displaced Persons

(Public Law 774. Approved June 25, 1948)

In this act Congress seeks to relieve the problem of displaced persons and induce other nations to accept a relative share of such persons by authorizing admission to the United States of a maximum of 220,000 during the fiscal years 1949 and 1950 without regard to annual quota limitations for these years. Not less than 40 percent of those admitted shall be persons whose place of origin has been de facto annexed by a foreign power. Special preference is given to persons engaged in agriculture; 3,000 orphans and 15,000 displaced persons now resident in the United States are to be admitted without regard to any quotas, and 2,000 recent refugees from Czechoslovakia are to be admitted under quota and certain zone limitations.

Foreign Aid Act of 1947

(Public Law 389. Approved December 17, 1947)

Immediate aid urgently needed through the winter by the peoples of Austria, China, France, and Italy is provided in this act to alleviate conditions of hunger and cold and prevent serious economic retrogression. Adequate provision is made to protect our domestic economy with respect to commodities in short supply and, by specific agreement, each country would undertake to make efficient use of all commodities received and to encourage maximum domestic production and distribution of locally produced commodities. An appropriation of $597,000,000 is authorized.

Foreign-Assistance Act of 1948

(Public Law 472. Approved April 3, 1948)

By this act, Congress provides assistance in the reconstruction and recovery of Europe and other foreign areas in the interest of world peace and stability. Expenditures of $6,098,000,000 are authorized the first year and additional appropriations through June 30, 1952, as Congress may provide subject to annual review. Of the original appropriation $5,300,000,000 is for the European recovery program, $463,000,000 for China, $275,000,000 for Greece and Turkey, and $60,000,000 for the International Children's Emergency Fund. There is established an Economic Cooperation Administration headed by an independent Administrator. A Joint Committee on Foreign Economic Cooperation is created in the Congress to check on administration of the law.

(Public Law 423. Approved February 27, 1948)

Authority of the Maritime Commission to sell, charter, and operate Government-owned vessels is extended to March 1, 1949, to insure continuance of shipping facilities for domestic purposes as well as the foreign rehabilitation program. (See Public Law 127, June 28, 1947, for prior authority.)

Pacific Islands Trusteeship

(Public Law 204. Approved July 18, 1947)

Congress approved the agreement between the United States and the United Nations for United States trusteeship of the Pacific Islands formerly held by Japan under mandate of the League of Nations. The islands under trusteeship are to be known as the Territory of the Pacific Islands.

South Pacific Commission Membership

(Public Law 403. Approved January 28, 1948)

This act provides for membership in the South Pacific Commission to enable governments administering non-self-governing territories in the South Pacific to more effectively cooperate in promoting economic and social advancement of the peoples in those areas.

Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1948

(Public Law 792. Approved June 26, 1948)

Authority to enter into reciprocal trade agreements is extended to June 30, 1949. The Tariff Commission is required to make findings of and report the maximum or minimum limits of duties necessary to prevent injury to domestic producers. If the President exceeds the limits set by the Tariff Commission in future agreements, he must submit a report to Congress outlining reasons for his action.

Treaties of Peace With Italy, Rumania, Bulgaria, and Hungary

(Executives F, G, H, and I)

On June 5 the Congress ratified the treaties of peace with Italy, Rumania, Bulgaria, and Hungary which had been negotiated and signed at Paris on February 10, 1947, by the nations formerly at war with these countries. The subjects covered by the treaties include guaranty of human rights, limitation of armaments in the ex-enemy states, fixing of reparations, treatment of former Italian colonies, and economic and commercial policies to be followed by those states. These treaties were represented to be the best which could be achieved by general agreement and their ratification was urged as a preliminary step for final settlement with Germany and Japan.

United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration Liquidation

(Public Law 164. Approved July 8, 1947)

Authorized appropriation of $2,370,000 from unobligated funds formerly appropriated for UNRRA to pay expenses of Government agencies in liquidating the activities of this organization whose work terminated on June 30, 1947.

United Nations Site Act

(Public Law 7. Approved February 26, 1947)

Contributions to be used exclusively for the acquisition of a permanent site in New York City for headquarters of the United Nations were allowed as deductions from income, estate, and gift taxes. Pursuant to this authorization a six-block long area on the East River was presented to the United Nations, thus terminating the long and disturbing controversy regarding a permanent home for the United Nations.

United States Informational and Educational Exchange Act of 1948

(Public Law 402. Approved January 27, 1948)

This act provides for promotion of mutual understanding between the United States and other nations by reciprocal interchange of students, teachers, and leaders in specialized fields and by dissemination of information about the United States, its people, and policies, through the press, radio, motion pictures, and other information media.

World Health Organization Membership

(Public Law 643. Approved June 14, 1948)

(Public Law 843. Approved June 30, 1948)

The United States herein accepts the instrument of amendment revising the International Labor Organization Constitution to enable that organization to function in the postwar world as one of the specialized agencies of the United Nations. Annual contributions of not exceeding $1,091,739 are authorized as the United States share of expenses of the organization.

Labor-Management Relations Act

(Public Law 101. Passed over veto, June 23, 1947)

This act recognizes the mutual rights and responsibility of employers, employees, and labor organizations in labor-management relations by providing for protection of individual employees in their relations with labor organizations, for protection in collective bargaining, for enforcement of labor contracts, for minimizing strikes and labor disputes, and by insuring fair labor practices on the part of employers and employees in the interests of uninterrupted production, the smooth flow of commerce, and the public health, safety, and welfare. Among other things, the law provides:

1. Unions may be sued for breach of contract and for damages inflicted by jurisdictional strikes and boycotts.
2. The closed shop is forbidden.
3. The union shop is permitted if a majority of employees vote to favor it.
4. New contracts may provide for union-dues deductions from pay envelopes of employees only upon voluntary consent of union workers.
5. Unions are forbidden to spend money or make contributions in political campaigns for Federal offices.
6. Welfare funds may be established only for specific purposes and only if the employer participates in their administration.
7. Unions become subject to charges of unfair labor practices for failure to bargain collectively, for coercion of employees, and other practices.
8. Unions are required to file financial statements.
9. Government may secure 80-day injunctions against strikes endangering national health and safety.
10. Neither unions nor employers may terminate a contract without a 60-day notice. Strikes and lock-outs are barred within this period.
11. The National Labor Relations Board is increased to five members and the review of cases is placed directly in the membership of the Board rather than as formerly in a review section; procedure is reorganized; and the Board is empowered to investigate, hold hearings, and carry out provisions of the act.
12. A new Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service is established as an agency, separate from the Department of Labor, to carry out provisions of the act with regard to peaceful settlement of labor disputes.
13. A Joint Committee on Labor-Management Relations is established in Congress to study the field of labor relations and the operation of the Labor-Management Relations Act.

Portal-to-Portal Pay Limitation Act

(Public Law 49. Approved May 14, 1947)

This act bans suits by employees against employers for time or overtime used in arriving at the actual place of performance of their principal work or payment for activities which are preliminary or postliminary to their principal work. In cases in which contracts, written or unwritten, or custom includes payment for such activities such payment is not forbidden. The act provides for the compromise of past claims and for the future determination of wage claims based on employee activities preliminary to the regular work day.

Postal Employees Pay Act

(Public Law 265. Approved July 30, 1947)

This act of Congress gives supervisory employees in the postal service compensatory time for work in excess of 8 hours per day.

Postal Service Substitute Personnel Act

(Public Law 35. Approved April 15, 1947)

In order to correct inequities arising from conflicting legislation, substitute personnel in the postal service upon appointment to permanent status are allowed credit in that appointment on a calendar basis rather than on a basis of hours of service as in prior law; promotion of substitute personnel is also placed upon a calendar basis which in effect increases the rates of pay, insuring more adequate wage levels in this classification of postal employees.

Railroad Retirement and Unemployment Insurance Benefits

(Public Law 744. Approved June 23, 1948)

Retirement annuities and pensions under the Railroad Retirement Act are increased by 20 percent. The act guarantees that every employee-contributor or his designated beneficiaries or survivors will receive the amount of contributions plus interest. A sliding tax scale based on the amount in the reserve fund is substituted for the flat unemployment insurance contribution rate. Such contributions are reduced from 3 percent to one-half percent as long as the fund remains above $450,000,000 and contributions increase one-half percent for every $50,000,000 the fund falls below the limit.

Railway Postal Clerks' Compensation

(Public Law 740. Approved June 22, 1948)

Railway postal clerks temporarily displaced from their positions and temporarily assigned to other positions retain their seniority status and same salary rate for work actually performed until restored to their regular positions.

Railway Postal Clerks' Travel Allowance

(Public Law 687. Approved June 19, 1948)

(Public Law 436. Approved March 8, 1948)

This act repeals provisions of law which limited the tour of duty of officers and enlisted personnel of the Army and Air Force in certain foreign-duty stations to 2 years.

Military Justice

(Public Law 775. Approved June 25, 1948)

A system of military justice and administration is provided for the United States Air Force, similar to that of the Army and Navy.

National Industrial Reserve Act of 1948

(Public Law 883. Approved July 2, 1948)

Having as its purpose a comprehensive program to preserve an essential nucleus of industrial plants and equipment ready for use in emergencies, this act provides that excess industrial plants not disposed of under a national-security clause are to be transferred to the Federal Works Agency for disposal or for maintenance in stand-by condition at the direction of the Secretary of Defense. There is established a National Industrial Reserve Review Committee of civilians experienced in industry to review property disposal and retention activities and to make recommendations for future action.

National Security Act

(Public Law 253. Approved July 26, 1947)

Unification of the armed services is provided by Congress to bring to the military departments in peacetime a large measure of the unity and effectiveness existing in war. Under the law a single Cabinet member, Secretary of Defense, heads three separate operating departments: Army, Navy, and Air Forces. Other sections establish a Central Intelligence Agency and provide for integration of the armed forces under civilian control and for coordination with all other departments of the Government in an efficient and adequate system for national security.

Naval Postgraduate School Act

(Public Laws 302, 303. Approved July 31, 1947)

Congress authorized establishment of the Naval Postgraduate School to be located at Monterey, Calif., for advanced instruction and training of commissioned officers of the Regular Navy and Marine Corps and the Reserve components thereof.

Naval Public Works

(Public Law 653. Approved June 16, 1948)

Expenditures of $209,689,500 are authorized.

Naval Vessels Conversion Act

(Public Law 319. Approved August 1, 1947)

In order to insure improvement of naval vessels by incorporating the latest technical and scientific developments, Congress removes the limitation on the amount which could be expended on each vessel to install modern and up-to-date equipment.

Navy Medical Corps Appointments

(Public Law 716. Approved June 19, 1948)

Present restrictions on appointment to the Navy Medical Corps are removed to permit commissioning of desirable and qualified civilians to the corps and thereby alleviate the present shortage of personnel.

Officer Personnel Act

(Public Law 381. Approved August 7, 1947)

Congress provides a comprehensive and permanent promotion system for the armed services in harmony with the needs and structure of the modern Army and Navy. Necessary improvements are made in the present Navy system of promotion by selection, and the Army system of promotion by seniority is changed to a system by selection. Uniformity in the promotion systems of the two services is thus advanced.

Rubber Stock Piling

(Public Law 24. Approved March 29, 1947)

In the interest of national defense Congress was authorized to study and report upon the most effective method of creating an adequate supply of natural and synthetic rubber. Stock piling and rotation of rubber reserves together with certain controls were authorized until such time as permanent legislation would be enacted and provision made for continuing manufacture and sale of synthetic rubber. (See Rubber Act of 1948, Public Law 469).

Rubber Act of 1948

(Public Law 469. Approved March 31, 1948)

Maintenance and development of the chemical rubber industry is provided to assure a sufficient productive capacity for national defense and to provide adequately for essential civilian needs. The President is authorized to exercise allocation, specification, and inventory controls over natural and synthetic rubber. The domestic rubber industry is strengthened by providing for Government purchases of rubber and leasing of Government facilities.

Selective Service Act of 1948

(Public Law 759. Approved June 24, 1948)

To maintain the national security and to increase the strength of the armed forces, this act authorizes the induction into the armed forces of men ages 19 through 25 for 21 months of training. Men 18 years of age may volunteer for 1 year's service in lieu of compulsory service. The aggregate authorized strength of the armed services is raised to 2,005,882. Regulations concerning enlistments, deferments, exemptions, and reemployment rights are specified. A Selective Service System is created to administer the provisions of the act. A mandatory order system for the procurement of materials for the armed forces is established. The Articles of War are revised and martial law and military justice is improved. This act expires after 2 years.

Seventh-Group Air Force

(Public Law 547. Approved May 21, 1948)

In order to strengthen and modernize our air power this act authorizes a part of a supplemental national defense bill, $1,687,000,000 in contract commitments for the construction and procurement of aircraft sufficient to equip a 70-group air force and appropriates $608,100,000, including $250,000,000 to liquidate previous contract authority.

Disposal of Certain Surplus Housing

(Public Law 796. Approved June 28, 1948)

In order to prevent removal of student veterans' temporary housing units from college campuses, this measure relinquishes Federal rights in such housing to educational institutions that, with local governmental consent, submit an appropriate request within 120 days after June 28, 1948. Veterans are to be given preference in filling vacancies in such housing transferred.

Disposition of Materials on Public Lands

(Public Law 291. Approved July 31, 1947)

Congress authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of materials on public lands such as gravel, clay, sand, stone, and timber to States and political subdivisions or to persons or organizations not reselling for profit, provided removal thereof is not detrimental to public interest or prohibited by prior law.

Federal Aid to Schools

(Public Law 317. Approved August 1, 1947)

Schools overburdened with war-incurred enrollments were extended Federal aid not to exceed $5,000,000 until June 30, 1948, to assist in transition from war to peacetime conditions.

Federal Aid to Schools

(Public Law 839. Approved June 29, 1948)

Federal aid is continued to local school agencies for the operation and maintenance of school facilities requiring assistance because of overburdened school enrollment caused by war activities or reactivation of defense projects. Expenditure of $6,000,000 is authorized.

Federal Employment of Handicapped Persons

(Public Law 617. Approved June 10, 1948)

In order to protect handicapped persons who are qualified to perform duties in Federal employment, safeguards are set up to prevent discrimination against them in the classified civil service.

Government Utilities Supply

(Public Law 284. Approved July 30, 1947)

Congress authorizes the War and Navy Departments to sell electrical power, steam, compressed air, water, sewage- and garbage-disposal service, gas, ice and mechanical refrigeration utilities and services to welfare activities and private persons in the immediate vicinity of naval or military establishments in cases in which such utilities are not otherwise available.

Hospital Construction

(Public Law 723. Approved June 19, 1948)

This measure permits States that have not enacted legislation on hospital standards by July 1, 1948, to become eligible for Federal hospital construction funds whenever they enact such measures after that date.

National Dental Research Act

(Public Law 755. Approved June 24, 1948)

The United States Public Health Service, through a National Institute of Dental Research, is authorized to operate a dental disease program comparable to the present cancer program. Research and training in the field of dental diseases are authorized, and a National Advisory Dental Research Council is established.

National Heart Institute

(Public Law 655. Approved June 16, 1948)

The United States Public Health Service, through a National Heart Institute, is authorized to operate a heart disease program comparable to the present cancer program. The act directs that research and training in the field of heart diseases shall be undertaken, and a National Advisory Heart Council is established.

Nurseries and Nursery Schools

(Public Law 711. Approved June 19, 1948)

This act continues until June 30, 1949, the provisions of the 1947 act authorizing the Board of Public Welfare of the District of Columbia to continue operation of nurseries and nursery schools for children of working parents. (See Public Law 123, June 27, 1947, for prior authority.)

Old-Age Assistance Payments Exemption

(Public Law 131. Approved June 30, 1947)

To aid the aged, States were authorized to disregard until July 1, 1949, income earned from agricultural labor and nursing service in making old-age assistance payments.

Public Park and Recreational Areas

(Public Law 616. Approved June 10, 1948)

The Surplus Property Act of 1944 is amended to enable the War Assets Administration to transfer to State and local governmental agencies surplus Government real estate suitable for public parks or recreational areas, or as historical monuments. Transfers for use as public parks are to be made on a basis of 50 percent of fair value and those made for historical monuments shall be without monetary consideration.

Seizure of Foods and Drugs

(Public Law 749. Approved June 24, 1948)

Authority recently denied by court decision is restored to the Food and Drug Administration to seize and condemn food and drug products that become adulterated or misbranded while being held for sale. By court decision only the goods in a first sale within a State would be subject to seizure.

Social Security Act Extension

(Public Law 642. Passed over veto June 14, 1948)

This act of Congress increases benefits for the aged, needy, blind, and for dependent children. The status quo is maintained with respect to social-security-coverage regulations for employment and unemployment taxes, and social-security benefits pending later decision by Congress on extension of coverage to persons who have heretofore been excluded by Government regulations. (See Public Law 379, August 6, 1947, for prior authority.)

Surplus Property for Educational Purposes

(Public Law 889. Approved July 2, 1948)

This act authorizes the Secretaries of the Army, Navy, and Air Force to donate surplus property to the United States Commissioner of Education for allocation to educational institutions.

Surplus Property for Flood Damage

(Public Law 233. Approved July 25, 1947)

Congress authorizes the President, acting through the Federal Works Administrator, to employ any articles declared to be surplus under the Surplus Property Act of 1944 to alleviate damage, hardship, and suffering caused by flood or other catastrophe. The Federal Works Administrator is further authorized to act through any Government agency or State or local governments to carry out the provisions of this act.

Teachers' Salaries—District of Columbia

(Public Law 163. Approved July 7, 1947)

A minimum salary of $2,500 per annum is provided for teachers in the District of Columbia; classification and assignment methods are liberalized and provision for automatic promotions and annual increases in salary are included.

Water Pollution Control Act

(Public Law 845. Approved June 30, 1948)

A comprehensive system of cooperation between the Federal Government and States in controlling water pollution is initiated. The Surgeon General of the Public Health Service is directed to develop a control plan in cooperation with Federal, State, and interstate agencies, municipalities, and industres. Loans may be made to States, municipalities, and interstate agencies for treatment works, limited to one-third of the cost or $250,000, whichever is smaller; and the law authorizes not to exceed $22,500,000 annually for 5 years for such loans. Grants are provided for investigations, preliminary surveys, and for engineering and planning.

SOLDIERS AND VETERANS

Admissions Tax

(Public Law 706. Approved June 19, 1948)

This measure exempts hospitalized veterans and servicemen who are admitted free to entertainments, educational, and other recreational functions from payment of the admissions tax, except when on leave or furlough.

Alien Fiancées or Fiancés of Members of the Armed Forces

(Public Law 450. Approved March 24, 1948)

This act extends to December 31, 1948, prior authority to admit alien fiancées or fiancés of present and former servicemen for a period of 3 months for purpose of marriage within that period.

Army and Air Force Vitalization and Retirement Equalization Act

(Public Law 810. Approved June 28, 1948)

In order to eliminate inefficient and substandard officers from the Regular Army and Air Force and to secure a more vitalized corps, the Secretaries of the Army and Air Force are authorized to examine all officer personnel records, first by a selection board, then a board of inquiry, and finally a board of review. Officers who are found to be subject to removal from the active list if eligible for voluntary retirement shall receive full retirement benefits and if ineligible shall be honorably discharged with compensation based on a formula permitting payment of an amount based on length of service, but in any event not more than 1 year's base and longevity pay. Voluntary retirement based on years of service is provided for officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men in the Regular Army and Air Force; Reserve components for the first time are extended certain retirement benefits at the age of 60 if qualified under the provisions of the act.

Beneficiaries of Aviation Officers

(Public Law 236. Approved July 25, 1947)

Additional beneficiaries were made eligible for lump-sum aviation bonuses in the event of the death of aviation officers entitled to such bonuses. By listing the beneficiaries in succession this act provides for a more equitable distribution of estates of deceased aviation officers who have no designated beneficiaries.

Benefits for Disabled Veterans in Postal Service

(Public Law 802. Approved June 28, 1948)

This measure permits a disabled veteran who no longer qualifies for a postal position for which he was once on a civil-service register to request that his name be put on a similar register for which he qualifies without loss of seniority.

Chronic and Tropical Diseases

(Public Law 748. Approved June 24, 1948)

This act establishes for veterans a presumption of service connection in cases of chronic and tropical diseases developing after separation from service.

Compensation for Survivors of Deceased War Veterans

(Public Law 868. Approved July 1, 1948)

In recognition of high living costs, increased compensation is payable to surviving widows, children, and dependent parents of veterans whose death results from wartime service. New rates are $75 for a widow with no child; $100 for widow and one child, with $15 additional for each child; for surviving orphans, $58 for one child, $82 for two children, and $106 for three children, with $20 for each additional child; and $35 for each parent. Survivors of active-duty service personnel who die during peacetime are entitled to 80 percent of the war rates.

Credit for Under-Age Service

(Public Law 681. Approved June 19, 1948)

This act makes permanent the temporary provision of law which authorizes credit for longevity pay for service in the Army, Navy, Air Force, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service, or in any Reserve component thereof, when such service has been rendered prior to 18 years of age.

Dependents' Transportation

(Public Law 151. Approved July 1, 1947)

This act amends existing law so as to authorize transportation of dependents and household effects of personnel of the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard to unrestricted domestic posts and to overseas bases.

Disability Compensation

(Public Law 876. Approved July 2, 1948)

This act provides an increase in compensation for peacetime service-connected disability from 75 to 80 percent of the rate authorized for war-incurred disability.

Disabled Veterans' Dependents Allowance Increases

(Public Law 877. Approved July 2, 1948)

Veterans of World War II, World War I, and the Spanish-American War with total disability under wartime rates are given increased dependents allowance ranging from $21 for a wife but no child to $56 for a wife and three or more children. Peacetime total disability rates are similarly increased ranging from $16.80 to $44.80. Veterans 60 percent or more disabled are given increases based on an amount having the same ratio to the amount specified in the appropriate wartime or peacetime schedule as the degree of disability bears to the total disability.

Disabled Veterans' Subsistence Allowance Increase

(Public Law 338. Approved August 4, 1947)

Payments to disabled veterans with service-connected disability of 30 percent or more, taking vocational rehabilitation courses, were fixed at $115 monthly, if single, $135 with one dependent, $20 per month for one child and $15 additional for each additional child; and $15 per month for a dependent parent.

Federal Aid to Institutional Homes for Disabled Veterans

(Public Law 531. Approved May 18, 1948)

This act increases from $300 to $500 per annum the amount of Federal aid to support soldiers and veterans domiciled or hospitalized in State and Territorial homes. This increase extends through June 30, 1951.

Federal Employees' Military Leave Act

(Public Law 153. Approved July 1, 1947)

In order to extend privileges to Federal workers equal to those extended to workers outside Government service with respect to military leave, Federal employees who are members of the Enlisted or Officers' Reserve Corps, the National Guard, or the Naval Reserve are placed in the same status as private employees to receive pay and allowances while on military leave as well as full protection in their employment.

Government Life Insurance Death Benefits

(Public Law 429. Approved March 3, 1948)

This act of Congress extends for an additional 2 years the time in which eligible persons may apply for insurance benefits after the death of a veteran in order to provide such benefits to those who have been unable to apply or were unaware of their rights.

Government Life Insurance Reinstatement Act

(Public Law 5. Approved February 21, 1947)

The National Service Life Insurance Act is amended to permit service personnel to apply for permanent or term insurance on enlistment. Removal of restrictions liberalizes reinstatement of lapsed insurance; and term insurance held by totally disabled personnel who fail to apply for conversion is automatically converted to the ordinary life plan.

Government Life Insurance Renewal Act of 1947

(Public Law 34. Approved April 15, 1947)

To enable veterans to provide a longer period of insurance protection, 5-year level-premium-term insurance policies expiring at the end of any 5-year period were made renewable for a second, third, fourth, or fifth 5-year period at the premium rate for the attained age without medical examination.

Government Life Insurance Renewal Act of 1948

(Public Law 838. Approved June 29, 1948)

Renewal for an additional 5 years of any national service life insurance 5-year level premium-term policy issued prior to January 1, 1948, is provided without medical examination and at the premium rate for the attained age.

Homestead Entries Act of 1947

(Public Law 82. Approved May 31, 1947)

This act liberalizes the former homestead entry law by allowing up to 2 years' credit on service in the armed forces from September 16, 1940, and in addition both husband and wife having veteran status are permitted to count their services jointly in credit against homestead entries.

Homestead Entries Act of 1948

(Public Law 596. Approved June 3, 1948)

Veterans may credit military service toward 3-year residence requirements of the act of 1984 allowing citizens to purchase up to 5 acres of land, without waiving their rights under the general homestead law and the Veterans' Preference Act of 1944.

Inactive Training Pay for the Organized Reserve Corps

(Public Law 460. Approved March 25, 1948)

Uniform standards for inactive-duty training are provided for all reserve components of the armed forces. Inactive-duty training pay is authorized in order to facilitate the procurement, training, and readiness for mobilization of the members of reserve components.

Institutional On-Farm Training Act

(Public Law 377. Approved August 6, 1947)

Veterans desiring to take agricultural courses while working their own farms or employed on farms may receive educational allowances of $65 per month for single veterans and $90 per month for married veterans with additional allowances for dependents. Courses are to be given by accredited institutions with 200 hours per year (at least 8 hours per month) attendance, and supervised work experience on the farm or other agricultural establishment is required.

Medical Assistance to Philippine Veterans

(Public Law 865. Approved July 1, 1948)

Grants-in-aid are made to the Republic of the Philippines to provide medical care for Philippine veterans in the service of the United States armed forces during World War II. The act provides $22,500,000 for hospital construction and $3,285,000 annually for 5 years for hospitalization expenses.

Mustering-Out Benefits Applications

(Public Law 539. Approved May 19, 1948)

The time for filing claims for payment under the Mustering-Out Payment Act of 1944 is extended to February 3, 1950.

Naturalization of Alien Veterans

(Public Law 567. Approved June 1, 1948)

This measure enables aliens who served honorably in the United States armed forces during World War I or during a period beginning September 1, 1939, and ending December 31, 1946, to become naturalized citizens and exempts them from certain processes required of nonservice people.

Payment under Armed Forces Leave Act

(Public Law 710. Approved June 19, 1948)

Provides payment of terminal-leave bonds uncashed by veterans before death to surviving brothers, sisters, nieces, nephews, as well as other authorized surviving relatives.

Pension Increase for Civil War and Spanish-American War Veterans

(Public Law 270. Approved July 30, 1947)

Veterans and their dependents of the Civil War and Spanish-American War received a 20 percent monthly pension increase.

Pension Increase for Veterans of Indian Wars

(Public Law 398. Approved January 19, 1948)

Veterans of Indian wars and widows and children of such veterans receive a 20 percent increase to aid in meeting increased living costs.

Positions for Disabled Veterans

(Public Law 452. Approved March 24, 1948)

Selection of superintendents of national cemeteries shall be made from veterans honorably separated from the service and disabled in line of duty for active field service.

Prisoners of War and Internees Tax Exemption Act

(Public Law 310. Approved August 1, 1947)

Interned service men and women and civilian personnel who were citizens of the United States and who were removed by the Japanese from United States possessions to confinement outside such possessions were given tax-exempt status for the period of their internment.

Prosthetic Appliance Development

(Public Law 729. Approved June 19, 1948)

An annual appropriation of $1,000,000 is authorized to be expended by the Veterans' Administration for prosthetic research including prosthetic, orthopedic, and sensory devices.

Retention of Certain Disabled Service Personnel

(Public Law 680. Approved June 19, 1948)

Certain disabled Army and Air Force hospitalized personnel may be retained beyond the statutory termination date of their commissions in order to complete their treatment.

Terminal and Cash Payment Act

(Public Law 350. Approved August 4, 1947)

Congress provided that in lieu of terminal leave, cash payments would be made on base pay plus longevity and that reenlisted personnel may take a cash payment for accrued leave or transfer accrued leave to the new enlistment.

Terminal-Leave Bond Payment Act

(Public Law 254. Approved July 26, 1947)

Congress authorized cash settlement of bonds issued to veterans for terminal-leave pay at any time after September 1, 1947, together with interest computed to the end of the month in which payment is made.

Travel Allowances for Vocational Rehabilitation

(Public Law 660. Approved June 16, 1948)

Authorizes travel and lodging allowances for veterans and necessary attendants, other than Veterans' Administration employees, for travel to or from a Veterans' Administration facility or other place in connection with vocational rehabilitation or for the purpose of examination, treatment, or care.

Veterans' Preference Act Amendment

(Public Law 396. Approved January 19, 1948)

In this law Congress extends veterans' preference in Federal Government employment to widowed mothers of deceased ex-servicemen who lost their lives while on active duty in the armed forces and to widowed mothers of veterans who have a total and permanent service-connected disability.

Veterans' Preference Appeals

(Public Law 741. Approved June 22, 1948)

Civil Service Commission recommendations on appeals under the Veterans' Preference Act are made binding upon executive agencies.

Veterans' Subsistence Allowance

(Public Law 411. Approved February 14, 1948)

Subsistence allowances for veterans pursuing full-time institutional training are increased to $75 per month for veterans without dependents, to $105 per month for veterans with one dependent, and to $120 per month for veterans with more than one dependent.

Veterans' Subsistence Allowance

(Public Law 512. Approved May 4, 1948)

Additional subsistence allowances for part-time institutional trainees are granted under certain conditions. The act raises monthly ceilings on combined subsistence allowance and earnings of veterans to $210 for veterans without dependents, $270 for veterans with one dependent, and $290 for veterans with two or more dependents. Overtime pay in computing trainees' earnings is eliminated.

Vocational Rehabilitation Loans

(Public Law 115. Approved June 25, 1947)

To encourage returning veterans to take up vocational rehabilitation courses, a revolving fund of $3,000,000 was authorized to extend temporary loans to veterans who might not otherwise be able to enter upon such courses.

TAXATION

Excise Tax Act

(Public Law 17. Approved March 11, 1947)

Excise taxes are continued by Congress on certain luxuries including jewelry, furs, toilet preparations, and distilled spirits.

Revenue Act of 1948

(Public Law 471. Passed over Presidential veto April 2, 1948)

To lighten the burden imposed by wartime tax rates and to stimulate capital investment, individual income taxes are reduced from 12.6 percent in low income brackets to 5 percent in higher brackets, retroactive to January 1, 1948. Personal and dependency exemptions are increased from $500 to $600. An additional $600 allowance is made to taxpayers over 65 and to blind taxpayers. The community-property principle is made applicable to incomes of husbands and wives and to estate and gift tax payments.

Wartime Tax Adjustment Act

(Public Law 384. Approved August 8, 1947)

This act provides for wartime depletion exemptions on certain minerals and terminates tax deductions on charitable contributions or gifts to be used outside the United States or its Territories. The $1,500 tax exemption in the armed services for officers and full tax exemption for personnel under the rank of officer was continued until December 31, 1948.

My View of the Housing Need

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN R. MURDOCK

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Saturday, June 19, 1948

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, 3 years have elapsed since the end of the shooting war, and what have we done for veterans? No doubt campaign speakers all over the country and members of both major parties will have a lot to say about what was done for veterans by the Seventy-eighth and Seventy-ninth Democratically controlled Congresses, and by the Eightieth Republican-controlled Congress. I am happy to note that a good many acts benefiting veterans have been passed by the last three Congresses, and I am glad to say that I had a small part in each. However, I am not so hilariously jubilant about the net result as to have very much to say about it, for I cannot refrain from thinking about what has not been done, and our failures and omissions distress me greatly.

When I see so many veterans trying to establish homes to start families, as well as setting up new businesses, and when I see their handicaps and their frustration, it makes my heart ache, and that, too, when I am able to see only a very small fraction of the distressing picture. It may be that I am judging all veterans by the few who are related to me by blood, but even so, I do not think the picture I have is a distorted one. I think millions of veterans are in the same uncomfortable or distressed condition of the few who are closely related to me.

Perhaps I get an exaggerated picture when I view the situation in certain Arizona cities like Phoenix, Tucson, Yuma, and such places where a great influx of out-of-State veterans have tried to establish themselves since the war. Possibly the major portion of the country is not so short of housing as these places with which I am best acquainted, and yet there are other places like Los Angeles, San Diego, Seattle, and San Francisco, that are even more crowded and where the housing situation is even more distressing. I feel that it is one of the greatest of shames that this Government has permitted for so long such crowding and poor housing for the men who so recently served in uniform. What are we going to do about it?

Both political party platforms contain promises of housing for veterans. While the two parties differ regarding public housing and the extent and manner of slum clearance, they seem to agree upon housing for veterans. There seems to be no disagreement in regard to having private capital and private enterprise share a large part of the work of furnishing veterans their homes. That is the way I think it should be. Let us carry out our party platform in at least this one detail. I am not asking the Government to furnish each veteran a residence, but I do think that the Government is under obligation to encourage home ownership among veterans and to aid veterans in acquiring homes, just as much as it is to furnish them the other benefits which the GI bill of rights provides.

I favored the GI bill, with its educational provisions and its loan provisions for setting up in business or procuring a home, and I helped as best I could with such legislation. At that same time, I introduced and sponsored legislation in an attempt to furnish thousands of family-sized farms to veterans on good irrigated land with water rights and did what I could to enable a man who wanted to own a piece of land for a home to be able to do so. I did succeed in the Seventy-ninth Congress in getting some legislation enacted toward that end, but it is so proportionately small—perhaps a few hundred in Arizona, instead of thousands hoped for—that I am ashamed to say much about it. Therefore, we come to another proposal for privately owned homes for veterans which I hope will come very much nearer fulfillment than were my hopes of 3 or 4 years ago regarding veterans' homes on the land.

What could be more desirable as an accomplishment for one who has helped to defend his country than to enable him to have a piece of property which will serve as a home? Ever since there have been armies, it has been said that a soldier will fight more courageously and stubbornly for his "hearth and home" than he will for his boarding house. All recognize the truth of that comparison. Obviously, if a "hearth and home" is a better inducement for courageous fighting than is a boarding house, the same would be equally true that a "hearth and home" would be a better reward for having fought successfully and well than would any kind of a boarding house.

All thinking people know that one of the best inducements of loyalty and good citizenship is home ownership. The more nearly our citizens have a place they can call home, which under Anglo-Saxon principle of the law is "a man's castle," the safer the country will be from the wild winds of radicalism. It would pay the Government in more ways than one to encourage home ownership in general, and especially home ownership among veterans who are starting out in life, rearing a family, and who want to own homes. Of course, I know that not all veterans want to own homes—not even all married veterans—no more than all veterans would like to have a piece of land in private ownership. But there is an instinct in most of us to own a home, and that is the instinct which is today being frustrated and thwarted by economic conditions which the Government ought to remedy.

This next special or regular session of Congress should enact legislation that will go further than anything now on the statute books to give the worthy veteran an opportunity of home ownership. Today building is so expensive that most veterans cannot afford either to build or buy a home. A recent enactment purports to facilitate veterans' cooperatives in furnishing themselves homes. I would go further and have the law restore certain controls upon building materials and give veterans preference in attaining such material, and I would have the veterans given more preference than the ordinary builder or citizen in the guaranty of mortgages to induce extension of credits by private lending agencies.

It must not be presumed, because I am saying nothing here about slum clearance or public housing, that I am entirely overlooking that part of the housing problem, but first things come first, and I feel that the most pressing housing problem today is that of homes for veterans.

Red River of the North Project Authorized; $1,000,000 Is First Appropriation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HAROLD C. HAGEN

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 18 (legislative day of Thursday, June 17), 1948

Mr. HAGEN. Mr. Speaker, on June 30, 1948, the President signed a flood-control and public works measure, H. R. 6419, which is of vital importance to the Ninth Congressional District of Minnesota.

The bill gave final approval and authorization of the comprehensive plan for flood control and other purposes in the Red River of the North drainage basin, North Dakota and Minnesota, as set forth in the report of the Chief of Engineers dated May 24, 1948.

Then later, the passage of the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, 1948, made $1,000,000 immediately available for a start on one or more of the eight authorized projects in the whole plan.

Final authorization of the Red River project, and the first appropriation for it by the United States Congress marks an important step of a long-time effort by many persons in northwestern Minnesota and northeastern North Dakota to launch these projects which mean so much to the future of the Red River Valley.

Army engineers submitted a report to the Secretary of the Army outlining the work to be done on the Red River project which will greatly lessen the danger of floods; permit water to be fed into the Red River at low-water stages for maintaining city water supplies and the movement of sewage, and to otherwise regulate water in the Red River to improve that fertile territory. The Army engineer report is signed by Lt. Gen. R. A. Wheeler, Chief of Engineers.

In the Ninth Congressional District, the engineers report describes the proposed improvements in some detail in the following paragraphs:

Main stem and Bois de Sioux River: Channel realinement and clearing between mile 0.9 and mile 7.8 above mouth of Bois de Sioux River, channel enlargement in lower 0.9 mile of Bois de Sioux and upper 6.1 miles of Red River. The improved channel will carry most floods safely within banks and will reduce stages and damage of larger and less frequent floods. Estimated Federal cost $419,700; estimated cost to local interests $44,600.

Main stem at Fargo-Moorhead: Channel clearing for a distance of 24 miles downstream from the upper end of the cities; channel enlargement and deepening for a distance of 4.9 miles downstream from the city bridges; levee 1,800 feet long at Moorhead; levee and floodwall about 1 mile long at Fargo. Levees will provide freeboard of 2.5 feet above the maximum flood of record (1897), and, in unleveled areas, the improved channel will carry most floods safely within banks and will reduce stages and damage of larger and less frequent floods. Estimated Federal cost $1,263,100; estimated cost to local interests, $666,900.

Main stem at Grand Forks—East Grand Forks: Channel clearing for a distance of 46 miles through the two cities, the upper 5.8 miles of the cleared channel to be deepened by excavation; a levee 6,700 feet long in the southern part of Grand Forks; and a levee and flood wall 9,600 feet long in East Grand Forks; below the mouth of Red Lake River. The levee would provide a freeboard of 3 feet above the maximum flood of record, and, in unleveed areas, the improved channel will carry most floods safely within banks and will reduce stages and damage of larger and less frequent floods. Estimated Federal cost $1,921,000; estimated cost to local interests $476,100.

Otter Tail River Basin, Minn.: Channel enlargement and realinement from the upper end of Lake Breckenridge to the vicinity of Sec. 33-Twp 132N-R45W, a dam and reservoir about 6 miles southwest of Fergus Falls having a capacity of about 14,100 acre-feet. The reservoir will be operated to reduce flood flows in the lower Otter Tail River, and to increase low-water flows in coordination with Baldhill and Red Lake Reservoirs for the benefit of water supply and stream sanitation in the Red River of the North. The improved channel will carry most floods safely within banks and will reduce stages and damage of larger and less frequent floods. Estimated Federal cost $1,233,800; estimated cost to local interests $36,400.

Wild Rice and Marsh Rivers, Minn.: Channel enlargement and straightening in Wild Rice River extending downstream from the present connection between Wild Rice and Marsh Rivers to about 2 miles below the mouth of South Branch. Enlargement of Marsh River Ditch and channel clearing and realinement in Marsh River downstream from the ditch to about 3 miles below Anthony. Flood flows of Wild Rice River will continue to be diverted through the Marsh River. The improved channel will carry most floods safely within banks and will reduce stages and damage of larger and less frequent floods. Estimated Federal cost $550,400; estimated cost to local interests $116,200.

Sand Hill River Basin, Minn.: Channel enlargement in Sand Hill State ditch and upper end of natural river channel from 6 miles east of Beltrami to 11 miles west of Beltrami, enlargement and straightening of old channel of Sand Hill River from 3 miles east of Beltrami to the Sand Hill State ditch. The improved channel will carry most floods safely within banks and will reduce stages and damage of larger and less frequent floods. Estimated Federal cost $646,700; estimated cost to local interests $76,500.

Possible improvements on other tributary streams as requested by local interests have been considered, but no improvements other than those listed above have been found to be practicable and economically justified. Presently authorized improvements on Sheyenne River, Red Lake and Clearwater Rivers, Park River (N. Dak.), Pembina and Tongue Rivers have not been affected by the report. Improvements of Roseau River which does not affect the main stem of Red River within the United States will be considered in a separate report now being prepared.

Mr. Speaker, the report by the Army engineers was not received in time to be sent to the Budget Bureau and transferred to the House Committee on Appropriations for consideration in the civil functions War Department appropriations bill.

Therefore it was necessary to get consideration in the Senate which held hearings on the project early in June. Senator JOSEPH H. BALL, of Minnesota, did splendid work in getting consideration for the Red River of the North project in the Senate and, through his influence and fine direction, with the aid and cooperation of Senator MILTON YOUNG, of North Dakota, and Senator ED THYE, of Minnesota, was able to get it approved by the Senate Public Works Committee and authorized by the Senate.

Citizens of the Ninth District of Minnesota will be interested in knowing some of the efforts made by myself in connection with this matter.

The following is a copy of a letter I wrote to Congressman GEORGE A. DONDERO, chairman of the House Committee on Public Works, in asking his cooperation in getting the project authorized by his committee. I also saw him and then contacted, personally, each member of his committee. My letter of June 15, 1948, to him follows:

JUNE 15, 1948.

HON. GEORGE A. DONDERO,
Chairman, House Committee on Public Works,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR GEORGE: This is a plea. A plea to you to retain the Red River of the North Drainage Basin project in your bill, H. R.

6419, as passed by the Senate Saturday. The item is found on page 14 of the Senate-approved measure.

It perhaps is best to begin this letter to refer to Senator MALONE'S statement in referring to the bill on the Senate floor last Saturday. It reads, in part, as follows: "The pending bill merely covers emergencies, that is, cases where life and property are endangered, and which call for a relatively small authorization, covering a specific unit which could be constructed by itself, becoming a part of the main unit if the whole project were later authorized."

The damage this spring, alone, to farm land, cities, and villages in Minnesota and North Dakota amounted to over $10,000,000. More than 2,000,000 acres of land were under water. The ultimate cost to the Federal Government of this whole project would be less than $10,000,000. The benefits to be derived are many times this amount. The emergency nature of this proposal warrants authorization of the project and some of the funds at this time.

The Senate committee report points up the fact that the Army determined the benefit-cost ratio to be 1.88. Prior to this year's disastrous floods the estimated total cost figure to the Federal Government is $9,928,000; whereas the estimated damages this spring alone was $10,000,000.

I earnestly solicit your favorable consideration of this matter and hope you will go along with the Senate in retaining the project in the bill.

With kindest personal regards.

Very sincerely yours,

HAROLD C. HAGEN,
Member of Congress.

P. S.—The entire area was recently designated as a disaster area by the President because of the serious damage done by the severe floods this year.

Senator JOSEPH H. BALL asked me to give him some information that I thought was desirable to assist him in his efforts before the Senate Committee on Appropriations in order to get some funds for the project. My letter to him of June 16, relative to the matter, follows:

JUNE 16, 1948.

The Honorable JOSEPH H. BALL,
United States Senator,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: This is an emergency request, and because of the legislative situation, it is necessary for the Senate to handle it.

The legislation, H. R. 6419, approved in conference by the Committee on Public Works yesterday, included (p. 14) the Red River of the North project and an authorization in the sum of $2,000,000 for the partial accomplishment of that plan. As you know, this plan for flood control and other purposes in the Red River of the north drainage basin, includes areas of North Dakota, South Dakota and Minnesota.

Because of the fact that H. R. 6419 had not been finally approved by the full Senate and House prior to the House passage today of the second deficiency appropriation bill, H. R. 6935 (Rept. 2348), it is necessary that the Senate Appropriations Committee be requested to insert the item of $2,000,000 in the second deficiency appropriation bill.

I know of your great interest, and that of Senator THYE, of Minnesota, and Senator YOUNG, of North Dakota, and also that of Senator LANGER, in the Red River of the North project. I know you realize the emergency situation which has arisen because of the very serious floods which have occurred during the last 2 years, 1947 and 1948. I know you are aware of the fact that there were some 15 deaths by drowning in the flood area this year, and that the property damage was conservatively estimated as over $10,000,000. The floods of the past two seasons were the most severe since 1897. Army engineers and other authorities are fearful that these floods will now reoccur each year because of present conditions, unless the Red River of the North project is undertaken and completed.

It is most desirable to appropriate the $2,000,000 for the initial phase of this comprehensive project so that these very serious and disastrous floods will not continue to occur in this great, fertile valley, known as the bread basket of the world, and without question one of the most productive areas in the world.

Incidentally, the floods in the Red River area were by far the most severe of any in the United States this year, excepting those on the northwest Pacific coast. The entire area has been designated as a disaster area by President Truman, because of the great amount of damage suffered.

It is most imperative in this emergency that funds be provided to inaugurate this project. If the Senate will insert the amount requested, I have every hope that the House will agree to a part, if not all, of the amount requested.

Appreciating your splendid efforts in this matter, I am, with kindest wishes,

Sincerely yours,

HAROLD C. HAGEN,
Member of Congress.

Senator BALL secured approval of the Senate Appropriation Committee for $2,000,000 for a start on the Red River of the North project. This amount was included in the second deficiency bill, which was passed by the Senate in the closing days of the session.

Because of time, and since the project has not yet been authorized when the House committee had previously considered and the House had passed the second deficiency bill, no appropriation has been made for the project in the House bill.

It was then up to me to get the House members of the conference committee, which met with the Senate Conference Committee, in ironing out and compromising the differences in second deficiency bill passed by the House and the Senate.

I, personally and individually, talked to every member, both Republican and Democrat, of the conference committee on the House side in support of funds for the Red River of the North project. They then agreed on $1,000,000 as the initial appropriation for the project. This was finally approved by both the Senate and the House; and the measure was sent to the President for approval.

Tremendous interest has been shown in the over-all Red River of the North project. A general meeting of representatives of all interested communities has been called for Grand Forks, N. Dak., for Friday, July 9, 1948, to advise with Corps of United States Army Engineers relative to initial stages of Red River flood-control projects.

The general call for the meeting was issued by a long-time friend and supporter of the Red River flood-control projects, Dr. H. L. Walster, chairman of the Tri-State Waters Commission, and dean of the State college station of the North Dakota State College at Fargo, N. Dak. His letter announcing the meeting is as follows:

TRI-STATE WATERS COMMISSION,
STATE COLLEGE STATION,
Fargo, N. Dak.

HON. HAROLD C. HAGEN,
Crookston, Minn.

DEAR SIR: In regard to meeting at Grand Forks, N. Dak., Council Room, City Hall, 3 p. m., Friday, July 9, to advise with Corps of United States Army Engineers relative to initial stages of Red River flood-control projects.

You are aware of the fact that the Congress recently authorized further flood-control projects on streams of the Red River of the North Basin in the amount of $9,400,000. In the last few days of the session an appropriation of $1,000,000 was made to the Corps of Engineers to begin work in 1949.

In order to determine the order in which the several units should be forwarded through the necessary additional planning and construction the Corps of Engineers have indicated that a basin-wide meeting of local interests will be helpful. As chairman of the Tri-State Waters Commission I have initiated this call. Invitations have been extended to the governors, Senators, and Congressmen of the area. Those to whom this notice is sent are urged to make a special effort to bring with them officers of municipalities (townships, villages, cities, and counties) from the areas to be affected by the projects.

Enclosed herewith is a brief statement of the proposed improvements as authorized, including estimated Federal costs, and estimated costs to local interests.

This meeting will also be considered an officially called meeting of the Tri-State Waters Commission.

Yours very truly,

H. L. WALSTER,
Chairman, Tri-State Waters Commission.

Mr. Speaker, this over-all Red River of the North flood-control project will be of benefit to every farmer, to every person, in northwestern Minnesota and northeastern North Dakota. To have funds to start work on the project is important to every individual in the area. It is a great satisfaction to me to have taken part in securing a million dollars to start work, even though approximately nine million or more in Federal funds will be needed to finish the work.

The Senate Committee on Public Works said in its report: "The committee is convinced that flood control and water conservation in the Red River drainage basin are desirable for the economic welfare of the citizens of the area." The committee knows that to complete this project will be a progressive step forward for the benefit of all people, in all parts of our land, because the result will be increased production in the Red River Valley.

I want to continue to fight for additional appropriations for the completion of this project. I assure the people of the Ninth Congressional District of Minnesota that, given the opportunity, I will continue to do my best toward completion of the over-all Red River of the North flood-control project. The cooperation of our present Minnesota Senators, and many civic-minded individuals residing in the district, has been of immeasurable help. That kind of cooperation in the future will see all parts of the project completed.

National Financial Policy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. PORTER HARDY, JR.

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, on July 13 I had the privilege of discussing the financial policy of our Government with the Norfolk Rotary Club. I submit my remarks for inclusion in the RECORD:

Most Rotarians are businessmen. Most of you come face to face daily with problems in management, in finance, in meeting competition, in providing the best possible service to your customers, in protecting and enlarging the investment of your stockholders in your businesses. You know that the extent to which you satisfactorily meet these problems is reflected in the stability and the growth of your organizations. The amount of the return which you receive and your investors receive reflects the amount of contribution which you make and the degree of intelligence and ability which you put into your activity.

Although the entire economy of our Nation is founded upon the principle of free enterprise which is guaranteed by our Constitution, that philosophy was not new to our founding fathers. Rights of private ownership and rights to own and accumulate wealth are as old as recorded history.

As the foundation of our economic life, the principle of free enterprise is equally applicable to every American citizen. Many Americans of humble origin have reached the pinnacles of achievement and success because under our Constitution they have been permitted to enjoy the fruits of their efforts and industriousness. Besides the fact that his individual attainments are measured by his own inclinations, his intelligence, and his ability, each American citizen is a stockholder in the biggest business organization in the world, the United States Government.

The magnitude of our Government is staggering. It is difficult for the human mind to even think in terms of billions and hundreds of billions of dollars. Nowhere is there an inventory of the physical assets of the Federal Government, but that business in which we are all stockholders today owes more than $250,000,000,000.

I want to talk to you about that business of ours and particularly about its financial policy. I don't think we stockholders give enough of our individual thought to this matter. We leave too much of our own responsibilities to our proxies. We profess to be too busy with personal matters close at hand; but if we would stop and think, we would quickly realize that our personal fortunes, our individual accumulations of wealth and security, our entire economic well-being, is inextricably tied up and interwoven with governmental financial and economic stability.

I have already reminded you that our Government has a debt of more than $250,000,000,000. Consider this in terms of prewar finance. The interest alone on this amount is more than the total tax revenues of the Federal Government for any single year between 1921 and 1936.

I suppose that most of us can look back a few years in our own personal histories and recall the strain that we individually went through because of heavy debt hanging over us and because of the heavy carrying charges on that debt. One of our first objectives was to get out from under and eliminate the interest charges. We didn't stop working when we took in enough to pay our expenses. We didn't reduce our income and put off payments on principal, simply because our creditors were not forcing us. We cut expenses however we could. We built up our income to the maximum. We paid our obligations as rapidly as practicable and we made provisions for contingencies. That was good business sense. It is my conviction that the principles of good-business conduct applicable to private enterprise are also applicable to governmental operations.

During the Eightieth Congress, three separate bills to reduce income taxes were considered. The first bill introduced in January 1947 was H. R. 1, the Knutson tax-reduction bill. Like any other citizen, I, too, am highly tax-conscious and I know that the American taxpayer needs relief from his heavy wartime burden. However, common sense and sound fiscal policy require a balanced budget and provision for orderly debt liquidation.

In keeping with provisions of the Reorganization Act, the Congress made an attempt in the direction or reducing expenditures, even though that attempt was haphazard and indiscriminate. Before the tax bill was brought up for consideration by the committee a resolution was submitted proposing to cut the President's budget estimates by $6,000,000,000. This resolution was passed by the House, even though its proponents admitted that they had no basis for knowing whether such a figure was proper. It was admittedly based solely on general information and wishful thinking. No detailed study had been made. No determination had been worked out to indicate where the cuts could be made intelligently or whether the achievement of such a reduction—if in fact possible—would cause a default on governmental commitments or cripple essential services.

The Senators didn't think it would be possible to reduce the budget to that extent, but like the House, the Senate, too, picked a figure out of the air. It was four and one-half billions. Although the two Houses never reached agreement on budget reduction, they both passed H. R. 1, which would have cut $7,000,000,000 off income-tax revenues. It was vetoed by the President and did not become law.

The budget consideration which took place in 1947 related to the 1948 fiscal year, the year which has just ended. It is interesting now to look back and see how closely we came to the $6,000,000,000 savings and what Federal economies were achieved. It is difficult even now to determine accurately what the figures are, but at the most it appears that the original budget estimates were reduced by not more than one and a half billions. Early indications were that considerable economies would be effected, but the "meat-ax" technique at first employed on appropriation bills was ineffectual because of inadequate consideration and indiscriminate application. Many of the appropriations had to be restored later in deficiency measures, and meanwhile considerable loss of efficiency in governmental administration had been caused.

Almost immediately after H. R. 1 failed of enactment, Mr. KNUTSON dropped in another bill. This was an identical bill except that it postponed the date for tax reduction to become effective. Like the former measure, it, too, was vetoed by the President, and again his veto was sustained.

During consideration of H. R. 1 and its subsequent counterpart, numerous efforts were made to have included in the legislation the so-called community-property provisions. At that time it was argued that this subject should be treated in separate legislation or should be combined with other needed revisions to the general tax code.

I am sure you are familiar with this community-property matter. Under the laws of several States it is permissible to divide the income of a man equally between himself and his wife. This has worked greatly to the advantage of people in States where such laws existed and has been grossly inequitable to the rest of the Nation. Such a discriminatory situation should never have been permitted to arise and certainly after its existence became apparent it should have been promptly remedied.

When Mr. KNUTSON, in the early part of this year, prepared his third tax bill, he astutely included the community-property provisions. This was a detour off the main track and was obviously designed to entice wavering Representatives who were being pressured from that angle. Perhaps against their better judgment some legislators were introduced to support the entire measure just in order to get the community-property adjustments. Although this is no minor matter to the individual taxpayer affected, it was a relatively minor part of this total tax bill. To favor the tax bill purely for the purpose of getting advantages of this provision, in my judgment, would have constituted failure to keep the main objective in view. Of course the tax liability of citizens of every State should be on an equitable basis, but desirable as the community-property provisions are, they should not have provided an excuse for passage of legislation which was otherwise unsound.

The income-tax reduction bill as passed will reduce governmental revenue by more than $5,000,000,000. As I see it, such a reduction is unwise and dangerous. In view of the many uncertainties we face, it might place our financial structure in a precarious condition.

We have had a balanced Federal budget for the past 2 years. H. R. 1, as originally introduced, would have been effective on January 1, 1947, in the midst of the 1947 fiscal year. If H. R. 1 had been enacted, it would have caused some deficit at the end of the fiscal year on July 1, 1947.

Now let us come a little closer up to date. Only recently the Secretary of the Treasury announced that when the 1948 fiscal year closed on last June 30, we had a surplus of approximately $8,000,000,000. On the face of it, this would seem to indicate that tax reduction in the high figures is possible without jeopardizing our financial stability. But let us scrutinize that situation a little. Already the Congress has obligated $3,000,000,000 of that surplus. This was through a dubiously agile accounting maneuver attached to the bill for foreign assistance. Three billion dollars of the funds appropriated for foreign aid and spent during 1949 will be chargeable to the 1948 fiscal year. In addition to this, some of the Federal agencies were authorized to make contracts for the expenditure of funds not yet appropriated, and so the $8,000,000,000 surplus is a mirage. Much of it is already obligated and a pitifully small amount will be available for debt reduction.

Now let us look at the prospects for the 1949 fiscal year, which has just begun. The President's original budget estimates for the fiscal year 1949 compared with his estimates of Treasury receipts indicated a surplus of approximately $4,800,000,000. This, of course, was predicated on continuation of the present levels of employment, production, and earnings. It was also predicated on a continuation of the income-tax rates applicable prior to passage of the tax-reduction bill. Even on the basis of the then apparent demands upon our Treasury, it is clear that the tax-cut measure would have more than offset any contemplated surplus and caused our Federal Government to operate at a deficit during the 1949 year.

I know that all of the people need a reduction in their tax burdens. But simple arithmetic makes it difficult to justify a $5,000,000,000 reduction in Federal revenues under these circumstances. Proponents of the measure argued that we would still have $3,000,000,000 for debt reduction at the end of the current year by charging that amount of our 1949 expenditures against our 1948 receipts. But no juggling of figures can change the facts.

Recent developments, both domestic and foreign, have made our future financial picture even more obscure. We have passed legislation making inadequate increases in the salaries of our civil servants. Veterans' benefits have been expanded. The Senate approved a $300,000,000 annual charge on the Treasury for aid-to-education, and also a public housing bill, which incidentally has now been sanctioned by the Republican Party. This will call for other large expenditures.

On top of all of this, and what is perhaps more disturbing, the international situation is increasing in complexity and in its sinister aspects. Because of this we have passed the Selective Service Act. We have provided for strengthening of our Army, our Navy (this was omitted from Pilot article) and our Air Force. We propose to have a 70-group Air Force that will be the most effective in the world and have authorized the making of contracts for planes and services and agreed to appropriate funds when required.

Although some of the measures we have taken have slowed up the march of communism into western Europe, we are even now threatened with a choice of moving out of Berlin, surrendering our sector to the Communists, or engaging in open hostilities. None of us can foresee what the consequences may be. We have inherited the role of world leadership, and freedom-loving people throughout the earth are looking to us to show the way for maintenance of a permanent and just peace. We have sponsored the United Nations and the world has placed its hopes on this federation of governments for the preservation of world order on a basis of justice and reason. Its impotence has been manifest since its inception and its future will depend, not only on American resources, but on our wise and intelligent leadership. We cannot shirk the responsibility imposed upon us during this period of world crisis. Our responsibility is primarily to ourselves, and secondarily to the other nations of the world. We know not what measures may be necessary for us to maintain our sovereignty and our democratic philosophy.

Although, currently, our individual tax obligations are somewhat less than those of the past several years, it is entirely within the realm of possibility that early in the Eighty-first Congress it may be necessary to again increase taxes. I hope this may not be the case, but I am convinced that every right-thinking American will insist upon maintaining a sound governmental fiscal policy. Any other course would so weaken our economic structure that every freedom which has been our heritage and which we have cherished through the years will be endangered.

As we review the advancements of science which have occurred in our lifetime, as we witness the misery and suffering which have followed in the wake of the last war, and realize that even now men in the Holy Land are engaging in mortal conflict, as we compare the relative degree of prosperity enjoyed in our own United States with the plight of the rest of the world, we ought to give thanks and gird ourselves against any contingency. This is no time for smugness or complacency or for the pursuit of selfish aggrandizement. The rehabilitation of the world and the fate of civilization may well depend upon how we conduct our own economic affairs.

You men of business and of the professions know that reductions in expenditures, reductions in debt, and reductions in revenues must be accomplished either in that order or simultaneously. I have pointed to the fact that in spite of all the talk about reducing expenditures the economies affected were infinitesimal. No provision has been made for orderly debt retirement, but tax revenues have been cut by $5,000,000,000. It has been said that support for all appropriations bills and all tax-reduction measures will assure a legislator of a long tenure in office. I would cast no aspersions on Members of the Eightieth Congress nor attribute to any of them political motivations in connection with taxes or appropriations. However, many wary eyes must necessarily have occasionally cast furtive glances toward the November elections.

The entire fabric of our American way of life, whether political, economic, or social, is so interrelated that the weakening of one must inevitably affect the other. Our free-enterprise system, together with all of the rights which we have enjoyed under our Constitution, depends in large measure on the maintenance of a sound and stable governmental fiscal policy. The level of taxes which we impose upon ourselves must be determined with that end in view. I know you share with me the conviction that such a policy is essential to our individual and collective security, safety, and well-being.

How Bad Is the Record, Mr. President?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. DANIEL A. REED

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, the record made for the veterans by the Eightieth Republican Congress so bitterly condemned by President Truman speaks for itself.

If this record is so bad why did not the President veto the bills carrying the following benefits? I insert them as published in the Washington Daily News of July 26, 1948:

VETS' WIDOWS, ORPHANS, DEPENDENTS GET NEW BENEFITS STARTING SEPTEMBER 1

(By Douglas Larsen)

Veterans' widows, orphans, and dependents will get most of the benefits of the veteran legislation passed in the closing days of the Eightieth Congress.

Starting September 1, Veterans' Administration checks to dependent widows, orphans, and parents of veterans killed during the war will be increased according to this table:

	Old	New Widow:
No child	$60.00	$75
1 child	78.00	100
2 children	93.00	115
3 children	109.20	130
4 children	124.80	145
5 children	140.40	160
No widow:
1 child	30.00	58
2 children	45.60	82
3 children	57.60	106
4 children	69.60	126
5 children	81.60	146
Dependent mother or father	54.00	60
Dependent mother and father, each	30.00	35

These increased rates will be made automatically by VA. No application is necessary and no additional forms need to be filled out.

BRAND-NEW BENEFIT

Another new law provides payments for the dependents of certain disabled veterans. This is a brand-new benefit which the veterans organizations led by the Disabled American Veterans have been trying to get passed for a long time. It applies to all veterans with a 60 percent or more service-connected disability who have dependents. Following is the scale for veterans with 100 percent disability:

Wife, no child	$21.00
Wife, 1 child	35.00
Wife, 2 children	45.50
Wife, 3 or more children	56.00
No wife, 1 child	14.00
No wife, 2 children	24.50
No wife, 3 or more children	35.00
Mother or father, either or both dependent upon veteran, each	17.50

Other veterans with not less than 60-percent disability will receive the same percentage of these dependency payments as they are at present receiving in disability compensation. The VA will supply application blanks for these new benefits which will start September 1.

Earlier in the Eightieth Congress two bills were passed which directly affect a great number of veterans. They raised the payments to vets going to school and those taking on-the-job training more than 15 percent. These increases have been in effect for several months.

INSURANCE EXTENDED

Another law which affects a large number of veterans extends the life of GI term insurance for 5 years. Without this act all veterans would have had to convert their term policies into one of the six available permanent forms of life insurance. Those veterans who take advantage of this extension, however, will have their premiums increased slightly up to the premium rate applicable for their age at the time of the renewal. The VA will handle this automatically for the men who have term policies in force and who want to keep them up.

Here is a list of most of the other laws passed by the Eightieth Congress which directly affect veterans:

FOR CERTAIN DISABLED VETERANS

The Government will now provide up to 50 percent of the cost of specially constructed homes for veterans who are paralyzed below the waist.

The deadline for amputees applying for new cars was extended to June 30, 1949.

The payments to veterans who incurred disabilities in peacetime were increased to 80 percent of the wartime rate.

VA's fund out of which advances are given to disabled veterans who start job training was increased to $3,000,000.

VA was given $1,000,000 for research to develop new prosthetic devices.

FOR OPERATION OF VA

A system of internships is now provided for the Department of Medicine and Surgery. The construction of hospitals and the continued operation of offices was provided for the Philippine Islands for the use of Philippine veterans.

MISCELLANEOUS

A service-connected disability was automatically established for certain tropical diseases which are shown to exist 1 year from discharge.

Lenders were permitted to find a secondary market for housing loans given to veterans.

FOR OTHER THAN WORLD WAR I AND WORLD WAR II VETERANS

Pensions to dependents and veterans of the Spanish-American War, Indian wars, and Civil War were increased 20 percent.

Gangsters Return to Prison

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. CLARE E. HOFFMAN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, President Truman has had much to say about the Eightieth Congress. He first characterized it as the worst ever. Then he amended that statement by saying it was the second worst.

The trouble with Mr. Truman is that he forgets that much of the program which he has been advocating was repudiated by the people at the 1946 election. and that this Congress is working, not under his orders, but under the orders given them at that time.

He has done what he could to sabotage the program endorsed by the people in 1946. He knows that he has been a failure in many respects, that his foreign policy has brought us to the verge of world war III, given us living costs which are completely out of the reach of many, and bankrupted us nationally so that today a dollar will purchase no more than did 30 cents in years gone by. In addition to messing up our domestic and foreign affairs, those under his control have been guilty of some most reprehensible conduct. Let me cite just one example.

The Parole Board appointed by the Attorney General, who was appointed by Mr. Truman, granted paroles to five gangsters, former members of the Capone mob of Chicago, after they had been sentenced to prison for 10 years, having been convicted of an attempt to extort more than a million dollars from the motion-picture industry. This same outfit had extorted something like a million dollars from members of various unions.

Nevertheless, the Parole Board, without any legitimate reason, let these gangsters out of jail within a few days after they became eligible for parole.

When complaint was made to a congressional committee, of which I happen to be chairman, I appointed a subcommittee which held hearings, made a report to the full committee, alleging that the paroles were improvidently granted and should be revoked. That report was adopted by the full committee without objection.

As a result of the hearings of the subcommittee, the paroles were revoked last week. Two of the ex-convicts are back in jail and no doubt, shortly, the others will be.

These paroles were obtained, in large part, through the efforts and influence of one Paul Dillon, a personal friend of President Truman, and of Maury Hughes, a personal, long-time friend of United States Attorney General Tom Clark, who appointed the members of the Parole Board.

It took not a little time to lay bare the facts, to give them publicity, and to force the hands of the Parole Board. A congressional committee did that job and, quite naturally, the fact that activities of the friends of the administration, and at least one friend of the President, having a part in the release of these convicts, were given publicity, did not endear the committee or the Congress to the President.

It may well be that the failure of Congress to act as a rubber stamp for the President, its independence, and its insistence that the people's money be spent with some degree of reason, influenced the President in his attacks on Congress.

All in all, the Eightieth Congress has done a worth-while job and if, in November, the people will endorse its actions, no doubt we will be on the road back to peace and prosperity.

Newspaper comment on one phase of the return of the parolees to prison is exemplified by the following article from the Chicago Tribune of July 25, 1948:

CAMPAGNA, GIOE BACK IN PRISON; NEW PROBE ON—"PAY-OFF MAN" HUNTED IN PAROLE SCANDAL

(By James Doherty)

How and why four notoricus Capone gangsters were given Federal paroles still was considered an unsolved problem yesterday by a congressional committee as two of the gangsters were put back into cells at the Atlanta, Ga., prison. Representative CLARE E. HOFFMAN, Republican, of Michigan, and Representative FRED E. BUSBEY, Republican, of Illinois, said the reimprisonment of Louis Campagna and Charles Gioe as parole violators stressed the failure of authorities to find the "pay-off man."

Gioe, who was seized in his Chicago apartment at daybreak Friday, was checked into the prison shortly after midnight. Campagna, who evaded arrest at his Michigan estate to gain a habeas corpus hearing in Chicago, was back in a cell at lunchtime yesterday.

MANY THINGS UNEXPLAINED

The two Congressmen who led the fight to put the gangsters back in the penitentiary and get details of the "million-dollar paroles" said the story is only half told. HOFFMAN, chairman of the House Committee on Expenditures, a subcommittee of which has been delving into the paroles for the last 11 months, and BUSBEY, who represents a Chicago district, said they wanted to know:

1. Why no parole violation warrant was issued for Phil D'Andrea, who, with Paul Ricca, gang boss, went to prison with Campagna and Gioe in 1944 and was paroled with them last August 13.

2. Why a parole violation warrant was issued for John Rosselli, west coast agent of the Capone gang convicted with the four Chicagoans on a charge of extorting more than a million dollars from motion-picture producers, and paroled with them.

SEEK FINANCIAL SOURCES

3. Who financed the paroles which came only after unidentified persons had paid $128,000 to settle income-tax liens of $670,000 against Campagna and Ricca, and after a million-dollar mail-fraud indictment against all the gangsters was dismissed.

4. Who used the name of Mike Ryan in hiring Maury Hughes, close friend of United States Attorney General Tom C. Clark, to have the indictment dismissed as a preliminary step toward their paroles.

5. What arrangement was made for a "vote delivery" as part payment for the release of the Chicago gangsters.

6. What Government officials had advance knowledge of parole negotiations.

7. What explanation was made to high Government officials concerning the release of the gangsters who belonged to a Nation-wide gang and had powerful political friends here and in other cities?

WONDER WHO INTERCEDED

The Congressmen said the paroles were a gross miscarriage of justice. HOFFMAN said he would like to know who counseled the three members of the Federal Parole Board regarding release of the four men.

Here is some history that bears on the case:

Al Capone, Brooklyn gunman, found a profitable field in Chicago when prohibition came in 1920. He started as a bodyguard for Big Jim Colosimo, a powerful first-ward politician, brothel keeper, and cafe owner, who was killed a few years later.

CAPONE BRANCHES OUT

Capone soon opened a dive of his own, the notorious Four Deuces at 2222 Wabash Avenue. Then, in collaboration with Johnnie Torrio, Capone started a bootleg gang.

Beer, booze, gambling, vice, and other crimes made the gangsters rich, but one by one they went to prison for income-tax cheating. Capone, the murderous boss, went to prison in 1931, convicted by Dwight H. Green, now Governor of Illinois, and George E. Q. Johnson, later a Federal judge.

Repeal, in 1934, ended the flow of gold to the Capone pirates who, after Capone went to jail, took orders from Frank (the enforcer) Nitti. Nitti, in turn, was succeeded by Ricca, one of those involved in the parole scandal and who is still at liberty pending a court hearing September 20.

TURN TO KIDNAPINGS

The Capone gang took a few flyers in kidnaping important persons when the liquor racket ended. Next they found it was easier and more profitable to take over unions. Many union officials were killed or cowed into submission.

George Browne was a small-time union official who "managed" the stage hands union. After Browne met Willie Bioff, a pander who had worked for Phil D'Andrea, the pair "shook down" Chicago motion-picture theater owners for sizable sums on threats of strikes.

Nitti, who had set himself up as emperor of the underworld, soon learned of the theater extortions. Browne and Bioff were commanded into the presence of Nitti.

"From now on you bring me half of what you get," Nitti reportedly told them.

SEATS BROWNE AS CHIEF

Nitti soon decided to make Browne president of the International Alliance of Theatrical and Stage Employees. He let it be known that it would be unhealthy to elect anybody but Browne.

Browne was elected in 1934 and there followed a continuous flow of gold to Chicago headquarters. Bioff was designated as Browne's special representative in New York City. John Rosselli, whose parole is up for revocation, was designated to act for the gang at Hollywood. Nick Circella, alias Dean, collected cash in Chicago from the film theater industry.

Nitti's demands for more cash were so compelling that Browne, Bioff, and Circella kept "biting" the film industry harder and oftener. Strikes were called, then settled for larger sums. Soon the extortionists had the motion-picture executives doctoring their books to hide the blackmail.

Joseph Schenck, chairman of Twentieth Century-Fox, was sentenced to prison for his efforts to cover up huge payments to Bioff.

Next, Nitti demanded and received two-thirds of all the money he knew that Browne, Bioff, and Circella collected.

DEMANDS CAUSE BLOW-UP

The blow-up came when the picture magnates were told to dig up $2,000,000 for Nitti, Ricca, Campagna, and the other Chicago gangsters. Twentieth Century-Fox, Loew's, Inc., Paramount, and Warner Bros. were assessed $550,000 for the immediate needs of Browne and Bioff.

One of the picture makers, whose name is still a secret, finally asked the Federal Government to intervene. After a few years' delay, in which there was a ruling that the antitrust laws did not apply to labor unions, the Government indicted the extortioners in New York City.

Browne, Bioff, and Circella were convicted and received heavy sentences. Then Browne and Bioff, to save themselves, became Government witnesses.

Nitti killed himself the day he was indicted, March 19, 1943. That made Ricca the head man. But he, too, was indicted and eventually went to jail. Tony Accardo made frequent illegal visits to Ricca to get his orders.

RESISTED EXTRADITION

The Chicago mobsters resisted extradition to New York. They used all the money, political, and union power at their command to avoid trial. On December 22, 1943, they were found guilty of conspiracy to extort more than a million from the film people.

A second indictment charging them with stealing more than a million from the union—money raised by assessing members 2 percent of their pay over a long period—remained on the court docket.

Attorney Boris Kostelantez, who had presented all the evidence, urged the court to impose maximum sentences.

ASK COURT TO GO EASY

Their own lawyers told the court that Ricca, Campagna, Gioe, and D'Andrea were of such bad repute that no parole board would ever consider shortening their sentences. They asked the court to go easy.

Judge John Bright, who died early this year, said he knew of no better way to safeguard unions from future marauders than to impose heavy sentences.

"Ten years in prison," Judge Bright said in the cases of Ricca, Campagna, Gioe, D'Andrea, Rosselli, and Francis Maritote, alias Frank Diamond, brother-in-law of Capone and the one man of the gang who didn't get out on parole. They were locked up on December 30, 1943, but did not get to the Atlanta penitentiary until April 7, 1944, due to appeals.

SENTENCES UPHELD

The United States circuit court of appeals affirmed the sentences and the United States Supreme Court refused a review. Their only hope of getting out in less than 10 years, except for time off for good behavior, was in the President or the Federal Parole Board.

Meanwhile, the Treasury Department began figuring how much Ricca and his pals owed in income taxes on the shakedowns. Prosecutors said they were able to account for $1,800,000 collected by Browne and Bioff, $1,200,000 of which went to the Nitti-Ricca combination.

Liens, which, with interest, amounted to $670,000, were pending against Ricca and Campagna when negotiations were underway for paroles for the mobsters in the spring of 1946. The Government later waived the usual requirement that a person receiving parole make restitution to his victim but it was not probable that a parole board would dare free convicts who owed such a sum to the Government as payment of tax on the proceeds of crime. So a settlement of the Government's claims was made for $128,000. Lawyers had persuaded the Treasury Department to take less than the $670,000. The Government marked the bill paid when on November 1, 1946, Attorney Eugene Bernstein, of Chicago's twenty-fourth ward Democratic organization, gave checks for that amount to the collector at Chicago.

INDICTMENT IN WAY

The gangsters could not apply for parole until they had served one-third of their sentences. The board said their eligibility date was July 7, 1947. But the mail fraud indictment was still on the court docket in New York City. The indictment was based on the mulcting of 46,000 union members.

This indictment was secretly dismissed on May 7, 1947, by permission of Attorney General Clark, on motion of the Government, and with the name of no attorney for the convicts being on record. Later it was admitted that Attorney Maury Hughes, of Dallas, Tex., who grew up with Clark, received $15,000 for his part in having the indictment dismissed. He said the "pay-off gent" was a Chicago Italian who used the name of Mike Ryan.

No notice was given the public that the Government contemplated granting the paroles. But the Chicago Tribune exposed the release and told how it was effected. The Chicago Crime Commission, Police Commissioner Prendergast, and numerous other officials and agencies protested. The paroles were termed a scandal, an outrage and a national disgrace. Demand was made that the paroles be canceled.

FINDS CLARK EVASIVE

Representative BUSBEY wrote to Clark, and asked if he had advance knowledge that the men were to be set free, and if he approved the paroles. BUSBEY said Clark was evasive.

The Attorney General ignored his own part in making the paroles possible by authorizing the dismissal of the mail fraud indictment, BUSBEY added, and then sought to avoid responsibility by saying the parole board "is an autonomous body."

BUSBEY contends the parole board does not have autonomy. President Truman and Clark, by their refusal to cooperate with Congress have convinced HOFFMAN and BUSBEY that they have not got the answer yet to their original question, "Who is responsible?"

The fact that Attorney Paul Dillon, of St. Louis, described as a welcome visitor at the White House, appeared before the parole board in behalf of the gangsters should have caused President Truman to order an open investigation, the Congressmen contend.

The Hoffman committee held numerous hearings. It decided that the paroles should be revoked.

Last Wednesday the committee held a hearing in Chicago but subpenas for Peter Fosco, Ned Bakes, and Tony D'Andrea to appear as witnesses were unserved. The United States marshal's office reported they were out of town. Fosco is a Democratic committeeman in the first ward and a representative of the hod carriers' union. Bakes is a lieutenant of Fosco. Tony D'Andrea, a brother of Phil, is president of the Construction and General Workers District Council of Chicago.

BUSBEY said these three might have the answer to the question about whether a vote delivery figured in the parole negotiations.

"We'll have them in Washington, soon," HOFFMAN said, "for testimony before the congressional committee."

Nomination of Harold E. Stassen for President

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WALTER H. JUDD

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include my speech at the Republican Convention in Philadelphia June 24, 1948, placing in nomination for the Presidency of the United States the name of Harold E. Stassen, of Minnesota:

Mr. Chairman, fellow Americans, fellow Republicans, this is no ordinary political convention. The Republican Party, more surely than at any convention since the one which nominated Abraham Lincoln in 1860, can save this Nation—and a free world.

Whether it will or not depends on whether we here nominate as our candidate for the Presidency that man who is best qualified to lead us and the country in the next 4 years, and who is surest to win in November.

This 1948 election is not in the bag.

We must look beyond the walls of this convention hall. It takes a majority of only 1,094 delegates to nominate—here in this convention. But it takes a majority of over 60,000,000 voters to elect next November.

Those American voters are the final judges of our handiwork. Make no mistake about it—they are reserving their decision. They will await the full evidence. And their judgment will control.

Ever since our convening, headlines have screamed of deals, trades, manipulations. Let us recognize soberly that this is not an atmosphere which breeds victory with the people. They will not be bound by any deals or commitments here. They do not yield their independence to anyone.

I am proud to have the high privilege of placing in nomination before you the name of a man who has taken his case frankly to the people and won it with the people—has won their overwhelming support wherever, in primary elections or polls, all the people, independents as well as Republicans, have had opportunity to express their preference.

Careful analyses of all recent popular polls of public opinion reveal that this man would win next fall at least 5,000,000 more votes than his strongest rival for the Republican nomination. Furthermore, his leadership of the ticket would assure the election of a Republican Senate and House and would greatly aid Republican success in every State, county, and township in the land.

America must have a President of vision and forthrightness, integrity and courage, statesmanship and stature, one who can act before trouble starts instead of struggling painfully to straighten out a mess after it has happened.

A President of great physical and mental vigor, seasoned by wide experience in many fields.

Our candidate would be such a President.

The most important of any man's qualifications is his character, his personal integrity. Through a good many years of rather close association with this man, I have never known him to make a decision except on the basis of what he thought was right. He is a man of deep religious convictions. He knows that this is a moral universe in which it is not possible to get good by doing evil, or to get justice by aiding injustice.

He understands America, its basic philosophy, its institutions, its people, and has faith in them.

He understands every problem of American agriculture. He was born and brought up on the Minnesota farm which his father and mother still live on and operate.

He understands American labor. He worked his way through college at jobs ranging from night work in a bakery to pullman-car conductor. As Governor of Minnesota he transformed our State from one of the two worst spots in the country for violence and bloodshed in labor strife, to the best spot with not a day lost by strikes in any Minnesota war industry from Pearl Harbor to VJ-day.

Labor opposed him vigorously in his first campaign. But it soon discovered that while he was not prolabor, he was not anti-labor. He was what a chief executive ought to be—firm, but fair, impartial, and dependable. Labor wisely realized that was in its own best interests and supported him in the next two elections.

He understands American business and our philosophy of enterprise and initiative.

He understands the American form of government and our political system from the precinct and township up. He has proved himself a superb administrator.

He would apply to our Federal Government the same principles of sound administration which he instituted so successfully in Minnesota.

He knows how to cooperate with the legislative branch of government. Teamwork to him means two horses pulling together equally—not one horse riding the other.

He understands the world in which we live and America's place in it.

He knows war first hand. He participated in it. For 30 months he lived with America's young men in fierce battle and in lonely isolation. He understands their needs and problems as no other candidate can.

He understands the grave problems of trying to make and maintain a just and enduring peace. He knows all our domestic gains will go by the board if we bungle into another war.

He was called back from naval service to be one of our delegates to the United Nations Conference at San Francisco and was rated there by hard-boiled newspapermen as one of the two most outstanding statesmen at the conference—not just from the United States, but from all the world.

He understands and has faith in the American people. He knows that clever evasion of fundamental issues and straddling to gain votes rather than to solve problems, undermine the very foundation of the Republic—the faith of the people in the integrity of their Government.

Each of the other Republican candidates has some of the essential qualifications I have discussed. No other has them all.

For months he has gone up and down our country speaking plainly to the people themselves—defining clearly and frankly a program for the future of America. He has reached them directly as no other person in our time. He has done more to revitalize and invigorate the Republican Party throughout the whole country than any other person in our generation.

And the people—who may not be able to control nominations but do decide elections—have cast more votes for him in primaries than for any other candidate. He is a master campaigner. He has the capacity to inspire enthusiasm and loyalty. The polls show that he will be by far the strongest Republican against the present occupant of the White House or against any other candidate the Democrats may nominate.

That brings us to the heart of the matter. The real job of this convention is to choose the man who is surest to get elected, who will win most votes—not just from Republican delegates in this convention, but from all the people next fall.

No political party has 31,000,000 voters which is what we must have to win. There are 15,000,000 independents who vote for a man and not for a party. The man who can get the majority of those 15,000,000 independents is the man who will be elected. The candidate whom I nominate is their acknowledged favorite.

He will get all the regular Republican votes that any other Republican will get.

In addition he will get more farmer votes than any other Republican.

He will get more labor votes than any other Republican.

He will get more veteran votes than any other Republican.

He will get more votes from women than any other Republican.

He will get more votes from the 6,000,000 young men and women who this year are casting their first Presidential ballot and have not yet decided to which political party they will give adherence. If our party is to live and grow, we must win America's youth for the Republicans this year.

He will get more independent votes than any other Republican. These are the votes that will decide the election. I speak for those Republicans who are tired of winning in June and then losing in November. Let us not underestimate once again the power of the machine entrenched in Washington for 16 years. It has millions on the pay roll. It can easily engineer about next October a threat of war or negotiations promising peace in our time, a la Mr. Chamberlain. Millions of our people, in fear or in hope, can be persuaded not to change horses at such a time, unless we nominate here the strongest candidate the party has. It is suicidal to imagine this campaign will be a walk away, that we can win with anyone.

It is an extraordinary fact that the supporters of almost every other candidate want our man to be their Vice President. Why? So that his strong appeal and vigorous campaigning can elect their man President.

Fellow Republicans, that is not good enough. We cannot ignore the first choice of the people now and expect them to support us in November.

And it is not enough just to win the Presidency. We must name the candidate who can help most to win the House and Senate. In 1946 our candidate saw the vital importance to our country of electing a Republican Congress. On his own initiative he worked tirelessly in many pivotal States and crucial congressional districts, especially city districts, where the shift of only a few thousand votes decides the election.

We hold those pivotal States and districts today by a very narrow thread. Eighteen Republican Senators will contend for election in States which are subject to doubt next November. Loss of any 4 of the 18 would result in control of the Senate by the opposition. Those campaigns need the help of our strongest possible national leader.

We have just fought a terrible war to win the chance to build again a strong America in a decent, orderly world; to defend and strengthen those great principles by which alone free men can live and govern themselves.

Our candidate understands and lives by those principles as well as any person I have ever known. On the night before he left the governorship of Minnesota for active service in the Navy he was presented with a memorial plaque by men and women representing 45 State-wide organizations.

His spontaneous statement in accepting the plaque tells far more about him than any words of mine can.

He said, "You have been kind in your reference to my overcoming obstacles. Let me respond that I have had the basic advantage of having a truly great father and mother, a childhood home of fundamental religious convictions, a good education in an atmosphere of academic freedom, a beloved partner at my side whose contribution words cannot describe, and residence in a country in which freedom and liberty and opportunity have real meaning. Measured alongside these advantages, nothing is worthy of being called an obstacle or a handicap."

Those simple words reveal an American truly big enough for the great task to which we must call him.

In this hour of crisis only the Republican Party can save this Nation and lead it, under God, into a new birth of freedom. But to do that, it must have new young leadership—strong, constructive, forward-looking, sound leadership—that can win not only in 1948, but in 1952.

Before you cast your ballot, I beg you to hear again the voices of the people back home. As they sit beside their radios listening thoughtfully, who is it that they want us to select to lead them in these troubled times? Do you hear their voices—the voices of the people?

Whom do they want?

The Republican Party cannot save the Nation unless it gets elected by those people. It will not be elected by them unless its candidate is the man they want—the man who will win their votes.

We cannot afford not to nominate that man.

Fellow Republicans, the greatest service our party can render to the Nation in this solemn hour is to select as our candidate for the Presidency of the United States the man whose name I now have the honor to place in nomination—my distinguished fellow-Minnesotan—statesman, leader, fighter, believer in men—the man America needs and wants—Harold E. Stassen.

Hon. James Forrestal

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MARGARET CHASE SMITH

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 26, 1948

Mrs. SMITH of Maine. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Portland (Maine) Press-Herald of July 21, 1948:

OUGHT TO KEEP HIM

When—it is hardly necessary to put in an "if"—Governor Dewey is elected President next fall, he will have about 10 weeks in which to select his Cabinet. It is a foregone conclusion, of course, that the Snyders and the Clarks, and practically all the rest of the present Cabinet will go out of office with Mr. Truman. There are reasons why Secretary of State George C. Marshall might well be retained; but it is known that he is disinclined to serve, and is, in fact, eager to relinquish the wearing job which his sense of duty led him to accept.

Perhaps there is reason for keeping Postmaster General Donaldson; as a long-time resident of Washington in the Post Office Department he had no particular political affiliations. Besides, he is a career man who has come up from the ranks, and has impressed those who know him as a man of ability, a great improvement over the type of politicians who traditionally have inherited the office, generally the campaign managers, or chairmen of the National Committee of the party in power.

What Mr. Dewey will do about Mr. Donaldson remains to be seen. But there is one man in the Truman Cabinet who richly deserves to be retained. That is James Forrestal, Secretary of Defense. He has won the confidence of the country for his alert, vigorous administration of this new and exceedingly important office—an office that, in the present state of affairs, has become more important than ever. Mr. Forrestal has had to work under difficulties; he has had to spend a large part of his time coordinating the three presumably coequal branches of defense—Army, Navy, and Air Force—which have tried hard to go their own way, and have not scrupled to go over the Secretary's head whenever they chose, either to the Congress or to the President.

This presently will be straightened out, and the Secretary of Defense will be recognized as the big boss of all three departments under him. Given this kind of set-up, Mr. Forrestal's great ability would be able to do something besides harmonizing conflicting ideas and plans.

When he was called to the helm, he was hailed by men of both parties as a "natural" for the job. He is even more a natural now, with the experience he has had. His selection as Secretary of Defense in the Dewey Cabinet—if he could be prevailed upon to continue—would meet with hearty approval in Congress and out. And it should meet with hearty approval. Mr. Forrestal's work has merited it.

One Great Speech

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROY O. WOODRUFF
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following press release by Hon. Samuel B. Pettengill, former Representative from Indiana:

ONE GREAT SPEECH

In the combination of circus and revival meeting which is a political convention, one expects the honeyed fishhooks of a Mrs. Luce and the "bosses, boodle, buncombe, and blarney" of a keynoter Governor Green. All parties use them. They help to let off steam. And after 15 years of permanent crisis, the GOP was in need of a binge.

It would have been tragic, however, if the Republican convention had not heard one truly great speech. It did. Former President Hoover rose to the height of this great argument. He alone sketched the wide horizons where men are fleeing from freedom to be slaves. Only in Switzerland, Scandinavia, Denmark, Ireland, Canada, and the United States are men and women living in a relatively free society. Elsewhere, the dark eclipse of autocratic government covers the globe.

Mr. Hoover made the best speech of his long career. In it was wisdom and strength and love of country. It had something of the dignity of Washington's Farewell Address, and the lift to the souls of men of Lincoln's words at Gettysburg.

There was no name-calling here. Nothing sordid or shallow or cheap. Mr. Hoover was not playing politics. He was pleading for his country and "the last best hope of earth." He paid his tribute to those patriotic Democrats elected in 1946, as well as to the Republicans. It was, he said, an election where "the people showed the first turn from collectivism made by an important nation in recent years."

As was said of a great English statesman, "In his fidelity to principles he put to shame the brittle loyalties of party."

"You are here," Mr. Hoover said, "to feed the reviving fires of spiritual fervor which once made the word American a stirring description of a man who lived and died for human liberty, who knew no private interest, no personal ambition, no popular acclaim, no advantage of pride or place, which overshadows the burning love for the freedom of man. * * * If you produce nothing but improvised platitudes, you will give no hope. If you produce no leadership here, no virile fighter for the right, you will have done nothing of historic significance. If you follow the counsel of those who believe that politics is only a game to be played for personal advantage, you are wasting your time and effort. If you will calculate what will please this or that little segment of our population, and satisfy this or that pressure group or sectional interest, you will be betraying your opportunity, and tragically missing the call of your time."

Such words go beyond politicians into the homes of men. They go where churches are, and where children are, and the hopes of fathers and mothers. Peasants in far-off lands may stand straighter because of words like these. In their echo, a review of Mr. Hoover's human errors is as inappropriate as a discussion of the faults of a wounded soldier on the battlefield.

This was the speech of a patriot. In the tremendous applause which greeted it, the Republican Party honored itself. Millions of other Americans must have joined in. "Even the ranks of Tuscany could scarce forbear a cheer."

SAMUEL B. PETTENGILL.

Not Always What They Seem

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLARE E. HOFFMAN
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, many organizations come to Congress with proposals calling for grants of Federal money and authorization of power; the money to be expended and the power to be exercised by the joint action of the States and the Federal Government.

Practically all have desirable objectives and all tend to give Federal bureaucrats a greater measure of authority over local functions than have heretofore been exercised.

One such proposal urgently pressed upon the Eightieth Congress was that designed to extend Federal aid to education. Every intelligent person realizes the necessity for, and is in favor of, an educational system which will make each of our people familiar with our system of government, what it has accomplished for us, and cognizant of the advantages which, rightly administered, that system has given to our people.

Intelligent people also know that ignorance and ignorant people are a menace to their neighbors and to the government under which they live, if it be one such as we have.

However, proposals are not always what they seem. We all oppose sin, but some of the measures designed to lessen sin do not have that effect.

There is in the minds of loyal thinking citizens a question of the advisability of changing our constitutional system by depriving local communities and States of the powers retained by them when the Constitution was adopted.

The old Constitution, much as it has been ridiculed and disparaged, greatly as it has been misused and maladministered, is still the guide which gives to the common man the most of everything desired by him.

Most people are familiar with the arguments for Federal aid to education.

From the Sturgis Journal of July 19, published at Sturgis, St. Joseph County, Mich., a typical American city of some 10,000 people, comes the following editorial which should cause each of us to give consideration to both sides of this question of extending Federal aid not only to education but to many other activities for which it is sought.

The editorial reads as follows:

FEDERAL AID TO EDUCATION, AND WHAT IT MEANS TO UNITED STATES

For several years a well-organized lobby in Washington has been trying to inveigle Congress into appropriating huge sums of money for what is known as Federal aid to education.

Few people realize the true intent of this lobby. Its real purpose is not to aid education, but to control it.

The right of State and local control of education was considered so basic that the founding fathers of this Nation did not consider it necessary to guarantee that right in the Constitution.

Today that right is in danger of being usurped by money-hungry office seekers attempting to capitalize on political promises which are impossible to keep.

Whenever Federal aid is accepted by States and localities freedom is lost. Federal bureaucrats infiltrate the local scene bringing their standards, regimentation, and waste.

There is already too much uniformity in United States education. Why should a farm boy of Michigan study the same subjects as a student in New York City? Their problems and their lives will be different, and they must be equipped with different educational tools.

If States accept Federal grants-in-aid, the freedom of setting standards for teachers and classroom work, for example will be torn away from the ordinary citizen, and will be concentrated in Washington, where it probably would remain forever. Once ensconced in the Federal stronghold, freedom would perish through the blood-sucking of Federal control, which would expand and grow stronger as freedom faded and died.

Many citizens and students of government are asking themselves today: Just how far can the Federal Government go in taking over the activities of the States?

Representative RALPH W. GWINN of New York recently told the House of Representatives that education is strictly within the province of the State and locality. If local self-government surrenders this responsibility it is doomed, GWINN said.

GWINN, who is a native of Noblesville, Ind., a graduate of DePauw University and now a lawyer residing in Bronxville, N. Y., says that States are learning that Federal aid is no aid at all. The Indiana Legislature has passed a resolution which says: "We have taken a good look at Federal dollars and find that they all lose weight on their journey to Washington and back home again."

This is because bureaucrats and dead-timber Federal sinecurists lap up most of the gravy on the infamous Federal gravy train. More office seekers are trying to hitch a ride on the gravy train through what they call Federal "aid" to education.

Representative GWINN calls attention to the fact that no State legislature or group of private citizens has asked Congress for Federal school aid. The wail for more taxpayers' dollars has screeched from the throats of three pressure groups and lobbies in Washington.

The first group is the education lobby constantly present in the Capital seeking centralization of all powers. The second group is a collection of innocent idealists who believe they can legislate goodness into spirit and personality as well as material affairs. The third bloc is made up of active and fanatic planners whose jobs are often made secure only by spending the taxpayers' hard-earned cash.

The largest registered lobbyist for Federal aid is the National Education Association. It has a membership of 386,643 paying dues for the year ending May 31, 1947, of $1,138,100. Their headquarters and personnel are greater than the Republican and Democratic Party headquarters combined.

Representative GWINN emphasizes that these groups are more interested in securing control of local education than they are in securing Federal aid for it. He says:

"Imagine what will happen when a million school teachers, tens of thousands of janitors and assistants, all educational personnel, have become the direct beneficiaries of appropriations which might get by such organized pressure politics. Will they not quite generally support the candidates for Congress who make the biggest promises? Each succeeding election our central Government will become more nearly controlled by employees and beneficiaries from appropriations. It is the vicious circle of statism. Add to the present 2,000,000 Federal employees a million Government-controlled or influenced teachers and public school personnel and you have attained the socialized state, which you will probably have to keep indefinitely."

If we are to maintain local individuality and cultural independence we must guard ourselves against the ominous yoke of Federal control.

Federal aid to education will encroach upon our freedoms. It will not benefit our schools. The "school" money received by the States will amount to less than the "school" taxes siphoned from it. Pressure groups are making big and foolish promises in order to gain control of United States education. The public must not be fooled.

Nicholas Murray Butler, the last president of Columbia University, once said:

"There is not enough money in the United States, even if every Federal dollar of it were expended on education, to produce through Federal authority, or through what is naively called cooperation between the Federal Government and the several States, educational results that would be at all comparable to those that have been already reached under the free and natural system that has grown up among us.

"Unless the school is both the work and pride of the community it serves, it is nothing. A school system that grows naturally in response to the needs and ambitions of a hundred thousand different communities will be a better school system than any which can be imposed upon those localities by the aid of grants of public money from the Public Treasury, accompanied by Federal regulations, Federal inspections, Federal reports, and Federal uniformities."—R. President Truman's Acceptance Speech

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM T. BYRNE
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter from a recent issue of the New York Times:

PRESIDENT'S SPEECH PRAISED—IT DEMONSTRATES, WRITER DECLARES, A CONCERN FOR THE COMMON PEOPLE

To the EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

To one American listening at 2 o'clock the other morning to the acceptance speech of President Truman, the impression received was that of hard-hitting words of honesty and sense spoken at last, after a great deal of mere old-fashioned oratory in both conventions, and, in the Republican convention many snide insinuations.

President Truman presented the Eightieth Congress in its true colors. If the Republican platform means anything at all, it will be proved—or disproved—by the special session he has called with a feeling of deep responsibility to the people of this country and a desire to see whether those who believe themselves so admirably fitted to legislate for us for 4 more years really mean it.

Suddenly the little man at whom everybody has been sneering stepped forward easily—almost jauntily—as a first-rate fighting man who had always meant what he said and tried his utmost to work for the benefit of the common people of the United States, for the farmer, the laboring man, and the man of small business. The President spoke like a President, and one listener who had been very lukewarm toward him of late felt as many Americans must have felt who appreciate what we call "straight shooting."

What the Eightieth Congress has refused to do for price control, for housing, for the welfare of the ordinary American citizen, for health and for civil rights, Mr. Truman has labored to do with all that was in him. If his personality lacked somewhat in force and magnetism, and if powerful lobbies were too much for him, that does not affect the record.

The cost to the public of the latest Republican Congress has indeed been high; and all the campaign promises in the world will not expunge its record. Let us have a new kind of Congress of actively forward-looking men and women who can easily accomplish for the country the reforms Mr. Truman tried to carry on. Let us not slide backward again. And let us give recognition to a President honest and courageous with the best interests of the wage-earners of America at heart.

Democratic Inflation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ELLSWORTH B. BUCK
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial by Raymond Moley, from the Chicago Journal of Commerce of July 21, 1948:

DEMOCRATIC INFLATION

(By Raymond Moley)

In the special session of Congress, inflation will be the toughest problem for the Republicans to meet. They cannot meet it by passing legislation. They cannot pass the anti-inflation legislation that President Truman wants without repudiating their own stand in July 1946, and in December 1947. And even if they passed Truman price controls, they could not provide relief before election. Their own remedies set forth in the Republican platform are good ones. But they cannot be applied until a Republican gets into the White House.

The best the Republicans can do is to try an educational campaign outside Congress and reveal to the voters the fact that the Truman administration is the real maker of inflation and that as long as it is in power there can be no relief.

Price controls in peacetime cannot be effective. The real ways to control inflation are matters of long-term policy. They include the reduction of Government costs, the stimulation of production, stable currency, reduction of the debt, and more efficient spending of what is collected in taxes. It is easy to see that these attacks on inflation cannot be effectively applied until the Republicans gain complete control of both legislative and executive branches of government.

This is true because the Truman administration has deliberately followed policies which have for 2 years increased the volume and danger of inflation.

The administration of the old price controls, before they died 2 years ago, encouraged a gigantic system of black markets. When Congress—and remember, it was a Democratic Congress—2 years ago presented the President with a price-control bill, he chose to let controls die on July 1 and reinstated a worse plan on July 21. This worked so badly that the Seventy-ninth Congress scrapped the whole system of controls less than 3 months later. The administration has, through its policies, encouraged wage increases in successive waves. But most of all, it has encouraged the rise in agricultural prices so that no means could be found now to repair the damage.

From September 1947 to the end of the year, the Truman administration promoted one of the greatest grain price booms in history. It did it by issuing scare statements about dire world shortages ahead, which, of course, had the effect of encouraging speculators and needy buyers to rush into the market. It did it by a gross underestimate of the grain crop abroad—a mistake which it had to acknowledge early in February of this year. It did it by predicting a meat famine in the spring of this year—a famine which did not materialize. It did it by crying out about the use of grain by distilleries, saying that grain is in short supply.

Before May of this year, the Department of Agriculture underestimated the supply of hogs. Despite the prospects of a bumper corn crop, the Department continues to anticipate higher meat prices for as long as a year. And yet, with a fine grain crop, poultry will be much more plentiful this fall, hogs will be of higher weight and more high-quality beef will be available.

All these are only a few of the facts which might be assembled by Republicans in answer to the charge that they are the prime makers of inflation.

Centennial Anniversary of Settlement of Frankenlust Township, Bay County, Mich.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROY O. WOODRUFF
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by me on the occasion of the centennial anniversary of the settlement of Frankenlust Township, Bay County, Mich.:

Fellow Americans, this happy occasion is, for me, far more than the remembrance of an historic event in the development of this fine American community. It is far more than a celebration marking 100 years of steady progress through hard work, thrift, and spiritual leadership. For all who know intimately the story of these 100 years, this observance marks a truly symbolic milestone in the history of all that we know as the American way of life—the way of freedom, the way of individual responsibility, the way of law, and good will among men.

It was no accident of history that the new settlements in this region 100 years ago were led by men and women of singularly sturdy character and steady purpose. The beacon light of freedom and liberty under law had shone ever brighter from the shores of the American continent for some 200 years, and those in Europe who caught the sacred glow from afar would not rest until they had embraced for themselves and their loved ones the stimulating and exhilarating air of the New World.

Looking back over the trials and perplexities and vexations of this wonderful century, we know for a certainty—perhaps as we have never known before—that those who saw the promise of America in 1848 were inspired by a Divine guidance. For where is the land so blessed with abundance, so rich in moral strength and so firmly committed to the responsibilities of liberty under law? We are, indeed, fortunate people, and we do well on such occasions to acknowledge publicly and with all humility the beneficent Providence which has guided us to this bright hour.

It is hard for us to visualize this fortunate area a hundred years ago when the Reverend G. F. Sievers and his intrepid band of pioneers left Saginaw to lay the foundations for the new community of Frankenlust. One group ventured boldly through the woods in the direction of Bay City. The other portaged down the Saginaw River on a great scow of logs. The two groups did not meet that day, because the party on the scow found it impossible to navigate through the reeds and wild rice encountered in Squaconning Creek. But the next morning, July 5, the two bands of explorers and settlers came together on Stone Island, whence they took off together to the site of Frankenlust, where they determined to establish in the wilderness the new civilization of freedom—the civilization we honor today by rededicating ourselves to those fundamental virtues and attitudes which are the bedrock of American character and well-being.

Hardly had the community been established when the plague of typhoid fever struck. Most of the pioneers were stricken. Unable to build their frontier shelters in season because of this vicious disease, many still were without roofs over their heads when the frost came. It was, indeed, a testing time. But out of it came a community with a new zeal to make a success of the colony. Despite every obstacle a church building of logs was built the first year. It was 24 by 28 feet. The next year more settlers came. Eight years later the old log church was replaced by a larger and more commodious frame building. Before a decade had passed the colony was permanently established and had sent out new bands of pioneers and missionaries to other areas in the vicinity.

We recall this history not because it was unusual in America a century ago but because it affords us a keener appreciation of the great heritage which is ours. Sometimes we are inclined to be unmindful of the full significance of our privileges and opportunities as freemen in a Christian land. The doors of opportunity toward which our children strive with such confidence and spirit have been many centuries—not just 100 years—in the making. The doors of opportunity which beckon America today were first mere visions in a pagan world. From the vision the substance was wrought generation after generation by grueling work, by patience, by fortitude, by determination, and by a spirit in men and women which did not know defeat.

True, the last century has brought us many things. In less than three generations we have moved from the first railroad through the age of steam and the age of electricity to television, jet propulsion, and atomic energy. But all of these things of substance are in the end only the flowers of freedom—the fruits of our rich moral heritage.

History tells us—and we see the evidence on every hand—that great institutions are but the lengthened shadows of great men. Nowhere has this axiom of history been more dramatically illustrated than in the mighty America which sprang over the years from a hundred or a thousand communities such as Frankenlust. Our great automobile industry began in many sheds and many barns. Our great packing industry began in many farm wood-lots. Our great printing industry began in a thousand dark and dank basements. Our great schools and colleges began in log cabins reared in the wilderness, and our great churches and places of worship began in the wilderness in cabins of logs.

But behind every beginning was an individual fired by a vision to build constructively for his fellowmen—an ingrained determination to leave a better world than he found—a devotion to the concept that human destiny moves not through great strutting plans and projects, but through the persistent development of character, and the application of virtue, in every human cell which makes up our civilization.

These are the great lights thrown up by your own century of progress in this community. These are the reasons we speak of the great American dream. No other land ever has held a like symbolic term so completely embodying the aspirations of its people. To all the world it became the land of hope to the downtrodden and the wretched in other lands.

The American dream has never been defined in precise terms, because it has never been depicted in all its grandeur and all its service to human progress. Every nation and every people have contributed to its robust splendor. Every age and people from every clime have embraced its promise, and have been nurtured by its hope. Yet when we stop to analyze the vision and bring it into the measure of our daily life, we express it again in terms of the spirit—in trim and orderly farms, in tranquil homes, in pleasant schools, and inspiring churches. Such are the incentives of our American way of life.

We see the golden thread of this great harmony of spirit in the very opening phrases of our American Constitution, and I quote: "* * * In order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity * * *."

Here are the great spiritual urges behind the American dream—a yearning of the people to be free to work together in peace and harmony—a more perfect union. A yearning to establish justice to all. A yearning to insure domestic tranquillity which is ever the seedbed of all progress and all development through all the ages of history.

Today in America we see a great rededication to the fundamentals of our constitutional order. We find a strong revival of old-fashioned American determination to do for one's self. All the world understands clearly that once men forsake the disciplines and the duties and the responsibilities of self-government, they start down those foggy paths which lead ultimately to the black tyranny of the police state.

Not only in America but everywhere in the world where freedom prevails, the forces of reconstruction and regeneration are at work. But where men and women are the mere pawns of government, humanity gropes in darkness, hunger, and despair.

The choice before us today is the same as it was a hundred years ago when the great pioneers of Frankenlust planted their banners of freedom in the wilderness. They courageously and heroically dedicated themselves to the cause of freedom and responsible self-government.

Ours is the duty to rededicate ourselves to their great cause. They builded well. Ours is the great responsibility to see that the work which they have advanced this far shall never be abandoned in this land of ours. The constitutional restoration which now surges through every avenue of American life is but the echoing of 10,000 Frankenlusts launched in this great land of a century ago.

Ours is the duty today to appraise their work in the spirit of devotion and determination in which it was done, and to pledge ourselves anew that the book of progress and enlightenment and human welfare which they began, now is ours, in which to write a new chapter for this day and this time.

As we return to our daily tasks with renewed inspiration from this memorable occasion, let us keep in mind that deathless passage from the farewell address of George Washington in 1796. That great document in American history came to our people only 52 years before the founding of this very community. We know from the history which we have heard recited here today that the words of George Washington were living words among those who blazed the woods to Frankenlust. Let us pause then to hear President Washington's admonition to hold fast to the faith that is in us. Here are General Washington's words as he set them down:

"Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who would labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in the courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle."

Here again is the golden thread of the great American dream, for we see today that the men and women who established this community a century ago were fired by that fundamental human inspiration which George Washington had called the bedrock of our national felicity.

The sacred flame of freedom on this continent has lighted the world for three centuries.

Today it is the beacon toward which all mankind turns for hope.

Let us hold it high with the same zeal and the same devotion and the same bright confidence in the future which inspired the first little band at Frankenlust when they reared their humble church of logs.

If we in our time and with our resources do as well as they did in their time, the world will move on to a better day.

They greeted the future with confidence and with hope, because of the faith that was in them.

We who have enjoyed this great heritage cannot fail to carry forward the flaming torch they passed to us.

No; this community will not fail in that mission.

America will not fail in that mission.

We are the custodians of 300 years of human freedom under law.

As we say so often in our great patriotic song: "Long may our land be bright with freedom's holy light."

Dividends on National Service Life Insurance Policies

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 26, 1948

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, dividends are now due and payable on national service life-insurance policies. In that connection I wish to insert at this point correspondence which I have had with the Veterans' Administration on this subject:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., June 15, 1948.

Maj. Gen. CARL R. GRAY, Jr.,
Administrator of Veterans' Affairs,
Veterans' Administration,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR GENERAL GRAY: I have learned with interest that the Supreme Court has decided the Zazove case in a manner which is satisfactory to the Veterans' Administration.

I hope that this action will result in the Veterans' Administration giving promptest attention to the determination of dividends and payment to those eligible under the National Service Life Insurance Act. There is absolutely no excuse now for not paying these dividends. In that regard, I would like to be advised at your earliest convenience of what steps the Veterans' Administration is taking to see that these dividends are paid, and how soon we may expect that payments will be going forward to the veterans who hold these policies.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Very sincerely yours,
EDITH NOURSE ROGERS,
Chairman, Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., June 18, 1948.

Hon. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS,
Chairman, Committee on Veterans' Affairs, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MRS. ROGERS: Since the Administrator is at present absent from the city I am making reply to your letter of June 13, 1948, addressed to him, concerning the effect of the decision on the Zazove case, and to your personal request for a statement as to the probable number of policies of national service life insurance on which an initial dividend will be payable, and the method of determining the eligibility of a policy to receive dividends.

In the declaration of the first dividend on national service life insurance, the amount payable on each policy will be based on the number of months the insurance was in force, as well as upon age at issue, plan, and amount of insurance. In general it is presently planned to include policies in force for three or more months, regardless of whether they have subsequently lapsed or have matured. Insurance issued on disabled lives pursuant to the special provisions of the law and on which the premiums are credited to the national service life insurance appropriation will not participate. It is estimated that dividends will be payable on about 20,000,000 policies issued on the lives of approximately 16,500,000 individuals.

As has already been explained to you the payment of this dividend involves a tremendous amount of detail work. The very volume of the operation is unparalleled by any other one of similar character. Before the multitudinous individual calculations may be undertaken each of the 20,000,000 accounts must be audited and brought up to date as to those items basic to the determination of the amount payable on each policy. This will involve considerable administrative expense, which must be covered by congressional appropriation. Even if the required funds were immediately available, it probably would be approximately 12 months before the actual dispatch of dividend checks could be commenced. In this connection may I point out to you that the Veterans' Administration considerably more than a year ago initiated action to obtain funds to audit the premium accounts, which as above explained is a requisite preliminary to the payment of dividends, but thus far no moneys for this purpose have been available, though it is understood that an appropriation bill presently before the Congress contains some funds for such an operation but in an amount much reduced from that determined by the Veterans' Administration as required to complete the task.

While much preparatory planning work has been done, actual operations will be dependent upon the availability of funds and qualified personnel, but I assure you that every endeavor will be made to accomplish the payment of dividends at the earliest practicable date.

Sincerely yours,
O. W. CLARK,
Executive Assistant Administrator.

JUNE 28, 1948.

Gen. CARL R. GRAY, Jr.,
Administrator of Veterans' Affairs,
Veterans' Administration,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR GENERAL GRAY: Reference is made to the letter of June 18, 1948, from Mr. O. W. Clark, Executive Assistant Administrator.

In the third paragraph of Mr. Clark's letter, it is stated that an appropriation is pending for the expenses of the insurance audit. The implication is given that the amount is so reduced as to make this program unworkable or at least hamper its operation, and there is a slight indication that Congress might be in some degree responsible for this reduction in funds.

I want the record to be perfectly clear. The Veterans' Administration requested of the Budget Bureau $7,264,234 for the purpose of making an insurance premium card audit. The Bureau of the Budget recommended to the Congress the sum of $2,851,000 (House Document 681). The Appropriations Committee of the House allowed this full amount of $2,851,000 and the Senate Committee did not change it one cent. The bill is now at the White House awaiting signature. Thus the records show that Congress gave every cent for this insurance audit that the Bureau of the Budget thought was necessary.

I am informed that if all the people are employed in the Insurance Section which are authorized by the 1949 budget, there will be an approximate excess of 500 who can be assigned to this insurance premium record card audit. The $2,851,000 will provide approximately 1,000 additional employees, making a total of 1,500 available for what is expected to be a 9-month operation. This it seems to me is entirely adequate to meet the needs of the insurance audit. The Bureau of the Budget obviously believes this is sufficient.

I have been advised that the Veterans' Administration does not plan to start issuance of dividend checks until January 1950. If this is true, it is a most distressing condition and one that will be most disappointing to the veterans who are entitled to this dividend.

As soon as the formula has been determined for the payment of these dividends I would like to be advised of its details.

As you know, this committee has been greatly interested in the issuance of national service life insurance policies. It is encouraging to me to know that present plans of the Insurance Section call for the issuance of policies, on converted insurance, prior to January 1, 1949. It is my understanding that the term insurance policyholders will receive a policy as their insurance is renewed or extended. I hope that this program will be carried forward as promptly as possible.

Very sincerely yours,
EDITH NOURSE ROGERS,
Chairman, Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

Rent Control

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. RALPH W. GWINN
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. GWINN of New York. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statement by John W. Scoville:

RENT CONTROL

(By John W. Scoville, nationally known consulting economist)

The control of rents by the Federal Government was introduced as a war measure. In certain cities there was great influx of people to work in the war plants and it was felt necessary, to promote the war effort, for the Federal Government to control rents. Whether this control was good or bad, I do not know. But the war ended about 2 years ago and we still have the Federal Government controlling rents.

This control of rents by the Federal Government is a tyrannical usurpation of power. The powers of Congress are listed in the United States Constitution, but the Constitution gives Congress no power whatever to control rents. Congressmen who vote for rent control are lawbreakers—they defy the supreme law of the land, which is the United States Constitution. It seems to me that when Congress usurps power and passes laws not authorized by the United States Constitution, the citizens are under no obligation to obey such laws. Of course, the tyrants have possession of the courts, the police, and the jails, but if the landlords all rebelled there would not be enough jails to hold them all.

It is not for Congressmen to decide whether rent-control laws are beneficial or injurious. The fact that Congress has no constitutional authority to pass such legislation is reason enough why all Federal rent-control laws should be repealed.

What are the reasons, 2 years after the war, for not allowing landlords and tenants to draw up voluntary lease agreements? Some say we must have rent control because there is a housing shortage. If the Government fixed the price of sirloin steak at 5 cents a pound, there would be an enormous shortage of sirloin. The amount of sirloin that consumers would buy at that price would be enormously greater than the amount that the cattlemen would supply. If the Government raised the price of sirloin to 40 cents a pound, the shortage would be less, the number of buyers would decrease, and more meat would come on the market. If the Government fixed the price of sirloin at $1 a pound, the shortage of sirloin would be still less. In fact, at this price there might not be enough buyers to take the meat which was offered. Whenever the price of an article is arbitrarily lowered the demand for the article increases and the supply decreases. In other words, arbitrarily low prices cause shortages.

The Government has kept the price of shelter low. When an article is cheap people use more of it. Rent control causes the housing shortage. If rents were allowed to rise to their natural level, some people living in apartments would move into a single room, some living in houses would move into apartments, families would double up. In many instances, two families would live in houses where now there is one family. Sole occupants of apartments would find someone to live with them to share the rent. Some people, on account of the higher rents, would leave the city.

If rents were allowed to rise to their natural level, we would soon find that there was no housing shortage. Landlords would be hanging out vacancy signs. The housing shortage is no reason for having rent control, because it is the rent control that causes the housing shortage.

The cost of living since 1939 has risen about 60 percent, while the cost of shelter has risen about 10 percent. If the cost of shelter had risen since 1939 by as high a percentage as the cost of food and clothing, tenants would be paying about $3,000,000,000 a year more for rent. Landlords are subsidizing tenants to the tune of about $3,000,000,000 a year.

Some may say that rents should be controlled because tenants cannot afford to pay higher rents. That is a queer argument to bring up when wages and employment are at an all-time high. It is doubtful if rent control accomplishes anything in holding down the cost of living. The money which the tenant saves on account of low rent he can use to bid up the prices of food, clothing, and other things. If rents were higher it is almost certain that the price of food and clothing would be lower. There is no proof, I believe, that rent control has accomplished anything in keeping down the cost of living.

But let us suppose that there are many tenants who do not have enough income to live on and who have to be subsidized. Why should the landlords be called on to support the semipaupers? Do the shoe manufacturers furnish shoes at half price to those who cannot afford to buy shoes? Do the meat packers furnish meat at half price to those who cannot afford to buy meat? The rule should be that those who cannot support themselves are given relief by all people who pay taxes. It is certainly a doctrine that it is the function of landlords to relieve the indigent to the tune of several billion dollars a year.

Some may say we should have a rent control because if we did not have it tenants would be evicted and have no place in which to live. Of course, there is nothing to this argument because if one tenant is evicted some other tenant moves in. Hence, there is no addition to the number of people who have to sleep in the parks.

If rent controls were eliminated there would be a reshuffling of the cards; many families would double up, persons living in houses would move into smaller quarters, and in the course of a few months the demand for housing and the supply would be equalized, and there would no longer be a housing shortage.

Landlords seem to have no friends. When wages go up the papers refer to the increase as labor's gains, but a rise in rents appears in the headlines as a gouge. In a depression landlords have a hard time, there are many vacancies, rents are low, and it is difficult to collect rents. In a big depression thousands of landlords lose their properties. Landlords should be allowed in boom times to recover some of the losses and lean earnings that come in years of depression. It is not very fair to compel the landlord to put up with losses and small earnings in periods of depression and then, by rent-control laws, prevent him from making extra money in boom years.

We have many laws now for taking property away from those who have it and distributing it among those whose lack of industry, or ability, or fortune finds them without much property. We have many laws for the redistribution of wealth. Rent-control laws seek to redistribute wealth, to take the property from landlords and give it over to tenants. Of course this is a clumsy method for redistributing wealth, because many landlords are poor and many tenants are rich. Furthermore, I do not think it is good public policy to make laws to take property from those who produced it and hand it over to those who did not produce it.

If the Government took all of the dividends paid to stockholders and all of the interest paid to owners of bonds, then the value of the stocks and the value of the bonds would be zero and the confiscation of this property would be complete. If the Government took half of the stock dividends and half of the bond interest, then the Government would confiscate half of the value of this property, for the value of any property is the income which it produces. If the Government, through rent-control laws, takes from the landlords one-third of the rent which he would otherwise receive, then the Government has confiscated a third of his property. This high-handed confiscation of the property of landlords is specifically forbidden by the United States Constitution. The Constitution says: "No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation."

If Congress thinks that there is public reason why tenants should be subsidized, I can see no reason why this subsidy should be paid by taking over part of the property of landlords. Remember that when the Federal Government compels you to accept arbitrarily low rents then the Government has confiscated a part of your property. Furthermore, a person should not be subsidized by the Government because he happens to be a tenant. Being a tenant is no proof of destitution and many people who own their homes are poorer than many of the tenants.

Landlords make a mistake when they accept rent control in principle but ask that the rents allowed by the Government shall be raised. Landlords should ask for the repeal of all rent-control legislation because any control of rent by government is an infringement of property rights and one of the main functions of government is to protect property rights which are very valuable human rights. When a government passes a rent-control law, the government, instead of protecting property rights, itself engages in theft and confiscation. No honest government will pass laws which allow tenants to steal from landlords.

Class legislation is universally condemned. It is not decent for government to give special privileges to one class and to impose penalties on another class. Rent-control laws are class legislation of the most vicious kind. All people should be equal before the law. This is supposed to be a free country. If we are really free we should be able to do business with each other without the intervention of the Government. As a matter of fact, we are losing our liberties and the Federal Government is interfering with business transactions in every conceivable way. While we are sending billions of dollars to Europe to fight communism, we are passing innumerable laws to turn the United States into a socialistic or communistic nation.

Rent-control laws tend to restrict the construction of new houses. Many people are unwilling to invest money in houses when they fear that the rentals will be controlled by the Federal Government. And, of course, the State control of rent is just as bad as the Federal control of rent.

In many cases the rent-control laws have acted against the interests of tenants. Many would-be tenants, on account of rent control, have been compelled to buy houses at exorbitant prices.

Many landlords who, for one reason or another, were charging low rents before the war, are now compelled to continue these low rentals. Rent control is discriminatory. Why should landlords be compelled to furnish their services at a low cost when wage earners, manufacturers, and merchants are, in general, allowed to charge what the traffic will bear?

Those who favor rent-control laws are Communists or Socialists at heart who believe that citizens should not be free, but should be controlled by government. Rent control is such a wicked and unsavory mess that it should be opposed by every citizen who believes we should have economic freedom, who is opposed to socialism and communism, and who still believes we should follow the Constitution of the United States.

As a result of Federal rent control it is practically impossible for a person living in Detroit to find a place which he can rent. In the Detroit News of December 9 there were 11 inches of advertising devoted to flats, houses, and apartments for rent and 327 inches devoted to houses and flats for sale. There are about 30 houses offered for sale to 1 that is available to rent. While there is a ceiling on rent, there is no ceiling on the selling price of houses. The landlords, in order to escape from the rent controls, offer their property for sale. The home seeker who would like to rent rather than buy finds there are practically no dwelling units available for rent. When the price of meat was controlled it was difficult to get meat. When rentals are controlled it is difficult to find a place to rent. In both instances price control results in scarcities.

In 1940, according to the Bureau of the Census, tenant-occupied dwelling units decreased from 55 percent in 1940 to 46 percent in 1947. Many householders who would prefer to rent are compelled to buy and to buy at very high prices. Weekly earnings of industrial workers are about double what they were before the war. Many landlords caught in the net of Federal rent control offer their properties for sale rather than for rent. High incomes and low rentals enable many people to purchase more space than they need.

From 1940 to 1947 in Detroit the number of dwelling units occupied by one person only increased from 27,815 to 47,043; the number of dwelling units occupied by 2 persons only in the same period increased from 139,459 to 203,499. But the number of dwelling units occupied by 6 or more persons has decreased from 99,318 to 87,292. The number of dwelling units with two or more rooms per person has increased from 159,535 to 256,665, while the number of dwelling units with 1½ or more persons per room has decreased from 24,512 to 22,073.

At the depth of the depression in Detroit a real estate man tells me that rents dropped about 50 percent and about 30 percent of rental properties were vacant. These figures show how people economize in the matter of shelter when confronted with a situation which makes this necessary.

If rent controls were eliminated we would have an increase in rents which would cause people to be less extravagant in buying living space, which in turn would eliminate the housing shortage. It is a curious situation, because there was a housing shortage we adopted rent control and the rent control will make the housing shortage permanent until the controls are lifted.

In July 1946 I surveyed a number of people in Detroit concerning the matter of rent control. We found that about 54 percent of the landlords and about 19 percent of the renters were opposed to governmental rent control.

Of those who own their own homes, 37 percent were opposed to rent control. In this report we said:

"Rent control causes a housing shortage, and then to cure the housing shortage, Congress passes a law to have houses built by the Federal Government. Instead of dealing with the fundamental trouble, Congress seeks to cure one difficulty by introducing another. The Federal Government has no more right or authority to build houses than it has to build automobiles, clothing, or any other scarce article. * * *

"Since landlords constitute less than 10 percent of the population they have little political power and that, I suppose, is the reason why the politicians, both State and National, are willing to confiscate some of the property of the landlords."

I suppose some will say that the elimination of rent controls would tend to promote inflation. I believe this conclusion is incorrect. If rents increased, the landlords would have more money to spend for goods, but the tenants would have a smaller amount to spend for goods. Hence there would be no increase in the total demand for commodities. Inflation is an oversupply of money which results in a decline in the value of the dollar. Inflation can be cured by reducing the money supply. To attempt to prevent inflation by price fixing is simply to attack one of the symptoms of inflation and not the thing itself.

Once again I say that landlords constitute less than 10 percent of our population. That is why those politicians who are guided more by popular clamor than by justice, are willing to vote for rent controls and for the partial confiscation of the property of the landlords.

But we wonder how long this Republic can be prosperous and strong if the laws are based on special privilege rather than on equal justice to all.

Capitol Watchtower

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROY O. WOODRUFF
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article by Tom L. Munger:

CAPITOL WATCHTOWER

(By Tom L. Munger)

WASHINGTON.—There is a story here about a nationally syndicated news commentator who gets his material by going into a corner and interviewing himself. Takes notes, too, it is said. Evidently this was the method used by Senator Dear ALBEN BARKLEY to line up the material for his keynote speech at the Democratic National Convention.

The keynote speech, of course, is old stuff now. But it is worthy of rehearsal just prior to the special session of Congress for a variety of reasons. Chief among them is the fact that necessarily it laid the foundation of the Democratic campaign. Customarily in all parties this is so.

Thus BARKLEY'S speech committed the Democratic Party, or what is left of it, to a campaign based upon a twofold attack on the record of the Eightieth Congress. As already it has been demonstrated by subsequent Democratic propaganda, the next 3 months will be devoted to criticisms of Republican congressional domestic, economic, and international political policy.

The electorate will be told, again and again and again, that Republicans are responsible for price inflation, and furthermore that Republicans have sought to funnel the resultant bloated profits into the pockets of economic royalists. The electorate will be told, also, that Republicans have reverted to isolationism and have sought to sabotage the Marshall plan as implemented by the Economic Cooperation Administration.

Unfortunately for the Democrats, even a cursory review of the facts reveals that Republicans can be held responsible for inflation only insofar as they have gone all out in supporting the Democratic foreign policy—a policy which wiser Republican heads have recognized all along as bipartisan in name only.

Parenthetically it should be remarked here that congressional Republicans, and the southern Democratic coalitionists, would have done better 4 years ago to come out in the open with their ideas anent America-first rather than America-last in dealing with the suicidal nations abroad.

Then we might have had a foreign policy modified to a real and well-timed toughness which would have stopped Russian expansionism in its tracks. But as it happened, the toughness of which Democrats prate has been tragically reminiscent of the old time Chinese warfare, which consisted of marching and countermarching, threatening gestures, and of trying to scare the enemy with firecrackers and the display of horrific falsefaces.

Even now, if France should come up with a cabinet infiltrated by Communists, a la Czechoslovakia, should we not tell them "the Commies are out or else no ECA hand-outs"? Why carry out a contract proved fraudulent? What law of God or man compels this Nation to help another that makes even a gesture toward entering the camp of our self-declared enemies? Just what does helping the Europeans to help themselves mean, anyway?

It all comes back to the cynicism and dishonesty of the politically senile Democratic Party, hitherto bound by threads of self-interest so rotten that now it has come apart at the seams. Because of the corrupt Democratic leadership, the wishful misrepresentations of Senator BARKLEY continue to be important in view of the actual record of the Eightieth Congress and Republican plans for further legislative action.

In his keynote speech BARKLEY told the American people that Republicans in Congress killed the reciprocal trade policy, public housing, price controls, and crippled social security, western land reclamation and public hydroelectric power. He claimed Democratic credit for Federal deposit insurance and creation of the Federal Reserve Bank System. There were other claims and accusations, but these stuck out most prominently.

As a matter of fact, these claims and accusations were utterly false. It is hard to conceive that a United States Senator of BARKLEY'S long service could have believed what he said. Manifestly the more intelligent of his listeners did not. BARKLEY has been well characterized as the champion graveyard whistler of American history.

The Eightieth Congress extended the Reciprocal Trade Act, but provided adequate safeguards for the American people, just as it did in connection with extension of foreign aid through the ECA. Under the present housing policy more housing units are being built faster than ever before in the Nation's history.

Price controls were killed by President Truman under his war powers authority. Republicans wanted to remove them gradually to lessen the impact upon the Nation's price economy. The Eightieth Congress stopped the Democratic administration's abuse of its powers to regulate social security—an abuse so outrageous as to constitute indirectly an attempt to buy votes with public funds. The next regular session of Congress will revise the Social Security Act to grant maximum benefits to the greatest number possible.

In spite of BARKLEY'S effort to scare western voters back into the Democratic fold by saying that Republicans in Congress crippled reclamation and public hydroelectric power, they are likely to go strongly Republican next November because they know that the Eightieth Congress voted the largest reclamation and power-dam appropriations in history.

The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows that Representative ROY O. WOODRUFF, of Michigan, was the first man, subsequent to the bank closings of 1933, to advocate in Congress passage of legislation establishing Federal deposit insurance. Another "Michigander," Clarence J. McLeod, then a Member of Congress, introduced the first FDIC bill.

When the Democratic majority in the House pigeonholed the bill Senator ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG won its passage in the upper House, in spite of a threat by Franklin Delano Roosevelt to veto the measure. It passed the House when southern Democrats finally saw its merits. Roosevelt did not dare veto the measure which now guarantees Americans the fruits of their labor.

The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows that the Federal Reserve bank system originated in the mind of conservative Senator Thomas Bailey Aldrich, of Rhode Island, whom Democrats called an economic royalist. His bill to control the boom-and-bust economic cycle failed because of bitter Democratic opposition and the dissidence of a few Republicans who failed to envision the importance of the measure. The next Congress was controlled by Democrats, who adopted Aldrich's plan in all its essentials.

Examples of this kind are sufficiently numerous in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD over the past three or four decades to warrant the risk of a generalization. By and large, Republican liberalism has been of the sound variety which would help the people to help themselves better their lot in a free society. Democratic liberalism, over the last 16 years at least, has been of the variety calculated only to help the people reelect Democratic officeholders. That is why the Democratic Party is going into eclipse.

Yugoslavia

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN W. McCORMACK
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include a short historical statement entitled "Strange Occurrences in Yugoslavia," written in April 1947 by James Patrick McGovern, a member of the bar of the District of Columbia and a former captain in the American Expeditionary Forces of the First World War. Captain McGovern has been in Yugoslavia, is familiar with the background of which he writes, and, in my judgment, his reactions are worthy of widespread public interest.

The statement follows:

STRANGE OCCURRENCES IN YUGOSLAVIA

(By James Patrick McGovern)

American soldiers, who chanced to find themselves hard pressed in Yugoslavia during the war, are shocked by news that has been coming out of that country. Some of our aviators had pleasant contacts with General Mihailovich. They have furnished interesting information concerning assistance he gave them at times when they were in urgent need of it to escape from the common enemy—the forces of Hitler. It is not unnatural that they squirmed upon hearing that the general had been killed by his own countrymen. Later, they learned that a number of their fellow American aviators had also been killed in Yugoslavia—shot down, it might seem, as something of a sporting event. In any event, that was the way authorities of the Tito regime saw fit to treat members of the American liberating troops who stood in the way of Yugoslavia becoming a German province. Considerable information regarding the trial and conviction of Archbishop Stepinac in that country has recently come to the United States and is arousing general interest.

Mihailovich can probably be put in a very interesting category of persons who, within the meaning of international law, carry on what is often termed private warfare. The conference at the Hague in 1907 was called a peace conference. It did concern itself with the framing of well-conceived projects for the settlement of international controversies by peaceful methods. But it also undertook to formulate a law-making treaty prescribing rules for the conduct of warfare on land. The general purpose of that treaty, commonly referred to as Convention Number IV, was to mitigate the horrors of war. The outstanding subjects with which it is concerned are the conduct of hostilities by armed forces against each other; the treatment of prisoners of war, and the rights of noncombatants. At the outset of the treaty are some provisions relating to the qualifications of belligerents. Those who desire to fight must carry arms openly. In other words, they must become parts of a military unit; they must obtain commissions, or enlist, or be inducted into service. Persons who, on their own responsibility, commit hostile acts against enemy forces, may be severely and summarily dealt with by such forces. International law recognizes the right of armies to protect themselves against the activities of such persons, as it likewise recognizes the right of military forces to protect themselves against the activities of brave men who are called upon to act as spies.

Civilians who engage in acts of hostility against enemy forces are sometimes called snipers. The activities of some such persons, when carried on from ambuscade, may at times be odious and cowardly. But in World War II private warfare was conducted by courageous men and women whose clandestine operations did not involve any element of moral delinquency or violation of law. The so-called underground, as it operated in Norway, Denmark, and France, furnished an interesting and somewhat unique illustration of this kind of private warfare. Activities of members of the underground were, of course, not violative of international law, which is a law for the conduct of nations and not of individuals.

As has been observed, General Mihailovich and his followers can probably be said to have been in a special category of persons engaged in private warfare. The Government of Yugoslavia surrendered to the Germans. There could, therefore, be no Yugoslavian Army having a standing as a belligerent force under international law. But General Mihailovich would not submit to the German Armies. He probably organized no underground movement; but, on his own responsibility and at the risk of becoming the victim of severe retaliatory measures, he openly defied the enemy, and that at a time when the German Armies were at their best. It took courage and patriotism of a high order on the part of the general and his adherents to engage in that kind of private warfare. It is difficult to imagine that the intrepid organizer of such a desperate movement could be one who deserved death for having given aid to the enemies of his country.

Tito may have followed Mihailovich in a somewhat similar venture. But why did the Allies desert Mihailovich and pick Tito as the man with whom they would deal? Has the selection proved to be a wise and just one? It may be worthy of note right here that Tito is a sort of nickname. He now signs himself Josip Broz-Tito.

The Kingdom of Serbia was on the side of the so-called Allied and Associated Powers in the First World War and was treated in a friendly and generous manner in the peace arrangements formulated at Paris in 1919. Serbia was the nucleus of the Kingdom of Yugoslavia, which came into existence through the peace settlements of 1919. Serbia had been accepted into the family of nations through recognition by European powers in 1878 at the Congress of Berlin. The recognition given in the Treaty of Berlin, concluded that year, has been described as a conditional one—as one which imposed some restrictions on Serbia. The treaty contained stipulations to safeguard religious liberty in that country. Perhaps these provisions were recalled by Archbishop Stepinac when he delivered his final address to the People's Court which tried him at Zagreb. A translation of that address was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 28, 1947, under unanimous consent obtained by Senator J. HOWARD MCGRATH, of Rhode Island, formerly Solicitor General of the United States. Senator MCGRATH commended it to the attention of his fellow countrymen as a statement of the terrible religious persecution to which he (Archbishop Stepinac) and the Christian churches are being subjected by the puppet rulers of Yugoslavia. Said the archbishop:

"As to myself and as to the verdict, I seek no mercy. My conscience is clear."

He gave the following warning in the course of that address:

"You have made a fatal mistake in murdering priests. The people shall not forgive you for that. Such is your freedom."

Speech of Hon. John W. McCormack, of Massachusetts

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MICHAEL J. KIRWAN
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. KIRWAN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following transcript of a speech by the Honorable JOHN W. MCCORMACK, of Massachusetts, Democratic whip of the House of Representatives, on Friday, July 2, 1948, over the National Broadcasting Co.:

The campaign this fall will be waged on the record of the Eightieth Congress, which is controlled by the Republican Party. President Truman has properly made this the issue. It is the major issue before the voters. This gives the voters an excellent opportunity to compare the records of both major parties.

In past campaigns the Democratic Party has had to go back to the terrible conditions and the "poor deal" administration of former President Hoover for such a comparison. This will not be so in this campaign. We can compare the Democratic achievements of the past years with the do-nothing action of the Republican Eightieth Congress.

We have a clear case to present to the citizens of the constructive and courageous leadership on the part of the Democratic Party, and of the failures of the Republican Party as evidenced by its record.

The record clearly shows that the Eightieth Republican-controlled Congress has defied the wishes of, and acted contrary to, the best interests of the people in this country.

In a speech on the floor of the House of Representatives a few weeks ago, I charged this Republican-controlled Eightieth Congress with being a Congress that was "against the people."

Its record supports that charge.

There are many other failures on the part of this Republican-controlled Congress which I could call to your attention, but time will not permit all the details.

There are two matters of great importance to you which I would like to discuss tonight: housing and the high cost of living.

What is the record of the Republican Party on legislation relating to these important problems?

You have all read and heard of the Wagner-Ellender-Taft housing bill. You are all aware of the bad housing situation that exists throughout the country. Next to the high cost of living, it is our No. 1 domestic problem. The passage of this meritorious bill designed to build homes and living quarters is of vital importance to all sections of the country. Yet, when this bill, which had passed the Senate, came over to the House of Representatives, the Republican leadership prevented it being considered by the Members of the House. Against the opposition of the Republican leadership this bill was reported favorably out of committee, because 10 Democrats, together with only 4 Republicans, forced the bill out by a 14 to 13 vote. This bill contained the public housing features and slum clearance, and the low-cost housing provisions. But, the Republican-controlled Rules Committee refused to allow this bill to come up in the House of Representatives for a vote.

In the closing days of the session of Congress, the Republican leaders changed the votes of three Republican Members and then voted out a meaningless bill.

The Democrats fought for a good housing bill—not a housing bill for the benefit of the real-estate lobby.

The Republican Party passed a deceitful bill in the closing days of the Congress. From a smoke-filled room in Philadelphia they received orders from their platform committee not to adjourn the Congress without passing some kind of a bill which had the word "housing" in its title.

When this deceitful bill got to the Senate, one of its most prominent Members, Senator TOBEY, of New Hampshire, chairman of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, vigorously denounced what the Republicans had done in the House of Representatives.

Listen to what Senator TOBEY, a Republican, had to say about this bill. I quote Senator TOBEY from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

"This Wolcott bill is a fake. It is a fraud. It is a hollow shell. It is a flimflam on the veterans. These men put it over by depriving the people's representatives in the House of any opportunity to vote on slum clearance and public housing. The machinations of a group of men in the real estate lobby pushed the Wolcott bill through the House."

Senator TOBEY also termed the Wolcott bill "a tax-depreciation steal. It is a monstrosity. It is a miscarriage of justice."

Senator TOBEY summed up his statement by saying, and mark you, his final words, "Shame on those who perpetrated it."

The persons who perpetrated this bill were the Republican Party in the House, and the real estate lobby. What more severe condemnation could any measure ever receive than that given to the Wolcott bill by Senator Tobey, a Republican, not a Democrat.

Although pledged in 1944 to extend the coverage of additional employees under the social security law, the Republican Party has excluded about 1,000,000 persons throughout the country. These citizens had been covered by social security for years. This means that such employees and their dependents cannot now receive the benefits of our great social-security program.

The Republican Party refused to increase the minimum-wage law from the present 40 cents an hour to a minimum of 75 cents an hour, or even to increase such small wages at all. In 1947 they promised to increase this minimum wage to 60 cents an hour. The Republicans failed to keep this promise. I do not have to argue with you in these days about the conditions of families where the bread winner only earns for a 40-hour week the amount of only 40 cents an hour. President Truman recommended an increase to 75 cents per hour. The Republicans opposed him. The Republican Party has not even increased the minimum wage from its present level of 40 cents per hour. On the contrary, they have even reduced appropriations so that proper investigations could not be adequately made to see how widespread are the violations of this meritorious law.

The action of the Republicans on the extension of the reciprocal trade agreements law, for all practical purposes destroys the effectiveness of this great democratic measure which is so important to the export trade of our country. It is very important in connection with the exchange of international trade, and as a means toward establishing sound governments in the world, and particularly, as an instrument toward permanent peace. The Republican Party has emasculated this law. A Democratic President and Congress next year will save it from the attack of the Republican Party.

I would like to discuss with you now the records of the Democratic and the Republican Parties on the No. 1 problem facing you and this country today. It is the problem of inflation—the high cost of living.

Every husband and wife—every father and mother—every person in our country knows that there has been a sharp increase in the cost of living during the past 2 years. It is a source of concern to all of us.

Everyone knows that as a result of this increase, the dollar you have today buys 40 percent less than it did two and more years ago under the Democratic administrations.

The responsibility for this ruthless increase in your cost of living rests upon the Republican Party.

For almost five war years the cost of living under Democratic administrations was held in line.

Of course, the people were dissatisfied with controls. So was I. But as a public official I knew if price controls were removed the only result would be a sharp increase in your cost of living. The Republican Members of Congress knew that too. But election day in 1946 was only a few months away. To satisfy powerful business interests the Republicans unanimously voted for legislation that could not effectively protect the people against inflation and high prices. The result, price controls were discarded. This took place on July 1, 1946.

You will remember that prominent Republican Members of Congress boasted at that time that the Republicans had wrecked price control.

Yes; the Republicans had to consider votes in November of 1946.

You well know what happened.

The Republicans, to get votes, promised the people that within 60 days after price controls were removed, meat, food, everything would be plentiful—and you also will well remember—at prices lower than under price control.

The people believed the Republicans in 1946.

But time passes.

It is now 2 years later.

Have the Republicans kept their solemn promises given to you in 1946?

Are prices lower now?

Have prices been lower during the past 2 years than they were during the 5 years before June 30, 1946?

What is your answer to these proper questions? What will be your answer next November?

The Republicans have been in control of the Congress since January 6, 1947. Almost 2 years. In that period they have ignored President Truman's recommendations for legislation to stop soaring prices. They have refused to do anything to stop the terrible increase in your living costs. You and your family have suffered.

It was in 1944 that the Republicans pledged themselves to remove all price controls. In 1946 they promised you plenty of meat, food, and other necessities of life at lower prices. I repeat, at lower prices.

In their 1948 platform adopted only a few days ago, the Republican Party admits that present prices are cruelly high. Of course, everyone knows prices are cruelly high. Even the Republican Party now admits it. Yet, corporate profits have increased tremendously since price controls were removed. In 1947 corporate profits were over $17,000,000,000 net. This was an all time high, and six billions more than in 1946. It is predicted that corporate profits will be higher this year than ever before.

The Republican Party is responsible for the cruelly high prices you are now paying. In 1946 you believed their promises. You now know they deceived you. You were not to blame then for being fooled because you accepted them at their word.

You now know those solemn promises have not been kept. You, the public, have paid the terrible price of $50,000,000,000 during the past 2 years for their broken promises. That is the amount of money you would have saved during the past 2 years if price controls over foods in short supply had existed.

Further, the skyrocketing prices of the past 2 years have continued with the Republican-controlled Congress refusing to do anything at all for the suffering consumer. It was not your fault for believing the promises of the Republican Party in 1946.

But it will be your fault in 1948 if you permit the Republican Party to deceive you again.

On the proven record which I have recited to you, I charge, first, the Republican Party is responsible for the present cruelly high cost of living; second, the Republican Party has failed, in fact, has refused, to do anything about this important problem during the past 2 years.

You also know that nothing will be done for you during the remainder of this year by the Republican-controlled Congress. It refused to consider the recommendations of President Truman to enact legislation to prevent further increases in the cost of living, and it quickly adjourned.

I therefore ask you, what are you going to do about it next November in view of this record?

On this costly broken promise alone, the people next November should repudiate and defeat the Republican Party.

The Republican Party offers you no hope next year if you should elect a Republican President and a Republican Congress.

The only assurance you have for much-needed action to meet the present cruel situation, which the Republican platform admits exists, and to prevent further increases in your cost of living, is to elect a Democratic President and a Democratic Congress next November.

The Democratic Party protected you against high prices.

With your support we shall do it again.

Address of Hon. Hugh D. Scott, Jr., of Pennsylvania

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROBERT HALE

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of Hon. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR., permanent chairman, Republican National Committee, at Skowhegan, Maine, on July 24, 1948:

I am delighted to be here today to participate in the opening of your campaign in the State of Maine, a campaign which will culminate in the election of Thomas E. Dewey as President, and Earl Warren as Vice President, and which, of course, will include the election of the entire Republican ticket in this State.

Republicans everywhere have a very kind feeling for Maine, because they remember how this State has stood fast for Republican principles even at times when the situation in many other parts of the country was rather discouraging. This year, however, I want to assure you that you will have plenty of company in the electoral college after the November election, and from every section of this good land of ours.

In national headquarters we are counting upon Maine to give the country in September a foretaste of what is coming in November, and I know you will do it.

This is the year in which the Republican Party is called upon once more to fulfill its historic mission of cleaning up the mess created by long years of Democrat misrule in Washington and to set the country back upon the road to stable and liberal government—the kind of government which will insure a prosperous and strong America in a peaceful world.

That is the only kind of government the Republican Party is capable of supplying. It could not do otherwise because of its origin and its traditions.

Our party came into being nearly a century ago to promote the cause of human freedom. It has always been true to the principles which gave it birth. It started by abolishing human slavery and enacting constitutional amendments and laws to wipe out that infamous institution for all time in the United States.

When a few years later, vast aggregations of capital, known in those days as trusts, sought to exercise undue power the Republican Party met that Challenge by the enactment of the Sherman antitrust law and by the strict enforcement of that law.

More recently, when the country was troubled by the exercise of extraordinary powers given to a few ruthless labor bosses by the Democrat administration, the Republican Party did not hesitate to meet this new challenge to human liberty. Its answer was the enactment of the Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947 which already, despite the fact that the administration of the act is still in the hands of an unfriendly executive department, has brought about great improvements. When the new Republican administration comes in next January and undertakes to give real enforcement to this law, we will see still further improvements.

As I see it, the mission of the Republican Party—the mission with which it will be entrusted by the American people this year—is to bind up the wounds of a war-torn world and to repair at home the damage which has been done to our governmental and economic structure during the 16 years of Democratic control. We should approach that monumental task with humility. It is a task which will challenge our courage and our ingenuity, but it must be performed if our republican form of Government and our matchless economic system are to survive.

Personally I see very little to be gained by extended discussion of the responsibility for the dangerous situation in which we find ourselves today. We know we are in that situation and our task is to get out of it. We know who put us in that situation, but we will gain little by pausing to denounce those responsible.

Perhaps the best way to illustrate the concept which I hold of the mission of the Republican Party at this time is to recall to you the words of the Preacher in the book of Ecclesiastes:

"To everything there is a season. * * * A time to cast away stones, and a time to gather stones together."

Today the Republican Party is presented with an opportunity to concern itself with the restoration of sound, stable, constitutional government—to gather the stones together, not to hurl them at each other or at our opponents. It is an opportunity to build a house for America wherein Americans may dwell secure in their persons and property, living at peace one with the other and with the world—a house of mutual understanding and of good will to all men and women of good will.

The time is propitious, the materials are at hand, and the will to accomplish those things which will contribute to the welfare of all Americans is to be found among the millions of devoted men and women who will be working for and voting for the return of good government.

It is to those millions of men and women that we address our appeal for support in this crucial election year.

Let us keep in mind our primary objectives. Let us not be led astray by the tactics of our opposition. We must remember that the leaders of the opposing party this year are desperate men—and well they might be. They know they face certain defeat; they know that their long years of power are fading away; they are appalled at that prospect. They have proved that they will resort to any expedient in vain attempts to draw the attention of the American people from the main issue of this campaign.

To cite a current example of such tactics the Congress of the United States has been called to meet in Washington in special session on Monday next. The announcement of the call of the special session was made under circumstances which prove beyond any possible doubt that it was actuated by a desire for partisan advantage and not for the public welfare.

The leader of the opposition, just after he had been nominated for the Presidency, manifested sudden and theretofore unrevealed anxiety because the Congress had not enacted some of the bills which he had recommended before the regular session adjourned. Having deserted his scheduled post of duty in Washington for several weeks to stage a transcontinental political barnstorming tour, at public expense, he suddenly decided that some of the things which Congress had not done while he was away from Washington must now be done immediately. Therefore, he called an unprecedented special session in the middle of a political campaign. He did so on the specious plea that a domestic emergency existed—an emergency which, if it exists at all, was obviously just as apparent during the time when he was storming across the country, seeking to repair his failing political fortunes.

I know it has been suggested that the real reason for the call of a special session might be an emergency in the field of our international relations. However, there was no mention of any such emergency when the special session was called, and I feel that in deference to the Presidential office, we must indulge the assumption that the President has made a full and frank disclosure of his reasons for exercising one of the greatest of the powers vested in the Presidency—the power to convene Congress in extraordinary session. I hold to that belief despite some rather disturbing indications that it is not justified by some of our experiences in the past.

Whatever we may think of the motives activating the White House, the duty of Congress is clear. That is to give serious and careful consideration to whatever recommendations may be made by the President and then to exercise its own constitutional prerogative by making a free decision. The fact that one of the three great branches of the Federal Government has elected to play cheap partisan politics with the destiny of this Nation, is no excuse for similar conduct on the part of the legislative branch. I am sure the Congress will handle this situation with particular devotion to the welfare of the Nation.

I am also confident that both the present Congress and the Republican administration to be elected in November, will keep the public adequately informed of the reasons which may actuate governmental actions and policy. This will be a long-delayed and beneficent reversal of the practice of the past 16 years. The United States is an adult nation. We proved during the recent war that we could work together without bitterness between race or creed, for a common objective. A nation with that record is entitled to be taken into the confidence of those temporarily entrusted with the powers and responsibilities of public office.

Now there is another reason why I am particularly happy to be here today. You Republicans of Maine are scheduled to elect a Senator in September. When you have elected her, as you will, she will become the first woman elected to the United States Senate in her own right without benefit of prior service under appointment. I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the Republicans of Maine on the part they are playing—on the part they will play in that historic event. I have served in the House of Representatives with MARGARET CHASE SMITH and I know she will make an outstanding record in the United States Senate, as she has in the House.

Her selection by the Republicans of Maine for this position of power and responsibility is another proof of the liberalism of the Republican Party and evidence that traditional barriers of sex constitute no handicap to advancement in our party.

While I am on this subject may I also present my congratulations and best wishes to Mr. Payne, your candidate for governor; to BOB HALE and FRANK FELLOWS with whom I have enjoyed a most pleasant association in the House and whose services to State and Nation have been outstanding; to our new colleague, Mr. Nelson, whom we will be happy to welcome to the House next January; and to Senator BREWSTER, who serves on the Commerce Committee in the Senate, as I do in the House, and for whose well-proven abilities I have very high regard.

My fellow Republicans, we are engaged in serious business this year. We are seeking, and we are going to gain control of both the legislative and executive branches of the Government of the United States. With the power which will be vested in us, by virtue of our impending victory, will go very heavy responsibilities. Let us approach those responsibilities with a realization that what we do during the next 4 years may very well determine the destiny of this Nation and of the world.

During the recent national convention in Philadelphia, we adopted a forthright, forward-looking, modern, and dynamic platform. The record of the Republican Congress since it took office in January 1947 is unchallengeable proof that we will keep the promises made in that platform. That means we will work unceasingly for the welfare and advancement of the whole American people; we will also, within the limits of our means, seek to aid other peoples of good will throughout the world. We will keep America strong, and we will make America respected. We will win because the American people want us to win; because they know that our fight is their fight; our goal—a united, prosperous and peaceful Nation—is their goal. Working together in mutuality of purpose, the Republican Party and the American people move forward together to the making of a better America.

Special Session

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIS W. BRADLEY
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Speaker, the Long Beach Independent of July 22, 1948, contained the following editorial commenting on the special session of the Congress upon which we are now entering. I believe that the sentiments expressed in the editorial are those of a large number of people of southern California:

SPECIAL SESSION

At the cost of millions of dollars paid by taxpayers Congress is called into a special session by the President. It is the first time in over 100 years that a special session has been called during a peace year. It is obviously a move by the President to use Congress as a target in his race for reelection.

The President will again demand legislation giving him the power to regulate prices. But it is certain he will not ask for a freezing of profits, wages, and prices. He has consistently played politics with the cost of living. It was by his order OPA was abolished almost 1 year before it was to have been abolished by the law passed by Congress.

Had the President at that time insisted upon freezing wages, prices, and profits, it is doubtful if present inflation would have occurred. But like his predecessor, he has catered to the votes of labor and preached that prices are not affected by wages. The result is workers have had three rounds of major wage increases. Price increases have followed these increases in cost of production with the result workers are no better off than before. But large groups of workers, pensioners, and retired people have been brought to virtual poverty because they have not received increases in income proportionate to those in prices.

Great emphasis will be placed on public housing. Senator TAFT sponsored the Taft-

Ellender bill which would have appropriated billions of dollars for slum clearance and public housing. It would have placed the Government in the housing business far beyond any act to date.

Experience has been that Government in business has rarely aided the majority of the people. The red tape, bureaucracy, and tax exemption must be paid from other taxes. Some aid in financing small homes, such as is now in effect, should be continued But the public housing advocates will attempt to convince every renter the President wants to give him something for nothing.

The opponents of almost any measure can create turmoil in the Senate or House by tacking on a civil-rights rider. That will mean a filibuster by southern Democrats. It will be a round of the pot calling the kettle black. No carefully considered legislation can be debated and enacted under such circumstances. It will force all Members of Congress to remain in Washington while their opponents seeking their offices will be at home campaigning.

It is an unprecedented political move that can kick back harder at the President than at his opponents. Congress should not be used as a campaign sounding board. If elections are to be debated and settled on the basis of what Congress does during a political campaign, we are in a bad way. The announced reason for calling the session was to enact domestic legislation. The Berlin crisis was not the issue. There is no domestic issue now apparent that could not wait until after the election, which is less than 4 months away. Rushing through legislation for campaign purposes is a poor way to operate a democracy.—L. A. C.

Inflation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. AUGUSTINE B. KELLEY
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not know how long it is the intention of the Congress to be indifferent to the distress and suffering of millions of American families due to inflation and the lack of suitable housing. These are basic problems, but they have taken on unusual importance and must be dealt with before it is too late.

Our European situation is dangerous and explosive. How can the Congress expect to have a united people when millions are suffering and unhappy and hold the Government responsible for their condition? I have received letters from people in my district complaining of the struggle they have to buy even the essential foods and of the impossibility of finding suitable places to live. How can people living under those circumstances be happy about their Government? Are we going to be like the Bourbons of France—oblivious to the people's needs until they rise in wrath and do something about it? The inactivity of Congress under the Republican leadership is bringing about a dangerous situation right here in the United States. Where does Henry Wallace get his support? From people who are dissatisfied and unhappy. Where do the Communists recruit their members? From these same groups of people.

It is high time that the Congress do something about the essential needs of the people. Nothing should be closer to the hearts of the leaders of both parties than the welfare of the people. Personally, I feel very much distressed about the situation, yet I am helpless to do anything. The temper of the leadership of the Congress is such that they will not move in the direction of relieving present conditions.

It was a fateful day when the Congress removed price controls. Although they may be hard to bear, the controls and allocation of goods are better than the plague of prices out of the reach of millions of our families. If we expect to have a happy people, they must be housed and fed and well cared for, and the only agency that can do these things is the Congress. The burden, therefore, is squarely on the leadership, the Republican leadership, of the Congress.

The Special Session

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. THOMAS J. LANE
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include the following editorial which appeared in the Lynn Telegram-News, Lynn, Mass., Friday, July 23, 1948:

THE SPECIAL SESSION

Republican charges that President Truman's call for a special session of Congress is inspired by politics are the best tribute to its political effectiveness. The first result is the moving of Republican campaign headquarters from New York City to Washington. If nothing else, Mr. Truman has forced the GOP to play him on his own ground and without the presence of their new battery of Dewey and Warren.

However, the foreign situation is such that—politics or no politics—it may be sound national policy to have Congress in session during the next few weeks. In the more or less open-and-shut case of the war in Palestine, the United Nations adopted the American proposal for an ultimatum to both sides to stop fighting. While this was aimed directly at the Arabs, who were the aggressors and who were responsible for refusing to renew the UN truce, it contains an "or else" which points directly to the use of economic and military sanctions.

So it is possible that Congress might be asked to approve the use of American forces to apply the UN ultimatum, if the Arabs should violate it. In a campaign year and with the Jewish-American vote at stake, it is hard to see how Congress could refuse.

More important still is the situation in Berlin. Whatever the technical justifications for the Soviet claim that we have violated the Potsdam agreement and have lost our right to remain in Berlin, it is a fact that the Red army commanders have chosen to argue this diplomatic point by extremely strong measures. Apparently the Kremlin has been convinced that, with a Presidential campaign raging in the United States, we automatically will be incapable of conducting our foreign affairs except on a stand-by basis.

The Politburo, it seems, has not understood that there was a Presidential campaign in 1940, too, a highly controversial one which involved the supposedly fatal "third term issue," but that this campaign did not prevent the conduct of an effective foreign policy by the United States. As a matter of fact, had it not been for the famous Roosevelt-Churchill swap of destroyers, rifles and naval bases, the Kremlin might be flying the swastika today.

For some time, word has been seeping around the various intelligence services that the Soviet government has selected this coming August as the best time to stage some great stroke of national policy. That's what they did in August 1939, when the famous Molotov-Ribbentrop nonaggression pact was signed.

At that time, under Republican insistence that there would be no world war, Congress had insisted on adjournment; and the world crisis was timed in the absence of our National Legislature. This time, if a big Russian operation is in the making, President Truman has seen to it that Congress will be in session, deliriously debating the proposal to put into effect the various pledges which are common to both party platforms.

So it is possible that Senator VANDENBERG of Michigan, who proves to be an old guard Republican when you scratch him, will regret his explosion of protest against the special session. In this connection, it also can be pointed out that under the Constitution, foreign policy is entrusted to the President; and if this is the game that is going to be played, Mr. Truman is on even ground.

Another point to be remembered is that foreign policy also might provide the bridge over which the Dixiecrats could return to the fold without loss of face. For no one ever has denied that the South is deeply and passionately patriotic. Did not Texas win the war, practically single-handed?

Tributes to Generoso Pope

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN J. ROONEY
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me by the House to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article entitled "National Leaders Hail Pope," which appeared in the New York Enquirer of June 28, 1948, concerning the much-deserved tribute paid to my good friend, Generoso Pope, publisher of Il Progresso Italo-Americano, for his heroic and successful efforts to stem the tide of communism in Italy:

NATIONAL LEADERS HAIL POPE—GOVERNORS, SENATORS, CONGRESSMEN GIVE HIM CREDIT FOR VICTORY OVER REDS IN ITALY—PRAISE POPE FOR LETTER DRIVE TO PEOPLE OF ITALY—EX-EMIGRANT'S CAREER PROOF OF UNITED STATES OPPORTUNITY

National leaders, governors, Senators, Congressmen, city officials, and leaders in industry have joined in tribute to Generoso Pope for his heroic efforts to stem the tide of communism in Italy.

In letters to William Griffin, editor and publisher of the New York Enquirer, they give Mr. Pope full credit for initiating and successfully completing the monster letter-writing campaign, and the radio drive, by which people of Italian origin here communicated with friends and relatives in Italy the true facts about the benefits of democracy and the curses of communism.

These outstanding men hail Mr. Pope as a great American patriot and they say his great battle against the Communists has won him the gratitude of this country, Italy, and all freedom-loving people everywhere.

Their letters are a splendid tribute to Mr. Pope and in order that they may be widely circulated, and the exceptional service Mr. Pope performed brought to the attention of the public, the Enquirer publishes some of them herewith. Space limitations make it impossible to publish all in this issue. The balance will appear next week.

The testimony of these prominent men is a tribute, which the record shows, Mr. Pope has well earned.

Insofar as any individual can be credited with a decisive role, Generoso Pope today shares the distinction of having done most to help defeat the Communists in Italy. He did this by conceiving and developing the greatest letter-writing campaign ever witnessed within one country or between two nations.

Through Il Progresso Italo-Americano, of which he is the publisher, Generoso Pope eloquently and effectively urged the readers and their friends and families to write to their friends and relatives in Italy the truth about America.

Mr. Pope began the campaign on January 19, 1948. The Communists had been telling the people of Italy vicious lies about the United States and the intentions of the American people.

Mr. Pope, a product of American democracy, was deeply distressed. He just could not see our country and people slandered and maligned. He was determined to launch a crushing counterattack against the Communist barrage of lies and vilifications. His answer was not to be one of generalities and platitudes or in the return of abuse and insults.

Mr. Pope had an inspiration. He went to the people for the truth, for telling action. He was convinced that if relatives and friends in the United States would explain the truth about America to their people in Italy, the Communists would be defeated.

Mr. Pope realized that if Italy fell into the hands of the Communist Party, not only western Europe but the whole world and democracy everywhere, America not excluded, would be greatly imperiled. By nailing each Communist lie, by exposing to the people of Italy the vicious Communist distortions, Mr. Pope reasoned that the Italians would be enabled to defeat the Communist attempt to dominate their country.

With the initiation of the letter-writing campaign an avalanche of mail descended upon Italy. Mail loads leaving the United States increased more than a hundredfold. Each week a million letters reached into every part of Italy with the message published in Il Progresso Italo-Americano. Italian immigrants told their story to their relatives and friends in Italy. They told the truth about America.

They told how the United States had welcomed them, had given them an opportunity to advance in life; how democracy insured the freedom of the individual, of his religious beliefs.

These letters published in Il Progresso were either copied or used in large part plus a personal touch or family experience added, and sent by individual readers to Italy. Communist lies were bared.

ENEMY NO. 1 OF REDS

So powerful was this campaign of telling the truth about America, that the Communists branded Generoso Pope as their enemy No. 1. In typical Communist fashion, they tried to smear him and his newspaper. But that did not stop Generoso Pope from continuing his campaign. The flow of letters praising the opportunities and the freedom of America continued to pour into Italy.

Two weeks before the elections, realizing that ordinary mail would not arrive in time, Mr. Pope urged his readers to send their letters by air mail. Then, 1 week before, he urged everyone to send cables. The original Committee of One Hundred Thousand, each to send letters to 10 relatives and friends in Italy, snowballed into the millions.

Finally, in the last week of the campaign, through his radio station WHOM, Mr. Pope began a daily series of broadcasts beamed to the people of Italy. He himself opened the programs with a vibrant appeal to the people of Italy to defeat the evil forces of communism.

His speech in full is as follows:

"Italians, time is short. Letters cannot reach Italy in time for the election. That is the reason we are today talking directly to your homes to bring you the voice of your brothers from America who will never forget you.

"Your speaker is Generoso Pope, an American citizen of Italian descent, proud to have Italian blood in his veins, the blood of the land which has been the cradle of civilization; the land which the betrayers of Italy are bent on making a slave of Bolshevik Russia. I am honored by the fact that the Togliatti-Nenni newspapers have singled out for abuse my newspaper, Il Progresso Italo-Americano, and me for the letter-writing campaign which we initiated asking the people of Italy to vote against the Communist bloc. These letters tell the truth about democracy, letters which speak of the American people, always friends of the Italian people.

"Ask Togliatti and the betrayers of Italy why the Russian Government does not permit the 80,000 Italian prisoners held in Russia to advise their parents in Italy whether they are alive or whether they are dead. Perhaps the Communists know the cruel fate which has befallen them. Ask Togliatti why Russia has vetoed for the third time the admission of Italy to the United Nations organization. Ask Togliatti why Russia does not want to see Trieste restored to Italy. Ask Togliatti why Russia has not refused to accept millions of dollars of reparations from Italy. Ask Togliatti why Russia has not refused to accept as part of the reparations the Italian ships and why it has imposed upon the glorious and courageous sailors of Italy the task of sailing their own ships into Russian harbors, where they will be compelled to lower the Italian flag and hoist the flag of Russia, enemy of freedom. Ask Togliatti why the Communists are always ready to applaud when it comes to humiliating Italy. The reason is simple—Russia wants Italy to become her slave.

"I am sure that on the 18th of April you will give your answer.

"Your answer will be 'Begone, hostile stranger, from our land.' America is our friend. We Americans of Italian origin will never forget you, as no civilized people who love liberty will ever forget you.

"The eyes of the world are looking upon you, * * * Italian brothers. I am sure the whole Christian world will applaud you after you have given the betrayers of Italy their greatest defeat.

"Beginning today and ending on Saturday radio station WHOM, of Il Progresso Italo-Americano, will bring to you the voice of your brothers in America, who will talk to you with an open heart. Your brothers, who will pray God for your future, your salvation, and the peace of the world. Long live America. Long live Italy."

Thousands of eager men and women crowded the studios of WHOM, eager to add their appeals to the people of Italy.

Then came the elections of April 18 and 19. The results showed a smashing defeat for communism. Political analysts and radio commentators here and abroad declared that the letter writing, cablegram and radio campaigns from America had had a tremendous influence on the people of Italy—on the elections.

WANT TO DO GOOD

When it was over Mr. Pope beamed with satisfaction. He felt that besides helping the people of Italy to see through the Communist lies, he had fulfilled in a timely and telling manner his obligations as a citizen of the United States.

Unknown, without any friends, with just a few lire in his pockets, Mr. Pope symbolizes the opportunities that America and its democratic principles give to its citizens.

For, from among one of the millions of immigrants he worked himself up to become president of the world's largest sand and stone company of its kind, the Colonial Sand & Stone Co., Inc.

"You know," said Mr. Pope, in commenting on his philosophy of life, "too many in this world seem to forget that life as we know it lasts but a very short time when measured in terms of God's eternity. Too many seem to forget that we came to this earth as nothing and that one day we will go back into the earth as nothing.

"The important thing to remember is that between these two periods, birth and death, God gives us an opportunity to prove ourselves. If we do good, then we are assured of the eternal blessings of God. If we do bad, then we suffer eternal damnation. In everything I have done I have always sought to do good."

That sage philosophy has always been the basis of whatever Generoso Pope has done. When he bought Il Progresso Italo-Americano, the largest Italian language daily newspaper in the United States, in 1928, he immediately began a series of campaigns to make the readers far better acquainted with the history of America, with the duties of citizenship, and with the basic concepts of our democracy.

Generoso Pope began a column giving English lessons to the readers of Il Progresso. The Italian immigrants were to be taught the language of the people of the United States. Mr. Pope felt that a knowledge of English was essential to good citizenship.

Continuing in this vein, he published articles explaining the rights and responsibilities of American citizenship. He expounded the principles of democracy and made clear the many privileges to which an American citizen is entitled. The two series won the heartfelt and widespread appreciation of the readers. Many of them were able to obtain their citizenship papers through the help of these articles.

GAVE SCHOLARSHIPS

Many young people have always been close to the heart of Generoso Pope. One of the campaigns which he has been pursuing most vigorously has been that of combating and cutting the roots of juvenile delinquency. Working in close cooperation with officials of the police department, community welfare organizations, religious, and social groups, he has been campaigning for more and better recreation grounds for boys and girls.

Democracy, Mr. Pope feels, can only thrive if tomorrows' citizens are given a healthy start in life when they are young, in their teens. Thus, he has contributed generously to worthy causes to promote the welfare of children. On his own initiative, he raised funds for needy and deserving young people so that they might continue their education in college.

Today, as president of the Columbus Citizens Committee, Inc., strongest organization of its kind in the United States, scholarships are offered each year for young people, regardless of race, color, or creed. In impressive ceremonies held at city hall in January 1948, Mayor William O'Dwyer, personally awarded 40 such scholarships contributed by the Columbus Citizens Committee.

Always aware of the other person's plight, Mr. Pope is recognized throughout the United States for his philanthropy. He has contributed generously to the social service organization of the Jewish, Protestant, and Catholic faiths. He has served as chairman of the Committee of Americans of Italian Origin for the American Red Cross and for the cancer and infantile funds during several of their campaigns, and helped raise thousands of dollars for them. During the war, as chairman of the Committee for Americans of Italian Origin of the State of New York, Mr. Pope helped sell more than $400,000,000 worth of war bonds, a record amount.

OUTSTANDING SERVICE TO ALL

His credo of "do good" brought Generoso Pope into contact with literally hundreds of thousands of persons—the great mass of people as well as their most distinguished leaders. Francis Cardinal Spellman, one of Mr. Pope's close friends, has been one of his admirers. Mr. Pope has never shirked any religious or civic duty. He has given unstintingly to the Alfred E. Smith Memorial Hospital, as well as to the Catholic charities and other religious organizations.

Always seeking to be fair and impartial, Mr. Pope has won the admiration and respect of the major political parties and their outstanding spokesmen. Governor Dewey and Mayor O'Dwyer are his friends. A Democrat, Mr. Pope was State chairman of the Committee for Americans of Italian Origin during the campaigns for the reelection of the late President Roosevelt with whom he had been in regular contact and consultation. He is also a member of the Democratic National Committee.

Mr. Pope has always been available to spark any drive for noteworthy causes. When Ed Sullivan, columnist for the New York Daily News, said that it would be a good idea to erect a monument to the memory of the marine hero, Sgt. John Basilone, first enlisted man to win the Congressional Medal of Honor among the Marines, Mr. Pope immediately began a campaign to raise funds for that purpose. Mr. Pope was also responsible for the statue erected in Washington, D. C., immortalizing the name of the great genius of Guglielmo Marconi.

AMERICAN SUCCESS STORY

Mr. Pope is married to Catherine Richichi, a native New Yorker, who has been an inspiration to him in his climb up the ladder of success. He has a typical American family with three boys who are each carrying on in the direction of the various Pope enterprises. Fortune Pope, oldest of the boys, is executive director of radio station WHOM; Anthony is executive vice president of the Colonial Sand & Stone Co., Inc.; and Generoso, Jr., is editor of Il Progresso Italo-Americano.

This is the man who but in a short period of time has breathed life and set into inspiring motion the greatest letter writing campaign in the history of Italy. The above are but a few high lights taken from his brilliant career which began as a water boy in a piano factory of our great metropolis. He has had many honors bestowed upon him by religious, civic, labor, and industrial groups. In recognition of his many achievements, Duquesne University bestowed an honorary degree of doctor of literature upon him in 1946.

Taft-Wagner-Ellender Housing Bill

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS J. LANE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include the following article which appeared in the Boston Sunday Post, Boston, Mass., on Sunday, July 25, 1948:

HOUSING BILL KICKED ABOUT—MILLIONS OF HOMELESS AMERICANS WANT IT BUT WILL NOT BE HEARD AS CONGRESS FIDDLES

(By Lester Allen)

When the Congress gathers tomorrow for the special session, the protest of millions of homeless Americans, people who are existing now in crowded, substandard quarters, will not be heard, for the powerful real-estate lobby has got in its licks to prevent the passage of the Taft-Wagner-Ellender general housing bill, the only comprehensive housing legislation presented in the Congress in four long years.

The bill had been kicked around since March 10, 1947, when it was introduced to be reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency on April 23, 1947. The National Public Housing Conference has made some grave charges about how the bill was scuttled in the closing hours of the last session of the Eightieth Congress on the eve of the Republican National Convention.

The conference, which is pressing for public-housing programs to eliminate slums and replace substandard dwellings, charges that JESSE WOLCOTT, chairman of the House Banking and Currency Committee, Speaker JOSEPH MARTIN of Massachusetts, Majority Leader CHARLES HALLECK, and LEO ALLEN, chairman of the House Rules Committee, worked together to scuttle the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill for the real-estate lobby.

"It is to these men, working hand and glove with the powerful real-estate lobby, that complete credit for denying the will of the vast majority of Americans must be ascribed," charges the conference group.

Congressman RALPH A. GAMBLE, New York Republican, and Senator JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY, Wisconsin, Republican, originally took over direction of a joint congressional committee to study housing under the Taft-Ellender-Wagner proposal.

Their first move was rather peculiar, even in these days of high-powered publicity, and one of the few instances where a body of the Government employed a private firm of publicists to put over an idea. They employed the firm of Bell, Jones & Taylor, of New York, to spread the word against public housing.

"Obviously," charges the National Public Housing Conference, "they had been employed to destroy public housing. Obviously, they worked almost as part of the staff of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, the United States Savings and Loan League, and the National Association of Home Builders."

It must be remembered that a massive front of church, labor, educational, veterans, and citizens groups were solidly with the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill.

The people, in short, wanted it passed. The real-estate lobby did not.

BEATS DOWN SUPPORT

While Chairman GAMBLE and Senator MCCARTHY made a swing around the country, holding hearings, the real-estate lobby was hard at work in Washington beating down support for the bill.

In the swing around the country GAMBLE and MCCARTHY collected weighted information from antihousing people to bolster the case against the bill, but, when it came to writing the report, the full committee had to pass upon what GAMBLE and MCCARTHY were going to say.

And then, it became known that Congressman GAMBLE and Senator MCCARTHY had virtually kidnaped the chairmanship of the committee away from Senator RALPH A. FLANDERS, of Vermont, who had, meanwhile, been having his own troubles with a probe of rising prices.

Senator FLANDERS recaptured control of the committee and wrote his own report, which was adopted with his recommendations for amendments to the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill. This was March 15, 1948—a full year after the bill had first been filed.

It must also be remembered that an almost identical bill had been filed in the Seventy-ninth Congress by the same three Senators when Senator TAFT had headed the Senate committee on postwar planning. In fact, it was that bill introduced in the Seventy-ninth Congress that gave the real-estate people the idea that they would be deprived of a lot of easy money if it was enacted.

On April 8 this year when the Flanders amendments were reported out favorably and came before the Senate on April 22, Senator CAIN, of Washington, a Republican convert to the cause, sought to have the public-housing provisions of the bill struck out. His motion was defeated 49 to 35 with 25 Republicans and 24 Democrats voting to defeat the Cain amendments.

The measure then went to the House, where Congressman WOLCOTT, chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, awaited.

He announced that the senior body, the Senate, had given the bill only superficial consideration. His device was to sit in hearings on the measure until proponents were worn out.

GET SUSPICIOUS

Members of the House who were for the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill began to get suspicious of the stalling in June. Remember that the national conventions were coming up—and something had to be done on housing or the Congressmen would have some explaining to do to the homefolks.

On June 3 they began to collect signatures to a petition which would have taken the bill away from WOLCOTT's committee. There were 120 signatures on the petition of a required 218 when a group of southern Congressmen marched up to sign en masse. Speaker JOSEPH MARTIN then announced, before the signatures were placed on the petition, in effect, "Now, fellows don't go wasting your ink. The Republican steering committee has decided that this bill is must legislation."

WOLCOTT's hearings were concluded June 8—and, he then announced that he had a bill of his own which he thought far superior to the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill, even though it was minus the provisions which so embarrassed and disturbed the real estate lobby.

Congressman WOLCOTT was then outgeneraled by a group of Democrats on the committee. With the aid of three Republicans, they reported out the Wolcott bill, but they had added public housing, slum clearance, farm housing, and housing research. Representative WOLCOTT was frantic. He had assailed public housing time and time again as socialistic and now he found his name attached to a public housing bill.

Moreover, he was instructed by the committee to apply for an open rule that would permit amendments to be offered from the floor of the House.

Congressman LEO ALLEN, Illinois, Republican, chairman of the House Rules Committee, which determines what legislation will be marked for floor debate, rushed to the rescue of the real estate lobby at that point. The committee voted 6 to 2 not to have the Wolcott bill debated. This was on June 16.

VOTE DEBATE

The committee decided that the House of Representatives could not be trusted to debate a general housing bill. They might just happen to enact it into law. Two Democrats, ADOLPH SABATH, of Illinois, and HOWARD SMITH, of Virginia, voted to have the bill debated.

Mr. WOLCOTT thereupon introduced House bill 6959, which specifically excluded public housing, urban development, farm housing, and housing research. He issued notice to the Committee on Banking and Currency on June 16 that the committee would meet at 9 the following morning. The bill was reported out, 15 to 12, with the 11 Democrats who had outgeneraled Mr. WOLCOTT standing firmly against this new foil of the real-estate lobby.

The Congress had to have a bill with the word "housing" in it, and undeniably Mr. WOLCOTT's new gambit provided that word. The measure was passed after 40 minutes on the floor. When it reached the Senate, Senator ALLEN J. ELLENDER objected to its consideration, and it was killed deader than a dead duck.

Congress was about to adjourn to gallop off to the national conventions, and it still didn't have a bill with the word "housing" in it. On Sunday, June 20, at 3 a. m., WOLCOTT presented a bill, which had passed the Senate, which permitted mortgage institutions to sell GI mortgage paper to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. At last they had the word "housing."

Representative MIKE MONRONEY, Oklahoma Democrat, summed up the feelings of the tired Congressmen when he replied to a question from Congressman GORE, of Tennessee. The colloquy is interesting:

"Mr. GORE. Does the gentleman mean to say to the House that we are about to enact an important housing bill which not even the members of the committee have seen nor now have copies of the bill? I am very interested in and concerned about housing, particularly veterans' housing, but this is a most remarkable procedure."

DESPERATE SITUATION

"Mr. MONRONEY. That is true. We are, however, faced with a desperate situation. I do not like this bill. It is ten times weaker than what I want. I would like to see an all-embracing and general housing bill and I have fought for one for several months. The Republican leadership of the House has turned thumbs down. It is now 3:20 a. m. The RFC is almost out of money for supporting the mortgage market. The question now comes—are you going to enact this little-bitty teeny-weeny piece of legislation that might help build housing just a little bit, a very little bit? Or are you going to say, 'Well, we are tired, we want to go home, and we are not even going to pass even this makeshift microscopic bit of housing aid'."

That's the way the Republican leadership gave the back of its hand to housing on the eve of the Republican convention at which noble sentiments in favor of all kinds of housing were expressed.

The real-estate lobby won the round. Round two is coming up.

Senator ALBEN BARKLEY, now the Democratic Vice Presidential nominee, sitting in the Senate on that same Sunday morning, the eve of the Republican convention, had some comment to make about the snide expedient to take the curse off the failure of the Congress to enact housing legislation.

"I have been here a good many years," said Senator BARKLEY, "but I have never seen any session of this body come to a conclusion or approach a conclusion with such utter chaos, confusion, and impotence as we observe here now. It is now nearly 4 o'clock on Sunday morning, after 41 hours of confused session. In a room at the other end of the Capitol in an obstetrical ward over there they are trying to give birth to a conference report on a House bill. It will be a monstrosity, I am sure."

GET GOP ORDERS

"At the end of this most important session two of the most important matters that ever came before the Congress are still suspended in midair. I understand hope has been abandoned for a housing bill, but I have been told tonight that the Republican moguls in Philadelphia have sent word down here that we are not to adjourn until a housing bill is passed—just anything that has got a house in it."

Well, they got a bill with the word house in it—but it's not the house that Jack built. It's the house that the real-estate lobby didn't build.

The Revolt of Tito

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. JOHN J. ROONEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD, I include the following newspaper article by William Henry Chamberlin which appeared in the Wall Street Journal of July 7, 1948. This article graphically describes part of the situation behind the iron curtain and how the authority of the Moscow-dominated Cominform is being defied. I believe it gives considerable insight on the possibility of a crack-up of Soviet domination in countries behind the iron curtain.

THE REVOLT OF TITO—HIS POSITION IS UNTENABLE; NEVERTHELESS FIRST BREAK IN COMMUNIST RANKS AUGURS WELL FOR EUROPEAN FREEDOM

(By William Henry Chamberlin)

Tito's defiance of the authority of the Moscow-dominated Cominform is the first crack in Stalin's Gauleiter system. Just as Hitler put local Nazi sympathizers in charge of the civil administration of countries which he overran, Stalin installed Moscow-trained Communists in key positions in every land occupied by the Red Army in the last months of the war.

The Nazi agents, Quisling in Norway, Laval in France, Degrelle in Belgium, Mussert in the Netherlands, found opposite numbers in such Communist agents as Bierut in Poland, Rakosi in Hungary, Dimitrov in Bulgaria, Anna Pauker in Rumania. Now the most colorful and distinguished of these agents, Marshal Tito, of Yugoslavia, has temporarily upset the apple cart. The Kremlin may have to recast a blueprint for remote control of satellite states that had hitherto worked smoothly and successfully.

The formal public excommunication which the Cominform hurled at Tito and his close associates in the government of Yugoslavia, Foreign Minister Kardelj, secret police chief Rankovich, propaganda expert Djilas, was only resorted to after quiet remonstrances and under-cover intrigues had failed to achieve their purpose. At least as early as March the Communist Party of the Soviet Union had sent letters criticizing Tito and his party leadership to other parties in the Cominform. And there is strong reason to believe that the removal from office and arrest of two prominent Yugoslav Communists, Sreten Zujovich and Andrija Hebrang, followed Tito's discovery that these two men were trying to build a fire under him in Yugoslavia on orders from Moscow.

TRIED TO RUN HIS OWN SHOW

The Cominform document does not, in all probability, lay all cards on the table. Some of the underlying causes of the dispute between Moscow and Tito are still a matter of conjecture and more or less informed guesswork. However, one can piece together the impression that Tito's main fault has been a desire to run his own show. A Moscow-trained Communist, he had learned how to build up a tight political machine, bristling with spies and propagandists, in his own country. He used this machine to thwart what he regarded as outside interference with his administration in Yugoslavia.

The Cominform somewhat humorlessly complains that Tito kept a close watch on Soviet military and civilian specialists in Yugoslavia and instituted a "Turkish terrorists regime," repressing all criticism, in his own Yugoslav Communist Party. These lessons of getting everyone to spy on everyone else and the insuring that all party decisions be unanimous could certainly have been learned by an intelligent student in Moscow.

There were several reasons why Tito was in a better position to rebel than any of Moscow's other gauleiters. Whereas many of Stalin's other agents merely came into the countries they were supposed to rule with the Red Army, Tito had been the fighting leader of a prolonged partisan war in Yugoslavia. To be sure the achievements of his guerrillas were somewhat exaggerated in unscrupulous publicity. It required the disciplined military force of the Red Army, with its artillery, to capture the main towns.

BUILT UP HIS OWN FOLLOWING

But during the years of raids and forays Tito built up a personal following of considerable proportions. And the Soviet Union did not maintain troops in Yugoslavia long after the end of the war. Its leaders counted on manipulating Tito by remote control. He double-crossed them and he used their own methods against them. For example, he imitated Stalin in turning on a tremendous torrent of personal adulation. Slogan-shouting mobs, bellowing in rhythmic chant: "Ti-to, Ti-to, Ti-to" have become a regular feature of the Yugoslav city scene.

It is not yet clear what issue touched off the final break. There have been rumors of Soviet intention to annex as affiliated Soviet republics some of the satellite states. Tito may have felt that he would be shorn of a good deal of his independent power and glory if Yugoslavia became just another Soviet republic. Tito's ambitions in regard to Trieste and Salonica may have been an embarrassment to a Soviet Government unwilling to risk a major war. There is also reason to believe that Tito hoped to see a federation of Balkan States, with himself at the head. Soviet policy toward the satellite states on the other hand, has been one of divide and rule.

Tito has asserted his independence. Can he maintain it? On a long view the odds seem to be against him. He has been a ruthless tyrant in the name of communism and he remains a Communist. So the groups in Yugoslavia which resent persecution of religion and expropriation of property cannot feel any particular enthusiasm for Tito merely because he has quarreled with Stalin. As a Communist, surrounded by Communist advisers and supporters, he cannot switch easily or convincingly to the wetsern side in the cold war.

NO PARTNERS IN REVOLT

Tito up to the present time has been isolated; he has found no partners in his revolt. Even the primitive little neighboring state Albania has torn up his pictures and ejected his missions, evidently feeling that Stalin is the better bet in the dispute. Should Tito move across his frontier and attack Bulgaria or Albania the result might easily be Russian military intervention. If he remains passive the Soviet Government will probably be slow about resorting to armed attack.

But there seems to be little future for an excommunicated heretical Communist in Tito's position. He can no longer count on economic cooperation from the Soviet bloc. He must expect to be the object of all kinds of plots and intrigues, set on foot from Moscow. Tito may count on some internal feud in the Soviet Communist leadership, from which he may hope to draw advantage. But the long list of Communists who defied Stalin and then figured in premature obituary notices must float before his consciousness like spectres.

From the standpoint of the western powers the crack in the iron curtain indicated by Tito's defection is all to the good. Up to the present time Communist expansion has been riding a kind of wave-of-the-future crest. While the countries of western Europe have been kept out of the Communist orbit, the eastern lands seemed hopelessly swallowed up. Now it has been shown that Communist machine tactics are not invincible. Those American experts on Russia who have advocated a policy of containing Soviet expansion on the assumption that something would ultimately give in the structure of the Soviet empire now have a concrete argument for their case.

We do not know how many hidden fissures there may be in this structure, besides the open crack revealed by Tito's breakaway. But it may safely be assumed that when Communists fall out the prospects for European freedom and civilization automatically improve.

Hint Scandal in Clash Over Ship Charters

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALVIN F. WEICHEL

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. WEICHEL. Mr. Speaker, the Chicago Tribune of Sunday, July 25, 1948, carried a news item covering the operations of the Maritime Commission, the special favor of not collecting $2,300,000 charter hire from an operator, the failure to have adequate bond, and the special favor given this operator. The news item is as follows:

HINT SCANDAL IN CLASH OVER SHIP CHARTERS—MILLIONS IN BACK FEES OWED BY OPERATOR

(By John Fisher)

WASHINGTON, July 24.—A scandal involving delinquent ship-charter payments has developed in the Maritime Commission, threatening to split the Commission wide open and precipitate a congressional investigation, it was learned tonight by the Tribune.

The case revolves around a New York City ship operator who has fallen $2,300,000, or 8 months, in arrears on payments to the Commission for ships chartered from the Government, and efforts of Commissioner Raymond S. McKeough to prevent Commission action against the operator.

McKeough is a former New Deal Congressman from Illinois, who was appointed to the Commission in 1945 by President Truman. The Senate Commerce Committee voted 10 to 7 against confirmation of the appointment, but the Senate reversed the action after Democratic Leader BARKLEY, of Kentucky, drummed up sufficient administration support to approve the nomination.

ACTION HELD UP

McKeough has been friendly with the operator and is said to have visited the operator's Long Island estate on week ends. In a 3-to-2 split within the Commission, McKeough has carried the ball in postponing formal action declaring the man in default and taking drastic action to recover whatever the Government can.

The operator also is reported as on friendly terms with Frank Costello, New York City gambler and ex-convict. The operator himself was indicted on Federal fraud charges involving shipbuilding contracts in 1943, but was acquitted in Federal district court.

It is understood that McKeough's efforts to achieve a settlement with the operator will prove unavailing, and the commission will take formal action to declare him in default early next week. The commission would issue stop orders to all Government agencies to cease dealings with the operator and claim $400,000 in surety bond posted by him. The Government still stands to lose nearly $2,000,000 on the deal.

MYSTERY VEILS CASE

The case is surrounded with mystery, producing demands within the Commission itself and Congress for a thorough investigation.

First, the Commission was not informed by subordinates until about 2 weeks ago that the operator had been allowed to fall so far behind in his monthly payments, due in advance, to the Commission.

The operator undoubtedly was making big profits, judging from his deposits in New York City banks, but he also made unusually large withdrawals in April, May, and June, which have been unexplained to the Commission.

His books on March 31 showed a cash balance of $4,192,746. Deposits in April totaled $1,958,628 and withdrawals $4,655,646. In May, deposits were $1,849,993 and withdrawals $3,037,703. In June, deposits totaled $3,030,924 and withdrawals $2,910,241. In the first 2 weeks of July deposits were $1,097,229 and withdrawals $1,025,243.

SHIPS TURNED BACK

The heavy withdrawals while the Commission was going unpaid brought down the operator's balance from $4,192,746 on March 31 to only $767,989 on July 13. The Commission has been unable to ascertain where the money went, but meanwhile the operator was turning back ships to the Commission, reducing the number chartered at one time from more than 50 to about 30.

The charter hire due the Government, based upon a percentage of the Liberty ships' value, ranged between $200,000 and $400,000 per month. In addition the Commission was to share in profits made by the operator. On the first $100 of daily profits, the Commission and operator split 50–50. On the next $200 the split was 75 percent to the Commission and 25 percent to the operator. Above the first $300 the Commission was to get 90 percent and the operator 10 percent.

According to Commission officials, this is the only case where an operator was allowed to fall so far behind in payments, though sometimes leniency was shown by allowing a month to go by.

The operator was ordered last week to pay up or be declared in default. He asked for more time and made a proposition which was unacceptable to the Commission. The offer was to try to have the surety bond raised from $400,000 to $1,100,000, and to pay the Commission $600,000 on July 31, including August charter hire of $250,000 and the balance toward arrears, with the remainder due to be paid in three monthly instalments.

A motion was made to have the operator declared in default then, but McKeough, with the support of two other members, supported an extension of time for further consultation with the operator. Commission officials are frankly skeptical that anything can be salvaged except the bond already posted and recovery of the ships.

Mr. Speaker, the news story did not mention the name of the operator but I have found out that it is the Sword Line, Inc., with offices at 76 Beaver Street, New York 4, N. Y. This company has had as many as 41 Government-owned ships on charter, and also claims to own the Newtex Steamship Corp., a Delaware corporation with offices at 52 Wall Street, New York City, a wholly owned subsidiary of Sword Line, Inc., with offices at 76 Beaver Street, New York City.

In a statement filed by the Maritime Commission under hearings for extension of Ship Sales Act of 1946, the Sword Line, Inc., under an item of charter of Government-owned vessels, the Sword Line's profits after supposedly paying Government charter hire was listed as $4,582,817 from March 1946 to October 31, 1947. At the time of filing this statement, the Maritime Commission did not disclose the Sword Line's keeping of Government money. This was kept a secret and was not disclosed to the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

And at the same time and under the same hearings, one Gregory Ferend said he was president of Sword Line, Inc., with general offices at 52 Wall Street, New York, and engaged in the operation of freight vessels in domestic and foreign trade. On February 16, 1948, he said, "I am at the present time one of the largest shipping operators, engaged in the general cargo coastal trade as well as offshore and coastal tramp trade." And at the same time he said, "Let me again repeat that which I believe most sincerely, the Ship Sales Act of 1946 should be extended. The request of the Maritime Commission for another extension of time for Government operation as well as authority for continuance of chartering of war-built Government-owned ships, should be granted."

Mr. Speaker, it is no wonder as he was testifying that the authority should be continued for chartering Government-owned ships, while he was keeping Government money for the use of such Government-owned ships. Evidently he could not keep Government money for the use of Government ships without the assistance of someone else besides himself. The keeping of money that belongs to the Government for the use of these Government ships is a fraud and Government money from the earnings of these Government ships is impressed with a trust. I believe that the Department of Justice should take immediate steps to take into custody those people who are withholding Government moneys, who have put them beyond the civil capture by withdrawals, and who have withdrawn moneys from banks and who have had a part in this fraud. It is unbelievable that an agency of the Government permits the use of Government property and the keeping of Government money. The House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will investigate the dealings of the Maritime Commission, the Sword Line, and those who had a part in these dealings.

Job for Special Session

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROBERT F. RICH
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Bristol (Pa.) Courier of July 23, 1948:

JOB FOR SPECIAL SESSION

If the housewives of America were on their toes, they would be besieging the special session of Congress to dig into the Government's foreign-relief "program" and try to make sense of it.

Calling these activities a "program" is improper. That word carries a meaning of order and purpose and cooperation. None of these is visible in the widespread work which the bureaucrats are doing to buy up scarce commodities in this country and send them abroad, at the taxpayers' expense, for the alleged help for foreign peoples.

Like Topsy, Uncle Sam's foreign-aid activities "just growed." Not one person in a thousand realizes the way they have spread and diversified.

At this moment, when most people think that this work has been centralized in the hands of Paul G. Hoffman, as head of the Economic Cooperation Administration, the fact is that there are no fewer than nine Federal agencies all busily handing out free, or at less than cost, a great variety of articles bought on a restricted domestic market, usually at fancy prices, and with the public's money.

Where do the housewives come in? Because of the effect of all this confused and reckless competition between them and their Government for the food and goods they need to run their homes.

Much has been said about who is to blame for runaway prices. Truman blames the Republicans for fighting the OPA and the Republicans blame "Truman inflation." But the truth is that no other single factor is so much responsible for present high prices as the fantastic manner in which the Government purchases are creating scarcities and pegging prices at preposterous levels.

Is lard high? Of course it is. Did you know that a single Federal agency, which you probably never heard of, bought and shipped to Germany during the single month of April, at an average price of more than 30 cents a pound, more than 9,000,000 pounds of lard?

Are eggs higher than they should be? This same agency—and remember, it has no connection with the Marshall plan—bought up and sent to Germany $13,001,991 worth of dried eggs in that same single month.

Most housewives have been annoyed by the high prices of dried fruits. They have been strangely scarce and fantastically costly. Why shouldn't they be when this one Federal agency, dipping into the taxpayers' pockets, in that single month shipped to Germany $1,681,772 worth of raisins and currants and $3,398,528 worth of prunes?

The youngsters have noticed that peanuts no longer are on their diet. The nickel bag has vanished, or if to be found, now sells for anywhere up to a quarter. The kids are having to compete with Uncle Sam. He sent $5,113,948 worth of peanuts to Germany in the month of April alone.

The most conspicuous distortion in American food prices has to do with articles made of wheat flour. There have been bumper crops of wheat in this Nation since the war, and bumper crops abroad as well. The various countries involved in the Marshall plan all tried their best to tell Uncle Sam that, if there was anything they didn't need, and didn't want, and already had enough of, it was wheat. Yet wheat continues to be one of the biggest single articles which our Government is buying up at extravagantly high prices, in direct competition with the American home, and dumping into foreign lands which don't want it.

Quite over and above the activities of the Marshall plan, the obscure agency in question, in April alone, shipped $13,506,590 worth of wheat and $15,744,611 worth of wheat flour to Germany and Japan. No wonder a package of crackers costs the housewife here at home anywhere up to 30 cents a pound.

All of these facts, and many others equally interesting, can be verified in the United States Department of Commerce's Foreign Trade Statistics Notes, the June issue of which is now out with the April figures.

This official report lists the following nine agencies as being active in extending American relief abroad in various forms and on various fronts; with the value exported during April shown after the name:

1. The foreign relief program (ECA or Marshall plan), $9,800,000.
2. The interim aid program of the Marshall plan, $55,200,000.
3. Greek-Turkey program, $16,400,000.
4. Army civilian supply program, $73,900,000.
5. United States part of Refugee Organization, $1,900,000.
6. Army incentive program, $2,300,000.
7. Lend-lease program, $64,000.
8. UNRRA, none reported for April.
9. Surplus Government property program, $92,000.

It is absurd that nine conflicting agencies, at least two of which (lend-lease and UNRRA) "died" many months ago, should be engaged in these activities, which have such a direct bearing on our domestic economy, and so much to do with the problem of high prices.

The mere item of setting up nine separate staffs to do a job which one competent one could administer, places an unconscionable burden on the overtaxed American people.

The fact is that foreign relief has grown into the biggest single business transaction in the country, with a greater impact upon our home economy and prices than anything else which is going on—and that it has mushroomed into a gigantic, sprawling tangle of bureaucracy; turned into nothing more nor less than a deluxe WPA project.

The lists of commodities purchased, for example, by the little noticed Army civilian supply program (which, despite its freedom from publicity, as will be noted above, during April ran 40 percent bigger than the Marshall plan itself) contain abundant evidence that the buying is done more with an eye to its political impact in sections of this country than with any reference to what the peoples of Germany and Japan really need.

This is particularly true when it is remembered that April was just 2 months before the Democratic convention, at a time when President Truman was straining every nerve to capture the nomination—and when the brass hats were doing all they could to assist him.

This Army civilian supply program is the one referred to above as being "one which you probably never heard of." During April it bought heavily of the commodities which are specialties of States that came to the convention as "doubtful" or "opposed" to Truman's renomination.

It bought the tremendous quantities of dried fruits already cited, most of them from California. It bought the peanuts, presumably trying to soften up North Carolina and Virginia, both of which were hostile to Truman. It sent $1,000,000 worth of salt (of all things) to Japan—presumably from the salt mines of Louisiana and Texas. And it, along with all the other relief agencies, did all it could to keep cotton at the preposterously high price level it has held all through the New Deal.

Tributes to Generoso Pope

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN J. ROONEY
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Speaker, in its issue of Monday, June 28, 1948, the New York Enquirer published pages of testimonials to the patriotic and illustrious career of my friend, Generoso Pope, publisher of the great American newspaper, Il Progresso Italo-Americano. Many Governors of our States and Members of the United States Congress gave him deserved credit for his letter drive to the people of Italy, and for the resulting splendid victory over the Reds in Italy in the elections held last April.

Under the permission granted me by the House, I include the following newspaper article which was published in the New York Enquirer of that date:

ADMIRATION, RESPECT OF ALL AMERICA DUE POPE, SAYS ROONEY OF BROOKLYN

JOHN J. ROONEY, Congressman from Brooklyn, wrote that Mr. Pope richly earned the "admiration and respect of the people of America for the effective and vigorous manner in which he has championed democratic ideals." Congressman ROONEY also paid tribute to Mr. Pope's crusade against the Communists. His letter read:

"DEAR MR. GRIFFIN: I have your letter of the 10th instant, together with the attached copy of the Enquirer of Monday, May 3, 1948, which contains the complete story of the inspiring and extraordinary career of Mr. Generosa Pope, publisher of Il Progresso Italo-Americano. In line with your suggestion, I deem it a distinct privilege to send you my comment on the patriotic and illustrious career of Mr. Pope, who has richly earned the admiration and respect of the people of America for the effective and vigorous manner in which he has championed democratic ideals and principles in his great humanitarian newspaper.

"Our Government has been the dominant leader of the world against the Communist tide and Generoso Pope might be termed a pioneer crusader in exposing the Communists' vicious anti-American propaganda in Italy. He was a tremendous inspirational force advocating the letter-writing campaign by American citizens to relatives and friends in Italy during the weeks immediately prior to the recent election contest. The smashing victory against communism in Italy was an occasion for rejoicing by liberty-loving people throughout the world, and Mr. Pope is deserving of the highest commendation for the part he played in helping to bring about the momentous defeat sustained by the Communists at the hands of the Italian people.

"I am, indeed, happy to add my voice to the fitting tribute which the Enquirer proposes to pay to this distinguished gentleman who has contributed so generously to the welfare and happiness of our people."

One Night's Work

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLARENCE E. KILBURN
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. KILBURN. Mr. Speaker, the following article by one of our great writers, is, in my opinion, a statesmanlike presentation of our present situation, and I hope everyone will read it:

TODAY AND TOMORROW
(By Walter Lippmann)
ONE NIGHT'S WORK

In the annals of the American Government the scene enacted by Mr. Truman in the middle of the night at the close of the Democratic convention is unique in its disrespect for the dignity of his office and the proprieties of the Constitution. It was not pretty to think of the President of the United States hanging around backstage for hours, waiting to accept a nomination which had not yet been tendered to him. Even though he knew that the convention had no alternative but to nominate him, a decent respect for the forms of democracy would have told him that until the delegates had voted they were in principle free to make another choice, and that, like Governor Dewey, who waited in his hotel, he must not enter the hall.

But his action when he appeared before the delegates was an even more flagrant departure from the standards of conduct which the President of the United States is in honor bound to observe. In the early hours of the morning, in the presence of a disorderly partisan meeting, Mr. Truman announced that he was convening the Congress for the purpose of promoting his own election.

The President, says the Constitution, "may on extraordinary occasions, convene both Houses."

A more extraordinarily extraordinary occasion than this one it would be difficult to imagine: a deliberate avowed effort to make the voters believe that they must choose not between a Truman administration and a Dewey administration, but between Truman's legislative proposals and the legislative record of the Eightieth Congress; that because Harry S. Truman cannot lead this Congress, Mr. Dewey will not want to lead and will not be able to lead the next Congress.

The Congress belongs to the whole people, not to a party, and it is an abuse of the constitutional power of the President to convene it in extraordinary session under these circumstances and for these purposes. Mr. Truman cannot even pretend that the public interest compelled him to call the special session. For if his main concern were inflation and housing, he would have told Congress when it adjourned that he would call it back as soon as the conventions were over. He would never have waited to announce that decision until he could use it to give a kick and a punch to his own personal campaign for election.

Were his interest in the measures he mentioned sincere in the sense that he wants them enacted, he would have told the Republican and Democratic leaders of Congress weeks ago that they must stay in Washington all summer to deal with them. He did not do that. He did not even stay in Washington himself during the crucial weeks at the end of the session, working as the President can and should to lead his own party and to bring about agreement with the other party. Mr. Truman's actions are not those of a man who wants Congress to legislate but of a man who wants to fight Congress because he has figured it out that he can do better against MARTIN, TABER, ALLEN, and HALLECK than against Dewey and Warren.

The most serious aspect of the matter is the disclosure of how thin and fragile are the safeguards and restraints of his own conception of the public interest, how secondary and subordinate they are likely to be in the strategy and tactics of his campaign. The Truman platform on the subject of foreign affairs is alarming. For just as the calling of the special session is a reckless and frantic effort to exploit domestic issues for partisan ends, so in this section of the platform there are all the indications that the international crisis may also be exploited for partisan ends.

The platform is a scandal of ingratitude, ungenerosity, and untruth. The Truman administration claims the sole credit for the United Nations Charter and the European recovery program, as if Mr. Truman could have achieved them without the labors of Senator VANDENBERG and Mr. Dulles, without the active influence of Mr. Dewey and Mr. Stassen.

The question is what else Mr. Truman will do if some smart adviser tells him he can get some votes. There is no knowing. A man who in one night will call a special session of Congress in order to precipitate a fight on domestic issues and will knock the moral foundations from under the bipartisan foreign policy has cast away the restraints which would make his actions predictable.

The international crisis is very grave. What assurance is there now that Mr. Truman, who is a weak President and is at heart a jingo, will resist the temptation to exploit it? Because he is weak the control of the great decisions, particularly about the crucial problem of Germany, is and has been from the beginning quite beyond him. He has not even kept the control of these decisions in the Department of State: Though our German policy is in fact the determinant of our whole European policy, and will be decisive for peace or war, it is notorious that it has not been made by the President, or by Secretary Marshall, or by the so-called policy makers but by General Clay and General Draper and in the Pentagon, and in London, and in Berlin.

Our German policy has led inexorably, as it was self-evident it would to the predicament which now exists in Berlin. In dealing with this predicament we now find ourselves up a diplomatic blind alley. We have delivered three notes to the Russians which demand the immediate lifting of the blockade. But these notes contain—the French note is explicit and categorical—an assurance to the Russians that our demands, though peremptory and insistent in language, will not be enforced. At the same time these same notes announce a refusal to negotiate any question, even the question of the blockade.

Thus we are now in a position where we have made a demand which we will neither enforce nor negotiate. Is it any wonder that the demand was rejected, and that we are scratching our heads trying to think what to do next?

It is here that the country will need to be on guard. For the temptation to be reckless, and to take a spectacular plunge which arouses excitement and diverts attention, will increase as the predicament in Berlin becomes more exasperating, more costly, and more humiliating, as the German policy which caused it becomes more patently unworkable, as the diplomacy which has aggravated it becomes more rigidly restricted to alternatives which are equally disagreeable.

The President's Veto a Blow at the Blind

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DANIEL A. REED
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, President Truman by his veto of H. R. 6818, a bill to amend title X of the Social Security Act to liberalize eligibility requirements for aid to the blind, struck the blind persons of this country a brutal blow. I am, under leave to extend, inserting a memorandum on President Truman's veto of H. R. 6818 prepared by Jacobus Tenbroek, president of the National Federation of the Blind, as follows:

MEMORANDUM ON PRESIDENT TRUMAN'S VETO OF H. R. 6818

On July 2, the President of the United States vetoed H. R. 6818, a bill designed to encourage blind citizens to become productive members of society. In the history of Presidential vetoes few compare with this one for misunderstanding of the character of the problem and the solution provided in the measure.

The vetoed bill permitted the States, without loss of Federal funds, to disregard up to $40 of the monthly earnings of blind recipients of public assistance. The ground taken by the President was that the bill: (1) "Negates the principle of providing assistance on the basis of need"; (2) "would inevitably operate unfairly against those needy blind who are unable to work and who have no other sources of income"; (3) "would increase the recipient case loads by perhaps as much as one-third" and thus "operate * * * merely to spread even thinner the already insufficient amounts available for assistance payments."

By these statements, often heard before out of the mouths of underlings of the administration, the President indicates that he favors a system by which the blind are virtually made the wards of the social workers of the Nation, that he believes that the blind properly are regarded as paupers and ought to be perpetuated in that condition by the force of law, and that the inquisition into the intimate affairs of recipients of blind aid encouraged by the needs basis of relief is no violation of the rights of the individual and the dignity of the person.

In other respects, however, the President's message is not wanting in imagination. That the blind relief rolls would be increased by as much as one-third is a patent fiction created to refute ideas that cannot be repudiated on their merits. There are in the United States thousands of blind men and women who are completely self-supporting. They would not be rendered eligible for assistance by H. R. 6818. The number of blind persons who earn from $1 to $40 a month is almost infinitesimally small.

The foregoing facts constitute the answer to the President's contention that blind people, like the rest of humanity, need no special incentive to become self-supporting. Indeed, they do not. The bill in question, however, provides no such special incentive; it removes, rather, an existing penalty. Denied access in the main to the normal channels of employment, blind persons cannot leap at a single bound from public-assistance rolls to complete self-support. The reduction of their individual assistance in exact proportion to their earnings operates precisely as a 100-percent income tax upon these poorest of our citizens and flies in the face of the American tradition of equal opportunity for all.

The report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights emphasizes that exclusion from the main channels of social and economic activity is a denial of the rights of the individual and a loss to the productive effort of society. This democratic and uplifting principle, however, is by the President's action to be denied to the blind of the Nation and to be made a promise empty to a class of underprivileged who need it most.

Is it to be justified by the President's implication that the blind, great numbers of whom are youthful and in the productive years of life, should be treated by the public-assistance laws in the same way as the aged who have passed their productive years and as dependent children who have not yet attained them?

H. R. 6818 is a measure unanimously passed by Congress in response to the real needs of the blind of the Nation as the blind themselves understand those needs and have repeatedly expressed them. It was passed after widespread discussion over a period of 4 years, after public hearings by several committees of Congress, and after a futile attempt to defeat it by the Federal Security Agency, whose arbitrary powers to dictate to the States are thereby decreased. Yet this measure is described by the President of the United States as superficial and hastily conceived legislation passed in the closing hours of the congressional session.

It is this progressive and humanitarian enactment which the veto message characterizes as "opening the door to distortions in, and potential wreckage of, our social-security system." The blind and their friends will refuse to be discouraged by the President's illogical, unfactual, and unworthy attack upon the patient struggle of a deprived group of blind persons to gain a slender footing on the threshold of economic opportunity.

JACOBUS TENBROEK,
President, National Federation of the Blind.

Radio Address to the People of My District

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address made by me over Station WNBF on July 24, 1948:

Dear friends of the Triple Cities and my congressional district, through your efforts, I was able to file a record number of petitions in Albany last Tuesday. Needless to say, I am grateful, indeed, for your help.

Tomorrow I leave for Washington in answer to the President's call for a special session of Congress. As I said before, I am ready and willing to attend.

There has been a lot of talk about politics in this special session. Perhaps I am being naive, but I think the time is past for politics.

The Republican Congress has made a good record. But there is always plenty of work left to do. Nobody is perfect and I feel that it is the duty of Congress to try to bring the country out of the confusion it's now in.

I can't turn my back on the high cost of living when it's the No. 1 problem everybody is facing. The average American needs steak for his family and he can't afford to buy beef for $1 a pound. He can't clothe and feed them on what he's making unless prices come down.

Maybe it's a sacrilege to talk about price control and a return to this probably wouldn't work anyway.

But how are people going to live without some action? Congress certainly owes it to all Americans to discuss possible solutions to these terrific living costs.

If price control won't do the trick what can we do to bring down prices? If raising wages hasn't solved the question what course of action should be taken?

The big boys laughed off the Hall program of universal old-age pensions and bonuses for World War II veterans to build houses with. They just don't like any proposal that will give the rank and file a lift. But tragically enough, those who made fun of my platform had no suggestion of their own.

I contend that opposition is not justified to an idea unless you can propose something better. The opponents of the Hall program never made a constructive proposal in their lives. They are good on blocking progress, but poor on helpful action.

Let us hope that a fair, intelligent approach will be made to facing the Nation's ills at the special session and that everybody will cast aside politics and try to get to the bottom of the trouble.

The welfare of America should be the paramount objective of the President and the Congress, and I am happy to pledge to you my continued cooperation with those forces interested in good government and honest effort.

A short time ago, I predicted the President would invoke the draft, and we are told the boys will start leaving August 30. This means you will all have many questions to ask regarding military training, and I want you to get in touch with me about them.

I want to see Congress display as much interest in the new draftees as we did before. These boys should be treated right. True, they will have may privileges which the men who were inducted in 1940 did not have.

There is, however, plenty of room for improvement. If Uncle Sam is to have a first-class fighting force once more, then we must spare no energy to give them assistance.

The attitude of some toward the man in uniform is at low ebb in time of peace. They have no use for the soldier until the time comes for him to protect them.

This attitude is wrong, and I for one am opposed to the condescension some make toward our armed forces. They should be treated decently by everybody.

Remember, you will have many things to ask about the training, the camps, the general military set-up. Write to me whenever you want help and your boy in the service needs help.

The same goes for any troubles you veterens have. I get hundreds of letters from you and have ever since the war. I am ready to go to bat with the Veterans' Administration in Washington in your behalf any time.

Perhaps the most cowardly of all is writing a letter for public consumption and not signing any name.

I have pretty well described my contempt for the few who stoop to this degrading practice. I will not elaborate at this time on that phase of it.

But it can be compared to the act of hitting below the belt. It is like standing safely behind a tree and shooting a defenseless fellow who is unsuspecting. It is like beating a man with a club while he has both hands tied behind his back.

Refusing to sign one's name to a poison pen letter at once proves that a coward wrote it. The writer is afraid to make himself known.

He takes the same unfair advantage of the person he attacks that he would if he had committed the nefarious acts I have just described.

He damages the character of the person he assails, but the latter has no chance to strike back. If he had a grain of decency, he would come out in the open and show his stripes. Sadly enough, he has no decency.

He can, of course, make big promises which he will never have to keep, because nobody knows who he is. He can talk pontifically and get away with it, because unless he signs his name, who will know that he is a scoundrel?

You may be certain my office will always honor and welcome letters which are signed. But whoever writes anonymously can expect only the wastebasket for his trouble. Unless a bona fide name accompanies the letter, the writer need look for no action on my part, even though an address is attached and the letter itself is spread over the pages of unfriendly newspapers.

Governor Dewey and the Civil Rights Issue

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLAUDE I. BAKEWELL
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. BAKEWELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few statements incident to the nomination of Hon. Thomas E. Dewey as candidate for President of the United States on the Republican ticket.

In recent months we have heard much concerning the issue of civil rights. The House of Representatives has passed bills outlawing the poll tax as a requirement for the right to vote, and has in the past enacted antilynching legislation, always over the vociferous opposition of certain members of the Democratic Party. Surely the President must remember when he sat as a Member of the Senate that it was always the members of the Democratic Party who filibustered to death any and all civil-rights legislation which had been passed by the House of Representatives.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of this House the fact that, while President Truman merely talks about civil rights for the political advantage which he thinks it might give him, Governor Dewey and other Republicans have taken courageous and effective action in behalf of civil rights.

At the present time six States have on their books laws which prohibit discrimination in employment because of race, religion, color, national origin, or ancestry. These States are New York, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Wisconsin, Connecticut, and Indiana. Each one of these States has a Republican governor and a Republican legislature who were responsible for the passage of the State FEPC laws. While the leader of the Democratic Party talks about civil rights, the Republicans act in behalf of civil rights and in order to protect minorities.

In 1944, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, of New York, called for the appointment of the

New York State Temporary Commisssion Against Discrimination and for the enactment of State legislation providing for fair employment practices. After Governor Dewey had completed the commission by appointing the members thereof, the commission went to work and brought forth a truly comprehensive, fair, and American bill to eliminate discrimination in education, employment, public gathering places, and places of amusement. The New York law was passed and has now been in operation for over 3 years. The unanimous concensus of all of those who are familiar with the operation of the law say that it has been eminently successful. Under the New York statute, the law is administered by a commission consisting of five members who come from the white and Negro races, the Catholic, Jewish, and Protestant religions, management and labor, and both sexes.

Mr. Speaker, it is my sincere conviction, as it is that of Governor Dewey, that no man should be deprived of the right to earn a living because of his race, religion, color, national origin, or ancestry. Discrimination in employment is contrary to all that is fundamental in our American creed. That is what the New York FEPC bill provides for—the right to work, regardless of one's race, religion, color, national origin, or ancestry.

This right, as we all know, is fundamental in equity, in justice, in government, and in religion. It is part of the Sermon on the Mount, the two great commandments, and of the Golden Rule. The Declaration of Independence gave it new meaning, and it is implicit in the Constitution of the United States. Those who are elected to the next Congress must, as a matter of conscience and duty, hold up the arms of Thomas E. Dewey, who, I confidently feel, will then be President Thomas E. Dewey, in his effort to achieve a national FEPC law, even as Aaron and Hur held up the arms of Moses on the mount, lest by lowering his arms from exhaustion, he suffer the enemies of those chosen of God to prevail. The failure of the Democratic administration, which has now been in power for 16 years, to achieve such a program constitutes one of the gravest deficiencies in our American tradition.

The New York law defines four unlawful employment practices, which are as follows:

For an employer to refuse to hire, or to discharge, or otherwise to discriminate in the matter of employment, because of race, religion, color, national origin, or ancestry.

For an employer to utilize any employment agency, training school, or labor organization which does so discriminate.

For a labor organization to discriminate against any individual or to segregate or classify membership or limit employment opportunities on any such ground.

For an employer or labor organization to penalize anyone for opposing any such unlawful employment practice.

In signing this bill Governor Dewey described it as a reaffirmation by the people of New York of their faith "in the simple principles of our free Republic," and added:

It expresses the rule that must be fundamental in any free society—that no man shall be deprived of the chance to earn his bread by reason of the circumstances of his birth.

Mr. Speaker, the right to life, which we all enjoy and which is the most primary of all civil rights, can have no fulfillment without the right to work. Denial or curtailment of the right to work by reason of race, creed, color, or national origin, deprives minorities of their constitutional right to earn a livelihood.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote a statement made by Mr. Eric A. Johnston, president of the Chamber of Commerce, in 1945, when he said, concerning civil rights:

Wherever we erect barriers on the grounds of race or religion, or of occupational or professional status, we hamper the fullest expression of our economic society. Intolerance is destructive. Prejudice produces no wealth. Discrimination is a fool's economy. * * * The withholding of jobs and business opportunities from some people does not make more jobs and business opportunities for others. Such a policy merely tends to drag down the whole economic level. Perpetuating the poverty for some merely guarantees stagnation for all.

Mr. Speaker, I think that with the example of Governor Dewey and the Legislature of the State of New York before us, the next Congress should guarantee to all Americans the protection now guaranteed to the citizens of New York by the State FEPC law which has worked so well. Even the most sincere critics of that legislation have been compelled to admit that under Governor Dewey the New York act has been so fairly and so competently administered that no individual has had cause to make serious complaint, and racial and religious intolerance has been tremendously reduced in the State of New York.

Now that we are engaged in a world conflict in which we appear as the champion of the free governments as opposed to the totalitarian and police-state governments of the world, we cannot afford to stand convicted by world opinion on racial and religious discrimination. Let us have faith in our minorities throughout the land and be fair with them even as Governor Dewey has faith in the minorities in New York State and was fair with them. If we follow such a course, we cannot fail to achieve a greater, a freer, and a more united America in the future.

Ancient Order of Hibernians

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. THOMAS J. LANE
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, the national convention of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, and ladies' auxiliary, will be held at Montreal, Canada, this year, on August 2 to August 6. Under unanimous consent, I am inserting in the RECORD two short editorials and a poem which appear in the current issue of the National Hibernian Digest, the official organ of those organizations:

NO BAD BOYS

Father Flanagan has been buried in Boys Town but his spirit lives on.

The Ancient Order of Hibernians provided a guard of honor while his body lay in state and thousands of his admirers filed past to pay last tribute to the man of God who declared: "There is no such thing as a bad boy," and then went on to prove that love and guidance could make good citizens from even unpromising material.

The Right Reverend Monsignor Edward Joseph Flanagan died of a heart attack at the age of 61 while in Berlin on a Government mission investigating the problems of European youth. He had devoted 31 years to helping friendless and homeless boys. He died in line of duty just as surely as any soldier on the field of battle, for improving human relations was his battle line.

More than 5,000 orphans and juvenile delinquents today are good citizens, successful in business, trades, and professions as the result of his warmth and his faith, his skill in the use of sound psychology tempered with good old-fashioned sentimentality.

Members of our order served as an honor guard when Father Flanagan was laid to rest. Our responsibility as Hibernians did not end with his passing. Father Flanagan had many lessons to teach and the things he taught by example can be kept alive by our order.

He believed in the indefinite improvability of mankind. He demonstrated that faith in our fellow man can work wonders. He put into daily practice the motto of our order: "Friendship, unity, and Christian charity." Let us go and do likewise.

EIRE'S GOVERNMENT

Several correspondents have manifested failure to understand the change in administration in Eire. One writer expresses anger with the Irish voter "for his ingratitude toward De Valera." Another, less sympathetic with the great Eamon, writes: "He wanted power for life, like Roosevelt." It is really difficult for an American to understand the structure of government in Eire, so different is it from our own. Perhaps our Canadian brothers, whose government is similar, can help us to comprehend.

In framing a constitution the liberated people of Ireland chose the parliamentary type of democracy, rather than the congressional type, which we know. The Members of Parliament choose the Prime Minister, not the people—as with us.

The problem is complicated for us by the fact that Irish parliamentary democracy differs from English or Canadian by employing the preferential ballot and proportional representation. In this it is closer to French and Italian practice than to English or Canadian. In a few American cities, where there are city managers—Cincinnati and Cambridge are examples—this method of voting is in use. Under it minorities are represented in Parliament, and there are likely to be many parties none of which can command a majority. This is what befell De Valera. His political opponents subjected themselves to the discipline of compromise, and so elected a prominent Dublin lawyer who is not an active politician, John Costello, to the post formerly held by "Dev."

De Valera's political career is no more at an end than that of Gladstone after the defeat of the first home-rule bill—or that of Winston Churchill today. His position was never quite like that of Roosevelt: he was, and still is, the leader elected by his party, and was, and may again be, Prime Minister when that party commands a majority of the votes in the Dail.

THE HEART'S UNDYING QUEST

(The sonnet in the Shakespearean manner, which the National Hibernian Digest is permitted to print below, although it is copyright material was written by a Washington lawyer, poet, and Hibernian, who has more than once contributed to enrich our pages. To him poetry is serious business, with social values—"peace and brotherhood and liberty." This belief has impelled Captain McGovern to found an annual poetry prize at Catholic University, Washington, D. C.)

Poetry has nature's root and flower,
The soul of life from essence of the earth;
Born of truth and beauty, it reaps power
To make the mortal of immortal worth.
The spirit which is nurtured in its seed
Can build such health, such faith, such harmony
That wisdom of the heart and mind then lead
To peace and brotherhood and liberty.
The art of poetry owns a domain
Unique and universal in its sphere,
With words like pageants gleaming in its train,
With strains of music blending for the ear;
It is the diamond light of man's unrest,
The rhythms of the heart's undying quest.

Special Session

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. RAY J. MADDEN
OF INDIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, certain newspapers and radio commentators have been expressing indignant opposition to the President's call of the special session of Congress.

When I returned home after adjournment, I was informed by hundreds of citizens that the people were demanding that something be done to curb the high cost of living and that they were disappointed in the lack of action by the Eightieth Congress on any legislation to stop inflation. Criticism was also expressed on the failure of the Eightieth Congress to take action on expanding social security, minimum wage, and particularly legislation that would aid in relieving the housing shortage for millions of veterans and other citizens who cannot find a house to live in.

I wish to hereby submit a resolution which I received this morning from the Indiana State Industrial Union Council, which is typical of the sentiment of all wage earners throughout our State:

Whereas the high prices of the necessary commodities during this inflationary period have gone completely beyond the financial reach of the working men and women of Indiana, and the Nation; and

Whereas the Bureau of Labor Statistics proves that the prices of the fundamental commodities have increased approximately 277 percent, while the average increase in wages has only been approximately 26 percent; and

Whereas these statistics prove that the purchasing power of the American dollar has now reached the actual value of 52 cents, the American standard of living of the average American worker has decreased approximately 50 percent since 1939, yet the profits to American industry since the repeal of the excess-profits tax reached the tremendous, staggering total of $17,000,000,000 for 1947; and

Whereas the Eightieth Congress of the United States failed to face its own responsibility in curbing the spiraling high prices during the regular session and now the prices on necessary commodities are still rising each week according to responsible statistics; and

Whereas the extraordinary session of the Eightieth Congress will be called into session on July 26, 1948, at which time they will be asked to consider legislation regarding these high prices: Therefore be it

Resolved, That, the Indiana State Industrial Union Council request all members (and their families) of all local unions affiliated with the State organization to begin the conducting of a buyers' strike at the same time the special session of the Congress convenes to show our sincerity to them that we, the average American workers, want an abrupt curb placed upon these high prices; and be it further

Resolved, That the Indiana CIO, through its regularly elected officials, petition the Indiana delegation in the Congress, both House and Senate, to work with the President of the United States on any feasible plan of starting a downward trend of excessive prices and that a copy of this resolution be sent to all affiliates of the Indiana State Industrial Union Council and to all Congressmen and Senators and newspapers, and international unions.

Taft-Hartley Law

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE B. SCHWABE
OF OKLAHOMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, shortly after the passage of the Taft-Hartley labor-management law, over the veto of the President, I reported to my constituents the actions of Congress on this subject. In my radio address of July 2, 1947, I showed the exact number of votes that were cast for and against by each House on each phase of this legislation. As a historical record of the voting on this bill, I think the message is just as good today as the day I delivered it over the radio for my folks at home. The Taft-Hartley law was passed and the President's veto overridden by what was truly a nonpartisan vote. The roll call votes showed that in both Houses, Democrats and Republicans alike responded to the voice of the people, notwithstanding the veto of the President.

Hence, I quote my radio address of July 2, 1947, as follows:

Friends of the radio audience, it has occurred to me that you might want to know some factual information relative to the labor-management bill, which has now become a law.

The House and Senate committees spent many long weeks in the hearings of this bill. The House Committee on Education and Labor, which handled the bill, presided over by Chairman HARTLEY, of New Jersey, heard many hundreds of witnesses. All of the great labor organization union heads or their representatives appeared before the committee.

Outstanding citizens who have no reason to be prejudiced either in favor of labor or management appeared in large numbers and gave their testimony. All in all, the hearings were perhaps the most comprehensive and complete on this subject that have ever been offered to enable the Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives to write the best bill that could be written with any prospects of passage by this Congress.

It is rather singular to observe that, almost without exception, the labor union organization spokesmen, the chief executive officers, and their representatives of the American Federation of Labor, A. F. of L., and Congress of Industrial Organizations, CIO, and other major and minor labor organizations and unions, took the position that no labor legislation whatever should be passed by this Congress. They vehemently opposed any change in the labor-management laws. Labor union leaders insisted that the labor problems be left to the house of labor, and that Congress should not interfere in nor legislate on the subject.

On the other hand educators, economists, leaders in industry, and management contended that industry and the public were entitled to material changes in the law. It was pointed out that there were three great groups of people who were involved. There is the rank and file of labor, management, and above all, the general public. The general public has a greater interest and concern than either organized labor or management.

It was believed that the Wagner Act was one-sided. It leaned too far in the direction of organized labor. About three times as many strikes have occurred during the time this law has been in force, compared with any other equal period in the history of our country. Congress took the view that evidently the Wagner Act had not done the job it was designed to do.

The Members of Congress, or at least a substantial majority of the membership, believed that the public interest demanded a new law and that the Wagner Act should be amended. Some even thought it should be repealed.

All who advocated either the repeal or the amendment of the laws, as they have appeared on the statute books during the past 12 years, insisted that the Wagner Act had enabled the union bosses and racketeers to dominate and control their members in a dictatorial manner, un-American in principle. These leaders had become so powerful that they not only influenced legislation, but indirectly determined the activities of nearly every citizen in the Nation. It was deemed essential to relieve not only industry and management, but the general public, and particularly the rank and file of labor, the members of the unions themselves, from the tyrannical domination and control being exerted by labor bosses and racketeers.

Therefore, the House of Representatives of Congress passed what is known as the Hartley bill. It may be of interest to you to know some facts and figures, with reference to the way this bill passed both Houses of Congress. Hence, if you will take your pencil and set down the figures, I am sure they will be a revelation to you. All of these figures have been taken from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the official record of the votes that were cast for and against the new labor-management relations bill, and they are accurate and may be used without fear of their authenticity being questioned by anyone.

Now take these figures down and remember them. The Hartley bill passed the House April 17, 1947, by a vote of 308 for to 107 against. Remember there were 92 Democrats who voted for the passage of this bill and 85 Democrats who voted against it. Two hundred and sixteen Republicans voted "Yes" and 21 Republicans voted "No."

The Hartley bill then went to the Senate. The Senate had been considering what is known as the Taft bill. Some of the provisions of the Hartley and the Taft bills were practically identical. The Senate substituted the provisions of the Taft bill for the Hartley bill. The vote on the Hartley bill, as amended by the Taft bill, shows 22 Democrats for it and 21 Democrats against it. Forty-six Republicans for and 3 Republicans against. In the Senate the final vote stood 68 for to 24 against, and it became known as the Taft-Hartley bill.

Here are some more figures that you should know. After one bill had been passed by the House and the other by the Senate, it was necessary that conferees be appointed by each House of Congress. The conference report modified certain provisions in each of the two bills. Use your pencil again. On the conference report, the vote was 103 Democrats voted to adopt the conference report and 66 Democrats voted "No." Two hundred Republicans voted "Yes" and 12 Republicans voted "No." The total in the House on the conference report stood 320 for to 79 against.

In the Senate the vote on the conference report was 17 Democrats for and 15 Democrats against; 37 Republicans for and 2 Republicans against, with the total Senate vote standing 54 for to 17 against.

The Taft-Hartley bill, as thus amended by the conferees, and so overwhelmingly approved by both Houses of Congress, went to the President for his approval or veto. As you know, the President vetoed the measure. Then, as the law provides, the bill came back to the House in which it originated. On June 20, 1947, the House of Representatives by a vote of 331 to 83, which is just 1 less than 4 to 1, voted to override the President's veto. The law requires only 2 to 1, or a two-thirds majority. In this vote in the House to override the President's veto, 106 Democrats voted to override the President's veto and 71 voted "No." Two hundred and twenty-five Republicans voted "Yes" and 11 voted "No."

On June 23 the Senate voted to override the President's veto by a vote of 68 for to 25 against. In this instance 20 Democrats voted to override the President's veto and 22 voted to sustain the veto, while the Republicans voted 48 for to 3 against.

Thus, more than two-thirds majority of both Houses voted to override the President's veto and the Taft-Hartley labor-managament relations bill became a law, notwithstanding, and in spite of the veto of the same by President Truman.

In conclusion, it must be obvious that this bill was passed and the President's veto overridden by what amounts largely to a nonpartisan vote of the Representatives and Senators in Congress. It must be equally obvious that the overwhelming demand of the general public has expressed itself. That is representative government in action.

Federal Trade Commission Report to Congress Further Stresses Necessity of Passing O'Mahoney-Kefauver Bill To Amend Section 7 of Clayton Act

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ESTES KEFAUVER
OF TENNESSEE
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, today the Federal Trade Commission released a new report entitled "The Merger Movement: a Summary Report." The report deals with the problem of monopolistic mergers and the necessity of amending section 7 of the Clayton Act.

As all of us know, the original purpose of Congress in passing section 7 of the Clayton Act back in 1914 was to give to the Federal Government the power to prevent monopolistic mergers which substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. But, as we also know, the purpose of that legislation has never been accomplished because of the wide-open loophole which exists in the legislation. The law as it stands gives the Federal Trade Commission the power to prevent monopolistic mergers when they take the form of purchases of stock, but, unfortunately, the law leaves the Commission powerless to prevent acquisition of assets. Thus, the original intent of Congress in passing the Clayton Act, to arrest the creation of trusts, conspiracies, and monopolies in their incipiency has been completely nullified by the ability of corporations to buy up the assets rather than the stock of their competitors.

HISTORY OF AMENDMENT

Since 1945, Senator O'MAHONEY and I have regularly introduced companion bills to plug this outstanding loophole. On the House side my bill has twice been passed by the subcommittee and the full Committee on the Judiciary, but twice it has been bottled up by the House Rules Committee. On the Senate side the bill has been approved by the subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee, but like the House bill, it has never reached the floor for debate.

With the publication of this report by the Federal Trade Commission, the record on this bill may be said to be fairly complete. On the House side the Judiciary Committee has heard and published two thick volumes of hearings on this bill. And, on the Senate side, over 700 pages of transcript of hearings have been taken.

A NONPARTISAN ISSUE

Not only is the factual record complete, but there is no basis whatsoever of holding up the passage of this bill on the issue of partisanship. If ever a nonpartisan bill appeared before the Congress of the United States, this is it. It has been recommended in recent years by business leaders in both parties, by most of the small-business organizations, and by every Government group which has examined the problem, including four different bipartisan groups: The Federal Trade Commission, the Temporary National Economic Committee, the House Judiciary Committee, and the subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee. In this connection, I wish to call particular attention to the reports by the House Judiciary Committee urging the passage of this bill in both the Seventy-ninth — Democratic — and the Eightieth—Republican—Congresses.

In the Eightieth Congress the report of the House Judiciary Committee by Representative GWYNNE, Republican, of Iowa, began with these words:

> The history of legislation previously adopted to prevent monopoly, the great increase in recent years of competition-destroying mergers, the damage to small business, the blighting of opportunity for our young people—all cry out for the enactment of legislation to stop the rising tide of monopoly.

The vigorousness of this language should make it absolutely clear for once and for all that this is not a partisan bill in any way, shape, or form.

MONOPOLY MEANS COLLECTIVISM

Rather, this is a bill designed to meet one of the most deep-seated, fundamental, economic, and social problems of our time—the problem of the growth of monopoly. My interest in this bill stems from two paramount considerations, the first of which is my conviction that unless the bill is passed the free-enterprise system as we have known it will gradually be replaced by some form of collectivism, that monopoly will become so firmly entrenched that it cannot be removed, that the opportunity for our young people, particularly our veterans, to establish and operate successful small businesses of their own will vanish, and that our free institutions will perish. In its recent report the Federal Trade Commission states, in commenting on the rise of monopoly through mergers and acquisitions:

> No great stretch of the imagination is required to foresee that if nothing is done to check the growth in concentration, either the giant corporations will ultimately take over the country or the Government will be impelled to step in and impose some form of direct regulation in the public interest. In either event, collectivism will have triumphed over free enterprise and the theory of competition will have been relegated to the limbo of well-intentioned but ineffective ideals. * * * Either this country is going down the road to collectivism or it must stand and fight for competition as the protector of all that is embodied in free enterprise.

EFFECTS OF MONOPOLY ON THE SOUTH

In addition to this general question of the threat of collectivism inherent in monopoly I have also been concerned with the more immediate and direct effect of monopoly in holding down the natural economic development of that part of the country from which I come—the South. We in the South for generations have suffered the stranglehold of monopoly and resisted it with every power at our command; yet its hold on southern industry has steadily increased. With what effects? Let me cite just two of the many examples of the way in which monopoly has retarded our natural development.

During World War I a large match plant was built in Savannah, Ga., by the Diamond Match Co. After the war, however, Diamond Match, which, of course, was the American monopoly, entered into a cartel agreement with the Swedish Kreuger world monopoly. What were the effects on the South? The Savannah plant was dismantled, razed to the ground. This was the price that the South paid in order that the world monopoly could maintain match prices at higher and more profitable levels. Moreover, a second southern match factory which was being constructed in 1931 in Natchez, Miss., was left only partly constructed and never went into operation as a result of further negotiations by the Diamond Match Co. and the Swedish Kreuger firm—see United States against Diamond Match Co. et al., complaint filed May 1, 1944.

Or to take another example, this time in the State of Texas. There two Texas businessmen in 1933, with Texas capital, endeavored to put a glass company into operation, serving the local Texas market. Their activities were short-lived, however, being brought to a halt by the Hartford-Empire monopoly. The upshot was an agreement under which the new firm, known as Knape-Coleman, was forced to return its glass bottling machines to the Hartford-Empire monopoly. As Senator O'MAHONEY commented on this case, in speaking to the two Texas businessmen:

> So what it amounted to in the final analysis was that you couldn't receive a certificate of convenience and necessity from the Hartford-Empire Co. to operate a Texas plant with Texas capital to develop a Texas production. (TNEC hearings, 75th Cong., 3d sess., pt. II, p. 618.)

There are many other examples which could be cited from the experience of every State in the South. But their effects on the South have always been the same: Restriction of southern production and employment and the obtaining of southern raw materials at low prices, and then their resale as finished products back to southern consumers at high prices.

NECESSITY FOR IMMEDIATE ACTION

The injurious effects of monopoly on important regions, on the Nation as a whole, and on the development of world-wide prosperity could be recited indefinitely. But these effects are well-known. They do not need to be recited here. Today, we are faced with a practical problem, and that is the simple question of whether or not we are going to do anything about monopoly, other than make speeches. The present session of Congress provides us with the unique opportunity to convince the American people that we intend to meet the challenge of monopoly whenever it arises, and to pass on to our children the heritage of freedom of opportunity and our other democratic institutions which we have been fortunate enough to inherit from the past.

Civil-Service Pay Increases

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. PORTER HARDY, JR.

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, in the closing hours before adjournment of the second session of the Eightieth Congress on June 20, legislation was passed providing for an increase in salaries of postal and other civil-service employees. All of us recall those hectic hours and all of us know that this legislation merited more careful consideration than it received. For several months the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service had been studying this subject to determine the amounts of increase which were equitable and proper. The results of this analysis were not made available to the Congress and there was no debate on the floor concerning the adequacy of the amounts provided in the bill. Although the increases granted may be totally inadequate, I was glad we did provide a measure of relief.

Early in the beginning of the second session I appeared before the committees of both the House and Senate and urged prompt action toward relieving the financial plight of our civil servants. I made no specific recommendation of the amount by which salaries should be increased because I felt that this should be determined by the committee after careful study. However, in my statement before the House committee I included the monthly family budget of a top-grade post-office clerk who has a wife and two children. It will be noted that after providing for merely bare necessities and with no provision for clothing, this family had only $1.04 left at the end of the month. The increases we provided may be sufficient to clothe this family, but even so it is obvious that the living standard will be scarcely on a subsistence basis.

The statement which I made to the House committee follows. I believe the Members will be interested in the monthly budget of this family and so I ask that it be printed also:

STATEMENT OF PORTER HARDY, JR., BEFORE THE SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICE AND CIVIL SERVICE, MARCH 3, 1948

I appreciate the privilege of appearing before your committee. The plight of our civil-service workers deeply concerns me, and it is for that reason that I have asked to be heard.

Perhaps the need for increasing the pay schedules of our civil-service employees has been more apparent to me than to many Members of Congress. You will understand this when you understand something of the composition of the district which I represent. My district, the Second District of Virginia, includes the twin cities of Norfolk and Portsmouth where there is perhaps as great a concentration of Federal activity as can be found anywhere in the United States. The headquarters of the Fifth Naval District is at Norfolk and under it, the naval station, the naval supply depot, the naval air station, and the naval shipyard and hospital in Portsmouth. As you may suppose, the civil-service employees manning these various establishments make up a relatively high proportion of the total employment in the area.

Rates of compensation for civil-service workers are fixed by law, and there is consequently a lack of flexibility. In private industry adjustments can be made relatively easily to compensate for changing price levels and fluctuating living costs. During the recent period of rising prices private industry has made frequent wage increases or cost-of-living bonuses. This has not been true of our civil servants. In fact, a great many of them have suffered income losses through the various reclassification programs and the elimination of overtime work. Also, there have been frequent indications that Federal employees were required to take reductions in grade classifications because of reduced appropriations to governmental agencies. I am in complete accord with efforts toward governmental economy, but I think it should be accomplished in a way which will not victimize our public servants and force down their living standards.

The situation with respect to postal employees appears to me to be particularly acute. This is serious, not only from the standpoint of the workers themselves, but from a standpoint of efficiency of our postal establishment. I have had postmasters tell me that they are totally unable to secure competent personnel for the extremely low rate at which new men must be started. As a consequence, if a good man is employed he soon finds it impossible to live on his meager salary and resigns.

H. R. 5472 proposes a per annum increase of $480. I have not made a careful analysis of what increase would be proper and justified, but there is a serious question in my mind as to the adequacy of the amount proposed. It is my understanding that as of June 30, 1947, the average weekly wage of post-office clerks and supervisors was approximately $54. Recently a top-grade clerk in the Norfolk, Va., post office submitted to me an itemized statement of his monthly income and expenditures. A copy is attached for such use as it may be to the committee. I would point out, however, that this individual's family consists of four persons. His total monthly income is $258.32 and his itemized monthly expense, without any clothing or recreation, amounts to $257.28. This leaves him $1.04 above the bare necessities of life, assuming that his family did not have to wear clothes.

I would like to give you a few other figures which I think are significant. These relate to the loan experiences of the Norfolk Postal Credit Union. During 1945 they made loans of $19,361 to 81 borrowers; in 1946 they loaned $34,483.55 to 125 borrowers; and in 1947 the amount loaned increased to $46,335.85 to 151 borrowers. Please note the rapid increases not only of the amount loaned, but of the number forced to borrow.

A serious situation confronts our civil-service people. I am sure you members of this committee are carefully studying this whole matter, and I do hope the amount of increase finally approved will be equitable and proper. Let me urge also that you proceed with haste in order that the present situation, which is so acute, may be relieved promptly.

FEBRUARY 23, 1948.

This is an average monthly budget of a top-grade post-office clerk in the Norfolk, Va., post office, whose family consists of wife and two children:

Payment on home (interest, insurance, principal, and tax)	$49.76
Milk (2 quarts daily)	14.40
Heat	10.00
Lights and gas	8.00
Telephone	4.20
Water	1.30
Withholding tax	12.80
5-percent retirement deduction (soon to be 6 percent)	12.92
Food	86.00
Life insurance and hospitalization	15.00
Haircuts (self and son)	1.50
Transportation	5.00
Newspaper	2.40
Medical and dental expense	15.00
Union dues	1.00
Personal property and miscellaneous tax	3.00
Laundry	9.00
Lunches (30 cents per day)	6.00
Total monthly expense	257.28
Total monthly income	258.32
This is all that is left to cover clothing, etc	1.04

The Republican Record on Reclamation and Flood Control—Text of Address Delivered by Hon. Ben Jensen, of Iowa, to State Republican Convention of South Dakota

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. KARL E. MUNDT

OF SOUTH DAKOTA
Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me by the House, I am inserting at this point in the RECORD the address which our colleague, the chairman of the House Appropriations Subcommittee on the Department of the Interior, BEN F. JENSEN, of Iowa, delivered to the South Dakota State Republican Convention last month.

Every American interested in the truth and in either reclamation or flood control will want to read the informative and significant facts set forth in the address of Congressman JENSEN setting forth the Republican record and position on these important programs.

The address follows:

Mr. Chairman, distinguished colleagues in both Houses of Congress, Governor Mickelson, ladies and gentlemen of the convention, it is a distinct honor and privilege to be chosen to address the Republican State convention in this great neighboring State to my native Iowa.

It is a pleasure for me to have the opportunity to pay tribute to the great State of South Dakota for its many fine contributions to America—not the least of which is its present delegation to Congress. And I am certain your new nominee will prove to be equal to the best. KARL E. MUNDT, FRANCIS CASE, CHAN GURNEY, and HARLAN BUSHFIELD have made a combined record in Washington of which the State of South Dakota may well be proud. I know you are proud of your good governor and the fine Republican administration you have running your State and county business.

Congressman MUNDT is the coauthor of the Mundt-Nixon bill which should and will become a law; and which bill is a historic milestone in the labeling of all subversive elements in our land. He has served with unswerving duty to his country as a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee and on that all-important Un-American Activities Committee of the House of Representatives. His work in the House was well done. As a Senator I predict for him a great future.

No Member of the House is held in higher esteem than is your FRANCIS CASE. He is recognized by his colleagues in the House as one of the most active, able, and hard-working members of the House Appropriations Committee, which effectively demonstrated to the New Deal that the cost of our Government could be reduced—and we did it the first time the Republicans had a chance to prove it. I consider it a high honor to work with Congressman CASE on the Appropriations Committee, which is known as the workshop of the House.

I have sat around the conference table many days with your Senator CHAN GURNEY discussing amounts allowed the Interior Department for reclamation. A lot can be said for Senator GURNEY, for him and his work as chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee in the Eightieth Congress. He assumed the grave responsibility and the tremendous task of determining the extent to which we must prepare for the defense of our Nation.

Senator BUSHFIELD, we will miss you in Congress. The Nation can ill afford to lose men of your type as a public servant. Following his great record as your Governor, he moved on to the Senate, where his accomplishments have won him the plaudits of his colleagues and constituents alike. This great agricultural area was properly served by Senator BUSHFIELD as a member of the Senate Agriculture Committee, and he used his administrative background to fine account in his service on the Senate Finance Committee. I know I bespeak the wish of all your colleagues when I say good health and good luck always, Senator.

These four men are typical of the public servants of which South Dakota can boast throughout its history, both in governing itself and in helping to govern our great Nation. America needs such men as these now as never before.

It is because the roots of good government are so firmly planted in States like South Dakota that we today are confident that American principles will be retained despite the wedges of isms driven into our way of life by the New Deal and its satellites. From the roots of good government, nurtured with the ideals of Republicanism, grows the great oak of Americanism.

It is from such people as reside in South Dakota that we expect and receive in Washington the judgment and consideration which leads us to the liberty and freedom path of our founding fathers, no matter how far astray we might at times be led by the unbelievers.

We headed back to that path 2 years ago. We are going to be on the path full speed ahead come next November 2. We started back toward that path when the first Republican Congress in 14 years readopted the fundamental policies of a sound Republic.

Next year when that great administrator, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, aided by another great administrator, Gov. Earl Warren, restores sound American principles in the administration of our Government, you can expect the progress and sound prosperity in America and that alone will be a stiff notice to communism that it cannot survive in a free nation.

When true freedom and liberty have been restored in this great land—as was our heritage—then we can go forth throughout the world as the leader of the crusade for right over night. Then we can again hold up for the world to see, the principles which have made and kept us great, the principles which we must ask the world to compare with the dictates and creeds of rulers of the people rather than by the people. Around this beacon of God's will that people be free we can comfort the hopes of those in other lands who helped fight a war to rid the world of tyranny, and not to face the threat of the worst tyrant of all times.

When the New Deal discovered that its domestic and international weaknesses had plunged America into the whirlpool of world confusion, its leaders began its cry for bipartisan policies on international affairs. They seem always anxious to drag popular Republicans into every deal after they have it messed up and are into the mire up to their necks.

I am proud to say that the Republican Congress has the interest of the Nation at heart. The Republican members of the House and Senate Foreign Affairs Committee have offered every possible assistance to the executive branch of our Government to bring order out of chaos, as Congressman MUNDT knows only too well.

We fear the interests of our Nation were not in mind when the secrets of Tehran, Cairo, Yalta, and Potsdam were written or agreed upon verbally. No plea was made then for a bipartisan policy. In fact, your last Congress found it necessary to introduce a resolution requiring the President to submit to the Congress a list of the agreements with Russia which the President said had been violated.

And do you think the interests of America are yet uppermost in the White House minds? Here is your answer:

Just the other day Governor Dewey—the next President of the United States—asked the White House if he might share in the information which leads to establishment of our foreign policy. He asked for that bipartisan consideration only because he did not want to say anything during the campaign which would tend to harm America's position in world affairs. The White House responded: No comment. Tom Dewey wanted to protect America's position. The White House apparently is willing to risk America's position for whatever political benefit can be gained.

"Give us men today, O Saviour,
Men who dare to do the right.
In this world of war-torn nations
Pity those who make man fight,
While we hear the angels pleading,
'Send them bread to stop the fight'
Trusting God to save the peoples
Who would know that right makes might."

There is no difference between the man who agreed to the commitments of Tehran, Yalta, and Cairo and the man who agreed to the commitments at Potsdam. There is no difference between the man who stopped our troops outside Berlin and the man who shipped Joe Stalin oil from California and spent hundreds of millions to keep him from the oil of the Middle East.

With every step forward we take a step back. We win a war for freedom; but we have less freedom than before. We preach liberty and freedom; but we appease the world's worst offender of those principles. It is time to halt this un-American procedure. It is time for us to take a new stock of our internal strength as measured by loyalty and sincere belief in the things that made us great. And then let the rest of the world know once and for all that we know where we stand. Then, and only then, can we command the respect of other good people all over the world.

In Philadelphia less than 2 weeks ago, the Republican Party adopted a platform which is the reintroduction of the Constitution of the United States. It tells you where the Republican Party stands and the Nation wants to stand in that same position.

In its declaration of principles, the Republican Party says, and I quote:

"To establish and maintain peace, to build a country in which every citizen can earn a good living with the promise of real progress for himself and his family, and to uphold as a beacon light for mankind everywhere, the inspiring American tradition of liberty, opportunity, and justice for all."

Then, as guides to the action the party will endorse to carry out such a program, and I only wish time would permit me to read it all again here today, the platform in part sets out the following:

"Maximum voluntary cooperation between citizens and minimum dependence on law; never, however, declining courageous recourse to law if necessary.

"Our competitive system furnishes vital opportunity for youth and for all enterprising citizens; it makes possible the productive power which is the unique weapon of our national defense; and is the mainspring of material well-being and political freedom. * * *

"The rights and obligations of workers are commensurate with the rights and obligations of employers and they are interdependent; these rights should be protected against coercion and exploitation from whatever quarter and with due regard for the general welfare of all.

"The soil as our basic natural resource must be conserved with increased effectiveness; and farm prices should be supported on a just basis.

"Development of the priceless national heritage which is in our West is vital to our Nation.

"Administration of government must be economical and effective. * * *

"Our common defense must be strengthened and unified.

"Our foreign policy is dedicated to preserving a free America in a free world of freemen. This calls for strengthening the United Nations and primary recognition of America's self-interest in the liberty of other peoples. Prudently conserving our own resources, we shall cooperate on a self-help basis with other peace-loving nations. * * *

"We aim always to unite and to strengthen; never to weaken or divide. In such a brotherhood will we Americans get results. Thus we will overcome all obstacles."

The shackles of controlled and dominated lives—that thing which we oppose and abhor in other countries—would be shorn from the American people.

Constitutional government of the people, by the people, and for the people would again prevail.

Your first Republican Congress in 14 years has already started the march back to constitutional government and Americanism.

It slowed the trend of extravagance in the executive branch of our Government, but let me point out here that the Government pay roll which is mounting daily, right today, is being accomplished at the expense of service and benefits to the taxpayers.

Congress reduced departmental budgets, but the administrative branch of the Government, still imbued with the spirit of New Deal spending, cut the services to the people rather than the padded political pay rolls.

All I have to say to you about cutting the operational costs of government is—wait until Tom Dewey takes over next January.

The man who is now in the White House, when he is not taking "nonpolitical" trips around the country, has had the pleasure of announcing recently that the Government can boast of an eight and one-half million dollar surplus for the fiscal year 1948. He announced it, but it was the Eightieth Congress that balanced the budget and brought about that surplus.

Why, the man at the White House, who thought little of his mistake of a billion dollars or two a year ago, didn't even think we could give the taxpayers some relief from the high taxes they have ben paying ever since we started raking leaves.

But the Congress did cut the taxes. And by so doing, the South Dakota peoples' tax load will be lightened this year the tidy sum of $9,100,000, and the saving to the people of my State of Iowa will be $56,300,000; and to the people of the whole Nation, $4,573,500,000.

One of the important steps Congress took back toward Americanism was the limitation of the Presidential term of office to two terms. Ladies and gentlemen of this convention, I am sure the framers of our Constitution never believed that it would be necessary to enact such a law.

The Congress recognized the need for a sensible reform of the labor law and carried out its duty over the Presidential veto.

Unification of the armed services, and endorsement of the United Nations were other measures enacted by Congress.

Many means of assistance to veterans, their widows and orphans were provided by your Congress. These I will cite in detail later.

Adoption of a recovery plan for free nations of the world was voted by a Republican Congress that was confident that institution of sound diplomacy in our international relations by strong leaders will minimize the extent of help needed from us by those countries which are ready, willing, and eager to help themselves.

Assistance to agriculture and business was enacted and the farm program was extended until such time that Congress can give serious study to a farm program that is based on the elements of true benefits and economy, rather than on the whims of politicians.

There were hundreds more of important bills, but time would not permit me to name them all.

Now, how about western reclamation, in which South Dakota has a big stake? The present administration should apologize for its 16 years of manhandling and mishandling of the Bureau of Reclamation. In the early days of the New Deal the highly trained officials of the Bureau's professional staff received a scant proportion of the vast spendings of the New Deal. Only recently, and after more than 12 years, the first drop of water has been put on California lands by the great Central Valley project. In that same length of time not a single drop of water has been applied on the 1,000,000 acres of the vast Columbia Basin and the Colorado-Big Thompson project. They have been creeping along on New Deal promises, until this last year when the Republican Congress demanded of the Bureau that they "get going" on all worthy reclamation projects, and then furnished them the necessary funds to carry the project forward in a rapid and orderly manner. That action seems to trouble the Bureau's high command no end.

Why is it that the Democrats at this late date take alarm at the thought of the Republican control of reclamation?

Could it be that Republican efficiency and honesty in the higher levels of the Bureau will be so marked as to throw their own record into shameful contrast?

Apologists for the 16 years of Democratic misrule in reclamation only spit into the wind to befoul themselves when they recklessly attempt to smear the Republican record since our party took control of Congress 2 years ago this fall.

Let's look at the record of the last 11 years which proves the Republican Party favors a more rapid development of the Western States. From 1939 through 1947 the annual appropriations approved by the New Deal for reclamation ranged from a low of $24,000,000 in 1945 to a high of $117,000,000 in 1946. In the first session of the Eightieth Congress, a Republican Congress appropriated a total of $136,644,738, and this year that same Congress appropriated $245,566,139. In those figures rests proof of the profound faith of the Republican Party in the future of the West and the future of reclamation. And further, no Congress during the New Deal era even remotely approached the efforts of the Eightieth Congress to see that the money appropriated actually be spent where it should be spent. No Congress before the Eightieth ever took such drastic steps to insure against waste on ideological adventures dreamed up in the Alice of Wonderland of bureaucracy. That is the main reason for their big gripe today.

And let us not forget that it was President Harry Truman who, on August 2, 1946, the very day Congress adjourned, ordered the Bureau of Reclamation and the Army engineers to hold back construction for reclamation projects and flood-control projects to less than half of the funds Congress had just appropriated for the fiscal year 1947. Yet our President and his smear artists would have you believe the Republican Congress is to blame for the recent disastrous floods and for the lag in reclamation construction. Your Congressman, FRANCIS CASE, will vouch for the correctness of my statements. In all fairness the blame or credit must be placed where it belongs. Let us keep the records straight.

Your Republican Congress found it necessary, in view of the record of wasteful spending at the direction of the Bureau's high command, to place strings on the method of expenditure of almost every cent that was appropriated, by earmarking, which was also done in some of the other department appropriation bills, for good reasons.

It was my privilege and responsibility in the last year as chairman of the Subcommittee on Interior Appropriations, to take a good look into the conduct of the Bureau, and my three Republican colleagues on the committee and one Democratic member, helped me do the job. Officials of that Bureau were before my committee 33 days out of the 11 weeks of hearings which we held. The record of those hearings clearly shows that in pursuit of socialistic and wild-eyed theories, high Bureau officials had flaunted the will of Congress and the spirit of the law to say the least. That record also shows they had full knowledge of such violations by other Bureau employees.

The Dewey-Warren broom, working in harmony with the Republican Eighty-first Congress, will make the rubbish and dust fly in the Interior Department, as in all other departments of government. Gov. Earl Warren is a strong proponent of western development, but he will insist that all funds be spent honestly and properly and according to law, you may be sure. Rapid, sound, businesslike, and orderly development of the great West will come at the hands of the Republican Party.

It was the Republican Party and a Republican President who founded the Bureau of Reclamation. It was a Republican administration which brought it to its finest professional development. It was a Republican President who conceived and carried out, with the aid of a Republican Congress, the sound development of the great Colorado River development. It will be a Republican President and a Republican Congress which will bring back reclamation to the Reclamation Bureau. It will be the Republican Party that will cut out inefficiency and waste of the taxpayers' money in all departments of government, so that your United States Treasury will again be on a solvent basis to the end that there will be adequate funds from which the Congress can appropriate for a more rapid and orderly development of the West, and for all other necessary purposes. And in all sincerity I must say to you that only by a businesslike job can we sell the other sections of our Nation on the need for western development at a more rapid pace.

Also, we must prove to all our people that the development and economy of the Nation—and the peace of the world—is based on agriculture. That a high annual national income is entirely dependent on the production of new wealth which is each year produced out of Mother Earth by our farmers. Our future economy and peace depend on how well we conserve, utilize, and protect our great natural resources—soil and water. For 150 years we have concerned ourselves with the development of our vast domain, but we have given little thought to the best methods of utilization, protection, and conservation of our precious soil, and how well the farmers of America can best prosper. As a result, much of our virgin topsoil has been carried to the oceans and the Gulf of Mexico. Somewhat belatedly we have inaugurated a soil-conservation program, and for a few sections of the country adopted basin programs for flood control, reclamation, navigation, and soil conservation. We must speed up our soil, water, and flood prevention and conservation programs if we are to meet the food demands of our growing population, and of the hungry world. And bear in mind the fact that we never have a surplus with good farm prices, for the simple reason that good farm prices in turn mean good incomes for the laboring man, and for all.

You who are attending this convention are rightly concerned with respect to policies which should be adopted and supported in the State of South Dakota. The good policies which we adopt in the Missouri Valley can become the pattern for the entire Nation. In Iowa the farmers have gone forward in the last few years in soil-conservation practices, and I congratulate them and the farmers of South Dakota, too, for the progress both have made.

I understand your farmers have organized 45 soil-conservation districts, which include 21,340,135 acres of land. Within these districts are 43,183 farms. That is the first step toward the American way of preserving our land resources so that we can produce all the food of good quality which our people need, and so that our land resources will be preserved for future needs and emergencies. I shudder to think what would happen to us if war should again come upon us, unless we have a reserve of rich land ready to mine as we had for World War I and II.

I also understand there are over 12,000 farms in your State which have been planned for soil conservation. Also that there are more than 4,000 farmers who have already applied to the Soil Conservation Service for assistance. More than 5,000,000 acres have been completely treated and the job is finished. South Dakota farmers are awake, as are the farmers of Iowa, and most every other State, to the fact that soil erosion is reducing production at a rapid rate, and they are doing something about it to their everlasting credit as good Americans.

Your Congress wants to help on the important job of soil conservation. Your State agencies want to help and I assure you your Federal agencies under Tom Dewey and Earl Warren will help.

Happily, we have a Missouri Basin plan—the Pick-Sloan plan—that authorizes certain major projects to be constructed as promptly as Federal funds can be provided. However, that plan is only an outline for what is to be filled in as further study discloses additional needs. We have so far adopted a Federal program. We need, in addition, State, county, and municipal programs to complete the picture. This will speed the accomplishment of our objectives, which are the conservation and restoration of our soil and the utilization of every drop of water that falls upon or flows through the Missouri Basin. We must provide an abundant supply of power and water for domestic, irrigation, industrial, and municipal purposes, and let me assure you that we folks in Iowa, and in the lower reaches of the Missouri River Valley are anxious that the flood waters be held up in your area of the basin.

Some people think the entire job of water control and utilization and power development and distribution should be financed by the Federal Government. Actually, the needs for funds are so urgent and the total needed is so great that every individual, county, and State dollar that can properly be made available should be used in our program. Federal funds should only be used to finance the larger projects. Every possible incentive and protection should be offered the individual and private investor to do his part in supplying the funds to complete the projects needed in the Missouri Basin, as well as elsewhere. We cannot complete and maintain a satisfactory basin plan until every landowner adopts conservation practices. Water should be retained as far as needed where it falls. Thousands of drains and checks are needed to keep the water run-off from carrying the topsoil into the larger streams. This merely ends in deposits in the big flood-control reservoirs and power dams, destroying their usefulness and wasting expenditures of hundreds of millions of dollars for their construction. Small irrigation projects, particularly pumping projects, can in many cases be financed by the State, or by water conservation and irrigation districts. And that way will actually cost the farmers much less in the long run.

Private concerns and municipalities should be encouraged to enter the field for distribution of power and water that will be available at the big Federal dams and reservoirs. The entire job should not and cannot be left to Uncle Sam. Let us revive the good old American system of individual initiative, which has made America great. Let us have still greater industrial plants by encouraging individuals and combinations of individuals to establish new industries. Let us cover the entire Missouri Valley with power and water facilities for operation of factories. The big conservation job can be done much quicker and better if Federal dollars are used only for the jobs beyond the ability of the States and private initiative to accomplish. It will not only be done quicker, but better and cheaper, and more important, we will preserve individual initiative. Only by that method can we be assured of preserving a free America.

Yes, the Republican Party believes in the individual initiative which made America a great nation and for that the Republican Party is the target for New Deal attacks, which are based on absolute falsehoods, which are circulated through Federal agency propaganda machines. I have the proof of my charges here.

Figures submitted to me just before I left Washington to come here for this address—official figures, I want to emphasize—show that the Republican Congress appropriated far more money for the development of Federal power and irrigation for the fiscal years of 1948 and 1949 than did the New Deal Congresses in the peak of their spending before the war. These figures show that for power development in 1939 the New Dealers appropriated $47,000,000. In 1940 the total was $73,000,000, but they spent billions for needless employees and political pap.

The Eightieth Congress appropriated a total of nearly one hundred and thirty-one millions for 1948 and two hundred and ten millions for 1949. Our record is equally good with respect to development of irrigation.

In 1939 the New Dealers appropriated about $18,000,000 and in 1940 the total was $35,000,000.

Your Eightieth Congress appropriated sixty-three millions in 1948 and one hundred and twenty-eight millions for 1949 for this program.

New Dealers hate individual initiative because individual initiative can stem all the way from deciding how to vote.

I said earlier in my talk that I would have something to tell you about veterans' assistance by the Eightieth Congress. I rather doubt if all of you know the amount of assistance of all kinds which the Eightieth Congress voted to the veterans and their dependents, as well as for widows and orphans of deceased veterans, because I am inclined to believe that the figures have not been available until recently. Official figures furnished me just before leaving Washington give a total of $5,125,309,000 for fiscal year 1949. This includes $624,145,100 for hospitalization and care of veterans. Of course, there was other veterans' legislation which will not show in the dollar and cents column, but will show in the veterans' efforts to live by his individual initiative.

As I have reviewed to you here today the efforts of the Republican Congress to develop our national resources and to provide for the welfare of our people, you have probably wondered where the Congress made its saving of $2,741,481,291.92 below the budget which was sent to us by the President.

The Congress set aside those amounts which must be met: Such as interest payment of $5,250,000,000 on the New Deal's great public debt of two-hundred-and fifty-two-billion-plus as of July 1 this year; the cost of maintaining an adequate defense during the latest New Deal crisis of $11,403,477,413; the foreign aid that has been proclaimed as essential to peace in the world of $6,202,083,228; for social-security payments and old-age pensions of $797,000,000; tax refunds of $2,700,000,000; and for all veterans' benefits of $5,125,309,000; leaving us less than 12 billions of dollars of the President's requests for fiscal year 1949, which for many years has gone into Government operation of departments, agencies, and bureaus of this sprawling New Deal administration, where substantial cuts could be made; and there is where the pruning knife was used. We sliced off duplication of services, boondoggling, and idiotic schemes by the brain trusters who are left in the administration.

The reduction was intended by Congress to be reflected in the overstuffed Federal pay rolls, but, as I reported to you at the beginning of this talk, very little, if any, was reflected in that item.

We are cognizant—all of us—that the progress of this great country will command some Government assistance in development of resources for the benefit of the Nation. But your Republican Party is cognizant, too, that less Government assistance will be necessary if we strive to inspire again that element of Americanism which made us great—individual initiative, the very thing for which many thousands of brave Americans have fought and died to preserve for us here, and for mankind everywhere.

God help us all to keep the beacon light of liberty burning high in America for all the people of the world to see and to follow as a true guide to happiness and peace on earth.

It Was a Strong Message Dealing With Our Pressing and Unfinished Business

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN R. MURDOCK
OF ARIZONA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, it is not my custom to comment on any and every state of the Union message delivered by the President, but I should like to say a word with regard to the message we have just heard today. The message was of course long, and it involved so many different items that I must not refer to more than one or two. In the past I have told President Truman personally on more than one occasion that some portions of his messages I appreciate and greatly approve, and I have said virtually the same thing on the floor of the House.

On September 6, 1945, we had a message from President Truman which outlined a lengthy program containing 21 points which I thought showed a broad-minded view of the Nation's needs. Shortly after the message had been delivered, I expressed myself favorably concerning it. In doing so, I recalled some western history which distinguished Missourians had helped to write a century ago. I realized that Missouri was the mother of several commonwealths in the Southwest, that Missouri soldiers and Missouri statesmen had carried the American flag into that region, and also that Missouri statesmen had established civil governments and American institutions throughout the region. It seemed to me that this distinguished Missourian in the White House, according to the program outlined on September 6, 1945, was but carrying out the plan of western development with which his forebears in Missouri had had so much to do in the beginning.

On January 21, 1946, this same distinguished Missouri President again showed his appreciation of the West by another impressive and statesmanlike message, and again I took the floor to compliment the President on the wisdom and foresight which his message contained. And now today I want to comment on President Truman's latest state of the Union message. It was a strong statement dealing with necessary and unfinished legislative business.

Of course, I cannot see in the message today so much that pertains to the West as in the previous messages, for the present session is a special session of Congress called for meeting emergency needs, and therefore it cannot logically deal so much with purely western matters. In the message today, however, this friend of the great West did touch upon the subject near and dear to my heart—that of western development of natural resources, including hydroelectric power. We consider power produced by falling water second only in importance to the use of the water itself for biological purposes. The production of power and irrigation are linked together, and in some of our great reclamation projects it is impossible to have full, complete, and well-rounded development of irrigation without well-rounded development of power. The President touched on that today in his emergency message, and I agree with him that our economy—yes; even our national security—requires the statesmanlike attitude which the President evinces.

The President is well aware that our growing shortage of oil multiplies our need of producing hydroelectric power in order to conserve our dwindling oil supply to fuel our fleets of the air for commerce and for national defense. The President, through his legislative experience, is well aware that monopoly seeks to control our water-power production. The President wants this great force of nature, so potent and useful to our people, furnished to meet their needs, without becoming a subject of monopolistic control as it has been in years past. Although the President indicated several cases in which legislation is requested and needed, he undoubtedly wants the Congress and the American people to know that the recently acquired control by the "Government of the people" over this great natural resource ought not again be monopolized in the hands of a few. It is wise to let private industry distribute the power produced at Government dams, but not wise to let private industry control or shape the conditions so that this naturally monopolistic business has only one buyer of electric power at the bus bars of the Government-built dams.

Small Social-Security Benefits and the Rising Cost of Living

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. AUGUSTINE B. KELLEY
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, with permission, I wish to insert in the RECORD a letter I have just received from one of my constituents. It is one of many I have had on the subject of the plight of old people in the face of small social-security benefits and the rising cost of living. The letter speaks for millions of people in this country and is eloquent enough that it needs no explanation from me:

SALINA, PA., July 19, 1948.

Congressman KELLEY.

DEAR SIR: I will be 71 on my next birthday, and I can't find anything to do at my age. I was always a hard-working man all my days and I did all that I could do for my country and democracy and then the war came on and then we gave our boys for our country, two in Japan and one in England. Thank God they all came back home safe and sound, and now they have to struggle to find a job to keep their family. As for me and my wife, we have to live on $32.82 a month, and the social-security fund I know to be a fact is over $5,000,000,000 in the Treasury. According to the press they try to fight communism; instead they breed them because they know what the old people's pension is. A man who struggles all of his life to have a three- or four-room house and then goes to the State for some assistance must turn the property over to the State, and the Communist knows this. And at the present time, according to the paper, the Government has agents in the field to purchase surplus potatoes, then dump them and put carbon oil on them, so the poor people can't get them, and the Communist knows this. When I was working the Government took pretty close to 25 cents on nearly every dollar that I made and now I have to struggle for my living.

No wonder Uncle Joe Stalin has a good time vetoing everything that comes before him and makes a big laugh at Uncle Sam to spend taxpayers' money and get nowhere because our Government is too soft. I hope that you will do something about this matter. If you please don't throw this letter in the waste basket you or your secretary, but if you wish take it to next Congress and read it to your fellow Congressmen and I hope that you will acknowledge in regard for us poor people.

I remain,

FRANK TOSI.

Move United Nations Headquarters to Geneva

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LAWRENCE H. SMITH
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, it has been my belief for some time that it was a mistake to locate the United Nations headquarters in this country. Here the delegates are subjected to considerable pressure on the part of groups in this country that seek to use the United Nations as a vehicle for their own particular ends. The perfect illustration was the pressure brought to bear upon the delegates in the UN Assembly when partition of Palestine was recommended. The record is clear that influential Members of the Congress, governmental departments, and wealthy citizens high-pressured the delegates to vote for partition.

Mr. Speaker, there is a second reason for my opposition to the establishment of the United Nations headquarters in New York and it is that under our agreement with the UN, the United States is obligated to admit any delegate who comes properly accredited from another country if it is a member of the United Nations. Just recently serious charges of subversive activities on the part of UN delegates have been made by State Department officials testifying before a Senate subcommittee. While Secretary of State Marshall has denied any knowledge of the charges, yet these State Department officials would not so testify unless there was a basis of fact for them.

Mr. Speaker, I include as part of my remarks an editorial which appeared in the Washington Post for July 26 apropos of this subject:

CONTAMINATION

Serious charges of subversive activities on the part of UN delegates have been brought by subordinate officials of the Visa Section of the State Department testifying before a Senate subcommittee. Since Secretary Marshall denies knowledge of any such cases, the obvious conclusion is that the Department has become involved in one of those unfortunate internal disputes that should have been settled by authoritative intervention instead of being threshed out in public.

The witnesses before the Senate subcommittee have in effect denounced their superiors for following policies that jeopardize the security of this Nation. And, even more serious, their charges are an affront to the United Nations that might have serious consequences. If there is any reliable evidence to support the claims that some UN delegates are abusing the privileges they enjoy as representatives of their countries, it should, of course, be brought to the attention of the UN authorities by responsible officials of the State Department for appropriate action. However, in the absence of specific complaints against particular individuals supported by well-authenticated evidence, sweeping indictments of the sort made before Senator REVERCOMB'S committee are simply mischievous.

So long as the headquarters of the United Nations remain within our boundaries, the United States is under an obligation to admit accredited delegates from other countries, regardless of their political beliefs or their record of subversive activities in their own countries. Senator REVERCOMB'S declaration that not even a visitor's visa should be issued to a subversive and his further assertion that "our authorities are supposed to keep Communists out of this country" would, if carried out, force the United Nations to shift headquarters to some other country less fearful of the contaminating effect of alien political philosophies. It would be ironical, indeed, if a country that takes such pride in its record for preserving rights of free speech and assembly should adopt exclusionist policies that made it impossible for a world organization to carry on business within its boundaries. Yet that would unquestionably be the result of an endeavor to extend the highly restrictive provisions of the immigration laws to UN delegates. It is worth noting that strict interpretation of those provisions has already wrecked plans for holding a meeting of the World Federation of Trade Unions in this country.

The United States rightly insists on a careful screening of individuals seeking entry to this country to establish permanent residence. But disbarment of undesirable aliens of this class does not warrant subjecting aliens coming here for brief periods as accredited agents of foreign powers or for other legitimate purposes to equally stringent tests. If such is to be our policy, the United States might as well be prepared for a change of UN headquarters to some more tolerant country—preferably to Switzerland.

The Washington Post's original choice for the UN site as Geneva, partly because of that city's advantageous location and facilities for accommodation of delegates and partly because it was feared that American absorption in domestic issues would cause us to underrate the importance of UN deliberations. The misgivings expressed at that time have been revived by the current attacks on the character of UN delegates, which are so inimical to effective international cooperation.

A Joint Congressional Committee on Intelligence

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDWARD J. DEVITT
OF MINNESOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mr. DEVITT. Mr. Speaker, during the second session of the Eightieth Congress I introduced a resolution to set up a Joint Congressional Committee on Intelligence. It was my thought that Congress should create a "watchdog" committee over all of our intelligence agencies to serve in the same way that the Joint Atomic Energy Committee is serving so usefully in the field of atomic energy. A recent article by the noted authority, Hanson W. Baldwin, advocates the creation of such a congressional committee. I include in my remarks the expressions of Mr. Baldwin as recently contained in the New York Times. The article follows:

INTELLIGENCE, V.—BROADER CONTROL SET-UP IS HELD NEED, WITH A "WATCHDOG" UNIT FOR CONGRESS

(By Hanson W. Baldwin)

The enlargement of present intelligence activities of the Government and the establishment of a congressional "watchdog" committee to study and inspect those activities continuously are two of the major reforms required in the reorganization and modernization of our intelligence proceedures.

The first suggestion—enlargement of our intelligence activities—already has received some attention from Allen Dulles, chairman of a three-man group, which has been surveying our intelligence agencies. Mr. Dulles is the brother of John Foster Dulles, who is generally regarded as the next Secretary of State if Governor Dewey should be elected to the Presidency. The need for enlargement of some of our postwar concepts of intelligence was stressed by John Foster Dulles recently in a speech to the Bond Club of New York.

Mr. Dulles, in his address, recommended "an organization dedicated to the task of nonmilitary defense." Such an organization, he held, should expose Communist and other subversive plottings, "tell adequately through radio and press the story of what is happening," protect "the free press" of other countries by opportunity to "get print paper;" provide "asylum for those menaced by Communist terrorism," and help leaders-in-exile of foreign countries overrun by communism "to go on working for freedom."

JOINT ORGANIZATIONS MOOTED

John Foster Dulles did not spell out the details of his proposal, but seemed to lump together the functions now conducted by the State Department's Voice of America, the FBI and the Central Intelligence Agency. Such an organization as he described would presumably conduct some of the same activities carried on by the Office of Strategic Services during the war, plus political warfare and psychological warfare, including the utilization of "black radio" or clandestine stations operating perhaps behind the iron curtain. In wartime other activities, including sabotage, would be included in its scope.

No single organization of Government now has any such all-embracing charter as this, but the CIA could conduct some of the activities suggested, particularly "black radio" and the encouragement of anti-Communist minorities. There is some feeling that the CIA has not hitherto approached this phase of its work with broad enough viewpoint. Allen Dulles' survey already has resulted in a reemphasis of these "secret operations," but it seems likely that most of these will be conducted by the CIA. No such inclusive over-all organization as that apparently suggested by John Foster Dulles is probable, at least in the immediate future.

EARLY WARTIME MERGER FAILED

A merger of psychological warfare and intelligence activities was tried in the early days of the war, but did not work out, and there was a resulant split into the Office of War Information and the Office of Strategic Services. The State Department must also have a major voice in "political warfare" and in dealings with leaders-in-exile. It does not seem possible, therefore, to centralize all such operations in a single department or agency, nor is it desirable. From the congressional and public point of view such an organization would represent too great a grant of power.

Nevertheless the need for a greater emphasis on "secret operations" as well as on "secret intelligence" is now obvious, and some agencies of Government must perform all the functions mentioned by John Foster Dulles as well as other functions to which he did not allude. The CIA is the place for many of them but not for all.

"WATCHDOG" GROUP SUGGESTED

Because of the importance to national security of secret intelligence and secret operations, because of our past errors in intelligence, and particularly because the grants of power given to intelligence agencies must be major and secret, a congressional committee to act as a discreet watchdog over all our intelligence agencies—particularly the CIA—ought to be established. It ought to be composed of men of great discretion and thorough reliability, close-mouthed men able to keep secrets. It should be composed of representatives of both parties; such a committee must be nonpartisan, for, above all, intelligence must be kept out of politics. It should have the same relationship to the CIA and other intelligence agencies that the Senate House Atomic Energy Committee has to the United States Atomic Energy Commission. Such a group, to act as a sympathetic advocate for our intelligence agencies and at the same time as a gadfly to those agencies and a check-rein upon undue power, would serve a highly useful purpose in the atomic age in establishing and maintaining a sound intelligence system—the first line of defense.

President's Executive Orders of July 26, 1948

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ED GOSSETT
OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mr. GOSSETT. Mr. Speaker, in issuing an Executive order setting up an FEPC in Federal employment and abolishing segregation in the armed services, the President has again surrendered to the Reds and radicals. Apparently he is trying to carry out one of the planks in the Henry Wallace platform.

Insofar as employment in Washington goes, the minorities to whom this political sop has been thrown already have their pro rata share of Government jobs.

Insofar as the armed services go, the whites—not the Negroes—have been the victims of discrimination. Could it be that anyone would attempt to destroy the esprit de corps of our armed services for political purposes? A comparison of the combat and casualty records of whites and Negroes during the war will show that the Negroes certainly have no grounds on which to complain.

Government Should Act at Once To Aid Rice Industry

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAMES DOMENGEAUX
OF LOUISIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mr. DOMENGEAUX. Mr. Speaker, the harvest of the American rice crop is about to take place, and the industry faces a very grave economic situation unless the Federal Government acts promptly to assure a Cuban market for this important product.

Because of improved and faster methods, the harvesting season has been reduced to not over 90 days. Storage facilities are inadequate, and the rice millers are not buying as in the past because of the uncertainty of the Government program. This is demonstrated by the fact that when the first lot of rice was offered in Louisiana a few days ago there was only one offer. This indicates the weakness on the part of the mills because Washington has not yet indicated any intention of acting to expedite the movement of the new crop that will be on us within the next 2 weeks to 30 days.

Our producers should be permitted to sell all of the rice that Cuba needs. Cuba has the storage facilities, and our Government should provide at once for all the export licenses necessary for this purpose. While Cuba is our most important rice export market, the American industry is shut off from doing business there while large quantities of rice are being sent to Cuba by Brazil and Mexico.

Although the IEFC has recommended rice allocations to Cuba, governmental agencies have not made any recommendations or announced any plans. In fact the Government has stated in published reports that this will not be done until late fall. This creates a most serious situation and one that threatens the welfare of the entire rice sections of Louisiana, Texas, and Arkansas. The rice-growing areas mean much to these States.

More rice will be produced this season than domestic and normal export markets require. The Government's program will determine whether the crop is to be marketed in a normal, healthy manner, or if there is to be a surplus and weakened market with chaotic results. Right on the eve of harvesting this record crop the industry is in the dark as to the Government's intentions. If money is available in European or other markets that need and want American rice and if the Government permits the trade to supply these markets, or if the Government itself see fit to move our surplus crop into deficient countries on an adequate price level, the prospects are good. On the other hand, if the Government continues to delay announcement of plans and continues to withhold export licenses and fails to buy an adequate amount at a proper price level, causing a depressing surplus to accumulate, disastrous results are in prospect.

The rice industry in this country is certainly entitled to know what the Government intends to do and is certainly entitled to protection and the right to sell on the Cuban market. Surely it is unfair and unreasonable to close our own doors against this market while other countries are benefiting therefrom.

I call upon the Government to do something about this situation at once. There is no time to be lost. Each day that the governmental agencies put off action, the welfare and prosperity of the rice industry become more and more at stake. In the name of reason and fairness, a fine and vital industry should be given assurance of Government aid and protection without further delay.

High Cost of Living

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. THOMAS J. LANE
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include the enclosed editorial which appeared in the Boston Post, a newspaper published in the city of Boston, Mass., on July 24, 1948. This editorial contains some valuable information, and I assume the contents of which are worthy and merit the personal consideration of Members of Congress. It is quite evident from this article that some immediate and remedial legislation should be passed in this special session of Congress to relieve the high cost of living:

PRICES AT A PEAK

The cost of living has hit the all-time high, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, reaching 171.7 percent of the 1935–39 average.

There is a significant move taken by President Truman with the appointment of wartime Price Administrator Paul A. Porter as a special assistant to help formulate anti-inflation legislation to be recommended to the Congress.

What is most significant, however, is that living costs have risen almost 75 percent above the 1939 average, and since the end of price controls over consumer goods in June of 1946, living costs have risen 28 percent.

Let's look at the record, as Al Smith would say. OPA was doomed by the insistence of groups avid for money out of big profiteering schemes. The black market was bad, surely, but even the most brazen black marketeers didn't have the sturdy gall to charge $1.20 a pound for round steak hammered into so-called tenderness. They were considered piratical when they charged $1 a pound for sirloin.

Price controls worked during the war, and the line had been held. Prices on VJ-day in August 1945 had only risen 29 percent, despite the pressure of all the inflationary money in circulation.

If the facts are faced, the farmers of the grain and cattle States have harvested a bonanza. They tapped a mother lode of pure treasure, and the new crop of millionaires in the State of Texas, and the plentiful supply of cash that the farm bloc throws around in Washington, is ample proof that the farmers want the inflationary party to continue.

There has got to be another price-control law on food, or a workable anti-inflationary law to hold prices. The fact might as well be faced now. Without price controls, even rationing, people are going to starve in the midst of plenty.

The controls, however, should apply all the way along the line, from the furrow to the family, from the cattle ranges to the kitchen ranges. Both parties in the Congress should take a good long look at the American people. They are likely to get a rude surprise in November if they don't.

The women of the United States spend most of the money. They spend virtually all of the money spent for food. They know just what kind of a deal they have endured during the last 3 years. They know who gave the death blow to OPA—and, though some of them clamored for an end of OPA, they are now aware that things were better then.

A rise of over 9 percent in living costs in a single year, which every American housewife has experienced in the past year, is too much for them to take without protest. If their protests are not heeded now, those who decline to do anything about inflation and run-away prices may heed a message from the ballot box.

The middlemen and the retailers of food are being hit as hard as the consumers. But, away back along the line where the food originates, they have never had it so good. Price supports for agriculture are costing the American people millions of dollars every day so that farmers can produce surpluses which will then be doled out in a trickle at high prices while good old Uncle Sam pays and hands the bill along to the taxpayers and consumers.

If the special session of the Eightieth Congress does nothing about inflation, if the desperate need of the American people for financial stability is ignored, the Eightieth Congress will pass into history with a shameful record.

Truman Sponsors High-Price Program, But Fools No One

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LAWRENCE H. SMITH
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, in the heat of a Presidential campaign the President has declared "that an extraordinary occasion requires the Congress of the United States to convene," and so forth. Since the day the proclamation was issued there has been no further statement. The decision of the President came at the fag end of the Democratic National Convention, where he was all but kicked out of his own party. This special session is politically the brain child of a man who knows he is a dead duck.

Mr. Speaker, the Members of this body in both parties are greatly concerned about inflation and its effect on the rising costs of living. The President will ask for a return to price controls and rationing. That is his only solution for the problem. Never has he advocated or even suggested that the New Deal program for saving the world was chiefly responsible for the shortages that now prevail and which cause high prices. Nor has he ever said or admitted that Government policies under him are also important factors in promoting high prices. I use the word "promoting," Mr. Speaker, advisedly, but the people should understand that the President's policies actually sponsor a program that is leading this country to a ruinous inflation which accounts for high prices.

Mr. Speaker, if the President was honest and sincere in his statements that high prices are becoming a burden on all of the people of this country, he should have acted months ago to change inflationary practices in his department. He is a spendthrift with taxpayers' dollars. His is a program to spend and spend, tax and tax. We cannot expect to support the rest of the world with the products from our mines, factories, and fields and still expect to have sufficient goods for our own people. This is the President's responsibility.

Mr. Speaker, just last week a British purchasing mission, according to news reports, came to Wisconsin and outbid domestic purchasers of cheese. That mission offered 4 cents a pound over the market price for cheese. Of course, American dollars were used to make the purchases. Mr. Paul Hoffman, director of ECA, has testified that "a lot of the money we spent so far and expect to spend in the next year, something under $2,000,000,000, will go for agricultural products." We must realize, Mr. Speaker, that $2,000,000,000 for agricultural products represents a huge lot of food and taken from this country means less food for our people at higher prices. But Mr. Truman remains discreetly quiet about this phase of the problem, because it is poor politics.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the President has asked for power to establish price controls and rationing. This request is on the theory that the cost of living is rising because of inflation, but he fails to analyze the cause of it.

Even those who benefit by our generosity admit that the Truman give-away program makes for higher and higher prices in this country. The London Sunday Express was recently quoted as follows:

This European recovery program hits Americans a double blow. They pay higher taxes to provide aid for Britain and western Europe and they pay higher prices for what they buy.

What is causing this rise in prices? There is no mystery about it. When some $7,000,000,000 of foreign-aid funds are added to the supply of money that is bidding for many commodities in short supply, the prices of these commodities naturally go higher.

Mr. Speaker, it takes no learned economist to understand the truth of the above statement. But Harry Truman does not understand it. If he did, and if he is sincere in his professed desire to prevent prices from going higher, then he personally could prevent the consummation of inflationary governmental practices that are about to wreck the economy of this country and destroy its people. The power lies with him and not the Congress.

Proposed Civil-Rights Legislation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE H. FALLON
OF MARYLAND
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Baltimore Sun of Sunday, July 18, 1948:

GOOD FOR NOBODY

With both Democrats and Republicans now pledged to adopt laws enforcing what are known as civil rights, we may assume that passage of such laws will be one of the major concerns of the special session which Mr. Truman has chosen to call.

If we forget for a minute the snide politics—on both sides—which have created this situation and consider it only in terms of the national welfare, the outlook is bleak. The southern Senators, we may be sure, will seek by every means, including filibuster, to prevent the passage of the laws they fear. But their influence in the Congress is now greatly diminished. If they fail to stall the legislative machine, the fat will be in the fire.

Here are some pertinent facts bearing on the Negro question as the Deep South sees it. The State of Georgia contains 159 counties; in 43 of these, the Negro population outnumbers the white. Mississippi has 82 counties; in 34 of these the Negroes are in a majority. Alabama has 67 counties, in 16 of which the Negroes predominate.

Now take the related facts about Maryland. We have 23 counties, plus Baltimore City. White people outnumber Negroes in every one of them. Even Charles County is better than 53 percent white. How much easier, therefore, for us to hold high the standard of tolerance. We have no threat of Negro domination.

Yet there are southerners who have fought long and well for the improvement of the status of the Negroes in both the civil and economic fields. Their achievements have not been spectacular but they have been continuous. They have been continuous despite the ever-present handicap of Bilboism and other manifestations of the cultural lag. All over the South today there are schools for Negroes, hospitals for Negroes, and even, in some States, professional education for Negroes. Lynching has all but disappeared. The poll tax is on the way out. An increasing proportion of Negroes go to the polls and cast free ballots. Housing projects are undertaken for them at public expense. They benefit from the various agricultural subsidies. All of which is equivalent to saying that, thanks to the wisdom of enlightened men and women in the South, white and colored, the Negro is gradually being brought to a position where he can be accepted on his own terms as a dignified and responsible citizen.

Significantly, much of this progress must be credited to the courts, both State and Federal. Most southern judges and southern lawyers still uphold the tradition of learning and of the validity of law in the social organization. Moreover, the citizens generally accept the mandates of their tribunals, for southerners are as law-abiding as the inhabitants of any part of the country. The combination of Negro pressure, enlightened leadership, and wise and prudent application of the law is responsible for the gradual progress which is being made.

Admittedly, the important word here is "gradual." It is the gradualness of the advance which, naturally enough, irritates some of the Negro's spokesmen. But, considering the factors, this very gradualness is the best guarantee of the continuation of the advance.

If the proposed Federal laws accomplish anything at all—and this is debatable—they mean an end to gradualness. But the substitute for gradualness, the only possible substitute, is force. Force can be applied only by the commissioning of numerous Federal agents and enforcement officers. How else can an employer, for instance, be driven to employing Negroes if his reason or his prejudices tell him that the work in hand is white man's work? Assuming the employer yields, how shall we control the resulting community resentment? How many enforcement officers would it take to force the 1,800-odd white residents of Georgia's Webster County to turn over their local governmental machinery to the 2,900 Negro residents of the same county? Could enforcement officers do it without the help of soldiers from nearby Fort Benning?

There is no point in pretending that the necessary implications of the proposals which have split the Democratic Party are not there. There is no point in pretending that Mr. Truman's decision to call the Congress into special session does not bring nearer the passage of the force bills for which the civil-rights declarations of both parties call. The prospect at worst is a terrible one for the country.

The Sun, whose part in the long struggle for racial tolerance is in the record, still clings to the hope that the worst will not materialize. It would be tragic to see the South forced, by the abandonment of gradualism, to accept the leadership of its demagogs. It would be an evil day for the Negroes were the enlightened southerners who have struggled so long and accomplished so much for them driven into obscurity and impotence.

But gradualism will be abandoned and civil turmoil will ensue unless, either in the Congress or outside it, the country produces something more like statesmanship than is visible today.

Farewell to Freedom in Our Land of Over Here

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE B. SCHWABE
OF OKLAHOMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, my attention has just been called to one of the most interesting situations which has presented itself to me in recent years. Mr. L. G. Burt, of Tulsa, Okla., was one of the many Democratic candidates for nomination to the United States Senate from Oklahoma, in the primary held July 6, 1948. As a part of Mr. Burt's campaign he offered prizes to those who would write the best letter showing the constitutional authority for our New Deal Presidents to issue Executive orders with the force and effect of law, and the right under the Constitution for the Executives to do many things that they have done during the past 15 years.

Mr. Burt had printed, at his own expense, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States, which he furnished to everyone who desired to compete for a prize. Apparently, his desire was to get the people interested in knowing the provisions of these revered and historic documents, and it resulted in a great interest being manifested in that direction. In his letter, Mr. Burt said: "You win in this contest, regardless of who may get the prize money. The knowledge you gain will pay dividends as long as you live."

Among those who competed for the prizes was a young man 22 years old, who had served in the United States Navy 3 years and 7 months, and is now a student at the University of Tulsa. This young man's mother was left a widow when the boy was only 12 years old. He is an outstanding young man of great promise. Obviously, "some place in this young man's life he has crossed the path of some individual who started him on the right road as an independent thinker." In his effort to express his meaning, he clothes his thoughts in forceful and beautiful words. Mr. Burt has just sent me a photostatic copy of the letter he received from this young man, Mr. Wayne L. Fiskin, of Tulsa, Okla., which I quote as follows:

JULY 16, 1948.

BURT-FOR-SENATE CLUB,
Tulsa, Okla.

GENTLEMEN: Upon receipt of your pamphlet containing copies of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States, I was alarmed at the words I saw therein. Not alarmed by the remarkable lucidity of the documents themselves, but by the frightening words between the lines read into those great documents by the men in our Government who are charged with their interpretation.

Further study of such a startling subject gave rise to apprehensions and thoughts so compelling that I found myself writing them down—in verse form, in the poem I am enclosing, and which I am submitting to you as my entry in your contest.

I realize this entry is not a letter, nor do I claim it to be a wonderful poem. But I assure you, gentlemen, there are no words between the lines, and the simple rhymes themselves come straight from the heart of the writer.

As you say, everybody wins in this contest, but thoughts are only paper gains. We should all take not only thought on these things, but action as well.

Yours for a better government for a better America.

WAYNE L. FISKIN,
Student, University of Tulsa.

Mr. Fiskin's poem should challenge our most patriotic instincts, and cause us to resolve to combat the New Deal tendencies toward socialism and communism on every hand. Every boy and girl in this country, every loyal American, should read and ponder the inspiring words of this noble veteran. The title of the poem Farewell to Freedom in Our Land of Over Here, may soon become a sad reality. Prize Winner Wayne L. Fiskin's poem follows:

FAREWELL TO FREEDOM IN OUR LAND OF OVER HERE

When I was just a baby boy
And still unknown to fear,
My mother used to cuddle me
And whisper in my ear
Of blessings of the liberty
I was yet to enjoy,
And wonders that the future held
For such a little boy!

She whispered of starvation graves
In lands across the sea,
Of people who had not the "sand"
To fight for liberty,
Who were content to live as slaves
Where tyrants rule by fear,
When they could leave their cursed land
And come to "Over Here"!

For they could come and here partake
Of opportunity!
And live their lives where right was might
And enterprise was free!
Oh, glad was I to share that right
With men on freedom bent,
For here, I could a million make
Or could be President!

And with those dreams I grew to boast
Of my great country dear,
And with my friends I laughed at things
That could not happen here;
'Till economic stress saw schemes
Of compromise with fear,
And principles we hated most
Took footholds over here!

And, oh, too soon we were to pay
The price of that mistake,
And sacrifice our liberties
To keep our country "great"!
Unlimited installments pay,
With freedoms, one by one,
The ghastly cost of theories
Our fathers sought to shun!

For we have seen our freedoms fade,
And in their place appear
The socialistic bureaucrats
That frighten us with fear!
A Government of costly men
Who strive to make it clear
That we might make a million, but
We cannot make it here!!

And memories of times gone by,
The dreams of yesteryear,
The thoughts that things that I love most
Are not as they appear,
Such thoughts bring to my heart a sigh
And, oftentimes, a tear
To mourn the land I loved and lost,
The land of Over Here!

The DP Issue

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ED GOSSETT
OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mr. GOSSETT. Mr. Speaker, the statement that the DP bill passed by the Congress in June discriminates against Catholics and Jews is ridiculously untrue. The bill discriminates against the American people but is most generous to displaced persons seeking a haven in this country.

According to the official records of the State Department, of those now in DP camps, roughly 20 percent are Jews and 50 percent are Catholics. Under the President's Executive order of December 22, 1945, supposedly written by Samuel Rosenman, of the DP's admitted to date, according to State Department figures, better than 66 percent have been Jews while only 17 percent have been Catholics. Thus the administration, instead of Congress, has grossly discriminated against Catholics.

Under the bill passed by Congress, more than 50 percent of those who will be admitted will be Catholics, while the Jews will come in according to their just ratio.

The President's appeal to religious and racial prejudices is to be regretted.

I shall certainly oppose with all my might his recommendation for further relaxation of immigration laws.

The bill was passed after 2 years of misleading, high-pressure propaganda, and the expenditure of millions of dollars by the DP lobby. Now some of the Zionists and political hypocrites are trying to make a cat's-paw out of the fine Catholic folk by saying the bill discriminates against them. They are too intelligent and fundamentally American to be deceived by any such propaganda.

Deceptive Dollars

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE W. GILLIE
OF INDIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, July 26, 1948

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to revise and extend my remarks, I include a timely editorial from the Farm Journal:

DECEPTIVE DOLLARS

As long as Americans continue to use the present kind of dollars, trouble will stir in the land. The prices of food and goods will drift upward. People whose incomes do not rise will become able to buy less and less. Inequalities will increase. Protests will multiply, and strikes will be repeated.

Farmers suffer somewhat less, in this phase of inflation, than do many other people. The falling dollar means high dollar prices for tangible commodities like goods and fibers.

Any prosperity, however, that is based on a weakened currency carries its illusions. As prices rise the number of people who can afford to buy luxury foods declines. That process goes on now. Already thousands of families find great difficulty in buying even necessary foods and clothing. Thus, despite higher prices, the market for farm products becomes narrower.

In Europe, the currency situation delays and almost prevents recovery. It makes success of American aid highly uncertain. The people suffer daily from the instability of their money. There, and in China (we saw a letter from China the other day with $8,000 postage) conditions warn Americans of what could happen to dollars here at home.

Neither political party here has been willing to face the currency problem squarely. The dollar no longer represents either work that has been done, is being done, or is expected to be done. Cut off from gold, it no longer has any tie to stored labor. Based largely upon Government borrowing, it has little relation to present productive effort. Paper has no intrinsic worth.

The Republican platform failed to go into this basic matter, declaring merely for the generality of a "sound currency." The Democratic platform, adopted this week, does not acknowledge that anything is wrong.

The people, however, always have to face the consequences and suffer the costs of political actions and inaction.

The United States needs a gold dollar again, and needs to make it impossible for banks to issue currency backed only by Federal borrowing.

Judge Alfred A. Sartorelli

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. THOMAS J. LANE
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to include an excellent editorial which appeared in the Chelsea Evening Record, of Chelsea, Mass., on Friday, July 23, 1948, in reference to the retirement of one of the leading citizens of that city who has served with honor and distinction for the past 3 years as chairman of the unpaid Chelsea Housing Authority.

This man, who is respected and admired not only by the citizenry of his home city but by thousands of others outside Chelsea, is Judge Alfred A. Sartorelli. Through his leadership as chairman of the housing committee and his associate members of this most active group Chelsea, Mass., was the first city in the United States to receive temporary veterans housing, and due to the work and effort of Judge Sartorelli plans have been formulated and are in readiness for a permanent housing project in that community.

Judge Sartorelli has without doubt worked unselfishly and unceasingly as chairman of the housing authority in behalf of the people of his home city for the purpose of relieving the critical housing shortage in that locality. We all regret the fact that it is mandatory that he resign from this board for the purpose of obtaining more rest and relaxation in order to restore his health, and we sincerely hope that within a short period of time he will be well enough to again render to the city of Chelsea his outstanding ability and energy for service on other civic matters.

The editorial follows:

UNSELFISH SERVICE

Because his health was breaking under the strain of continued conscientious, unselfish devotion to serving the community, Judge Alfred A. Sartorelli has been obliged to resign as chairman of the Chelsea Housing Authority.

No man in many years has devoted more time, energy or given so liberally of his own talents and sacrificed so much as has Judge Sartorelli in the past decade. His example of utterly unselfish service to the city marks him as one of our outstanding citizens.

Chairman from the day the board was founded, Judge Sartorelli is credited with having whipped plans into shape, doing the legal work at no expense to the city, and making the detailed arrangements which resulted in Chelsea being the first community in the United States to receive Federal approval and financial aid for the construction of temporary housing for our veterans.

Under his guidance, the local housing authority is about ready to announce approval by Federal agencies for the construction of 450 units of permanent housing.

As Judge Sartorelli leaves his strenuous work, one finds that under his direction, the temporary housing has been run at a small profit, it has paid taxes to the city and there is an ample reserve to meet any emergencies.

No scandals have been attached to the Chelsea housing plans under Judge Sartorelli. Not even a hint of anything out of line has been heard. Only words of commendation.

The housing authority has not been this man's sole contribution of service to the community. He gave willingly and gladly of his seemingly inexhaustible energy for a year and one-half on the city's unpaid zoning commission, which he served as chairman, and which revised the city's zoning ordinances.

He was chairman of the annual Red Cross campaigns in Chelsea for 3 years, and each were eminently successful. Judge Sartorelli was legal advisor to one of the city's two draft boards and for some time he was a director and vice president of the chamber of commerce.

To all of these things he has given generously of himself in so many ways. From none of them has he received anything. And what makes it more notable these days, he was seeking nothing.

None can say that Alfred A. Sartorelli has not contributed his full measure of service to Chelsea.

Dewey Versus Truman

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN C. KUNKEL

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, as the Presidential campaign progresses, the personalities, background, and ability of the candidates heading the various tickets will more and more become the determining factors in the final decision of the voters on election day. Most voters will finally decide to support the candidate of one or the other two major parties. Hence, everyone should secure as much accurate information as he or she can on this subject.

George E. Sokolsky has compared one distinction between the two candidates in an article appearing in the July 16, 1948, edition of the Harrisburg Evening News. His conclusions in this regard have been substantiated by my personal observations over a period of years and by the statements of those in close contact with both men. The article which follows stresses one of the major differences between Governor Dewey and President Truman:

DEWEY VERSUS TRUMAN

(By George E. Sokolsky)

The differences in personality between Harry Truman and Tom Dewey will appear fully during the campaign. Both, it is true, were born in small towns; both are wedded to family life; both lack that physical stature, that public manner, that startling voice that Hollywood and the radio have made so popular in American politics. Both are unquestionably honest men. Both are lovers of music.

But there the similarities cease. Harry Truman is neither by education nor training prepared for the tremendous tasks which political fortune has thrust upon him and which he now assumes voluntarily. Tom Dewey has spent all his mature years preparing himself for the Presidency. Harry Truman fears men of superior qualities. Although at first he turned to Herbert Hoover, Bernard Baruch, James Byrnes, and other experienced citizens for support, he has since surrounded himself with inferior persons, cronies of Missouri or his early Washington days, flatterers and fawners but not men of administrative ability or political prescience.

Tom Dewey built a team of extraordinary competent men who have been with him since he entered upon a public career. Curiously, an unusually large number of them are around 46 years old, as is Dewey himself. Some of them were raw material when they cast their lot in the Dewey career; they have been hammered by experience into a competent administrative force which can work together. There are no private quarrels, no empire building, no back-biting, or back-scratching in this team, whose success is the result of learning to work together over a prolonged period. I know each man and woman on it well and personally, and what those at the Philadelphia convention saw for the first time, I have witnessed for years—as smooth an organization as a Notre Dame football team.

Whereas Truman has had to slap down his assistants publicly and whereas they fight each other in public, the Dewey team does not consist of robots. They sit with the Governor in council where everything is put on the table, every difference of opinion, every criticism, every gripe. As these men have been with him throughout his career, from racket busting up, they are used to each other and are intimate, and they speak frankly, but they do not bicker. Decisions are made by the team and once made are carried through.

I cite an instance from the Republican Convention. When JOE MARTIN refused to permit Senator RAYMOND BALDWIN, of Connecticut, to poll his delegation, the Dewey leaders on the floor realized that there would be trouble. But no one rushed to the telephone to consult either Dewey or Brownell. When the motion for adjournment came and was booed and hooted, Ed Jaeckle and Russell Sprague decided to announce that New York had no objection to an adjournment. They knew that the adjournment was called to stop Dewey, but they did not hesitate. Dewey told me subsequently that he did not know what it all meant and wanted news. But his representatives acted on their own. I drove from the convention hall with Jaeckle, and we were speculating on what Dewey would say about not making a fight on the adjournment. Jaeckle finally said, "Nothing. Tom delegates. That's why it must work. We don't need a conference every 5 minutes."

It is this administrative skill which gives Dewey his competence. For he is not all knowing, all wise. And that he is willing to admit. That is why he emphasizes teamwork and why he got along so swimmingly with the New York Legislature. A man who recognizes his limitations and has the wisdom to compensate for them is a great administrator. For most of the bottlenecks in business as in government are at the top where often sits a boss who ties important problems into knots because he is incapable of handling them and he will not delegate authority to a big enough man out of fear or jealousy.

Harry Truman failed just for that reason. A decent, honest, well-meaning man, he lacks the knowledge for his job and the administrative skill to compensate for his limitations by organizing a top-notch team. He cannot use big enough men.

How the Reds Go Fishing for Intellectual Suckers

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. KARL E. MUNDT

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me by the House, I take this opportunity of calling to the attention of the Congress and the country one of the innumerable techniques and tactics used by the left-wing outfits of America in their program of promoting by stealth and by subterfuge the interests of Soviet communism as contrasted with constitutional Americanism. I hope at least some readers of this statement will take pen in hand for the purpose of congratulating President Benson, of Harding College, on his alert Americanism and his refusal to take the bait tossed out to him by this so-called Committee of One Thousand whose influence for good I am sure is destined to be far less than that of any one ordinary American with courage enough to stand up and fight for the constitutional institutions which have made our country great.

President Benson's letter speaks for itself. Unfortunately, I do not have a copy of the literary fish bait which this Mr. Brooks tossed out to President Benson in an effort to seduce him into letting his name be used in a smear and stench campaign to try to protect American Communists from the exposures which the House Committee on Un-American Activities has been so effectively devoting to them.

Based on previous experience and earlier and similar attempts of this sort by various and sundry committees, however, I presume the Committee of One Thousand beats its breast with one hand while patting itself on the back with the other and implores and beseeches Americans who should know better to loan the use of their names and their influence to a few left-wing, self-styled intellectuals who once having secured the signatures of our innocents at home promptly proceed to distort the announced purposes for which the committee is formed. Undoubtedly, also, the same similar patter of the same old party-line crowd fills the paragraphs of this futile plea urging President Benson to let the committee borrow the use of his name and his prestige. Beyond doubt, this letter to suckers was filled with much of the same kind of twaddle about "liberalism," "progressivism," "civil liberties," and so forth as recently filled the air so unfragrantly at the Wallace-Taylor-Stalin convention in Philadelphia.

It is hoped that more sturdy Americans of the type of President Benson will take steps to disclose this pernicious practice by which committees and organizations of one type or another seek to seduce people of good reputations to lend their names for hire to self-seeking individuals and organizations whose energy is much more commendable than their end objectives.

The letter from President Benson to the Committee of One Thousand follows:

JULY 23, 1948.

VAN WYCK BROOKS,
Committee of One Thousand,
New York, N. Y.

DEAR MR. BROOKS: I have your mimeographed letter mailed on July 16, and asking me to help abolish the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

I believe, Mr. Brooks, you are making a very serious mistake. It is not the House Committee on Un-American Activities that threatens the freedom and liberties and prosperity of this Nation.

It is the people this committee are after that are actually threatening our freedoms, our liberties, our economic system, our constitutional Government, and our traditional prosperity.

I believe you would be rendering a much better service to the people of this Nation and to the cause of freedom and liberty if you were definitely and heartily supporting the Committee on Un-American Activities.

Yours for genuine freedom, genuine liberty, and real prosperity.

Most sincerely,

GEO. S. BENSON,
President, Harding College, Searcy, Ark.

The Real Way to Stop Inflation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HOWARD H. BUFFETT
OF NEBRASKA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mr. BUFFETT. Mr. Speaker, on March 12, 1947, Mr. Truman addressed a joint session of the House and Senate. On that occasion he proposed an inflationary hand-out for Greece and Turkey.

Six days later, March 18, 1947, I analyzed the Greek-Turk scheme on this floor. My remarks included this prediction:

This scheme would lay the inflation headache right in the laps of the Republicans. Truman could then say that the end of OPA, not the foreign hand-outs, brought skyrocketing price levels. The Republicans could not point out that excessive foreign hand-outs caused the inflation, because they would be recorded in favor of that policy.

Unfortunately little attention was paid to the political trap in which the President was leading us.

Again today the President addressed a joint session of House and Senate. He demanded totalitarian price-control powers and other implements of regimentation not too different from those used by the Nazis.

If Congress doesn't give him police-state powers, Congress is to blame for the high cost of living—was the tenor of his message.

Do the Members of Congress really want to stop inflation and rising prices permanently?

History fails to record that that goal has ever been achieved by Government controls such as the President wants.

That objective—the permanent halting of inflationary price movements—has historically only been achieved by one remedy—the restoration of an honest money redeemable in gold.

Possibly the President is politically afraid to really stop inflation—for he carefully avoids mention of the real remedy.

Mr. Speaker, inflation in America will not be stopped until effective action is taken toward restoring an honest money redeemable in gold. The pages of history record no other solution.

I have introduced H. R. 5301, to restore the right of the individual American to own gold and to set a date for our irredeemable paper currency again to be redeemable in gold. Action on this measure can put the brakes on inflation.

Perhaps the special session is not considered a practical time to act on H. R. 5031.

In that event I again call attention to H. R. 6957, a bill providing for the establishment of a National Monetary Commission, introduced on June 16.

The task of restoring sound currency must be tackled immediately. Possibly definite legislation toward this end is not practicable at the special session. Then certainly this session might well pass my proposal for a bipartisan commission to study and present plans for the solution of our inflationary and monetary ills at the first session of the Eighty-first Congress.

Segregation in the Armed Forces

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. OVERTON BROOKS
OF LOUISIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, it is a serious mistake to bring politics into the armed services. It is a mistake to attempt to make of the Army, Navy, and the Air Force a means of providing social reforms. Such action cannot do other than injure the high standard of efficiency of this defense organization.

And yet, Mr. Speaker, the Executive action yesterday in creating a new seven-member Fair Employment Board and creating a new committee on equality of treatment and opportunity in the armed services can have no other effect. Such action will provide a superboard for the purpose of examining every problem and every situation within the armed services to find out whether any discrimination or segregation is being practiced between races. This superboard will have unlimited authority to go into everything, setting aside and disturbing discipline, administration orders and rules, all for the purpose of finding out whether or not the Army, Navy, Air Force, or the Marines are discriminating or segregating the races in the armed services.

The armed forces at best have a very hard job in the handling of the race question. It is a touchy matter to handle. On the whole they have done a good job. Capt. Robert Berry, personal public relations adviser to Defense Secretary James V. Forrestal, properly said that "as far as I know there is no discrimination in the armed forces."

In these times of major crises throughout the world it is a mistake to try to provide social reforms for the armed services. The result may be to seriously cripple and impair the full value of these forces. The result may be to injure them at a time when the world looks to us for strength and courage.

High Cost of Living

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHRISTIAN A. HERTER
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mr. HERTER. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the high cost of living is a topic on which most politicians and many laymen are now expressing their views, I wish to call attention to a few interesting facts.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics has stated categorically that food costs represent 40 percent of the average person's outlays and are therefore given a weighting of 40 percent in the over-all cost-of-living index.

I think everyone will agree that the two most important items in the average person's diet are bread and meat. Both of these commodities are sold in a free market and the cost of wheat, as well as the cost of animals on the hoof, determine in most part the ultimate cost to the consumer. In a free market price is determined by the law of supply and demand. With a greater supply of wheat and of beef cattle, the prices of bread and meat would go down. Yet what do we find the administration doing?

On July 24 the United States Department of Agriculture put out a release stating the national goals for 1949 production of several important farm commodities which were being recommended to the States by the Department of Agriculture. What are the recommendations with respect to wheat and with respect to beef cattle? On wheat the Department of Agriculture recommends that the acreage to be seeded in wheat for 1949 be decreased from the 1948 plantings by 8 percent. With respect to beef cattle, the Department recommends that the farmers decrease their beef cattle breeding herds by about one-half million head below the number on farms on January 1, 1948. In other words, our Government is officially trying to decrease production both of wheat and of beef cattle in the very moment when it is talking about inordinately high food prices.

With respect to the housing situation, I am quoting below an Associated Press dispatch dated July 5, 1948, giving the Commerce Department's figures on new construction in the month of June. These figures are, I believe, of special interest in the light of the fact that this construction, the highest for any month on record and showing for the first 6 months of 1948 an increase of 60 percent over the same period for 1947, is taking place in a free market.

I personally believe that the Federal Government should encourage the construction of some low-cost rental housing in large metropolitan areas, but the limitation on construction today lies with materials and labor, and any such federally subsidized housing would, of course, have to take the place of some of the types of housing described in the AP dispatch.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—The Commerce Department tonight estimated new construction in June at $1,605,000,000, the highest dollar value for any month on record.

The total, measuring construction work actually done and excluding contracts for later performance, was an increase of 11 percent over May or slightly more than the normal rise between those months.

It was a full 38 percent higher than in June of last year, and $100,000,000 above the previous record levels attained last October and in July 1942.

The value of all private construction in June was $1,218,000,000, a 10-percent gain over May. Housing accounted for more than half of the total.

Private housing construction alone came to $625,000,000, a 9-percent gain over May and a 54-percent rise over June last year. The house construction total for the first 6 months of 1948 was $3,100,000,000, a 60-percent increase over the same period of 1947.

Other types of privately financed work which gained in June 1948, as compared to June 1947, included: School buildings, 50 percent; stores, restaurants, and garages, 82 percent; and religious structures, 138 percent.

Industrial building was the only class of privately financed construction to decline. Totaling $110,000,000 in June, it was down 2 percent from May and 21 percent from June of last year. For the first 6 months of 1948, it was off 19 percent from last year.

Public construction in June was valued at $387,000,000, up 14 percent from May and 40 percent from June last year. Among the marked increases over last year were: Educational buildings, 79 percent; hospitals and institutional buildings, 171 percent.

President Truman's Message

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. RALPH E. CHURCH
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, it is obvious from the message we have just heard from President Truman that he has used his extraordinary constitutional power to call this special session of Congress solely to serve his political ends. The message we have heard was purely a political campaign document. He has recommended nothing that he has not previously recommended. He has recommended nothing that he could not have emphasized prior to the adjournment of Congress a few weeks ago.

The President seeks to use police state methods in dealing with the problem of high prices. It is a curious fact that he already possesses power which he has never used to control consumer credit, as well as exports abroad. The American people can readily see that the Truman administration is intellectually and politically bankrupt. His recommendation with respect to high prices is that we return to the days of the OPA with goods in short supply and black markets. The American people will have none of it.

Government Employees Suffer Blow to Morale

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN D. DINGELL
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, the bill making effective the pay increases given postal employees and the lesser amount given classified Federal employees and legislative employees was denounced in no uncertain terms by the President at the time of signing, as he pointed to the reckless discriminations and the total over-all inadequacies of the provisions of this Republican hodge-podge. This important legislation was delayed until the last minute and was considered under the force exerted by many Members, who, like myself, believed that a straight thousand-dollar increase should be made across the board, but yet were willing to consider this bill because it granted at least partial relief to the nearly 2,000,000 deserving Government employees.

The editorial in the Washington Post under date of July 5 treats the subject with thoughtful thoroughness as it analyzes the salient points raised by the President. Inasmuch as I could not improve upon the President's outline or the ability to portray the subject matter by the editorial writer, I ask leave to attach the editorial as part of my remarks.

The editorial follows:

BLOW TO MORALE

The inadequacy of the salary increases granted to Federal employees is only one count in President Truman's scathing indictment of the Federal pay-raise bill that he has reluctantly signed, acting, no doubt, on the principle that half a loaf is better than nothing at all. Much more serious is the demoralizing effect of giving flat increases to all employees covered by the Classification Act. As a result, differences between upper and lower pay grades, already narrowed by increases given in 1945 and 1946, will be further decreased. "The effect of this," the President points out, "is to reduce seriously the opportunity for salary advancement which should go with increased responsibility." Even worse is the blow dealt to morale by the failure of Congress to raise salaries of officials whose remuneration is fixed by Congress. Consequently, members of many boards and commissions and certain agency heads at the $10,000 level will receive lower salaries than some of their subordinates who receive the $330 pay increase. The President rightly denounces such a "violation of the principles of sound management" as "ridiculous."

It will certainly be hard to maintain discipline under such topsy-turvy conditions. Competent administrators will be severely handicapped, and their natural resentment at such unjust treatment will tend to accelerate the present exodus of competent men from the Government service. The exclusion of District employees from the benefits of the act is also inexcusable, as is the preferred treatment of postal employees, given a $450 pay increase, no doubt because they are strongly organized and could put more pressure on Congress.

The only good thing to be said about the measure is that it is so bad as to make revisions inevitable. The Eighty-first Congress can hardly ignore the impossible situation created by the hasty and irresponsible action of the Eightieth Congress. The way to remedy that situation is to authorize a thoroughgoing revision of salary scales in the classified services, as urged by the President, raise the salaries of top-ranking officials, and extend the benefits of increases to all District and other Federal employees who have been unjustly denied pay increases.

The Housing Problem

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. KATHARINE ST. GEORGE
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a portion of a speech made before the Rotary Club of Hobart, Delaware County, N. Y., on Federal public housing:

You have all heard a great deal about housing. It is a very real and a very serious subject.

The great trouble is that, quite frankly, no one wants to put his finger on one of the major reasons for the trouble—which is high wages in all the building trades.

We want to keep high wages, but we want cheap housing.

We want to keep farm prices up, but we want cheap food.

Of course the two are impossible. Personally, I would rather see wages and farm prices up, because I truly believe that on the whole we are happier under those conditions.

Of course, when private industry cannot produce housing or other necessities at a price where the public can buy, we see government, State and Federal, stepping in with subsidies that come right out of our tax dollar to produce the necessities that the people must have, at prices they can afford to pay.

On my return from Washington the other day, I decided to see for myself what the Federal Government was doing for housing right in my own district, and I am going to tell you what I found.

Nineteen miles outside of New York City, in the town of Orangeburg in Rockland County, is the Federal housing project of Shanks Village, formerly Camp Shanks. Camp Shanks was taken over at the beginning of World War II by the military, who commandeered all the houses on this large and beautifully situated tract and built barracks. They accommodated 100,000 troops, so you can see that the place is large. This does not count the large warehouses that are still standing in a delapidated and derelict condition.

Now, there is an acute housing shortage everywhere in the country today, but nowhere more so than in New York City.

The Federal Government, therefore, decided to turn this large camp into a housing project for veterans.

Today 4,200 people live in some of the converted barracks. I visited some—I can truthfully say that the best one I saw, consisting of three rooms and a kitchen, was adequate, nothing more. The whole place is neglected and sordid looking. Most of the barracks are falling apart, some have burned. Hoodlums have come in and ripped plumbing and fixtures out and broken all the glass.

The material stored in the warehouses has been sold by the Government to people with special drag for next to nothing. Some, in fact much of it, has been rifled. The local people have not been allowed to bid on any of it and are naturally resentful.

The good private houses stand boarded up, slowly disintegrating. Yet my mail is full of letters from former owners of these homes, begging for the right to purchase them back from the Government.

If this is an example of Federal housing, all I can say is that we want none of it, and that it is a national disgrace.

Here is the richest Government on earth graciously allowing its veterans to pay $42 a month to live in the nearest thing to a slum that you can have, outside of a city.

Here, in a place that could be a garden spot, where at least 25,000 people could live in health and happiness, we see nature ruined, waste and ugliness everywhere.

This is not a tale that I have heard from some muck-raking politician. This is something I have seen with my own eyes in my own district.

This Shanks village is only one of many such Federal projects that could be seen in many congressional districts.

Our Nation's greatness has always had as its cornerstone the American home. Today, in a world where freedom and free institutions are at bay, we must make it possible for our people, and especially our veterans, to live like freemen.

And when we hear all these promises of what the Federal housing projects are going to be, it would be well to look in our own backyards and see what they have been.

We have been warned of the dangers of Federal public housing by such distinguished Members of Congress as the Honorable RALPH GWINN, of New York. He has pointed out how such housing projects are used by political bosses to force people to do as they are told.

This is not our ideal for the American home and the American veteran.

Actions speak louder than words.

All we see is waste and extravagance.

These two have never made for efficiency. Until our people and our Government realize this we will never solve the great problems than confront us today.

The world is watching us to see how we are solving these problems. Freedom and free institutions will rise or fall according to the answer we give to housing, inflation, and the establishment of lasting peace.

General Pershing

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. J. HARRY McGREGOR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, on July 23 General of the Armies John J. Pershing, one of the greatest generals of all time and a great American, departed this life. General Pershing's place in world history is secure and any effort of mine to add to that history would indeed be futile. I shall, therefore, be content to say that I was honored to have served under him in World War I.

I wish to point out to my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, that I am preparing a bill for introduction in the Congress for the erection of a national memorial to the memory of General Pershing, and I hope to see it enacted into law with the least possible delay.

Weak Message by Weak President

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. PAUL W. SHAFER

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Speaker, a weak President today weakly outlined his weak political reasons for calling Congress back into special session.

He gave us two principal reasons for calling the special session. First, he said that Congress should enact legislation to deal with inflation. Second, he declared that we should pass a certain bill presumed to increase the number of houses available for rent or purchase.

In simple justice to the facts, let us recall that when the President called Congress back into special session last fall he urged a program that was designed to increase inflation. The Congress, unluckily for the Nation, enacted a part of that program. Billions of dollars were appropriated for the so-called Marshall plan. At that time I predicted that higher and higher prices would result. The economic chickens now are coming home to roost.

President Truman is right when he says prices are high and going higher, but he is totally wrong when he says there is anything Congress should do about it. To restore controls would stifle production more and would cause even more inflation. Certain people are going to suffer, naturally, because of our huge overseas spending program. The President, if he cares for them, should have thought of them before he drove the Marshall plan through Congress.

The President is talking through his political hat—and he knows it.

During the past few weeks he has blamed everything on the Eightieth Congress, but he has neglected to tell the people how he vetoed the price-control bill of the Seventy-ninth Congress and then later personally removed the controls by Executive order.

Here is the record as it appears in the final edition of the House Calendar for the Seventy-ninth Congress:

H. R. 6042 (H. Res. 591). Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, amend. Reported from Banking and Currency Committee April 9, 1946 (Rept. No. 1922). Union Calendar. Passed House April 18, 1946. Reported in Senate June 7, 1946, Banking and Currency Committee (Rept. No. 1431). Passed Senate, amended, June 13, 1946. Senate asks for a conference June 13, 1946. House agrees to a conference June 14, 1946. House agrees to conference report June 25, 1946. Senate agrees to conference report June 28, 1946. Vetoed June 29, 1946. Failed of passage over President's veto June 29, 1946.

The speech made by the President today was the speech of a weak politician. He did not even deliver the speech with conviction. There was no urgency in his manner or in his voice, although he had some words written down on a piece of paper that he tried to read and make them sound urgent. He was debonair, jaunty, and carefree. If he is worried about the people who have no houses, he did not show it.

President Truman is as dead wrong about socializing the housing industry as he is wrong about how to cure high prices. The private housing industry of the Nation did not have a chance to perform its best for 2 years after the war because Uncle Sam kept on controls and the Government itself was in the housing business, bidding up prices and causing general "snafu."

A year ago this July Congress took controls off private housing. The records show that since that time housing starts and finishes have jumped immeasurably every month. A million houses to be built by private industry will be finished this year. That is better than the Government could do.

The so-called housing bill which Mr. Truman advocates would not add one single carpenter, bricklayer, or electrician to the labor force. It would not create a single new piece of tile or build a single foundation. It would greatly upset the private building industry and actually would add to our bureaucracy, to our Government outgo—thus increasing the inflation Mr. Truman pretends to be fighting.

Mr. Speaker, this Congress has been dubbed the "turnip" Congress. I suggest to the President that he will get more out of planting actual turnips in Missouri than he will get out of sowing political weeds in Washington.

Antisegregation Executive Order

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. A. LEONARD ALLEN
OF LOUISIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States in this political year has been doing everything possible to push through his so-called civil-rights program aimed at the South. The Republican Party is also committed to vote for this legislation. The Chief Executive, up to this time, has not been able to secure the passage through Congress of this very hurtful legislation. Having been goaded by Henry Wallace and his group to take action, the President now resorts to his Executive powers and by Executive order has undertaken to wipe out racial segregation in the armed services and he has also set up a fair employment practices code to govern employees in the Federal Government. It is regrettable beyond measure that the Congress is thus bypassed in a manner like this.

By this action the wound to the South is deeper. I predict this will do more to add to the existing confusion and turmoil in our country than anything else that has occurred since 1861. In my opinion it not only will greatly increase tension, strife, and turmoil, but it will diminish the efficiency of our armed services. I am afraid that this entire program, fostered by the President and approved by the Republican Party also, will create such internal dissension and strife in this country as has not been seen within the memory of living persons. This is a sorry situation, pushed upon us at a time when we need unity and cooperation at home to cope with an increasingly alarming situation overseas. Of course, Mr. Speaker, everybody knows that politics is behind the whole thing. We in the South will continue to fight and oppose this civil-rights program with all of our strength. I have fought the FEPC and the rest of this program since the beginning and I shall continue that fight, come what may. It is a crime against a noble people. I pray God that somehow the plans of those who are doing this to us may not succeed.

The Republican Majority Cannot Escape Its Responsibility

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ADOLPH J. SABATH
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, the Republican majority cannot escape its responsibility in legislating promptly on the President's three main recommendations, namely, the high cost of living, housing, and the arresting of the inflationary spiral. The charge of some Republican leaders that the administration can stop the increasing cost of foodstuffs without the passage of legislation will not sit well with the American consumers, and such charge is unwarranted and a poor excuse.

Acceding to the promises of big business and industry that if OPA was repealed and they were permitted to voluntarily fix prices the increase in the cost of living would be arrested, the Eightieth Republican Congress first weakened and then repealed OPA, and as a result of such legislative action we now find that prices of foodstuffs have increased 40 percent. This outrageous increase can properly be charged to the deliberate action of the Republicans to give the combines, trusts, and manipulators the right to do what they have done, namely, to increase by leaps and bounds, within the period of 18 months, the prices of all necessaries of life. How, then, can the President or the administration stop these vicious activities by stopping purchases to carry out the Marshall plan needs, that we possess? Furthermore, the Republicans authorized the purchase and exports of commodities under the so-called Marshall plan. There is only one way to stop inflation and reduce the cost of living, and that is by the adoption of a price-control bill under which prices would be set as they were at the time when you Republicans began to emasculate, weaken, and finally repealed the Price Control Act.

Mr. Speaker, the present prices on foodstuffs, wearing apparel, and all necessaries of life, have resulted from a boosting, boosting, and further boosting, in a manner that is criminal.

I concede that persons with earnings and wages of over $5,000 a year may be able to stand this high cost of living condition for another 6 months, but people with lower earnings cannot much longer endure paying these extraordinary, yes, exorbitant prices, especially those millions of wage earners receiving $30, $35, and $40 a week.

The representatives of the National Association of Manufacturers, who seem to control the Republicans who are responsible for the repeal of the Price Control Act, are now giving vent to much publicity in radio broadcasts and other avenues to the matter of wages, pointing out that union workers in some of the outstanding industries, through threats of strikes and otherwise, have succeeded in the last year and a half in obtaining two increases in wages, but that applies to only 15,000,000 of highly skilled, mechanical, and technical workers, and does not cover approximately 40,000,000 unorganized or nonunion workers whose wages have not been increased to any extent.

What about the 20,000,000 white-collar workers, the school teachers, firemen, and police officers, municipal and State employees, and persons who live on small pensions and fixed incomes, who have been obliged, since the Republicans took control of the House and Senate, to sell their Government bonds, to withdraw their savings, and 23 percent of whom have been compelled to let their insurance policies lapse. They have faced the ever-increasing cost of living not in the buying of $1.25 per pound steaks but by buying the cheapest cuts of meat and the cheapest of foods. I ask: How much longer can they stand paying double prices for their food, wearing apparel, and household needs. No, Mr. Speaker, the Republicans cannot by any excuse they may attempt to devise avoid the responsibility of depriving these people of a decent living and decent homes.

Mr. Speaker, I observed the indifference of the Republican majority and its cold reception of the President's message to relieve these deserving citizens. With an abundance and surpluses of foods and commodities in every line, the National Association of Manufacturers has the effrontery to continue its distorted and warped publicity campaign, coupled with your oft-repeated untruths about shortages, in an attempt to justify the increase in the cost of all necessaries of life. The fact is that the warehouses are bulging with surpluses of foods and commodities and, notwithstanding that fact, you have the temerity to issue statements to create a scare that shortages exist. But the people will not be fooled and misled and you will account to them in November.

Mr. Speaker, I could continue in giving explanations of the failure of the Eightieth Republican Congress to relieve the people of the distressing high cost of living and its refusal to legislate on housing for veterans and citizens, but just today observed an article appearing in the Chicago Federation of Labor News, of July 24, 1948, which simply gives the story of the Republicans' "effort" to legislate in the interest of the people and their real legislative action in legislating for the benefit of the special interests. Under the leave given me, I insert it as part of my remarks, as follows:

THE PRICE OF POLITICAL ABSENTEEISM: $50,000,000,000

"Prices Hit a New High"; "Wholesale Prices at New Peak"; "Cost-of-Living Index Highest Ever." These three headlines made their appearance promptly in July 1948. They have been appearing regularly since Congress abolished price control in July 1946.

Now let's go back to July 3, 1946. The National Association of Manufacturers speaking: "If OPA is permanently discontinued, the production of goods will mount rapidly and, through free competition, prices will quickly adjust themselves to levels that consumers are willing to pay." Then there is a Republican Congressman stating: "OPA is at the present time the chief promoter of inflation." We could fill a page with similar quotations from the "statesmen" in Congress.

Now the Federal Reserve Board tells us that one-quarter of the Nation's families are finding it necessary to spend more than they are taking in in order to get by with constantly increasing prices.

Prices have jumped 36 percent since OPA was scuttled in 1946.

Who got the gravy out of the speculative price boom that followed the destruction of the OPA?

The Department of Commerce points out that while the total of wage and salaries have increased only 6 percent in the past 3 years, profits have increased 60 percent.

That profits have increased 10 times as fast as wages should please the present Eightieth Congress. It was exactly what the congressional majority wanted. In dollars, it is apparent that the destruction of price control has cost consumers approximately fifty billion hard-earned dollars. This huge sum was paid unnecessarily. It is a consumer's tax of approximately $25,000,000,000 a year for the past 2 years, levied by the majority of Congress at the request of the National Association of Manufacturers.

You might remember this when Congress tells you your taxes have been reduced.

The present Eightieth Congress that endorsed the extraction of this huge sum from your pockets was elected because 56,000,000 Americans of voting age failed to vote in 1946. Result: The agents of big business obtained a majority in Congress and made the laws to suit their masters. The Eightieth Congress sat silent on rising prices. It was not ordered to legislate on prices by those who controlled it.

Fifty billion dollars is a lot to pay for this lesson in citizenship. How about remembering it in November 1948?

A Federal Judge and the Rights of Free Citizens of South Carolina

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. W. J. BRYAN DORN

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mr. DORN. Mr. Speaker, as a small boy, the son of a father and mother both of whom were country school teachers, I was taught by them to have great respect always for the courts of our land. As a youth in the schools which I attended, my teachers always impressed upon me that I was to respect our judges and their decisions. In that same youth, I began a study, which I have continued through all the years, of the principles—the foundation stones—upon which the United States of America were founded and established. I was reared as a farm boy, and have never known any occupation except farming. I am not a lawyer, never endeavored to train myself to be a lawyer, but I have read much law, and I have read, studied carefully, and tried to understand the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States. I have read in the works of many American statesmen, and I have been told oftentimes by many great lawyers, that this Government of ours is one of checks and balances, that we have three great branches of the Government, the legislative, the judicial and the executive. For more than 150 years, the people of America—especially those people who have been loyal to the American way of life, and those who have loved the principles of American Government, regardless of their political affiliations—have earnestly believed that each of these three branches of government were, and should be, free and independent of the other two—each of them performing only the duties and responsibilities prescribed to be performed by them in our Constitution. For many years, and until rather recently, the courts have generally refrained from interfering with the powers of the executive and legislative departments. The Houses of Congress, composing the legislative department, have almost always yielded to the power and authority of the courts, when the courts have exercised that power and authority. In the bitter dissensions that have sometimes occurred between the executive on the one hand and the legislative or judicial on the other, the executive has usually had to yield to the other branch of the Government, when it was finally concluded that that particular branch had acted within its proper sphere.

One of the great principles of Magna Carta was that the judiciary of England, represented then by the King, should not trespass upon the rights of the freemen of England. One of the great disturbing elements that brought about the great Revolution in America against the English Government was the desire of the American people that they should not be governed, except in a strictly lawful way by the judges of those days. They opposed the right of a judiciary to establish laws and principles of government, especially when those laws and principles were contrary to the political beliefs of the citizens.

I regret to report to this House and to the people of the United States that very recently a judge of our court, a member of the Federal judiciary, has gone beyond his powers and duties to decide legal questions as to the rights of citizens and has sought to require the citizens of a sovereign State, and members of a political party, to subscribe to his beliefs and principles of an entirely political nature. I regret to tell you that in my good State of South Carolina, there is a Federal judge, who bears the name of J. Waties Waring, who is trying to force the members of the Democratic Party of South Carolina to forego the great principles of that party on important matters, entirely set apart for political consideration, and he is trying to force these South Carolina Democrats to accept what he thinks should be the political principles of their party, or, perhaps, it is more correct to say that he is trying to tell the Democratic Party of South Carolina, "You cannot have any political principles at all." If a Federal judge can do that to the Democratic Party, then some Federal judge in some other State of the Union may attempt to dictate to the Republican Party or to Henry Wallace's new party or to the Socialist Party or to the Prohibition Party or to the Democratic Party of any other State the principles to which each of those parties must subscribe.

Judge Waring in his order in the case of Brown against W. P. Baskin on July 19, 1948, to all intents and purposes practically himself set the rules for the Democratic Party in South Carolina.

Later, without any request from any member of the Democratic Party, any party to the suit before Judge Waring, or any of the attorneys for the Democratic Party and the defendants in that case, Judge Waring, seeing the confusion he had created in his previous order, proceeded again on July 22, 1948, to make another order which created even more confusion.

There was quite a stir throughout South Carolina because Judge Waring had provided in his order that the voter in the Democratic Party should pledge himself to support the nominee of the Democratic Party and not just the nominee of the primary election.

I wish to remind you that these orders, three or more of them, haled into court some outstanding citizens of South Carolina. These citizens resided, some of them, in Judge Waring's own district, but many of them lived in another Federal court district. These orders in many instances were served in the dead hours of the night on many of these gentlemen who were aroused from their sleep to be greeted at their doors by a Federal marshal with a summons and order in a civil case. This is an unheard-of procedure in the State of South Carolina. Papers in civil action are not generally served except in the daytime. The families of these men were served in the darkness of the night and were frightened that they might be carried to the Charleston jailhouse. Judge Waring did something in South Carolina which has never been heard of before:

He specified special hours for the enrollment of votes, that is, they must enroll between 9 in the morning and 1 p. m. and 3 and 6 p. m. in the afternoon. The working people of South Carolina had the right to enroll at any time and had followed this rule for many years. They could enroll even in the nighttime or early in the morning before they went to work. The enrollment officer would accommodate them. These methods of serving orders in the night were used by Hitler and Mussolini and today by Stalin.

Furthermore, he fixed the time for the closing of the books of enrollment on July 31, and he made no provision for compliance with other rules of the Democratic Party after the filing of the enrollment books and their revision. The committee positively cannot comply with the rules providing for the performance of dues in the face of the order of Judge Waring. So, as I have said, the two primaries of South Carolina are to be conducted under the dictatorial direction of a Federal judge in defiance of all rules of the party of the State.

If a judge can set the hours of day that the books of a party must close he can set the hours of day that we must go to church, to school, and to work.

And listen to this, citizens of America; listen to this, Members of this Congress; listen to this, Democrats and Republicans, Judge Waring failed to state in this order, as he had said before, that a man or woman voting in the primary election in South Carolina of the Democratic Party did not even have to say that he was a Democrat. Under this order a Republican can vote in the Democratic primary, a Progressive Democrat, a distinct party in South Carolina from the Democratic Party, can vote in a Democratic primary election. Even a Communist, if he possesses the constitutional qualification, in South Carolina can vote in a Democratic primary under the ruling of Judge Waring.

If those who are opposed to the principles of a political party, who boldly declare themselves opposed to those principles, can go into a party convention or party primary and help to nominate the nominees of that party, then all party alinements are practically abolished. In South Carolina, under this order of Judge Waring, Republicans can go into the Democratic primary, if they care to do so, and for the purpose of destroying the party could help to nominate and get nominated, perhaps, a man whom the decent people of South Carolina would never elect to office. Likewise, if we had a Republican primary election, Democrats who wished to break up the Republican Party could help to nominate men of bad character, corrupt men, as nominees of the Republican Party. In fact, according to Judge Waring, a voter does not have to have any political principles to join the Democratic Party or any other party.

Under the orders of Judge Waring, if primary elections of the Democratic Party in South Carolina are going to be conducted according to his ideas and rules, without any regard to the rules of the party of the State as established, it will be a primary under the dictation of a Federal judge.

Admitting, as some people claim, that a Federal judge has the right to determine the qualification of a voter in a sovereign State, which I do not concede, still I insist that no judge, State or Federal, has the right to say what shall be the principles of any political party.

If the time has come in the United States of America when a Federal judge, or any other judge, can force our people to believe in certain political principles, then something must be wrong with the judicial system of our country. I cannot believe that the system is wrong. I know our founding fathers never had any thought that any judge could tell people what to believe politically.

These orders of Judge Waring have confused the people of South Carolina. They have tended to the disruption of the Democratic Party as it has been constituted and as our people wish to have it constituted in the future and in accordance with the decisions of the United States Supreme Court. If these orders stand, a Federal judge of the United States is all powerful, and a majority of the Federal judges can dominate not only the politics but the Government of our country.

From all the evidence I have obtained, I am satisfied that Judge Waring has not been, and is not now, qualified from ability or temperament for the high office of United States district judge. His actions on the bench, both in South Carolina and in the State of Virginia, as I have been reliably informed, have been such as to convince the people with whom he came in contact that he was tyrannical, and that he had no regard for the feelings of people who had business in his court. I am convinced, also, that he has tried to traduce the Democrats of South Carolina, and especially to humiliate the people of Charleston, his old friends, neighbors, and relatives, some of the finest people of that city, who, because of his ungentlemanly conduct in many respects in the past, have refused to associate with him, and even now treat him with silent contempt.

According to all reports, his conduct at Richmond, Va., last year alone is sufficient grounds for an investigation.

The State of South Carolina has a divorce law. The people of that State would like to know how Judge Waring can obtain a separation from a lady to whom he had been married for approximately 30 years, remarry, and serve on the Federal bench in that great State.

I wish to say that in the appointments of our Federal judges, the Department of Justice and the Senators and all those who are so much responsible for these appointments, should forget any reward for political services and seek the services only of men of the highest character, excellent learning, and who possess the judicial temperament.

Let me say that I am awaiting further investigation and final determinations in the court. If Judge Waring is guilty, as I believe he is, and as I now charge, of usurping the rights of the free citizens of South Carolina in attempting to force down their throats his own ideas of governmental matters, it will be the duty of this Congress to prefer articles of impeachment.

I call upon all Americans, Democrats and Republicans, regardless of political parties, to stand for the rights of the men and women of America to believe in and to assert their political principles according to true and tried American philosophy of government.

President Truman's Speech of Acceptance

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALBEN W. BARKLEY

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, July 28, 1948

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD the speech of acceptance delivered at the Democratic National Convention at Philadelphia by the President of the United States.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I am sorry that the microphones are in the way (in response to shouts to move them down), but I must leave them the way they are, because I have got to be able to see what I am doing—as I am always able to see what I am doing.

I can't tell you how very much I appreciate the honor which you have just conferred upon me. I shall continue to try to deserve it.

I accept the nomination.

And I want to thank this convention for its unanimous nomination of my good friend and colleague Senator BARKLEY, of Kentucky. He is a great man and a great public servant. Senator BARKLEY and I will win this election and make these Republicans like it; don't you forget that.

We will do that because they are wrong, and we are right, and I will prove it to you in just a few minutes.

This convention met to express the will and reaffirm the beliefs of the Democratic Party. There have been differences of opinion, and that is the democratic way. Those differences have been settled by a majority vote, as they should be.

Now it is time for us to get together and beat the common enemy. And that is up to you.

We have been working together for victory in a great cause. Victory has become a habit of our party. It has been elected four times in succession, and I am convinced it will be elected a fifth time next November.

The reason is that the people know that the Democratic Party is the people's party, and the Republican Party is the party of special interest, and it always has been and always will be.

The record of the Democratic Party is written in the accomplishments of the last 16 years. I don't need to repeat them. They have been very ably placed before this convention by the keynote speaker, the candidate for Vice President, and by the permanent chairman.

Confidence and security have been brought to the people by the Democratic Party. Farm income has increased from less than two and a half billion dollars in 1932 to more than $18,000,000,000 in 1947. Never in the world were the farmers of any republic or any kingdom or any other country as prosperous as the farmers of the United States; and if they do not do their duty by the Democratic Party, they are the most ungrateful people in the world.

Wages and salaries in this country have increased from twenty-nine billion in 1933 to more than $128,000,000,000 in 1947. That's labor, and labor never had but one friend in politics, and that is the Democratic Party and Franklin D. Roosevelt.

And I say to labor what I have said to the farmers: They are the most ungrateful people in the world if they pass the Democratic Party by this year.

The total national income has increased from less than $40,000,000,000 in 1933, to $203,000,000,000 in 1947, the greatest in all the history of the world. These benefits have been spread to all the people, because it is the business of the Democratic Party to see that the people get a fair share of these things.

This last, worst, Eightieth Congress, proved just the opposite for the Republicans.

The record on foreign policy of the Democratic Party is that the United States has been turned away permanently from isolationism, and we have converted the greatest and best of the Republicans to our viewpoint on that subject.

The United States has to accept its full responsibility for leadership in international affairs. We have been the backers and the people who organized and started the United Nations, first started under that great Democratic President, Woodrow Wilson, as the League of Nations. The League was sabotaged by the Republicans in 1920. And we must see that the United Nations continues a strong and growing body, so we can have everlasting peace in the world.

We removed trade barriers in the world, which is the best asset we can have for peace. Those trade barriers must not be put back into operation again.

We have started the foreign-aid program, which means the recovery of Europe and China and the Far East. We instituted the program for Greece and Turkey, and I will say to you that all these things were done in a cooperative and bipartisan manner. The Foreign Relations Committees of the Senate and House were taken into the full confidence of the President in every one of these moves, and don't let anybody tell you anything else.

As I have said time and time again, foreign policy should be the policy of the whole Nation, and not the policy of one party or the other. Partisanship should stop at the water's edge, and I shall continue to preach that through this whole campaign.

I would like to say a word or two now on what I think the Republican philosophy is, and I will speak from actions and from history and from experience.

The situation in 1932 was due to the policies of the Republican Party control of the Government of the United States. The Republican Party, as I said a while ago, favors the privileged few and not the common every-day man. Ever since its inception, that party has been under the control of special privilege; and they have completely proved it in the Eightieth Congress. They proved it by the things they did to the people, and not for them. They proved it by the things they failed to do.

Now, let's look at some of them—just a few.

Time and time again I recommended extension of price control before it expired June 30, 1946. I asked for that extension in September 1945, in November 1945, in a message on the state of the Union in 1946; and that price-control legislation did not come to my desk until June 30, 1946, on the day on which it was supposed to expire. And it was such a rotten bill that I couldn't sign it. And 30 days after that, they sent me one just as bad. I had to sign it, because they quit and went home.

They said, when OPA died, that prices would adjust themselves for the benefit of the country. They have been adjusting themselves, all right! They have gone all the way off the chart in adjusting themselves, at the expense of the consumer and for the benefit of the people that hold the goods.

I called a special session of the Congress in November 1947—November 17, 1947—and I set out a 10-point program for the welfare and benefit of this country; among other things, stand-by controls. I got nothing. Congress has still done nothing.

Way back 4½ years ago, while I was in the Senate, we passed a housing bill in the Senate known as the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill. It was a bill to clear the slums in the big cities and to help to erect low-rent housing. That bill, as I said, passed the Senate 4 years ago. It died in the House. That bill was reintroduced in the Eightieth Congress as the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill. The name was slightly changed, but it is practically the same bill. And it passed the Senate, but it was allowed to die in the House of Representatives; and they sat on that bill; it was finally forced out of the Banking and Currency Committee, and the Rules Committee took charge, and it still is in the Rules Committee.

But desperate pleas from Philadelphia in that convention that met here 3 weeks ago couldn't get that housing bill passed. They passed a bill they called a housing bill, which isn't worth the paper it's written on.

In the field of labor we needed moderate legislation to promote labor-management harmony, but Congress passed instead that so-called Taft-Hartley Act, which has disrupted labor-management relations and will cause strife and bitterness for years to come if it is not repealed, as the Democratic platform says it ought to be repealed.

On the Labor Department, the Republican platform of 1944 said, if they were in power, they would build up a strong Labor Department. They have simply torn it up. Only one bureau is left that is functioning, and they cut the appropriation of that so it can hardly function.

I recommended an increase in the minimum wage. What did I get? Nothing. Absolutely nothing.

I suggested that the schools in this country are crowded, teachers underpaid, and that there is a shortage of teachers. One of our greatest national needs is more and better schools. I urged the Congress to provide $300,000,000 to aid the States in the present educational crisis. Congress did nothing about it.

Time and again I have recommended improvements in the social-security law, including extending protection to those not now covered, and increasing the amount of benefits, to reduce the eligibility age of women from 65 to 60 years. Congress studied the matter for 2 years, but couldn't find the time to extend or increase the benefits. But they did find time to take social-security benefits away from 750,000 people, and they passed that over my veto.

I have repeatedly asked the Congress to pass a health program. The Nation suffers from lack of medical care. That situation can be remedied any time the Congress wants to act upon it.

Everybody knows that I recommended to the Congress the civil-rights program. I did that because I believed it to be my duty under the Constitution. Some of the members of my own party disagree with me violently on this matter. But they stand up and do it openly. People can tell where they stand. But the Republicans all professed to be for these measures. But Congress failed to act. They had enough men to do it. They could have had cloture; they didn't have to have a filibuster. They had enough people in that Congress that would vote for cloture.

Now everybody likes to have low taxes, but we must reduce the national debt in times of prosperity. And when tax relief can be given it ought to go to those who need it most, and not those who need it least, as this Republican rich man's tax bill did when they passed it over my veto on the third try.

The first one of these was so rotten that they couldn't even stomach it themselves. They finally did send one that was somewhat improved, but it still helps the rich and sticks a knife into the back of the poor.

Now the Republicans came here a few weeks ago, and they wrote a platform. I hope you have all read that platform. They adopted the platform, and that platform had a lot of promises and statements of what the Republican Party is for, and what they would do if they were in power. They promised to do in that platform a lot of things I have been asking them to do that they have refused to do when they had the power.

The Republican platform cries about cruelly high prices. I have been trying to get them to do something about high prices ever since they met the first time.

Now listen. This is equally as bad, and as cynical. The Republican platform comes out for slum clearance and low-rental housing. I have been trying to get them to pass that housing bill ever since they met the first time, and it is still resting in the Rules Committee, that bill.

The Republican platform favors educational opportunity and promotion of education. I have been trying to get Congress to do something about that ever since they came here, and that bill is at rest in the House of Representatives.

The Republican platform is for extending and increasing social-security benefits. Think of that. Increasing social-security benefits. Yet when they had the opportunity, they took 750,000 off the social-security rolls.

I wonder if they think they can fool the people of the United States with such poppycock as that.

There is a long list of these promises in that Republican platform. If it weren't so late, I would tell you all about them. I have discussed a number of these failures of the Republican Eightieth Congress. Every one of them is important. Two of them are of major concern to nearly every American family. They failed to do anything about high prices; they failed to do anything about housing.

My duty as President requires that I use every means within my power to get the laws the people need on matters of such importance and urgency.

I am therefore calling this Congress back into session July 26.

On the 26th day of July, which out in Missouri we call turnip day, I am going to call Congress back and ask them to pass laws to halt rising prices, to meet the housing crisis—which they are saying they are for in their platform.

At the same time, I shall ask them to act upon other vitally needed measures, such as aid to education, which they say they are for; a national health program; civil-rights legislation, which they say they are for; an increase in the minimum wage, which I doubt very much they are for; extension of the social-security coverage and increased benefits, which they say they are for; funds for projects needed in our program to provide public power and cheap electricity. By indirection, this Eightieth Congress has tried to sabotage the power policies the United States has pursued for 14 years. That power lobby is as bad as the real-estate lobby which is sitting on the housing bill.

I shall ask for adequate and decent laws for displaced persons in place of this anti-Semitic, anti-Catholic law which this Eightieth Congress passed.

Now, my friends, if there is any reality behind that Republican platform, we ought to get some action from a short session of the Eightieth Congress. They can do this job in 15 days, if they want to do it. They will still have time to go out and run for office.

They are going to try to dodge their responsibility. They are going to drag all the red herrings they can across this campaign, but I am here to say that Senator BARKLEY and I are not going to let them get away with it.

Now, what that worst Eightieth Congress does in this special session will be the test. The American people will not decide by listening to mere words, or by reading a mere platform. They will decide on the record, the record as it has been written. And in the record is the stark truth, that the battle lines of 1948 are the same as they were in 1932, when the Nation lay prostrate and helpless as a result of Republican misrule and inaction.

In 1932 we were attacking the citadel of special privilege and greed. We were fighting to drive the money changers from the temple. Today, in 1948, we are now the defenders of the stronghold of democracy and of equal opportunity, the haven of the ordinary people of this land and not of the favored classes or the powerful few. The battle cry is just the same now as it was in 1932, and I paraphrase the words of Franklin D. Roosevelt as he issued the challenge, in accepting nomination in Chicago: "This is more than a political call to arms. Give me your help, not to win votes alone, but to win in this new crusade to keep America secure and safe for its own people."

Now, my friends, with the help of God and the wholehearted push which you can put behind this campaign, we can save this country from a continuation of the Eightieth Congress, and from misrule from now on.

I must have your help. You must get in and push, and win this election. The country can't afford another Republican Congress.

Acceptance Speech by Governor Dewey

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROBERT A. TAFT
OF OHIO
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Wednesday, July 28, 1948

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD the acceptance speech of Governor Dewey at the Republican Convention.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

You, the elected representatives of our Republican Party have again given to me the highest honor you can bestow—your nomination for President of the United States.

I thank you with all my heart for your friendship and confidence. I am profoundly sensible of the responsibility that goes with it. I accept your nomination. In all humility, I pray God that I may deserve this opportunity to serve our country.

I come to you unfettered by a single obligation or promise to any living person, free to join with you in selecting to serve our Nation the finest men and women in the Nation, free to unite our party and our country in meeting the grave challenge of our time.

United we can match this challenge with depth of understanding and largeness of spirit; with a unity which is above recrimination, above partisanship, above self-interest. These are articles of faith from which the greatness of America has been fashioned. Our people are eager to know again the upsurging power of that faith. They are turning to us to put such a faith at the heart of our national life. That is what we are called to do. That is what we will do.

In this historic convention, you have had placed before you six other candidates, all high-minded men of character and ability, and deeply devoted to their country—Senator Raymond E. Baldwin, Gen. Douglas MacArthur, Gov. Harold E. Stassen, Senator Robert A. Taft, Senator Arthur Vandenberg, and Gov. Earl Warren. It has been a difficult choice in an honorable contest. It has been a stirring demonstration of the life and vitality, and ideals of our Republican Party.

There has been honest contention, spirited disagreement, hot argument. But let no one be misled. You have given moving and dramatic proof of how Americans, who honestly differ, close ranks and move forward, for the Nation's well-being, shoulder to shoulder.

The responsibility and the opportunity that have come to our party are the greatest in the history of free government. For tonight our future—our peace, our prosperity, the very fate of freedom—hangs in a precarious balance.

Mere victory in an election is not our task or our purpose. Our task is to fill our victory with such meaning that mankind everywhere, yearning for freedom, will take heart and move forward out of this desperate darkness into the light of freedom's promise.

Our platform proclaims the guideposts that will mark our steadfast and certain endeavor in a fearful world. This magnificent statement of principles is concise and to the point.

You unanimously adopted it. I proudly support it. It will be the heart of the message I will take to the country. After January 20, it will be the cornerstone of our Republican administration.

We are a united party. Our Nation stands tragically in need of that same unity.

Our people are turning away from the meaner things that divide us. They yearn to move to higher ground, to find a common purpose in the finer things which unite us. We must be the instrument of that aspiration. We must be the means by which America's full powers are released and this uncertain future filled again with opportunity. That is our pledge. That will be the fruit of our victory.

If this unity is to be won and kept, it must have great dimensions. Its boundaries must be far above and beyond politics. Freedom can be saved—it can only be saved—if freemen everywhere make this unity their common cause.

Unity in such a cause must be the chief cornerstone of peace. A peace won at the expense of liberty is a peace too dearly bought. Such a peace would not endure. Above all other purposes, we must labor by every peaceful means to build a world order founded upon justice and righteousness. That kind of world will have peace. That kind of peace will be worth having. That is the crowning responsibility that our people have laid upon us. That is the crowning task to which we dedicate ourselves.

The unity we seek is more than material. It is more than a matter of things and measures. It is most of all spiritual. Our problem is not outside ourselves. Our problem is within ourselves. We have found the means to blow the world, physically, apart. Spiritually, we have yet to find the means to put together the world's broken pieces, to bind up its wounds, to make a good society, a community of men of good will that fits our dreams. We have devised noble plans for a new world. Without a new spirit, our noblest plans will come to nought. We pray that, in the days ahead, a full measure of that spirit may be ours.

The next Presidential term will see the completion of the first half of the twentieth century. So far it has been a century of amazing progress and of terrible tragedy. We have seen the world transformed. We have seen mankind's age-long struggle against nature crowned by extraordinary success.

Yet our triumphs have been darkened by bitter defeats in the equally ancient struggle of men to live together in peace, security, and understanding. For this age of progress, this twentieth century, has been dominated by two terrible world wars and, between the wars, the worst economic depression in the history of mankind.

We must learn to do better. The period that is drawing to a close has been one of scientific achievement. The era that is opening before us must be a period of human and spiritual achievement.

We propose to continue to carry forward the great technological gains of our age. We shall harness the unimaginable possibilities of atomic energy, to bring men and women a larger, fuller life. But there is something more important than all this. With all the energy, intelligence, and determination which mortal heart and mind can summon to the task, we must solve the problem of establishing a just and lasting peace in the world, and of securing to our own and other like-minded people the blessings of freedom and opportunity.

To me, to be a Republican in this hour is to dedicate one's life to the freedom of men. As long as the world is half free and half slave, we must peacefully labor to help men everywhere to achieve liberty.

We have declared our goal to be a strong and free America in a free world of free men—free to speak their own minds, free to develop new ideas, free to publish what they believe, free to move from place to place, free to choose occupations, free to choose and use the fruits of their labor, free to worship God, each according to his own concept of His grace and His mercy.

When these rights are secure in the world, the permanent ideals of the Republican Party shall have been realized.

The ideals of the American people are the ideals of the Republican Party. We have lighted a beacon here in Philadelphia, in this cradle of our own independence. We have lighted a beacon to give eternal hope that men may live in liberty with human dignity and before God and loving Him, stand erect and free.

Senator Barkley's Speech of Acceptance at Democratic National Convention

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ALBEN W. BARKLEY
OF KENTUCKY
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Wednesday, July 28, 1948

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a brief response which was made by me upon my nomination on the Democratic ticket be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Chairman, fellow Democrats, and fellow Americans, inasmuch as I am about to enter upon the duties of an office that requires 4 years of silence, I will be brief in my acknowledgment.

I have been attending national conventions as a delegate at large from the State of Kentucky ever since the convention in San Francisco, Calif., in 1920. This has been one of the greatest conventions I have ever attended in all my life.

If anybody had told me when I left my home for Philadelphia a few days ago that I would leave here tomorrow as the nominee of the Democratic Party on the national ticket, I would have pronounced such person as a prophet without honor either in his own or any other country.

As was said by my good friend, Wilson Wyatt, I did not come here as a candidate. I did not become one after I got here, and I was not one.

But I wish the delegates of this convention to know that I not only appreciate the great honor which you have conferred upon me; not only do I appreciate the great assignment which you have placed in my hands, but I shall undertake to carry out that assignment not only in the coming campaign but in the following 4 years, to the greatest possible extent in the course of my ability, and my opportunity.

I have always believed, and I believe tonight, that all we need to do is to take to the American people the story of our accomplishments which I passed on briefly a few nights ago before this great convention.

I pledge to you not only my whole but my loyal support, not only to the head of our ticket, but to the platform which has been adopted by this convention. I shall do everything within my power to see that measures we have for the American people are taken to every precinct in the United States.

And when they have received that message, and have understood that story, they will respond this year as they have responded four times heretofore.

It is with great pride and with deep humility that I accept the nomination of this convention for Vice President of the United States of America.

Acceptance Speech by Governor Warren

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROBERT A. TAFT
OF OHIO
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Wednesday, July 28, 1948

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD the acceptance speech of Governor Warren at the Republican Convention.

There being no objection, the acceptance speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Chairman, delegates, and alternates to the Republican National Convention, and fellow Americans, for the first time in my life I know what it feels like to get hit by a streetcar.

You know, yesterday I received something of a jolt through the balloting of this convention, but I had no idea, I assure you, that there was any such shock as this awaiting me today, and before I forget it, and before you change your mind, I want to say that I accept the nomination.

I accept the nomination for the Vice Presidency of the United States. Now the reason I am so quick to say that is because I have not yet recovered my breath, let alone my thoughts; and if I let it go any longer I am afraid that I would even forget to say that.

I want to say to you, ladies and gentlemen, in all humility that I am more grateful to you than you know for the confidence that you have shown me in giving me this great honor. I want you to know that I feel that you have honored me far beyond my just deserts. I want to say to you very simply that I look forward to the closer association that I will have with our great standard bearer, my long-time friend and colleague, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey.

I want to say to you, my Republican friends, that I will join with him this summer and this fall in making a great crusade throughout this country for the return of our Government to Republican principles, and then I pledge to you that if the people place their confidence in us, as I believe they will, that during the next 4 years I will give to him every bit of loyalty and help in my make-up. I will work with him to make this Government of ours responsive to the people at all times. I will work with him to make it a humane government, a fair government, and an efficient government, and above all, a government of integrity, from top to bottom.

I want to say to my old friend, Chairman JOE MARTIN, who presides over these conventions of ours with such great skill and fairness, that when the next Congress comes along he will not have to fight the bureaus of the Government for the facts upon which the Congress of the United States can base helpful legislation for the people of this country.

We will make those facts available to them, whether they help or whether they hurt, realizing that it is only by frankness and honesty and fair dealing that these great fundamental problems of the American people can be solved for their benefit, and I think I can say to you, ladies and gentlemen, under the circumstances, that the Eightieth Congress has made remarkable progress. No Congress can make progress unless it has the cooperation of the administrative departments.

We pledge to the Congress that will come into being next January every bit of helpfulness that the executive department of this Government can give to it.

Now, ladies and gentlemen, I know that under these circumstances, catapulted as I have been onto this platform, after such a sudden decision made by you, that you do not expect me to have a speech, and, after all, I think you have heard enough speeches for this convention, have you not, good as they have been? But I do want to tell you in all sincerity that I appreciate the great honor that you have shown me, and I pledge you that I will serve the people of our country faithfully every day of the administration which I am sure will come into being next January.

On behalf of my dear wife, who is with me today, and who has sustained me and helped me in all of these long and difficult years that I have been in the public service, and on behalf of my daughters, whom you also have pleased beyond expression today, I pledge you that I will give the very best that I have, and I will give to our great leader, Thomas E. Dewey, every bit of loyalty that is in my make-up.

The 1948 Democratic Platform

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ALBEN W. BARKLEY
OF KENTUCKY
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Wednesday, July 28, 1948

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD the platform adopted by the Democratic Convention recently held at Philadelphia.

There being no objection, the platform was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE 1948 PLATFORM OF THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY

(Adopted by the Democratic National Convention at Philadelphia, Pa., July 14, 1948)

The Democratic Party adopts this platform in the conviction that the destiny of the United States is to provide leadership in the world toward a realization of the four freedoms.

We chart our future course as we charted our course under the leadership of Franklin D. Roosevelt and Harry S. Truman in the abiding belief that democracy—when dedicated to the service of all and not to a privileged few—proves its superiority over all other forms of government.

Our party record of the past is assurance of its policies and performance in the future.

Ours is the party which was entrusted with the responsibility when 12 years of Republican neglect had blighted the hopes of mankind, had squandered the fruits of prosperity and had plunged us into the depths of depression and despair.

Ours is the party which rebuilt a shattered economy, rescued our banking system, revived our agriculture, reinvigorated our industry, gave labor strength and security, and led the American people to the broadest prosperity in our history.

Ours is the party which introduced the spirit of humanity into our law, as we outlawed child labor and the sweatshop, insured bank deposits, protected millions of home owners and farmers from foreclosure, and established national social security.

Ours is the party under which this Nation before Pearl Harbor gave aid and strength to those countries which were holding back the Nazi and Fascist tide.

Ours is the party which stood at the helm and led the Nation to victory in the war.

Ours is the party which during the war prepared for peace so well that when peace came reconversion promptly led to the greatest production and employment in this Nation's life.

Ours is the party under whose leadership farm owners' income in this Nation increased from less than $2,500,000,000 in 1933 to more than $18,000,000,000 in 1947; independent business and professional income increased from less than $3,000,000,000 in 1933 to more than $22,000,000,000 in 1947; employees' earnings increased from $29,000,000,000 in 1933 to more than $128,000,000,000 in 1947; and employment grew from 39,000,000 jobs in 1933 to a record of 60,000,000 jobs in 1947.

Ours is the party under which the framework of the world organization for peace and justice was formulated and created.

Ours is the party under which were conceived the instruments for resisting Communist aggression and for rebuilding the economic strength of the democratic countries of Europe and Asia—the Truman doctrine and the Marshall plan. They are the materials with which we must build the peace.

Ours is the party which first proclaimed that the actions and policies of this Nation in the foreign field are matters of national and not just party concern. We shall go forward on the course charted by President Roosevelt and President Truman and the other leaders of democracy.

We reject the principle—which we have always rejected, but which the Republican Eightieth Congress enthusiastically accepted—that government exists for the benefit of the privileged few.

To serve the interests of all and not the few; to assure a world in which peace and justice can prevail; to achieve security, full production, and full employment—this is our platform.

OUR FOREIGN POLICY

We declared in 1944 that the imperative duty of the United States was to wage the war to final triumph and to join with the other United Nations in the establishment of an international organization for the prevention of aggression and the maintenance of international peace and security.

Under Democratic leadership those pledges were gloriously redeemed.

When the United States was treacherously and savagely attacked, our great Democratic President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, and a Democratic Congress preserved the Nation's honor, and with high courage and with the invincible might of the American people the challenge was accepted. Under his inspiring leadership the Nation created the greatest army that ever assembled under the flag, the mightiest air force, the most powerful navy on the globe, and the largest merchant marine in the world.

The Nation's gallant sons on land, on sea, and in the air, ended the war in complete and overwhelming triumph. Armed aggression against peaceful peoples was resisted and crushed. Arrogant and powerful war lords were vanquished and forced to unconditional surrender.

Before the end of the war the Democratic administration turned to the task of establishing measures for peace and the prevention of aggression and the threat of another war. Under the leadership of a Democratic President and his Secretary of State, the United Nations was organized at San Francisco. The Charter was ratified by an overwhelming vote of the Senate. We support the United Nations fully and we pledge our wholehearted aid toward its growth and development. We will continue to lead the way toward curtailment of the use of the veto. We shall favor such amendments and modifications of the Charter as experience may justify. We will continue our efforts toward the establishment of an international armed force to aid its authority. We advocate the grant of a loan to the United Nations recommended by the President, but denied by the Republican Congress, for the construction of the United Nations headquarters in this country.

We pledge our best endeavors to conclude treaties of peace with our former enemies. Already treaties have been made with Italy, Hungary, Bulgaria, and Rumania. We shall strive to conclude treaties with the remaining enemy states, based on justice and with guaranties against the revival of aggression, and for the preservation of peace.

We advocate the maintenance of an adequate Army, Navy, and Air Force to protect the Nation's vital interests and to assure our security against aggression.

We advocate the effective international control of weapons of mass destruction, including the atomic bomb, and we approve continued and vigorous efforts within the United Nations to bring about the successful consummation of the proposals which our Government has advanced.

The adoption of these proposals would be a vital and most important step toward safe and effective world disarmament and world peace under a strengthened United Nations which would then truly constitute a more effective parliament of the world's peoples.

Under the leadership of a Democratic President, the United States has demonstrated its friendship for other peace-loving nations and its support of their freedom and independence. Under the Truman doctrine vital aid has been extended to China, to Greece, and to Turkey. Under the Marshall plan generous sums have been provided for the relief and rehabilitation of European nations striving to rebuild their economy and to secure and strengthen their safety and freedom. The Republican leadership in the House of Representatives, by its votes in the Eightieth Congress, has shown its reluctance to provide funds to support this program, the greatest move for peace and recovery made since the end of World War II.

We pledge a sound, humanitarian administration of the Marshall plan.

We pledge support not only for these principles—we pledge further that we will not withhold necessary funds by which these principles can be achieved. Therefore, we pledge that we will implement with appropriations the commitments which are made in this Nation's foreign program.

We pledge ourselves to restore the reciprocal trade agreements program formulated in 1934 by Secretary of State Cordell Hull and operated successfully for 14 years—until crippled by the Republican Eightieth Congress. Further, we strongly endorse our country's adherence to the International Trade Organization.

A great Democratic President established the good-neighbor policy toward the nations of the Western Hemisphere. The Act of Chapultepec was negotiated at Mexico City under Democratic leadership. It was carried forward in the Western Hemisphere defense pact concluded at Rio de Janeiro, which implemented the Monroe Doctrine and united the Western Hemisphere in behalf of peace. We pledge continued economic cooperation with the countries of the Western Hemisphere. We pledge continued support of regional arrangements within the United Nations Charter, such as the inter-American regional pact and the developing western European union.

President Truman, by granting immediate recognition to Israel, led the world in extending friendship and welcome to a people who have long sought and justly deserve freedom and independence.

We pledge full recognition to the state of Israel. We affirm our pride that the United States under the leadership of President Truman played a leading role in the adoption of the resolution of November 29, 1947, by the United Nations General Assembly for the creation of a Jewish state.

We approve the claims of the state of Israel to the boundaries set forth in the United Nations resolution of November 29 and consider that modifications thereof should be made only if fully acceptable to the state of Israel.

We look forward to the admission of the state of Israel to the United Nations and its full participation in the international community of nations. We pledge appropriate aid to the state of Israel in developing its economy and resources.

We favor the revision of the arms embargo to accord to the state of Israel the right of self-defense. We pledge ourselves to work for the modification of any resolution of the United Nations to the extent that it may prevent any such revision.

We continue to support, within the framework of the United Nations, the internationalization of Jerusalem and the protection of the holy places in Palestine.

The United States has traditionally been in sympathy with the efforts of subjugated countries to attain their independence, and to establish a democratic form of government. Poland is an outstanding example. After a century and a half of subjugation, it was resurrected after the First World War by our great Democratic President, Woodrow Wilson. We look forward to development of these countries as prosperous, free, and democratic fellow members of the United Nations.

OUR DOMESTIC POLICIES

The Republican Eightieth Congress is directly responsible for the existing and ever-increasing high cost of living. It cannot dodge that responsibility. Unless the Republican candidates are defeated in the approaching elections, their mistaken policies will impose greater hardships and suffering on large numbers of the American people. Adequate food, clothing, and shelter—the bare necessities of life—are becoming too expensive for the average wage earner and the prospects are more frightening each day. The Republican Eightieth Congress has lacked the courage to face this vital problem.

We shall curb the Republican inflation. We shall put a halt to the disastrous price rises which have come as a result of the failure of the Republican Eightieth Congress to take effective action on President Truman's recommendations, setting forth a comprehensive program to control the high cost of living.

We shall enact comprehensive housing legislation, including provision for slum clearance and low-rent housing projects initiated by local agencies. This Nation is shamed by the failure of the Republican Eightieth Congress to pass the vitally needed general housing legislation as recommended by the President. Adequate housing will end the need for rent control. Until then, it must be continued.

We pledge the continued maintenance of those sound fiscal policies which under Democratic leadership have brought about a balanced budget and reduction of the public debt by $28,000,000,000 since the close of the war.

We favor the reduction of taxes, whenever it is possible to do so without unbalancing the Nation's economy, by giving a full measure of relief to those millions of low-income families on whom the wartime burden of taxation fell most heavily. The form of tax reduction adopted by the Republican Eightieth Congress gave relief to those who need it least and ignored those who need it most.

We shall endeavor to remove tax inequities and to continue to reduce the public debt.

We are opposed to the imposition of a general Federal sales tax.

We advocate the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act. It was enacted by the Republican Eightieth Congress over the President's veto. That act was proposed with the promise that it would secure "the legitimate rights of both employees and employers in their relations affecting commerce." It has failed. The number of labor-management disputes has increased. The number of cases before the National Labor Relations Board has more than doubled since the act was passed, and efficient and prompt administration is becoming more and more difficult. It has encouraged litigation in labor disputes and undermined the established American policy of collective bargaining. Recent decisions by the courts prove that the act was so poorly drawn that its application is uncertain, and that it is probably, in some provisions, unconstitutional. We advocate such legislation as is desirable to establish a just body of rules to assure free and effective collective bargaining, to determine, in the public interest, the rights of employees and employers, to reduce to a minimum their conflict of interests, and to enable unions to keep their membership free from communistic influences.

We urge that the Department of Labor be rebuilt and strengthened, restoring to it the units, including the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service and the United States Employment Service, which properly belong to it, and which the Republican Eightieth Congress stripped from it over the veto of President Truman. We urge that the Department's facilities for collecting and disseminating economic information be expanded, and that a Labor Education Extension Service be established in the Department of Labor.

We favor the extension of the coverage of the Fair Labor Standards Act as recommended by President Truman, and the adoption of a minimum wage of at least 75 cents an hour in place of the present obsolete and inadequate minimum of 40 cents an hour.

We favor legislation assuring that the workers of our Nation receive equal pay for equal work regardless of sex.

We favor the extension of the social-security program established under Democratic leadership, to provide additional protection against the hazards of old age, disability, disease, or death. We believe that this program should include:

Increases in old-age and survivors' insurance benefits by at least 50 percent, and reduction of the eligibility age for women from 65 to 60 years; extension of old-age and survivors' and unemployment insurance to all workers not now covered; insurance against loss of earnings on account of illness or disability; improved public assistance for the needy.

We favor the enactment of a national health program for expanded medical research, medical education, and hospitals and clinics.

We will continue our efforts to aid the blind and other handicapped persons to become self-supporting.

We will continue our efforts to expand maternal care, improve the health of the Nation's children, and reduce juvenile delinquency.

We approve the purposes of the Mental Health Act, and we favor such appropriations as may be necessary to make it effective.

We advocate Federal aid for education administered by and under the control of the States. We vigorously support the authorization, which was so shockingly ignored by the Republican Eightieth Congress, for the appropriation of $300,000,000 as a beginning of Federal aid to the States to assist them in meeting the present educational needs. We insist upon the right of every American child to obtain a good education.

The Nation can never discharge its debt to its millions of war veterans. We pledge ourselves to the continuance and improvement of our national program of benefits for veterans and their families.

We are proud of the sound and comprehensive program conceived, developed, and administered under Democratic leadership, including the GI bill of rights, which has proved beneficial to many millions.

The level of veterans' benefits must be constantly reexamined in the light of the decline in the purchasing power of the dollar brought about by inflation.

Employment and economic security must be afforded all veterans. We pledge a program of housing for veterans at prices they can afford to pay.

The disabled veteran must be provided with medical care and hospitalization of the highest possible standard.

We pledge our efforts to maintain continued farm prosperity, improvement of the standard of living, and the working condition of the farmer, and to preserve the family-size farm.

Specifically, we favor a permanent system of flexible price supports for agricultural products to maintain farm income on a parity with farm operating costs; an intensified soil-conservation program; an extended crop-insurance program; improvement of methods of distributing agricultural products; development and maintenance of stable export markets; adequate financing for the school-lunch program; the use of agricultural surpluses to improve the diet of low-income families in case of need; continued expansion of the rural electrification program; strengthening of all agricultural credit programs; intensified research to improve agricultural practices, and to find new uses for farm products.

We strongly urge the continuance of maximum farmer participation in all these programs.

We favor the repeal of the discriminatory taxes on the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine.

We will encourage farm cooperatives and oppose any revision of Federal law designed to curtail their most effective functioning as a means of achieving economy, stability, and security for American agriculture.

We favor provisions under which our fishery resources and industry will be afforded the benefits that will result from more scientific research and exploration.

We recognize the importance of small business in a sound American economy. It must be protected against unfair discrimination and monopoly, and be given equal opportunities with competing enterprises to expand its capital structure.

We favor nondiscriminatory transportation charges and declare for the early correction of inequalities in such charges.

We pledge the continued full and unified regional development of the water, mineral, and other natural resources of the Nation, recognizing that the progress already achieved under the initiative of the Democratic Party in the arid and semiarid States of the West, as well as in the Tennessee Valley, is only an indication of still greater results which can be accomplished. Our natural resources are the heritage of all our people and must not be permitted to become the private preserves of monopoly.

The irrigation of arid land, the establishment of new, independent, competitive business, and the stimulation of new industrial opportunities for all of our people depends upon the development and transmission of electric energy in accordance with the program and the projects so successfully launched under Democratic auspices during the past 16 years.

We favor acceleration of the Federal reclamation program, the maximum beneficial use of water in the several States for irrigation and domestic supply. In this connection, we propose the establishment and maintenance of new family-size farms for veterans and others seeking settlement opportunities, the development of hydroelectric power, and its widespread distribution over publicly owned transmission lines to assure benefits to the water users in financing irrigation projects, and to the power users for domestic and industrial purposes, with preference to public agencies and REA cooperatives. These are the aims of the Democratic Party which, in the future, as in the past, will place the interest of the people as individual citizens first.

We will continue to improve the navigable waterways and harbors of the Nation.

We pledge to continue the policy initiated by the Democratic Party of adequate appropriations for flood control for the protection of life and property.

In addition to practicing false economy on flood control, the Republican-controlled Eightieth Congress was so cruel as even to deny emergency Federal funds for the relief of individuals and municipalities victimized by recent great floods, tornadoes, and other disasters.

We shall expand our programs for forestation, for the improvement of grazing lands, public and private, for the stock piling of strategic minerals and the encouragement of a sound domestic mining industry. We shall carry forward experiments for the broader utilization of mineral resources in the highly beneficial manner already demonstrated in the program for the manufacture of synthetic liquid fuel from our vast deposits of coal and oil shale and from our agricultural resources.

We pledge an intensive enforcement of the antitrust laws, with adequate appropriations.

We advocate the strengthening of existing antitrust laws by closing the gaps which experience has shown have been used to promote the concentration of economic power.

We pledge a positive program to promote competitive business and to foster the development of independent trade and commerce.

We support the right of free enterprise and the right of all persons to work together in cooperatives and other democratic associations for the purpose of carrying out any proper business operations free from any arbitrary and discriminatory restrictions.

The Democratic Party is responsible for the great civil-rights gains made in recent years in eliminating unfair and illegal discrimination based on race, creed, or color.

The Democratic Party commits itself to continuing its efforts to eradicate all racial, religious, and economic discrimination.

We again state our belief that racial and religious minorities must have the right to live, the right to work, the right to vote, the full and equal protection of the laws, on a basis of equality with all citizens as guaranteed by the Constitution.

We highly commend President Harry S. Truman for his courageous stand on the issue of civil rights. We call upon the Congress to support our President in guaranteeing these basic and fundamental rights—

(1) The right of full and equal political participation;

(2) The right to equal opportunity of employment;

(3) The right of security of person;

(4) The right of equal treatment in the service and defense of our Nation.

We pledge ourselves to legislation to admit a minimum of 400,000 displaced persons found eligible for United States citizenship without discrimination as to race or religion. We condemn the undemocratic action of the Republican Eightieth Congress in passing an inadequate and bigoted bill for this purpose, which law imposes un-American restrictions based on race and religion upon such admissions.

We urge immediate statehood for Hawaii and Alaska; immediate determination by the people of Puerto Rico as to their form of government and their ultimate status with respect to the United States; and the maximum degree of local self-government for the Virgin Islands, Guam, and Samoa.

We recommend to Congress the submission of a constitutional amendment on equal rights for women.

We favor the extension of the right of suffrage to the people of the District of Columbia.

We pledge adherence to the principle of nonpartisan civilian administration of atomic energy, and the development of atomic energy for peaceful purposes through free scientific inquiry for the benefit of all the people.

We urge the vigorous promotion of world-wide freedom in the gathering and dissemination of news by press, radio, motion pictures, news reels, and television, with complete confidence that an informed people will determine wisely the course of domestic and foreign policy.

We believe the primary step toward the achievement of world-wide freedom is access by all peoples to the facts and the truth. To that end, we will encourage the greatest possible vigor on the part of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights and the United Nations Economic and Social Council to establish the foundations on which freedom can exist in every nation.

We deplore the repeated attempts of Republicans in the Eightieth Congress to impose thought control upon the American people and to encroach on the freedom of speech and press.

We pledge the early establishment of a national science foundation under principles which will guarantee the most effective utilization of public and private research facilities.

We will continue our efforts to improve and strengthen our Federal civil service, and provide adequate compensation.

We will continue to maintain an adequate American merchant marine.

We condemn communism and other forms of totalitarianism and their destructive activity overseas and at home. We shall continue to build firm defenses against communism by strengthening the economic and social structure of our own democracy. We reiterate our pledge to expose and prosecute treasonable activities of anti-democratic and un-American organizations which would sap our strength, paralyze our will to defend ourselves, and destroy our unity, inciting race against race, class against class, and the people against free institutions. We shall continue vigorously to enforce the laws against subversive activities, observing at all times the constitutional guarantees which protect free speech, the free press, and honest political activity. We shall strengthen our laws against subversion to the full extent necessary, protecting at all times our traditional individual freedom.

We recognize that the United States has become the principal protector of the free world. The free peoples of the world look to us for support in maintaining their freedoms. If we falter in our leadership, we may endanger the peace of the world—and we shall surely endanger the welfare of our own Nation. For these reasons it is imperative that we maintain our military strength until world peace with justice is secure. Under the leadership of President Truman, our military departments have been united and our Government organization for the national defense greatly strengthened. We pledge to maintain adequate military strength, based on these improvements, sufficient to fulfill our responsibilities in occupation zones, defend our national interests, and to bolster those free nations resisting Communist aggression.

This is our platform. These are our principles. They form a political and economic policy which has guided our party and our Nation.

The American people know these principles well. Under them we have enjoyed greater security, greater prosperity, and more effective world leadership than ever before.

Under them and with the guidance of divine providence we can proceed to higher levels of prosperity and security; we can advance to a better life at home; we can continue our leadership in the world with ever-growing prospects for lasting peace.

The 1948 Platform of the Republican Party

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROBERT A. TAFT
OF OHIO
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Wednesday, July 28, 1948

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD the 1948 platform of the Republican Party.

There being no objection, the platform was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE 1948 PLATFORM OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY

I

Declaration of principles

To establish and maintain peace, to build a country in which every citizen can earn a good living with the promise of real progress for himself and his family, and to uphold as a beacon light for mankind everywhere the inspiring American tradition of liberty, opportunity, and justice for all—that is the Republican platform.

To this end we propose as a guide to definite action the following principles:

Maximum voluntary cooperation between citizens and minimum dependence on law; never, however, declining courageous recourse to law if necessary.

Our competitive system furnishes vital opportunity for youth and for all enterprising citizens; it makes possible the productive power which is the unique weapon of our national defense and is the mainspring of material well-being and political freedom.

Government, as the servant of such a system, should take all needed steps to strengthen and develop public health, to promote scientific research, to provide security for the aged, and to promote a stable economy so that men and women need not fear the loss of their jobs or the threat of economic hardships through no fault of their own.

The rights and obligations of workers are commensurate with the rights and obligations of employers and they are interdependent; these rights should be protected against coercion and exploitation from whatever quarter and with due regard for the general welfare of all.

The soil as our basic natural resource must be conserved with increased effectiveness, and farm prices should be supported on a just basis.

Development of the priceless national heritage which is in our West is vital to our Nation.

Administration of Government must be economical and effective.

Faulty governmental policies share an important responsibility for the present cruelly high cost of living. We pledge prompt action to correct these policies. There must be decent living at decent wages.

Our common defense must be strengthened and unified.

Our foreign policy is dedicated to preserving a free America in a free world of free men. This calls for strengthening the United Nations and primary recognition of America's self-interest in the liberty of other peoples. Prudently conserving our own resources, we shall cooperate on a self-help basis with other peace-loving nations.

Constant and effective insistence on the personal dignity of the individual and his right to complete justice without regard to race, creed, or color is a fundamental American principle.

We aim always to unite and to strengthen; never to weaken or divide. In such a brotherhood will we Americans get results. Thus we will overcome all obstacles.

II

In the past 18 months the Republican Congress, in the face of frequent obstruction from the executive branch, made a record of solid achievement. Here are some of the accomplishments of this Republican Congress:

The long trend of extravagant and ill-advised executive action reversed.

The budget balanced.

Taxes reduced.

Limitation of Presidential tenure to two terms passed.

Assistance to veterans, their widows and orphans provided.

Assistance to agriculture and business enacted.

Elimination of the poll tax as a requisite to soldier voting.

A sensible reform of the labor law, protecting all rights of labor while safeguarding the entire community against those break-downs in essential industries which endanger the health and livelihood of all.

A long-range farm program enacted.

Unification of the armed services launched.

A military manpower law enacted.

The United Nations fostered.

A haven for displaced persons provided.

The most far-reaching measures in history adopted to aid the recovery of the free world on a basis of self-help and with prudent regard for our own resources.

And, finally, the development of intelligent plans and party teamwork for the day when the American people entrust the executive as well as the legislative branch of our National Government to the Republican Party.

We shall waste few words on the tragic lack of foresight and general inadequacy of those now in charge of the executive branch of the National Government; they have lost the confidence of citizens of all parties.

III

Present cruelly high prices are due in large part to the fact that the Government has not effectively used the powers it possesses to combat inflation, but has deliberately encouraged higher prices.

We pledge an attack upon the basic causes of inflation, including the following measures:

Progressive reduction of the cost of Government through elimination of waste.

Stimulation of production as the surest way to lower prices.

Fiscal policies to provide increased incentives for production and thrift.

A sound currency.

Reduction of the public debt.

We pledge further, that in the management of our National Government, we shall achieve the abolition of overlapping, duplication, extravagance, and excessive centralization.

The more efficient assignment of functions within the Government.

And the rooting out of communism wherever found.

These things are fundamental.

IV

We must, however, do more.

The Constitution gives us the affirmative mandate "to establish justice."

In Lincoln's words: "The dogmas of the quiet past are inadequate to the stormy present. The occasion is piled high with difficulty and we must rise with the occasion. As our case is new, so we must think anew and act anew."

The tragic experience of Europe tells us that popular government disappears when it is ineffective and no longer can translate into action the aims and the aspirations of the people.

Therefore, in domestic affairs, we propose:

The maintenance of armed services for air, land, and sea to a degree which will insure our national security; and the achievement of effective unity in the Department of National Defense so as to insure maximum economy in money and manpower, and maximum effectiveness in case of war. We favor sustained effective action to procure sufficient manpower for the services, recognizing the American principle that every citizen has an obligation of service to his country.

An adequate privately operated merchant marine, the continued development of our harbors and waterways, and the expansion of privately operated air transportation and communication systems.

The maintenance of Federal finances in a healthy condition and continuation of the efforts so well started by the Republican Congress to reduce the enormous burden of taxation in order to provide incentives for the creation of new industries and new jobs, and to bring relief from inflation. We favor intelligent integration of Federal-State taxing and spending policies designed to eliminate wasteful duplication, and in order that the State and local governments may be able to assume their separate responsibilities, the Federal Government shall as soon as practicable withdraw or reduce those taxes which can be best administered by local governments, with particular consideration of excise and inheritance taxes; and we favor restoring to America a working federalism.

Small business, the bulwark of American enterprise, must be encouraged through aggressive antimonopoly action, elimination of unnecessary controls, protection against discrimination, correction of tax abuses, and limitation of competition by governmental organizations.

Collective bargaining is an obligation as well as a right, applying equally to workers and employers; and the fundamental right to strike is subordinate only to paramount considerations of public health and safety. Government's chief function in this field is to promote good will, encourage cooperation, and where resort is had to intervention, to be impartial, preventing violence and requiring obedience to all law by all parties involved. We pledge continuing study to improve labor-management legislation in the light of experience and changing conditions.

There must be a long-term program in the interest of agriculture and the consumer which should include: An accelerated program of sounder soil conservation; effective protection of reasonable market prices through flexible support prices, commodity loans, marketing agreements, together with such other means as may be necessary, and the development of sound farm credit; encouragement of family-size farms; intensified research to discover new crops, new uses for existing crops, and control of hoof-and-mouth and other animal diseases and crop pests; support of the principle of bona fide farmer-owned and farmer-operated cooperatives, and sound rural electrification.

We favor progressive development of the Nation's water resources for navigation, flood control and power, with immediate action in critical areas.

We favor conservation of all our natural resources and believe that conservation and stock piling of strategic and critical raw materials is indispensable to the security of the United States.

We urge the full development of our forests on the basis of cropping and sustained yield with cooperation of State and private owners for conservation and fire protection.

We favor a comprehensive reclamation program for arid and semi-arid areas with full protection of the rights and interests of the States in the use and control of water for irrigation, power development incidental thereto and other beneficial uses; withdrawal or acquisition of lands for public purposes only by act of Congress and after due consideration of local problems; development of processes for the extraction of oil and other substances from oil shale and coal; adequate representation of the West in the national administration.

Recognizing the Nation's solemn obligation to all veterans, we propose a realistic and adequate adjustment of benefits on a cost-of-living basis for service-connected disabled veterans and their dependents, and for the widows, orphans, and dependents of veterans who died in the service of their country. All disabled veterans should have ample opportunity for suitable, self-sustaining employment. We demand good-faith compliance with veterans' preference in Federal service with simplification and codification of the hundreds of piecemeal Federal laws affecting veterans, and efficient and businesslike management of the Veterans' Administration. We pledge the highest possible standards of medical care and hospitalization.

Housing can best be supplied and financed by private enterprise; but Government can and should encourage the building of better homes at less cost. We recommend Federal aid to the States for local slum clearance and low-rental housing programs only where there is a need that cannot be met either by private enterprise or by the States and localities.

Consistent with the vigorous existence of our competitive economy, we urge: extension of the Federal old-age and survivors' insurance program and increase of the benefits to a more realistic level; strengthening of Federal-State programs designed to provide more adequate hospital facilities, to improve methods of treatment for the mentally ill, to advance maternal and child health and generally to foster a healthy America.

Lynching or any other form of mob violence anywhere is a disgrace to any civilized state, and we favor the prompt enactment of legislation to end this infamy.

One of the basic principles of this Republic is the equality of all individuals in their right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. This principle is enunciated in the Declaration of Independence and embodied in the Constitution of the United States; it was vindicated on the field of battle and became the cornerstone of this Republic. This right of equal opportunity to work and to advance in life should never be limited in any individual because of race, religion, color, or country of origin. We favor the enactment and just enforcement of such Federal legislation as may be necessary to maintain this right at all times in every part of this Republic.

We favor the abolition of the poll tax as a requisite to voting.

We are opposed to the idea of racial segregation in the armed services of the United States.

V

We pledge a vigorous enforcement of existing laws against Communists and enactment of such new legislation as may be necessary to expose the treasonable activities of Communists and defeat their objective of establishing here a godless dictatorship controlled from abroad.

We favor a revision of the procedure for the election of the President and Vice President which will more exactly reflect the popular vote.

We recommend to Congress the submission of a constitutional amendment providing equal rights for women.

We favor equal pay for equal work regardless of sex.

We propose a well-paid and efficient Federal career service.

We favor the elimination of unnecessary Federal bureaus and of the duplication of the functions of necessary governmental agencies.

We favor equality of educational opportunity for all and the promotion of education and educational facilities.

We favor restoration to the States of their historic rights to the tide and submerged lands, tributary waters, lakes, and streams.

We favor eventual statehood for Hawaii, Alaska, and Puerto Rico. We urge development of Alaskan land communications and natural resources.

We favor self-government for the residents of the Nation's Capital.

VI

We dedicate our foreign policy to the preservation of a free America in a free world of freemen. With neither malice nor desire for conquest, we shall strive for a just peace with all nations.

America is deeply interested in the stability, security, and liberty of other independent peoples. Within the prudent limits of our own economic welfare, we shall cooperate, on a basis of self-help and mutual aid, to assist other peace-loving nations to restore their economic independence and the human rights and fundamental freedoms for which we fought two wars and upon which dependable peace must build. We shall insist on businesslike and efficient administration of all foreign aid.

We welcome and encourage the sturdy progress toward unity in western Europe.

We shall erect our foreign policy on the basis of friendly firmness which welcomes cooperation but spurns appeasement. We shall pursue a consistent foreign policy which invites steadiness and reliance and which thus avoids the misunderstandings from which wars result. We shall protect the future against the errors of the Democratic administration, which has too often lacked clarity, competence, or consistency in our vital international relationships and has too often abandoned justice.

We believe in collective security against aggression and in behalf of justice and freedom. We shall support the United Nations as the world's best hope in this direction, striving to strengthen it and promote its effective evolution and use. The United Nations should progressively establish international law, be freed of any veto in the peaceful settlement of international disputes, and be provided with the armed forces contemplated by the Charter. We particularly commend the value of regional arrangements as prescribed by the Charter; and we cite the Western Hemispheric defense pact as a useful model.

We shall nourish these pan-American agreements in the new spirit of cooperation which implements the Monroe Doctrine.

We welcome Israel into the family of nations and take pride in the fact that the Republican Party was the first to call for the establishment of a free and independent Jewish commonwealth. The vacillation of the Democratic administration on this question has undermined the prestige of the United Nations. Subject to the letter and spirit of the United Nations Charter, we pledge to Israel full recognition, with its boundaries as sanctioned by the United Nations and aid in developing its economy.

We will foster and cherish our historic policy of friendship with China and assert our deep interest in the maintenance of its integrity and freedom.

We shall seek to restore autonomy and self-sufficiency as rapidly as possible in our postwar occupied areas, guarding always against any rebirth of aggression.

We shall relentlessly pursue our aims for the universal limitation and control of arms and implements of war on a basis of reliable disciplines against bad faith.

At all times safeguarding our own industry and agriculture, and under efficient administrative procedures for the legitimate consideration of domestic needs, we shall support the system of reciprocal trade and encourage international commerce.

We pledged that under a Republican administration all foreign commitments shall be made public and subject to constitutional ratification. We shall say what we mean and mean what we say. In all of these things we shall primarily consult the national security and welfare of our own United States. In all of these things we shall welcome the world's cooperation. But in none of these things shall we surrender our ideals or our free institutions.

We are proud of the part that Republicans have taken in those limited areas of foreign policy in which they have been permitted to participate. We shall invite the minority party to join us under the next Republican administration in stopping partisan politics at the water's edge.

We faithfully dedicate ourselves to peace with justice.

VII

Guided by these principles, with continuing faith in Almighty God; united in the spirit of brotherhood; and using to the full the skills, resources, and blessings of liberty with which we are endowed; we, the American people, will courageously advance to meet the challenge of the future.

Speech of Hon. Alben W. Barkley, of Kentucky, as Temporary Chairman of Democratic National Convention

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALBEN W. BARKLEY

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, July 28, 1948

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD the speech which I delivered as the temporary chairman of the Democratic National Convention at Philadelphia.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Fellow Americans, I am deeply moved by the signal honor you have done me.

We have assembled here for a great purpose. We have a solemn commission from millions of American men and women. We are here to give to them an accounting of our stewardship for 16 eventful years, for not one of which we make apology, and to lay before them our articles of faith and nominate our candidates.

We shall not follow the example of our opponents by announcing the result of the contest 4 months in advance.

In a broader and deeper sense, however, we are assembled in the name of American democracy, and democracy for all mankind everywhere, without regard to race, creed, color, or nationality, without which it cannot be preserved anywhere.

Our claim upon the confidence of the people rests upon an unparalleled record of devotion to the people's welfare; a record which rescued the American economy of free enterprise from a collapse we did not foster; a record which four times the American people have overwhelmingly endorsed.

There has never been greater need in the world than now for the sort of leadership which, from its origin, the Democratic Party has given in the development of democracy in America.

This leadership has not been sectional, but national, nor has it sought to advance one class to the unjust detriment of others.

The unprecedented challenge which beckons us to service in these uncertain times demands that we look beyond the limits of states or nations or political parties to the obligations of the democratic process which we espouse.

In the midst of such a summons and on the basis of our record, we meet here today and shall meet our opponents in the approaching contest and on the day of the next election.

What is this record of which I speak? What is the sum total of these accomplishments we have wrought in the 16 years now drawing to a close?

They call it the New Deal. At every convention since 1932 and on every political rostrum Republican politicians have hurled their anathemas at this New Deal as if it were some blight or plague that had poisoned the lives and consumed the liberties of the people and kept them chained and helpless.

What is this cankering, corroding, fungous growth which every Republican orator, save one, denounced with unaccustomed rancor, then in their adopted platform hugged to their political bosom as if it were the child of their own loins?

It was recovery. The new Roosevelt administration breathed into the nostrils of every worthy American enterprise a breath of new life, new hope, and new determination. It put old agencies at the people's disposal and, where necessary, inaugurated new ones to make democracy live and work for the American people.

I cannot here detail the great body of laws and policies inaugurated by four Democratic administrations which have become as secure a part of American law and policy as the antitrust laws or the Federal Reserve System itself.

In spite of the chronic and noisy opposition of this program's enemies, the American people will not willingly surrender it. For,

"The moving finger writes; and, having writ,
Moves on: nor all your piety nor wit
Shall lure it back to cancel half a line
Nor all your tears wash out a word of it."

I remind the American people of some of these accomplishments as evidence of our good faith with and our service to them:

A farmer's agricultural adjustment and price-support program, which, in 16 years, has increased farm income by 800 percent, substantially reduced interest rates on farm credit, reduced farm-mortgage indebtedness by more than 50 percent, and farm-mortgage foreclosures by 95 percent.

A soil-conservation program by which we propose to hand this land of ours down to other generations capable of their support.

A rural-electrification program, which has lifted from millions of farm women the drudgery of exhausting housework, and brought millions of farmers the boon of electric power.

A program of development of our water resources for navigation, flood control, and power, to make these God-given resources the servants of the public.

A Labor Relations Act, a Fair Labor Standards Act, and other measures for improving conditions of labor and relationships between employers and employees.

A reciprocal-trade program, fathered by Cordell Hull, one of America's greatest Secretaries of State, under which capital and labor have been able to increase their markets throughout the world, without substantial injury to any American industry.

What is this whipping boy which Republican speech makers use for their lamentations at every convention and on every platform?

A reorganized and stronger banking system and a Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, reducing bank failures from 4,004 in 1933 to only 6 in all of 1947, permitting the American people to retire at night without fear that their savings will evaporate before the dawn of morning.

A Federal Housing Administration and a Home Owners' Loan Corporation, which built, improved, and saved hundreds of thousands of homes in town and city, and reduced nonfarm real estate foreclosures from 252,000 in 1933 to only 10,000 in 1947.

A Commodity Credit Corporation, an Export-Import Bank, a Federal Home Loan Bank, a Bank for Cooperatives, and other institutions for the service of the American people.

An expanded Reconstruction Finance Corporation, at a time when it was the only money-lending agency in the Nation capable of averting financial disaster.

A statute abolishing the holding-company evil and a Securities and Exchange Commission to supervise the issue and sale of corporate stocks, and protect the American people from the fraud to which they had been subjected under the boom-and-bust days of a previous administration.

A good-neighbor policy, bringing into more friendly relationships the great nations of the Western Hemisphere, and guaranteeing the solidarity of cooperative pan-Americanism as a substitute for the sordid concept of dollar diplomacy and selfish exploitation under the friendly eyes of the American Government.

What is this New Deal?

The gainful employment of more than 61,000,000 American workers, which bids fair to rise to more than 63,000,000 during the present year, compared to 15,000,000 unemployed 16 years ago.

Corporate profits, after taxes, of more than $17,000,000,000 for 1947, and at the rate of $18,000,000,000 for 1948, the highest level in the history of the Nation in either peace or war.

Increased production to a level exceeding $230,000,000,000 per annum; and an annual income of $210,000,000,000 for the American people in 1948, compared to an annual income of $38,000,000,000 16 years ago.

An increase in the monthly average of new construction in 1948 to more than $1,200,000,000; and for new plants and equipment, excluding agriculture, the sum of $19,000,000,000, an increase of nearly 400 percent above 1939, and 1,000 percent greater than 16 years ago.

An increase in new corporate security issues to more than $6,000,000,000 for the year 1947, which does not appear to be an undue restriction on the investment of new capital in the United States.

An increase in sales of American goods to a figure of more than $15,000,000,000 per month for the first months of 1948.

An increase in exports to other nations to more than $15,000,000,000 for 1947, an excess of exports over imports of more than $6,000,000,000 under a reciprocal trade program that the Republicans in Congress have scuttled.

A prosperity enabling the American people to indulge in personal savings of more than $100,000,000,000 since 1939, and has enabled the Treasury of the United States to discharge, in a little more than 2 years, more than $27,000,000,000 of the national debt inherited from the great expenditures of the war.

Let us ask, and let the American people ask, those who spray this forest of superb accomplishment with the froth of their vindictive lips, which tree will they cut down with their mighty ax or their puny hatchet?

In 1946 the Republican Party secured control of both branches of the Congress.

The people did not really mean to elect a Republican Congress. They were voting against irksome and irritating annoyances which the war had required, and which had not been removed.

What has been its record? How has it dealt with the monumental problems of the American people?

During the war, occurred probably the greatest discovery in the history of science or invention, the discovery and utilization of atomic energy.

This fantastic element of nature has always existed, just as the rays of the sun always held the mystery of electricity long before Franklin flew his kite, but it had not been brought under the control of man until the emergency of war produced it, at a cost to the American people of $2,000,000,000 or $3,000,000,000.

How and by whom shall it be used—for the destruction of mankind, or for his greater advancement in developing and producing the means of greater happiness and prosperity?

The Eightieth Republican Congress refused to confirm for the terms fixed by law, the members of the Atomic Commission, which has been engaged in profound research into this new force of nature. But, it shortened their terms to a period of 2 years, so that, in the event of their success, they might secure political control of the Commission and its functions.

Judging from the proceedings of the recent Republican Convention, you would not have known that atomic energy had ever been discovered or dreamed of.

Claiming to have had a mandate from the American people, the Republican Congress began its discharge by seeking to destroy the Rural Electrification Administration and the soil conservation program by denying to them adequate funds for their extension to the farmers of the Nation.

Lacking in courage to repeal the Labor Relations Act, and the Fair Labor Standards Act, they have sought so to modify the basis upon which these enactments were predicated, as to destroy, in part, the rights enjoyed by labor in the collective process. They have done this by the enactment of a statute, which had its inception in a desire to destroy the right of American labor to organize, portions of which enactment have already been declared null and void by the Supreme Court of the United States.

The American people have the right to demand that the Republican Party and its candidates take them into their confidence regarding their intentions on this great program, which they condemn out of their mouths, but endorse in their platforms.

If they propose to abolish it from the statute books, let them so advise the American people. They cannot talk out of both corners of their mouths at once; nor reincarnate the spirit of a mythological Janus, either in their platform or in their public utterances.

When this Congress assembled in January 1947 the new Speaker of the House of Representatives, who was the permanent chairman of the recent Republican convention, announced that they would open each session with a prayer and close it with a probe.

If the prayers have been no more effective than their probes, they did not rise above the heads of the congressional inmates. The mandate upon which this Congress claimed to have been elected, was supposed to have called for the undoing of nearly everything that had been done since they folded their tents and departed from Washington in 1933, depending upon the exigencies of each congressional district.

There is more to this record than appears upon the surface. There is more to it than found its way into the law books. There is the record of things promised and not accomplished. There is the record of attempted sabotage of some of the greatest programs ever inaugurated by the American Government.

You do not see a housing bill in that visible record. What became of it? Notwithstanding repeated recommendations by the President urging adequate housing legislation for the veterans of our latest war and for millions of people in the lower-income brackets, this Republican Congress did nothing. Word came down from Philadelphia, where the platform committee was in session, in the closing hours of the last confused session of the Congress, demanding that some sort of housing bill be passed. Anything with the word "house" in it would be sufficient. They had to see it written across the horizon. Where is that housing legislation? It is not or the statutes. It furnishes no roof over the veterans, workers, or farmers. It is just another gone goose.

Repeatedly the President recommended the enactment of legislation to improve and conserve the health of our people. Congress fumed and fretted and dickered. But where is the health legislation which the Republican Party and the Republican platform have promised the American people? It is another gone goose.

Repeatedly the President urged this Congress to enact legislation to improve the American educational system, to assist the States in providing better schools and better teachers and better school facilities for the education of our people, found deplorably deficient during the administration of the selective-service law in the last war.

The American people have the right to ask Republican leaders of the Eightieth Congress and that platform makers at Philadelphia in June, and the candidates nominated at the convention, to explain why the Congress which they endorse failed utterly in the enactment of legislation to improve our educational facilities. They have the right to ask to what extent they may rely upon present promises in regard to education made either by a platform or by candidates, since they have been unable or unwilling to honor their commitments in the past. Where is the Republican educational program?

If you ask me where all these measures now repose, I answer that they have gone to the home for lost cause. If I may quote a recent distinguished authority on the subject, they are a part of the flock of "gone geese," put to flight by the Republican Congress which has just adjourned.

Why did these measures remain unacted upon? It may be because they bordered too much upon the hated and despised theory that Government should place its powers and its facilities at the disposal of the people to advance their welfare.

If you doubt this diagnosis, ask the Republican Speaker of the House of Representatives. Ask the Republican chairman of the House Rules Committee, which did not even permit the housing bill to come to the floor of the House for consideration or debate. Ask the Republican majority leader of the House of Representatives. Ask the chairman of the House Banking and Currency Committee. Ask the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committe. Ask the Republican whip of the House of Representatives. Ask the junior Senator from Washington, the junior Senator from Missouri, and the junior Senator from the State of Wisconsin.

These men might shed some light on the reason for the utter inaction and the utter incapacity of the Republican Congress with reference to these and other vital measures.

If information cannot be obtained from these sources, it might be interesting to inquire of the more than 1,400 registered lobbyists in Washington during the Eightieth Congress. In 1946, Congress passed a law requiring the registration of lobbyists and lobbying organizations. In the Seventy-ninth Congress there were 360 registrations of lobbyists and organizations engaged in lobbying. During the Eightieth Republican Congress, more than 1,400 lobbyists and lobbying organizations registered. There are approximately three lobbyists for each Member of Congress, both Senators and Representatives.

Financial statements filed by lobbyists organizations and employers of these lobbyists also show that special interests are willing to pay big money to get the laws they want. These organizations have spent more than $8,000,000 to influence the Eightieth Congress, which is $3,000,000 more than the entire appropriation for all the 96 Senators and their official staffs to conduct the business of the people in the Senate of the United States.

The increase in lobbying registrations, and the enormous expense involved, might be a source of revealing information to the American people, if the truth can be ascertained.

Whether the American people receive adequate or satisfactory answers to these questions, they are entitled to know why it was that this Republican Congress subordinated the need of American veterans and American workers to the will of the real-estate lobby which infested the corridors of the Capitol and every hotel in the city of Washington.

These recitals, however, scarcely more than scratch the surface of Republican failures in the Eightieth Congress. Despite its repeated promises in its previous platforms to extend the benefits of the social-security system, inaugurated and enacted by the Democratic Party, it not only refused these promised extensions, but eliminated nearly three-quarters of a million people from possible benefits under it.

The Eightieth Congress refused to enact legislation increasing the minimum wage paid to American labor from 40 cents an hour, which will not buy a single pound of soup meat, to 70 cents an hour, which will just buy a pound of hamburger.

This brings us to the question of inflation.

Repeatedly, the President called attention to the increase in the cost of living, which, since 1945, notwithstanding periodical increases in wages, has reduced the wage earner's buying power by more than 16 percent.

It was upon this issue, in part, that the Republicans won control of the two Houses of the Congress in 1946. But this Republican Congress was content to pass a so-called voluntary price-reduction measure, in spite of which prices have continued to soar. Production, they said, was the remedy to the high cost of living. Repeatedly, the President urged Congress to halt this spiral of increased prices and consequent lower take-home wages. Production has exceeded wartime levels. But prices have continued to rise while a Republican Congress continued to dawdle.

Today the retail food price index is standing at 211 percent compared to the average of 1935 to 1939. It is higher than it has ever been in the history of this country. Food prices are 12½ percent higher than they were a year ago. They are 126 percent higher than they were in August 1939, and 45 percent higher than in June 1946, when price regulations were allowed to lapse.

The consumer's price index covering food, clothing, rent, fuel, electricity, ice, house furnishings, and other necessities of the moderate income group now stands at 171 percent higher than the 1935–39 average, 73 percent higher than in August 1939, and 28 percent higher than in June 1946.

But the Eightieth Republican Congress refused to take further steps in the war against inflation.

In their platform in 1944, the Republican Party criticized the dispersion of the agencies dealing with labor subjects away from the Department of Labor and pledged themselves to consolidate them all under the Secretary of Labor.

The Eightieth Congress not only refused to carry out that pledge, but have stripped the Department of Labor by transferring from it agencies already under its jurisdiction, such as the Conciliation Service, and refused to approve a reorganization plan sent to Congress by the President which would have brought about a more central jurisdiction within the Department on matters dealing with labor.

Following the enactment of the Smoot-Hawley tariff law of 1930 and the inauguration of a Democratic administration in 1933, Congress enacted a program for reciprocal trade agreements in an effort to soften the inequities and exorbitant tariff duties provided in that law and open the doors for the resumption of international trade.

This law has been in existence for 14 years. It had been renewed and extended four times prior to the assembling of the Eightieth Congress. The majority of Republican Members of both Houses voted against its enactment and its extension, except once during the recent war.

When the law expired on June 12, 1948, the House of Representatives passed a makeshift extension of 1 year, intended and calculated to destroy the whole reciprocal trade program. It provided that no agreement could go into effect until it had been approved by the Congress itself, a provision never previously included.

This measure was somewhat modified in the Senate, but both Houses refused to extend it beyond 1 year, because they wished to turn their faces back toward the days of 1930, the days of logrolling and back scratching in the making of tariff laws dealing with our trade with foreign nations. Even in the extension of 1 year provided for in the recent session of Congress, the President is powerless to go beyond the recommendation of a bipartisan Tariff Commission, which means, in fact, that during this 1 year's extension there will be no new trade agreements entered into.

This is a tragic betrayal of our obligations, not only to the American people, but to the world. In our legislation providing aid for the recovery of Europe, we required every nation receiving it to make similar agreements with other nations, to level off, in part, the barriers to trade that has stifled commerce, thrown labor out of employment, and contributed to the frictions which have brought war and devastation to the world.

In the enactment of the Smoot-Hawley tariff law of 1930, I recall the influence of the Pennsylvania Manufacturers Association. I recall the dominating influence of Mr. Joseph R. Grundy, then head of this association. He came to Washington and did his work. He did it well. He succeeded in procuring the enactment of the highest tariff barriers ever raised against international trade in the history of this or any other nation.

After accomplishing the creation of this legislative strait-jacket, he apparently disappeared like some sunken river from the surface of the earth, until the assembling of the recent Republican convention, when he reappeared with all his power, influence, and skillful manipulation in behalf of candidates, platforms, and policies. He so dominated that convention that it has been designated by some of the press as the Grundy convention.

We are told by the press and the radio that the pilgrimage of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania to the headquarters of the Governor of New York was inspired by this old hand at tariff manipulation.

We know from the press and the radio, and the general knowledge which is common to us all, that he exercised great influence in, if he did not actually dominate the selection of the new chairman of the Republican National Committee. This seems to have been the first installment of the pay-off. What future installments will turn out to be, only the future can reveal.

The American people may have been surprised at the selection of the new Republican chairman for the approaching campaign. But it is revealing to recall that this Pennsylvania Congressman, back yonder in the year 1943, expressed his political philosophy and the reasons for his belief that the Republican Party deserved to be returned to power in these United States. "It is time," said Mr. HUGH SCOTT, "for the Republicans to take over. We are the best stock. We are the people who represent the real grit, brains, and backbone of America."

In this manner the new chairman of the Republican National Committee, selected by the Republican candidate for President, modified and modernized, from a Republican standpoint, the views of Abraham Lincoln, who, in his famous Gettysburg address, asked only for a government "of the people, by the people, and for the people."

The new Republican chairman insists that it must be a government of the best people, by the best people, and for the best people. This is a resurgence of the ancient Hamiltonian doctrine that only the rich, the educated, and the well born are qualified to participate in government in these free United States. Obviously, this will be the pattern of the Republican appeal to the American people.

"All hail the power of Grundy's name,
Let candidates prostrate fall,
Bring forth the Republican diadem,
And crown him boss of all."

It would be a futile process to waste time seeking to analyze the newest Republican national platform. It was appropriately described by the Senator from Massachusetts, who was chairman of the Republican resolutions committee, when he said, "It is a tent big enough for everybody to get under."

But, soon after he was nominated upon it, the Republican candidate for President announced that he would inaugurate the greatest house cleaning ever seen in Washington, if he should be elected.

We have, from time to time in the past, been promised or warned of other house cleanings, and the American people will recall in some recent Republican history the type of house cleaning they got.

The Republican nominee has also announced, with characteristic finality, that he proposes to clean the cobwebs from the Government at Washington, as he has cleaned them from the government at Albany, following long tenure of Democratic administrations at both places.

I am not an expert on cobwebs, but, if my memory does not betray me, when the Democratic Party took over the Government of the United States 16 years ago, even the spiders were so weak from starvation they could not weave a cobweb in any department of the Government.

However, whatever the platform may or may not promise, whatever the candidate may or may not stand for, we have, in all this confusion and vague atmosphere of promises and threats, one clear true clarion call. They are going to eliminate all the bureaucrats in Washington.

Congress creates a bureau in some department, like the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the Treasury, or the Bureau of Reclamation in the Interior Department, or of Soil Conservation in the Department of Agriculture, or the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in the Department of Commerce, or the Bureau of Yards and Docks in the Navy, or the Federal Bureau of Investigation in the Department of Justice. Some able and sincere American is appointed as the head of one of these bureaus, and he is immediately denounced as a bureaucrat, and the Republican politicians swear by all the gods of justice and economy they will eliminate him from the pay roll as a barnacle upon our ship of state.

What is a bureaucrat? A bureaucrat is a Democrat who holds some office that a Republican wants; and the only sort of housecleaning you will get in Washington, in the event of a Republican victory, will be the changing of the political complexion of those who hold the offices.

The fourth article of the current Republican platform quotes Abraham Lincoln. The Republican politicians and leaders have not been closer to Lincoln in two generations than to quote him. But they did quote him in their platform, where he said:

"The dogmas of the quiet past are inadequate to the stormy present. The occasion is piled high with difficulty and we must rise with the occasion. As our case is new, so we must think anew and act anew."

This is a precise description of the conditions which faced this country 16 years ago, when the Democratic Party accepted the responsibility of charting a new course for our domestic and international economy.

We found that the dogmas of the quiet past were inadequate to the stormy situation which then confronted us. The occasion was piled high with difficulties, and we sought to rise with the occasion. As our case was new, we thought anew and acted anew.

Let us apply this principle to our present international situation. There can be no question that the unaccustomed remedies which the Democratic Party applied to this new situation in America contributed largely to the ability of our Government and our people to mobilize their moral, spiritual, and economic forces to bring about the success of the Allied Nations in driving back Hitlerism and its particular form of totalitarian tyranny.

We had not wished to be drawn into the conflict which he precipitated. For more than 2 years we sought to avoid involvement, just as nearly a generation before we had sought to avoid involvement in the First World War. But, notwithstanding these efforts to remain aloof from the conflict, the question constantly arose, before we became involved, as to the extent of our readiness for the conflict, if it should be forced upon us. This involved selective service, the repeal of embargoes, and the arming of ships. It involved lend-lease in aid of those who were fighting for liberty across the seas.

I do not wish now to dig up the dead bones of past history, but if the American people will refresh themselves by referring to the record of Republican votes in both Houses of Congress on all these measures, they will find a revealing consistency in opposition to every measure calculated to prepare our country to ward off the blow and soften its impact if it should be inflicted.

We were drawn into the war because of events familiar to us all. We mobilized every element of our population and of our economy, and in this mobilization Republicans vied with Democrats, high and low, in the service of their country. We claim no partisan credit or merit because of this universal all-out crusade against world enslavement. But, it is but the truth of history to say that these efforts were guided by an administration headed by a great American, who inspired his countrymen to total devotion and total sacrifice in behalf of our country and a democratic world.

This man rests in the peaceful atmosphere of a quiet grave at Hyde Park. Some Republican orators of questionable taste seem to fear his spirit now, as they feared the force of his personality when alive. Neither their jaundiced minds nor their forked tongues can rob him of the eminence which he will occupy in the history of America and of the world.

It has been 3 years since the end of hostilities. In these circumstances, we have been compelled to assume the leadership and the greater responsibility for the preservation of peace, the occupation of conquered territory, and the inauguration of the processes by which a peaceful world might be restored to mankind.

Unfortunately, these 3 years have not brought peace. We have neither peace nor war. The world situation has reached a posture where intensity of feeling and spontaneity of conduct might easily precipitate armed conflict.

Our Government, through the President and the Secretary of State and all other responsible agencies, including a majority of the Congress, have sought to adjust the differences and adopt a foreign policy that would preserve our own integrity, guarantee our own security, and ultimately bring peace to a distraught world.

In this effort, eminent and able and patriotic Republicans have shared the responsibility, and have aided us in keeping our foreign policy out of the mire of partisan politics and upon a solid basis of justice and equity in world cooperation.

It was through the initiative of our Government that the United Nations was established. We have sought to strengthen it, and pledge ourselves to continue the effort.

It was through our initiative that the World Bank and the World Monetary Fund were created to stabilize monetary currencies and stimulate reconstruction among the devastated nations and economies.

It was through our initiative that various international organizations, subordinate to but a part of the United Nations set-up, have been inaugurated to further these indispensable objectives.

It has been through our initiative that conferences have been held among the peace-loving nations, not only of Europe but of the Western Hemisphere, in an attempt to solidify the democratic world against further totalitarian aggression.

It was through our initiative that the greatest international effort at economic, moral, and political stabilization in the whole history of mankind was undertaken. It was first called the Marshall plan, then the European recovery plan, and now the Economic Cooperation Administration, enacted by the Congress at the urgent request of the President and the Secretary of State and the American people.

In this effort eminent and able Republicans like Senator VANDENBERG, chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, Congressman EATON, chairman of a similar committee in the House of Representatives, and many other Members of both Houses of Congress, and millions of others, regardless of politics, throughout the Nation, have set in motion the power and the agency through which the devastated nations of the world may bring about their own recovery, and move forward then under their own steam in an endeavor to restore economic and political security for themselves and peace for the peoples of the world.

We all rejoice in the great contribution made to this universal purpose by those men who subordinated their partisanship to the welfare of their country and of the world.

But this achievement has not been accomplished without obstinate obstruction on the part of responsible men in the Congress of the United States. This is particularly true in the House of Representatives. I need not repeat the efforts of the Republican leaders of the House of Representatives and their allies, to whittle away the recovery program until it should become a mere shadow of its original self, and descend to the level of a mere measure for physical relief.

I need not refer to the actual sabotage of this great program by the reduction of more than one-fourth of the amount which Congress had set as a practical minimum in the requirements for the first year of its administration. Fortunately in the Senate Republican leadership helped to retrieve most of the losses sustained in the efforts of the House of Representatives to break faith with our people and with the people of the world. In this accomplishment we may all rejoice without regard to political affiliations.

But this program has only begun. These same men will be in charge of that branch of the Congress in the event of Republican victory.

In these circumstances the American people must decide whether they wish to take the chance and assume the responsibility of denying our influence and power and resources, made available not only to win the war but also to win the peace, in holding and driving back the forces of a new totalitarianism, which may be more ruthless and sinister than that which we defeated on the battlefields of the world in 1945.

The Republican platform undoubtedly attempts to repudiate the efforts of this wrecking crew in one of the branches of Congress, but if they are successful will the new administration repudiate their efforts in the coming session of the Congress and during the 4-year period covered by the law which Congress overwhelmingly adopted?

We rejoice to believe that in this great venture we are actuated by no selfish motive, except that which consumes the breast of every liberty-loving human being to live in peace, to advance in moral stature, intellectual breadth, economic freedom, and political equality for himself and all mankind.

We seek no territory. We seek no unjust economic advantage. We seek no dominion over other peoples. We do seek to enable them to restore the liberty for which they have fought for generations, and which many of them have lost.

We do know that our Nation cannot long remain free if the rest of the world is on bondage.

We do know that our people cannot long remain prosperous if the balance of the world is prostrate.

We do know that the liberty-loving nations of the world must ultimately rise or fall together.

We do know that whether we wished it or not, the leadership in this great enterprise has been thrust into the hands of our people and our Government.

Shall we hold the torch and move forward with it, or shall we march back down the hill and blast the hopes of peoples everywhere, including our own country? Shall we allow humanity to sink into a long, dark night of barbarism, brutality, and godless overlordship from any source in any part of the world?

This question the American people must answer. May we hope that they will answer it in the language and the spirit of Thomas Jefferson, the founder of American democracy, to which we have been devoted for more than a century and a half.

In the Declaration of Independence, Jefferson wrote these undying words:

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness. That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

In declaring these truths to be self-evident, Jefferson meant that they were not subject to dispute, not to be submitted to a jury or a political convention, not to be subject to compromise or evasion or subtraction.

They were self-evident, so much so that all men could accept them who believed in the freedom of men and the freedom of thought. "All men are created equal," said he; not physically, not morally, not financially, not socially, not intellectually equal, because there are inevitable variations in all these human qualities and attributes. He did not proclaim that all white, or black, or red, or yellow men are equal; that all Christian or Jewish men are equal; that all Protestant and Catholic men are equal; that all rich or poor men are equal; that all good or bad men are equal. What he declared was that all men are equal; and the equality which he proclaimed was equality in the right to enjoy the blessings of free government in which they may participate, and to which they have given their consent.

He applied this doctrine, not only to the people of the United States, but universally to the people of the world. This immortal doctrine of the Sage of Monticello, who wanted to be remembered not by what the people had done for him, but by what he had done for them in the establishing of political, religious, and intellectual freedom, has never ceased to be the true ideal of the American people.

No genuine believer in the Jeffersonian philosophy is at liberty to deny the world-wide application of this great pronouncement, born of the conditions which were the foundation of American independence. No true follower of Jefferson is at liberty to withhold from our own people, or the people of the world, the hope that they may enjoy that life, that liberty, and the pursuit of that happiness, upon which our own and all free institutions have been and must be founded throughout the world.

Surely the great Democratic Party, assembled here in the midst of a great crisis that confronts mankind, assembled here at the end of a decade and a half of unparalleled achievement in the moral, economic and social life of our own country, in the midst of a world upheaval unprecedented in the annals of history, assembled here in the shadow of the historic hall where Jefferson wrote these things, surely, in these conditions, neither the great Democratic Party nor the American people can forswear their obligation to march forward on the highway of human advancement, both here and throughout the world.

This is no partisan call. This is no appeal for the lusts of office. This no panoply of sophistries made to perpetuate or deny power to any political party. It is the swelling of human breasts with pride that God in his wisdom has given us the power and the opportunity to inaugurate a better world and a better society.

And, if we sometimes quibble over the expense in dollars, consult our fears alone, prefer to be tied to a hitching post of reaction, or are prompted to ask ourselves the question, what is it worth to us, may I answer in the language of a quotation from the Book of Books:

"What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

What shall it profit a nation if it gain the whole world, the world of economy, the world of territory, the world of power, and lose its own soul?

What shall it profit a political party if it gain power or temporary prestige or office or the spoils of political preferment, if in the process it shall lose its own soul?

I do not deign to answer these questions. The American people must answer them. Let us pray to the author of all life that their answer may be true and sound, and that out of their answer may come the healing of the nations and the restoration of the dignity and freedom of man.

This is the democratic ideal, not a partisan ideal. It actuates the minds and hearts of most of the people of the earth. Let us dedicate ourselves here now, and in all the future, to its permanent and universal realization.

In the twentieth verse of the third chapter of Revelations will be found a superb call to service, applicable now as then, coming across the centuries, from the lips of the sun-crowned Man who walked His way into the story of humanity:

"Behold, I stand at the door and knock. If any man hear My voice and open the door, I will come in."

In the present posture of world affairs, in the overwhelming challenge that comes to American leadership, may we not feel and say:

Behold, civilization knocks at the door.

Behold, the assembly of unnamed and unnumbered men and women who yearn for peace knocks at the door.

Behold, the validity of Christian principles of human society knocks at the door.

Behold, the rap of countless dead, who died on battlefields, in every sky, on every continent, on every island, and every sea, to perpetuate these principles of equality and justice of which I have been speaking, is heard knocking at our door of opportunity.

Behold, the knock of countless women throughout the world, whose locks are blown over their shoulders by the wind of adversity, is heard.

Behold, the gentle touch of tender hands of millions upon millions of children, who long for happiness and education and the full life, can be heard upon the door.

Behold, Destiny itself knocks at our door in behalf of all these and more.

Shall we hear the voice and open the door, or shall we slam it in the face of an appealing world, turn our backs upon a divine obligation and refuse to lead the children of men out of the bondage of fear and slavery into a free world and a free life?

As one who, for a generation, has watched the ebb and flow of human hopes and aspirations, and has seen civilization upon the brink of the precipice and the crumbling away of the liberties of the people in many lands; as one who has lived and served through two world wars, and the aftermath of both, and the interim between them; as one who has stood by the side of Wilson, or Roosevelt and of Truman, to make his humble contribution to rescue and preserve the things by which men wish to live, and for which they are willing to die, may I, in conclusion, utter this simple prayer:

God of our fathers, lead Thou us on! As a Nation as a people, and as an assembly of people, give us wisdom to see the path of our duty, and courage to keep our feet upon it. Amen.

The Record of the Eightieth Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EDWARD MARTIN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, July 28, 1948

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, before the Republican National Convention in Philadelphia on June 22, our distinguished colleague, the junior Senator from Nebraska and acting majority leader [Mr. WHERRY] made an enlightening address on the record of the Eightieth Congress.

In his address, the Senator also discussed issues confronting our country and the Congress. Therefore, I believe his colleagues in the Congress and others throughout our country will be interested in reading what he said.

I ask unanimous consent that the address be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Chairman, delegates of the convention, and fellow Americans, it is with profound respect and full understanding of the history-making decisions which this timely Republican convention must resolve that I accept the assignment to review for you the accomplishments of the Eightieth Congress under our Republican stewardship.

The Eightieth Congress now is history. Its constructive program will stand the acid test of public approval. It is undeniable proof of our sincerity.

This invitation provides a golden opportunity to frankly discuss with you our record and to remind you of your responsibility to make that record known to the people back home.

Many of you have been doorbell ringers. So have I. You have canvassed up and down the street. You have carried the Republican cause to the grass roots. You have been chosen to represent the people in this most important of all political conventions, and before you leave you will adopt a platform and nominate a ticket that will move our party into the White House in 1949.

We know the Republican Party is the liberal party. There is all the difference in the world between liberalism and New Dealism.

Ours is the only party that has held firmly to the faith of the founding fathers, a faith in the dignity, genius, initiative, and the sovereignty of the people.

You are assembled in a free, open convention. It is here, through the free Republican processes that you will declare anew our principles, policies, and objectives in their application to the momentous issues that confront our beloved Nation.

No clique of alien-minded radicals has captured control of the Republican Party. Ours is the united, forward-looking party. It is the only safe, sound medium through which the will of the people may be translated into action.

In contrast, the American people are offered a warring, quarrelsome, bolt-ridden, and disrupted opposition; an opposition of radical left-wing New Dealers who seek to regiment and push around as they please 145,000,000 free American citizens.

The New Deal continues to follow the same old pattern. Calloused by years of gathering unto themselves dictatorial power, the executive branch once again has had the affrontery to dip into the Public Treasury to finance a purely political junket across the country.

To fool the taxpayer, it was called a nonpolitical, bipartisan mission.

No one was fooled. The people knew he was riding around the country scolding and apologizing as he went on a barnstorming campaign blaming Congress for the mistakes and failures of his own administration.

It's the same old technique. "Purge the Congress. I am for the people," says the President.

Has the President forgotten all about States' rights?

Has he forgotten that the people elected the Congress?

Fellow Americans, the high office of President of the United States deserves a man of stature above that of a common scold.

It is up to you to see that the people make that decision in November.

For the first time in more than a decade there has been excellent cooperation between the Houses of Congress. You delegates and the American people can be proud of the constructive legislation passed by the Eightieth Congress despite the almost constant opposition of the President.

Here are some of the major bills which we have passed:

Tax reduction; sensible labor-management relations; a balanced budget; scores of veterans' bills, calling for $8,500,000,000 in appropriations; extension of the farm program to insure stability for our American farmers; national defense—including unification, expansion, and strengthening of all of our military defenses with special emphasis on air power as our first line of defense; housing got the green light by our removal of hampering controls, and more than a million units were constructed in the past year—the largest building boom in history;

The extension of an improved Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act; extension and expansion of social security and additional benefits for 3,500,000 needy children, the aged, and the blind; an amendment providing for more than 200,000 displaced persons; revision of the Presidential Succession Act and the submission for ratification by the State legislatures of a constitutional amendment for a two-term Presidential limitation; legislation to streamline and modernize Congress and the executive department of our Government; a generous program of American aid to rehabilitate other nations of the world in a mutual effort to stop the expansion of communism.

Such outstanding major legislation was made possible only by the excellent teamwork and unity of our Republican Members in Congress.

And more will be accomplished when we have the cooperation of a Republican President.

It is an amazing fact, that President Truman has vetoed nearly as many measures as did the record setter President Grover Cleveland. And the end is not yet.

You will recall that after the 1946 elections, the President promised the American people that he would abide by the will of the majority and cooperate with the Congress.

He has not kept that solemn pledge.

He has abused the Presidential veto power, the weapon of the minority, to oppose and block the will of the people and their elected representatives.

Vetoes seem to be the order of the day. Moscow vetoes in the United Nations. Truman vetoes in Washington. The people will veto in November.

Now, let's take a look at the record. On December 5, 1945, the Republican Members of Congress adopted a statement of principles and objectives on which the 1946 elections were determined. We said:

"Wartime limitations, restrictions, and controls must be removed. The instant a right or liberty can be returned to the people, it shall be returned. Neither the war nor any other excuse shall be justification for fastening regimentation permanently upon the American people."

Fellow Americans, we have kept that pledge.

This was true, notwithstanding the President stubbornly resisted Congress. In one breath he denounced Government controls, Government price-fixing, and rationing as the methods of the police state. In the next breath, he asked Congress for power and more power so that he might regiment and control.

But the Eightieth Congress boldly broke the shackles fastened upon the people by the New Dealers in Washington. When the war ended there were more than 76,000 Government orders, rules, regulations, and directives, that were choking industry, stifling initiative. The Nation had directive indigestion. The people demanded elimination of OPA. Thousands of these orders and directives have been repealed. Across the Nation the ground-swell of relief was reflected in industry, agriculture, mining, and all segments of our economy. And last year, the American people did the greatest dollar volume of business, and produced the highest national income, in all the Nation's history. Let me repeat. They did all this without controls.

Nor let anyone tell you, fellow Americans, that lifting of controls caused high prices. The failures and incompetence of the New Deal administration are responsible for high prices. In a nut shell, the causes are:

Deficit spending and other loose fiscal policies; constantly increasing Government expenditures; failures in foreign policy that have made it necessary to distribute more than $20,000,000,000 in cash and goods to foreign countries; commodities that otherwise would be available for our own people, and expansion of our defenses made necessary by the bungling of the administration's foreign policy.

All of these causes for high prices must be laid at President Truman's door. He has fired the boilers of inflation. In November he will face the gray ashes of defeat.

In December 1945 Congressional Republicans likewise declared themselves on Labor Management Relations. This is what we said:

"We reaffirm our belief that the right of labor to organize and bargain collectively with employers is one of the cornerstones of competitive enterprise. The processes of such bargaining must be protected and strengthened if we are to have real jobs and prosperity for all."

We have kept that pledge.

The Truman administration predicted at the end of the war there would be 10,000,000 unemployed. The President himself anticipated a slump in business and asked Congress to prepare for it. These predictions were ridiculous. Instead of men walking the streets looking for jobs, they are today looking for things to buy.

In 1946 before the Eightieth Congress took over, work stoppages reached an all-time high—a total of 100,800,000 work hours. Subsequently, the Labor-Management Relations Act was passed over a petulent veto by President Truman. Work stoppages diminished. The gloomy predictions of the President have failed to materialize. Under this law we are seeing the pendulum swing back to a decent, sensible relationship between management and labor. Control of the unions has been placed in the hands of the workers, where it belongs.

In his message to the Congress on the state of the Union, January 1948, President Truman said:

"I made my attitude clear on this act in my veto message to the Congress last June. Nothing has occurred since to change my opinion of this law."

On January 20, 1948, speaking before the Republican National Committee men and women in Washington, I challenged the President to tell the country whether he would ask for the repeal of the labor-management relations law in his 1948 platform. And, although the President's vague condemnations of the Labor-Management Act were repeated on his recent political junket to the west coast, he has to this moment made no response to my original challenge.

I repeat that challenge here and now. Will he ask repeal of the Labor-Management Relations Act? Will he repudiate the overwhelming majority of Democrats in Congress who voted for the act and who also voted to override his veto? Actions speak louder than words. While the President has talked, the Eightieth Congress has acted.

In December 1945 our congressional Republicans had this to say about taxes:

"Our tax burden must be equitably distributed. Taxes must be so imposed as to stimulate creative enterprise, not destroy it, and to afford the individual adequate purchasing power."

We promised tax reduction and we have kept that pledge.

Three times the President vetoed Republican tax-relief bills. The third time we passed it over his veto. As a result of this action 7,400,000 persons in the very lowest income brackets are now released from the tax rolls. About 71 percent of this tax relief goes to persons with incomes of less than $5,000 a year. Special relief was provided for the aged and the blind, and your Congress permitted married persons to divide their income for tax purposes.

The American people will not swallow misrepresentation concerning the 1948 tax bill. They are not fooled by political bromides. Every one of us is enjoying the benefits of additional money in our pocket because your Eightieth Congress prevailed over the President's bitter opposition. Tax relief is the best tonic I know to keep our free American system strong.

We need a man in the White House who understands this truth and who has faith in our free enterprise system.

In December 1945, your Republican Congress told the people it was their objective to cut the cost of government. This is what we said in our declaration of principles:

"The solvency of our Government must be assured. Outlay must be brought in line with income. Economy in Government spending must be achieved. Extravagant Government spending now advocated by the administration in every field can lead only to ruin."

We have kept that pledge. For the first time in 16 years the budget is in balance. For the fiscal year 1948, there is a surplus of more than $7,000,000,000. Instead of the deficits anticipated by the President, your Congress has lopped billions of dollars from his pork-barrel budgets for Government expenditures. As bait for votes from the pressure groups, the President demanded the Congress approve a spending program that would add more than $20,000,000,000 a year to our Federal budget. He is impaled on his own record. His record is a consistent series of demands for more taxes, more job holders, more vote-catching projects, more political emergencies, and more and more costly Federal authority, all of these, without regard to the hazards of national bankruptcy.

The economy-minded Republican Congress has called a halt on big government. We will continue to turn the flanks on the army of New Deal spenders.

Once again I refer to the December 1945 conference for our position on foreign affairs. This is what we said:

"We support the United Nations organization for international peace. We look with particular hope to the General Assembly as the town meeting of the world wherein the organized conscience of mankind shall find effective expression in behalf of peace with justice."

Our statement went on to say that we would engage in essential international relief as the humanitarian obligation and to prevent chaos through misery; that we would help other nations rehabilitate themselves; and that we would do all we could to help small nations maintain the governments of their choice and to be free of outside aggression.

All these pledges we have kept. We have worked faithfully to discharge these clear-cut obligations, but the accomplishment has been immeasurably more difficult because of the secret and short-sighted agreements assumed by the New Deal administrations at Quebec, Yalta, Tehran, and Potsdam. In the passing of time, the revelation of these commitments has disclosed how tragic was the failure to perfect a clear-cut American foreign policy, when for a brief moment at the hour of victory, we held the destiny of the world in our hands. When a devastated world cried out for American statesmanship, it was not forthcoming. Our representatives were duped—they were outbargained—they were led into commitments, which today stand as road blocks in the path we now have determined is the true course to world peace.

Notwithstanding the generosity of the American effort to feed the world's hungry and shelter its homeless, our success has been diluted and delayed because the Truman administration clung too long to the stupid and now repudiated Morgenthau plan for a deindustrialized Germany. The Republican leadership in Congress was never a party to this ill-conceived program. However, Republican influence was a mighty force in its ultimate abandonment. Our party and its representatives in Congress know that German recovery is the key to recovery for all Europe. It is essential to our belated American policy to neutralize the threat of world communism.

Let the record show there has been and will continue to be cooperation by the Republican majority in Congress with all Americans of good will in a fair and reasonable American foreign policy. But the Republican Party and its congressional leadership have never been the appeasers of Soviet Russia.

If Dictator Joe Stalin could cast the deciding ballot in November for President of the United States, I submit that he would not vote Republican.

Our Republican leaders have forced the issue of squarely meeting the threat of communism at home as well as abroad. It is entirely understandable that the Communists resent American policy which thwarts their world ambition. But this does not mean that we cannot live together in a world where communism yet exists within its own proper sphere. Nor does it mean that peaceful solutions are beyond our power. These purposes will be achieved under a Republican administration which can speak with a firm but tolerant voice. And bear in mind, fellow Americans, a Republican administration will come into the sphere of international affairs, without the deadening handicap of the mistakes of Tehran, Yalta, and Potsdam which have rendered the Truman administration impotent.

Thus, from this brief report of the accomplishments of your Eightieth Congress we come face to face with the issue which every real American must resolve for himself as he casts his ballot in November. This crucial issue is:

Shall government serve the people or shall government be their master?

The American people will not tolerate a fifth term of New Dealism in the White House. The American people have seen their liberties whittled away in a thousand different ways—grabbing here and grabbing there—through a constant insidious centralization of government in Washington.

All kinds of devices have been used to undermine our historic American way of life—to subordinate and destroy the traditional concept that there shall be States' rights and Sate sovereignty as an indivisible part of the American governmental pattern.

President Truman and the radical groups around him have little faith in American genius, courage, ability, initiative, and enterprise.

Theirs is a government of paternalism. Theirs is a defeatist philosophy. Everything they have to offer is in complete contradiction of the traditional philosophy of the American people. In this crucial hour, the American people want opportunity, not alms. They want unity and purpose in their political leadership, not a vacillating administration held together with baling wire and spendthrift patronage.

In each great hour of crisis, America has brought forth a leader equal to the responsibility of the occasion. The need for a leader was never greater than it is today—a leader who is grounded in the faith of our American tradition, a leader who will keep faith with America's future.

As I stand before you in this historic convention, I know that you, who represent so dynamic a cross section of the people, who are America, will before this convention concludes bring forth that leader.

Resolutions Adopted by the Zionist Organization at Its Fifty-first Annual Convention

---

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ABRAHAM J. MULTER
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks I submit the following resolutions which were adopted by the Zionist Organization of America at its fifty-first annual convention, held in Pittsburgh on July 2–5, 1948:

I

The fifty-first annual convention of the Zionist Organization of America meeting in Pittsburgh on July 2–5, 1948, salutes the Government and people of Israel.

This year having witnessed the reestablishment of the independent Jewish state, the dream and hope of countless generations, the convention expresses its hope that Israel will endure forever as a sovereign nation, a force for progress, and a peaceful and cooperative member of the family of nations.

II

The fifty-first annual convention of the Zionist Organization of America meeting in Pittsburgh on July 2–5, 1948, expresses the gratitude of the Zionists of America to the President of the United States for the support which he has given to the establishment of the Jewish state, for the speedy recognition which he has accorded to the Provisional Government of Israel, and for the message which he has adddressed to the present convention.

III

The convention calls upon the President of the United States to accord to Israel without delay, full de jure recognition, and to take all necessary measures to assist Israel:

(a) In remaining unmolested by external aggression;

(b) In keeping the full independence and territorial integrity of Israel unabridged;

(c) In obtaining, in case of renewed aggression against Israel, all facilities for defending itself in line with United States policy of giving aid to countries threatened by aggression and in keeping with the lend-lease practices heretofore adopted by the United States;

(d) By according to Israel all reasonable cooperation and economic aid from the Government of the United States; and

(e) By advocating the speedy admission of Israel to membership in the United Nations.

IV

The fifty-first annual convention of the Zionist Organization of America, meeting in Pittsburgh July 2–5, 1948, notes with satisfaction the action of the Republican Party in writing into its platform a plank favoring full recognition of and economic aid to Israel.

V

The fifty-first annual convention of the Zionist Organization of America meeting in Pittsburgh July 2–5, 1948, notes with satisfaction the action of those foreign governments which have recognized the provisional government of Israel, and calls upon them to take all necessary steps to enable Israel to exist and develop as an independent member of the family of nations, safe from external aggression and from interference with its sovereignty and territorial integrity.

VI

The fifty-first annual convention of the Zionist Organization of America meeting in Pittsburgh on July 2–5, 1948, expresses the hope that the United Nations Security Council will take urgent steps to insure that the use and threat of use of armed force against Israel cease forthwith; and that, should the use of armed force against Israel be renewed, the Security Council will take effective steps under chapter 7 of the Charter against the perpetrators of such acts.

The convention expresses the hope that the President of the United States will instruct the United States delegates to the Security Council to press for action in the above sense.

VII

The fifty-first annual convention of the Zionist Organization of America, meeting in Pittsburgh July 2–5, 1948, expresses the gratitude of the Zionists of America to the Republican Presidential nominee, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, for the message which he has addressed to the present convention.

VIII

The fifty-first annual convention of the Zionist Organization of America, meeting in Pittsburgh on July 2–5, 1948, is deeply concerned over reports indicating that the mediator appointed by the United Nations has seen fit to make suggestions tending to compromise the independence of Israel, to infringe upon its territorial integrity, and to place the city of Jerusalem under Arab control. The convention deplores this departure by the mediator from his clearly defined mandate, and considers the reported suggestions unacceptable.

IX

The fifty-first annual convention of the Zionist Organization of America meeting in Pittsburgh on July 2–5, 1948, salutes the heroic defense army of Israel, and welcomes the integration of the various armed forces of the Yishuv within that army. The convention condemns the recent attempts of the Irgun Zvai Leumi to conduct separatist military activities in defiance of the authority of the Provisional Government of Israel.

It calls upon the Zionists of America to give their full cooperation to the Provisional Government of Israel, and it recommends, in keeping with that resolve, that all aid to Irgun, or any similar group in the United States or in Palestine, shall be discouraged.

X

The fifty-first annual convention of the Zionist Organization of America, meeting in Pittsburgh on July 2–5, 1948, expresses its appreciation to the present administration of the Zionist Organization of America, under the leadership of Dr. Emanuel Neumann, and wholeheartedly approves the policies which that administration has pursued, thereby contributing to the re-creation of the Jewish state of Israel.

XI

The fifty-first annual convention of the Zionist Organization of America, meeting in Pittsburgh on July 2–5, 1948, expresses its appreciation to the American section of the Jewish agency for Palestine, and to the American Zionist Emergency Council, under the leadership of Dr. Abba Hillel Silver, for their historic contribution to the rebirth of Israel.

XII

The fifty-first annual convention of the Zionist Organization of America, meeting in Pittsburgh on July 2–5, 1948, directs the officers of the ZOA to set up a committee to study a program of reorientation arising for the ZOA and for the Zionist movement in general, from the reestablishment of the Jewish state, to be completed on or before January 1, 1949.

XIII

The fifty-first annual convention of the Zionist Organization of America, meeting in Pittsburgh, July 2–5, 1948, recommends that a complete study be made of the methods of emergency acquisition and distribution of materials for Palestine, with a view to insuring a greater measure of efficacy and coordination in the pursuit of these objectives.

The convention directs the officers of the Zionist Organization of America to take steps in consultation with representatives of Materials for Palestine, with a view to placing the Zionist Organization of America in a position to guide and coordinate the efforts of its districts and membership on behalf of that enterprise. It further directs the officers of the ZOA to develop the Israel equipment project in full coordination with the ZOA and with Materials for Palestine.

XIV

The fifty-first annual convention of the Zionist Organization of America, meeting in Pittsburgh on July 2–5, 1948, takes note of the position of the American representative to the Security Council of the United Nations branding the Arab states waging war against Israel as aggressors and respectfully requests the President of the United States to suspend all forms of economic aid to any foreign government which resorts to the use of armed force against Israel or to any government which ships or releases war material to the aggressors.

PITTSBURGH RESOLUTIONS

In the proclamation of independence of the Jewish state, issued on May 14, the following declaration appears: "The state of Israel will promote the development of the country for the benefit of all its inhabitants; will be based on precepts of liberty, justice, and peace taught by the Hebrew prophets; will uphold the full social and political equality of all its citizens without distinction of race, creed, or sex; will guarantee full freedom of conscience, worship, education, and culture; will safeguard the sanctity and inviolability of shrines and holy places of all religions and will dedicate itself to the principles of the United Nations."

We hail this magnificent statement of the social and economic ideals upon which Israel is to be developed. We endorse the principles which it enunciates. Meeting once again in Pittsburgh, the fifty-first convention of the ZOA notes with satisfaction that this declaration is in complete consonance with the platform adopted by our organization in January 1918 in this city, which has come to be known as the Pittsburgh platform, and which we heartily reaffirm.

Address by Hon. Brien McMahon, of Connecticut, Before the Democratic National Convention

---

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CARL A. HATCH

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, July 28, 1948

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, during the course of the recent Democratic Convention at Philadelphia the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McMAHON] delivered a very informative and able address upon a most important subject. I ask unanimous consent that his address be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I call upon the delegates to this convention to pause to consider the future of our people and the very existence of freemen. A political party can have no higher nor more noble destiny than to furnish the leadership for our country and the world into the path of peace.

Woodrow Wilson said in his last speech, "Now it will have to be done over again." And we did it over again and sacrificed 300,000 of our men and $350,000,000,000 of our treasure. But my friends, we cannot do it over again, we cannot even afford a victory, for as the last atomic bomb is exploded and as the last germ fastens its lethal tentacles on civilian or soldier, there will be no free economy left. There will be no freedom—there will be only a brutal despotism imposed on the starving remnants of humanity.

Today the world has 20,000,000 men under arms. Air fleets to cloud the skies are the order of the day. The draft is upon us because we are forced to prepare our defense as best we may.

Our military budget has reached the astounding and disheartening total of $16,000,000,000.

Do not misunderstand me—I voted for every one of these defense measures, but as I did so I resolved to continue my fight for the abolition on a universal and practical basis of the armaments race which, unchecked, can only result in universal conflict.

Delegates, do you know what $350,000,000,000 mean? This sum means a 5-room house for every family in the world—from the Antipodes to the frozen wastes of the Eskimos. Add to that a new $1,000,000 hospital in every town of over 5,000 people on the face of the globe. And my friends, translate with me the $16,000,000,000 which we have planned this year into food, and homes, and schools, and vitamins. If we can but reduce drastically that sum, we will at one stroke free ourselves of the twin specters of ruinous inflation and national collapse. We will free men's souls from the corroding blight of fear; we will release to all men everywhere a new license to life; we will translate the pursuit of happiness under God to something real, and good, and true, and wholesome. I can hear you say: "A fine picture but impossible of attainment. You paint a chimera. The world's statesmen are practical fellows who believe that all such pictures are for museum minds and cloistered monks."

How can we hope to achieve this blessed state when we have to deal with the 14 men in the Politburo and with Joe Stalin? Obviously we cannot lead from weakness. We must and we will maintain our superiority and strength as best we can until we can achieve our goal of universal disarmament and permanent peace. But we can achieve that goal if we will bring to our task the united determination of the American people to accomplish it.

We talk much of moral and spiritual leadership, and most of the people who use the phrase could not, if their lives depended on it, translate that phrase into ideas either understandable or sensible to the working men and women of the earth. But if we shall point out with all the resources at our command that we have tried to lift a crushing weight of poverty from the backs of men everywhere and have tried to bring peace to their minds and joy to their hearts, we will as surely as the sun shall rise, gather unto ourselves the support of the peoples of the earth. And my friends, it is not solely a promise that we make of future action looking towards disarmament. We have deeds done that we can and must herald to men of all races and all creeds.

I refer, of course, to our attempts to take the first step in any sensible program for world disarmament. I refer to our efforts to induce the world to join with us in the effective international control of atomic energy.

We have written a page in the book of man's progress through this vale of blood and conflict that has shone as a beacon to all governments except one—but has singularly left untouched the common peoples of the earth. Our distinguished delegate to the United Nations stated that we are engaged in "a race between the quick and the dead." We must see to it that that dread race shall not result in a victory for death, nor in such a close finish that it will leave the quick wishing for death as a surcease from the nerve-wracking race.

To call a halt to this headlong plunge toward total annihilation is the supreme duty of our party and of our country.

We made a magnificent start in this direction when we proposed in the United Nations a fair and effective plan for the international control of atomic energy. This plan, if adopted, would have lifted atomic weapons finally and forever from the military arsenals of the world. This plan, if adopted, would have paved the way for the expanded peacetime uses of atomic energy, a force which, properly used, may well prove to be the greatest boon ever conferred upon mankind by a benign Providence.

The American proposal for the control of atomic energy was made in the spirit of peace. It was made in the spirit of good will. This proposal was just, it was generous, and it was unique in the history of international relations. Never before had a great nation voluntarily offered to give up a winning weapon which it alone possessed, for the sole purpose of promoting the cause of peace and international understanding.

It is heartening to know that 10 great nations, represented on the United Nations Commission, accepted the American plan wholeheartedly in the spirit in which it was offered—as a sincere and effective proposal to advance the cause of human progress.

It is disheartening to know that the intransigence of one nation, and one nation only, Soviet Russia, prevented the adoption of this atomic-control plan as the first and basic step in a program of universal disarmament.

Soviet obstinacy on the issue of atomic control was a tragedy for all the race of mankind. This plan could have been, and should still be, the pilot plan of effective cooperation between nations in the sacred cause of peace.

Hardly less disturbing than Russia's refusal to cooperate is the failure of our own American people to realize what the American proposal means in terms of world disarmament and permanent peace. The unhappy truth is that we have failed to inform ourselves of the tremendous stakes bound up in this issue. We have failed to appreciate that the safety of the United States, and the safety of civilization, is in peril until agreement is reached for the outlawing of atomic weapons as instruments of modern warfare.

Only three short weeks ago we had shocking evidence of the gross misunderstanding of the disarmament issue which exists here in this country. Meeting in this city, the Republican Party adopted a platform which pledged all-out effort in the cause of peace and yet failed to make a single reference to the problems raised by atomic energy—this elemental force of nature which will remake the character of civilization for good or evil during our lifetime. Worse still, the Republican platform builders actually rejected a plank which favored effective international control of atomic energy.

My friends, I have no wish to impugn the motives of the Republican leaders who adopted this new and vicious form of isolationism in framing their party platform. I am charitable enough to believe that they took this course, not from motives of ill-will, but from misunderstanding. They simply don't understand the problem. They are unable to grasp the fact that disarmament is the inevitable and necessary path to peace.

But it is true, nevertheless, that Republican misunderstanding on this issue is just as dangerous to the peace of the world as Soviet obstinacy. Isolationism is still the deadliest peril to the future of mankind. How can the United States lead the way to universal disarmament and permanent peace if our own leaders look upon atomic warfare as inevitable? How can we possibly avoid such a conflict, with all its horrors and terrors, unless we continue with all our force and vigor the great struggle for the adoption of effective international control?

It is the task of our party, the Democratic Party to arouse the people of America to the gigantic work for peace which must be undertaken through the instrument of international disarmament. It is the task of our party, the Democratic Party, to destroy this new germ of isolationism which has imbedded itself in the platform of the Republican Party.

The first and greatest contribution which we can make is to acquaint the people of the United States with the details of the atomic-control plan which this Nation proposed as the first step in a program of universal disarmament.

Under that program the United States offered to disclose its atomic secrets.

The United States offered to rid itself of all atomic weapons.

The United States offered to place all its atomic plants and factories under international control.

Finally, the United States offered to admit international inspectors into its borders so that the whole world could be certain of American integrity.

In return, the United States asked one condition only—an iron-clad guarantee that atomic weapons will never be used against us, and that other nations accept the same controls imposed on us.

This offer was the most generous in the history of nations, and its acceptance is still the acid test of good faith on the part of any country which professes to seek universal peace.

When the General Assembly of the United Nations meets next September in Paris, we must bring the issue of atomic control and universal disarmament to the judgment of humanity. We must keep this issue in the foreground until people everywhere understand the facts.

As the United States led the world in marshalling its military forces for war, so the United States must lead the way in this mighty crusade for peace and disarmament.

I appreciate, as you do, the existence of the "iron curtain" and the inflexible will of the masters of the Kremlin. They stand today as the only barriers to the attainment of mankind's age-old dream of a war-free world. But that same human ingenuity, which found a way to split the atom, will find a way to split the "iron curtain" and shake the Kremlin's will if we mobilize the moral resources of mankind for that purpose. Events of the past few weeks have demonstrated that the "iron curtain" is not impregnable.

No man, and no set of men, can stand out indefinitely against the united moral judgment of mankind. The yearning of the Russian people for peace and security is just as deep and just as sincere as our own.

Given 25 years or 50 years of atomic peace, and today's dreams of a better life for all men will become a reality. The marvelous power of the atom, applied constructively, can ease the burden of toil and labor, increase the output of farm and factory, multiply the sources of human wealth, advance the the conquest of sickness and disease, and make life more fruitful and enjoyable than it ever was before.

We stand on the threshold of man's golden age and despite the "iron curtain," we must find the way to bring home that fact to the hard-pressed Russian people. Truth can penetrate the most unyielding barrier if we have the ardent purpose to make it do so. Against the magic power of radio, the "iron curtain" which stretches from the Baltic to the Balkans is no more effective than the Great Wall of China. Once the truth seeps through to those beyond, the dreary make-believe of Marxian dialectics will no longer obstruct the path to mankind's dream of a better world.

This is the task which lies before us. This is the purpose and the meaning of the Democratic platform.

The alternative to universal disarmament is universal destruction—for ourselves as well as others. The system of private enterprise cannot stand up indefinitely under the intolerable strain of mounting military costs.

America is plagued today by inflation; it is plagued by high taxation; it is plagued by shortages of essential materials. These are the evils of growing military budgets. They will become larger before they are less.

Long-time preparation for atomic war eventually means Government control of business to the point of strangulation. It means Government direction of manpower; Government intervention in all phases of social life; a dangerous growth of military influences in our domestic affairs, and a dangerous reliance upon the loyalty reports of police officers.

If the armaments race continues much longer we shall be forced to remake the physical map of America. We shall have to install massive air-raid shelters in large cities. We shall have to build a network of underground factories; we will need an enormous trained disaster corps to care for those who may be struck by sudden atomic attack; the Federal agencies in Washington, bunched together to form a perfect attack, will have to be relocated in out-of-the-way places. These are some of the additional costs of the new type of warfare.

The United States, in brief, faces the supreme challenge of its existence.

To meet this challenge, the United States needs leadership of the greatest order—a leadership founded on foresight, courage, and vision. We have a heritage of great leadership in the Democratic Party, a heritage of which we are justly proud. It is our supreme duty to light the way to the attainment of a better world, a world free of war and worthy of freemen.

To Be Frank

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ABRAHAM J. MULTER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include an article by Dr. Frank Kingdon, which appeared in the New York Post on July 26, 1948:

TO BE FRANK

(By Dr. Frank Kingdon)

PHILADELPHIA, July 26.—I am not sure whether the big story of the Progressive Party convention was the people who were there or those who were not. I missed the companions of other days who carried the fight for Franklin Roosevelt. No member of Roosevelt's family, none of Wallace's fellow Cabinet members, no one of Roosevelt's inner circle of intimate advisers were there. This was another crowd.

Many of them were young, among them the usual core of the professionally young. They were intense, perhaps fanatical would be the truer word. Yet they were rigidly disciplined in a sense not true of either the Democrats or Republicans. Here were no rival candidates, no minority reports. The cheering was as regular as the chiming of a clock, mechanical and controlled.

The fevers of the crowd were fed skillfully. There were certain explosive words and phrases which set the meeting in a roar. Every speaker used them in a repetitious rhythm, with the audience responding as though in a ritual. It was all a bit too unanimous; regimented is the word that comes to mind. It was a ceremony, cleverly staged, inducing mass hypnosis. This was a conference of those who think themselves the true believers. They reveled in their orthodoxy.

They combined two elements.

Some were pure in heart. Their idealism shone in their faces. They were curiously happy in the belief that they were here doing something to serve a high cause. They told me jubilantly that Wallace will be elected and they believe it. Theirs is a mystic faith that what they think right is so truly mighty that it cannot fail. They believe in miracles and in Wallace as their miracle worker. They are nature boys in politics.

The others were not pure in heart. Their eyes burned, but their faces did not shine. They are ultimate cynics believing any means justified that serve their ends. I looked at some of them on the platform.

I've seen them before, manipulating labor conventions, planning mass meetings, organizing committees, doggedly working to turn whatever they touch into instruments for the Communist crusade. They are in control.

The big surprise of the convention was a curious but unmistakable impression of lethargy. Between the shouting of the tested slogans the delegates were inert. The galleries were not filled. There was nothing here that expressed the invincible fervor of people committed to the death. I cannot say that the new party was still-born, but I will say that there was not much kick in it.

Marcella says: This looked more like Wallace's crucifixion than his crusade.

Statement Issued by Republican Leaders of the Senate and House of Representatives

---

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROBERT A. TAFT

OF OHIO

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, July 28, 1948

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a statement relating to the present session of Congress, issued last night by the Republican leaders of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THIS STATEMENT IS ISSUED BY THE REPUBLICAN LEADERS OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES WITH A VIEW TO ITS PRESENTATION TO THEIR RESPECTIVE REPUBLICAN CONFERENCES FOR CONSIDERATION

1. This session was called by the President not because this is an "extraordinary occasion" as required by the Constitution, but solely as a political maneuver in the campaign for his own reelection, and to add zest to an otherwise discouraged political convention. It was called without consultation with the leaders of Congress, after Congress had adjourned with the full acquiescence and approval of the minority leaders.

2. The call involves no reference to the critical situation in foreign policy in which no emergency action is requested of the Congress.

3. Serious legislative problems cannot be satisfactorily handled in the midst of a political campaign. Legislation should be a deliberative process, and every important measure should be debated from the viewpoint of the public interest. In the Eightieth Congress our debates have been remarkably free of partisan argument. The Eightieth Congress enacted a tremendous program of foreign and domestic legislation and completed all routine and emergency matters generally recognized as an extraordinary record of accomplishment. Few realize that Federal legislation today covers such a wide field of subjects that only a fraction can be properly studied and handled in any one year. It would take at least 6 months to give proper consideration to the President's program. We agree with Senator BARKLEY'S statement made in the Senate a month ago before politics entered the situation:

"I have done what I could to cooperate with the majority in bringing about an adjournment because I think if we sit here until after the convention, or if we sit here between the conventions, or after the two conventions, the entire time of the Congress will be taken up with political bickering and political legislation and political oratory, and I do not want that to be brought about. I want to finish what we can finish and adjourn the Congress, and I have tried my best to cooperate with the leaders on the other side to bring about an adjournment."

4. The President's quarrel with the Eightieth Congress is not its failure to enact legislation, but a fundamental difference in government philosophy between the President and Congress. The President would fix wages, fix prices, expand Government spending, increase Federal taxes, socialize and nationalize medicine and generally regiment the life of every family, as well as agriculture, labor and industry, and his proposals would create an annual budget which could not be less than $60,000,000,000 which would make inflation inevitable and permanent. The Congress believes that progress must be made and all our problems solved within the principles of liberty, equality and justice to all men which guided this country for 150 years. This difference has resulted in a constant conflict, resulting in many vetoes by the President, and frequent action overriding his vetoes. Constructive legislation which the President did not dare to veto, has been criticized and attacked by him. It is difficult and dangerous to work out great public problems without the slightest cooperation from a hostile President. The only way this fundamental difference can be resolved is by vote of the people at the November election.

5. In the President's program there is very little of an emergency nature. Most of the social welfare legislation proposed is of a permanent character which can be considered more thoroughly next winter. The Democrats controlled Congress for 14 years, professing the greatest interest in social welfare legislation. Now they say that they failed to deal adequately with social security, education, health, and housing and blame the Republicans for not enacting the program they failed to enact during 14 years.

6. We believe, therefore, that this session should be limited to a short period as suggested by the President himself, and our efforts will be devoted to completing the session as soon as possible. We shall carefully examine all of the President's recommendations to determine whether there are any matters which can be dealt with promptly on an emergency basis. We do not intend to consider routine legislation or open the Pandora's box of the legislative calendar. The Senate does not intend to consider nominations. We do not intend to make any substantial additions to the huge appropriations already provided for the administration which already threaten the continuance of a balanced budget, and would add to the fires of inflation.

7. According to present intentions, the program for the first week will include Senate consideration of the anti-poll-tax bill already passed by the House in order that there may be a proper opportunity for all to vote in the November election. During the first week also the committees of both Houses will give consideration to the President's anti-inflation proposals to determine whether there are any additional powers which might be helpful in dealing with high prices, and which the Executive does not already have.

The present situation has been brought about largely by the administration's policies in encouraging and failing to prevent vastly excessive exports, inflating the debt and currency before and during the war, encouraging general patterns of wage increase on the theory that they would not increase prices, failing to use their powers to restrain bank credit, and spending vast amounts of Government money for every kind of project, competing for labor and materials with private industry. It is our view that the restoration of OPA, subsidies, price control, wage control, and rationing, the police state methods decried by President Truman himself, would only make the situation worse, create black markets, and check the increase in production which is the only ultimate solution. The President already has wide powers to check inflation if he were willing to use them. He has power to cut the amount of Government spending in many fields, to limit Government purchasing in those fields where commodities are short, to limit bank credit and limit consumer credit.

During the first week also, committees of both Houses will give further consideration to the housing problem and any proposals in respect thereto. Much already has been done to solve that problem. Stimulated by the legislation adopted by the Eightieth Congress, a million new dwelling units are being constructed this year, and their construction practically exhausts the materials and labor available for the purpose. This is more than twice the number of dwelling units constructed when the Truman administration, with every emergency power and millions of subsidy funds, was fumbling with the situation. We are deeply concerned with a long-range program increasing still further the number of homes to be constructed, but such a program involves serious complications and differences of opinion which cannot be dealt with adequately at this special session.

Keynote Speech by Frank M. Dixon at Southern States Convention

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAMES O. EASTLAND
OF MISSISSIPPI
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Wednesday, July 28, 1948

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD the very able keynote address made by former Gov. Frank M. Dixon, of Alabama, at the Southern Democratic Convention held in Birmingham, Ala., on July 17, 1948.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It is an honor to be called upon to make this keynote speech to this great gathering today—an honor I deeply feel. For this is a gathering of militant followers of those democratic principles near and dear to us all.

The meeting is a continuation of the Jackson convention which was held on May 10, and in which nearly all of the Southern States were represented. In the resolutions of that convention, it was provided that if Truman was the nominee of the Democratic Party, or if a platform was adopted at Philadelphia hostile to the South, then the Birmingham meeting should be held.

You are familiar with what happened in Philadelphia. You know that the definite decision was made there by the National Democratic Party to approve Truman's actions in trying to enforce a social revolution in the South. You heard the jeers of the followers of the city machines of the North when the fine southerners of Alabama and Mississippi walked out of that convention. You heard the demands for the destruction of the social structure of the South coming from Democrats in sections where not one single elective public officer is a Democrat—not even a justice of the peace. I cite the case of Minnesota. You heard the deliberate adoption of a program meant to destroy us.

Everyone in America is familiar with the history of democratic action so far as this civil-rights program is concerned. Not all are familiar with the personnel of the Truman Committee on Civil Rights. Suffice to say, without attempting to go into the various personalities, that it was a committee stacked for the purpose of rendering the report which it did, a committee biased and prejudiced in advance. Its appointment, with that personnel as if it were a committee to make an impartial investigation, was a sham and a fraud on the American people. The report which it rendered required no deliberation—it required simply the stenographic services necessary to write down the prejudices and animosities of its members.

What is this so-called civil-rights program which Truman, our Democratic President, has recommended to Congress? I do not want any misunderstanding about it among the Southern white people. Here is part of what it means:

First. The elimination of segregation in the public schools from grade schools through colleges. Your children are to be required to work and play in the company, with the forced association, of Negroes. Negroes are to teach them, guide them. What will that mean to your children, to your hopes for them? What will it mean in immorality, in vice, in crime? Just what it means in those slum areas of the Northern cities where like conditions prevail, with results fatal to decency.

Second. The elimination of segregation in private and ultimately in denominational schools, such as Judson, Huntington, Howard, and Birmingham-Southern, as to students and teachers as well. I am using local, Alabama institutions as examples, but the application is not solely to them. The effect is to be the same in all schools, boys' and girls' as well, from Maine to California. Suppose that you are determined not to subject your children to biracial schools, and are willing to make any sacrifice to that end. You are helpless, since even private schools are to be forced to permit Negroes to attend.

Third. The elimination of segregation in trains, busses, restaurants, theaters, beauty shops, hotels, swimming pools, ball games, churches, and everywhere else people congregate. Picture life with us, men and women, when every time we leave our homes these conditions are forced upon us. Picture the stores, the streetcars, the busses, restaurants, the churches. Picture the bitterness, the racial hostility, the violence which will follow.

Fourth. The elimination of segregation in places of residence and homes. This means that Negroes can build in any neighborhood, live in any apartment house.

Fifth. The employment of Negroes in every business establishment, office, factory and store, in the same numerical proportion that the Negro race bears to the white. While the ratio is not written into the report, we well know from the operation of the wartime FEPC of infamous memory that this is the aim and that the tools of oppression will be devoted to that end. In my own county of Jefferson there are 43 percent Negroes, in Alabama generally 35 percent, in some counties 6 to 1. A department store in Jefferson County that has 100 clerks must have 43 Negroes among them; a restaurant or beauty shop employing 10 must have 4 to 5; a plant employing 1,000 must have 430. If this ratio does not now prevail, then enough white employees must be fired to make it possible. How else can it be obtained? Any law office, any physician's office, comes under the law just as much and no more than any other place of business.

Sixth. There is to be an upgrading in jobs, and promotions on an equal basis, and the ratio must apply to all levels. There must be as many Negro foremen, as many department heads, as many bosses, as the ratio calls for. They are to be over whites and Negroes alike, mixed together without regard to the wishes of anyone.

Seventh. There is to be no segregation in hospitals, either as to physicians, patients or nurses. White men and women who must necessarily use the hospitals, public and private, are to be attended by Negro physicians and nurses, as well as by white.

Eighth. All segregation in labor unions and professional associations such as the Bar Association and the Medical Association is to be done away with.

Ninth. The poll tax is to be eliminated, all Negroes to be registered to vote without regard to intelligence or capacity, and all segregation is to be done away with in the armed services.

Is all this a real threat, or is it just politics? Are these so-called Democrats actually determined to destroy our way of life? I assure you that the danger is deadly in its seriousness.

The Civil Rights Section of the Department of Justice is to be reorganized to enforce it. Constant police inspection and supervision, through a Federal Gestapo, is recommended, without waiting for complaints. The law is to be changed to make conviction easy. Enforcement is to be taken away from the local officials. Civil-court orders, punished as contempt of court, are to supplement the criminal proceedings enforceable by the FBI. Criminal penalties are to be by fine up to $5,000, and imprisonment up to 10 years. Every local police officer and deputy sheriff is to be subject to Federal criminal and civil laws, and under constant scrutiny.

Tax-exemption privileges are to be taken away from the private and ultimately denominational schools which resist, and from the churches.

Federal grants-in-aid are to be taken from States or cities which resist.

Fines and jail terms are to be part of local officials or private citizens who resist.

This vicious program means to eliminate all difference, all separation between black and white. It so declares itself, in words. It means to create a great melting pot of the South, with white and Negroes intermingled socially, politically, economically. It means to reduce us to the status of a mongrel, inferior race, mixed in blood, our Anglo-Saxon heritage a mockery; to crush with imprisonment our leadership, and thereby kill our hopes, our aspirations, our future and the future of our children.

It seems to me to be useless to repeat the arguments as to the unconstitutionality of the proposed enactment by Congress of an antilynching act. Such an act was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States in the seventies when it bore the nomenclature of the force bill. Such an act has been fought by some of the best and most distinguished Americans of other sections of the country—men of the character of President McKinley, and Senators Norris and Borah. The proposed antilynching act, as recommended by the committee and as supported by Truman, goes far beyond the old iniquitous force bills. It was written patently and obviously to buy the Negro vote in the doubtful States—we of the South know that there is no lynching in the South. They of the North know it. And they also know that the race riots and the killings which have made some northern cities famous in these last few years have no duplicate in any State or city in the South.

They know, also, these who seek to create a police state, that the surest way to do it is to take over the enforcement of criminal law. Lynching is murder. There is a law in every State against it, and these laws are enforced. Bring the Federal Government into the field of local law enforcement and you have broken down one of the great safeguards of personal freedom. Break this first one, and the precedent has been laid for persecution against which no citizen is safe.

With this the program of the National Democratic Party, do we belong to it? If this is the meaning of the plank adopted at Philadelphia, are our people to remain in it? Are they to say to the Nation: "All right, we don't like it, but we choose, and our people choose, to wear the shackles of this kind of slavery rather than to break with the national democracy, rotten though it may be, and the avowed enemy of our people."

Is this civil rights program constitutional? Not under any decisions of the courts in the past, not with any court save possibly our Supreme Court as at present constituted. The tenth amendment to the Constitution reads as follows: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people." The powers of local self-government are not given to Congress, but are reserved to the States, and these include every feature of the so-called civil rights program. We are fundamentally sound in this fight, whatever the present-day politics of the doubtful States, for whose benefit we are being sold down the river.

The term "States' rights" means much more than simple theory—it means the preservation of democracy and freedom itself. The oldest form of government in the world is the highly centralized one, with all power concentrated, as in Washington. There were tyrannies in the dim mists of history. It is only with the founding of this country that democracy developed, and it came, and this country grew great, because the Federal government was locked and tied down by the Constitution to the point that it could not impose its will on the people in their daily lives.

Schools are local affairs, as is the police force, the fire department, the city and county governments, the habits of the people, the building of roads, the conduct of local business, all the myriad affairs of daily life. The right to work or to loaf, to choose your vocation, and change your job, to guide the education of your children, to attend the church of your choice, to work with whom you please, to go where you choose, these are not inherent and divine rights. They are ours solely because the Federal Government was denied the power to interfere with them.

In this so-called civil-rights program, Truman advocates granting the power to the Federal Government to invade these and all other freedoms. The program is aimed at us, of course, since it is to secure Negro votes in the doubtful States. But those leaders hostile to us will find their people, as well as we, come under such a program. They will find that their freedom, as well as ours, is gone. Properly understood in all its viciousness and danger, this program will receive the condemnation of right-thinking people everywhere. We will not stand alone in this fight.

How is it possible for a man who calls himself a Democrat, for a man who is a follower of the principles which have made the Democratic Party great, to lend himself to any scheme meant to aggrandize the power of the Federal Government in Washington and to permit the formation of a gestapo charged with the mission of revolutionizing the social life of the Nation. The Democratic Party has been a tower of strength throughout the years in the maintenance of the personal freedoms of the individual. The Democratic Party has believed forever in the limited powers of the Federal Government under the Constitution. The great men through the pages of history who have been placed in high positions by the Democratic Party have been men who were firm in their refusal to permit the seizure of power in Washington.

Government essentially is a dangerous thing. There is no truth more fundamental than that power seeks always to increase. Human nature is a compound of many things. Its sole, continuously recurring characteristic is the desire deep in the hearts of all for power. Government is a dangerous thing, and the great leaders of the past, except the military men who have been despots, the great leaders since there came into existence the theory of the rights of men, have with universal tongue cautioned the people against the danger of power in the hands of the Government. This was understood and completely understood by the great founders of this Republic. It was understood, and completely understood, by the founders of the party of Democrats. And yet in this day and generation, the national Democratic Party has sunk so low as to be willing to barter, for the votes of racial minorities in doubtful States, the liberties of all of us.

The term "States' rights" is an unfortunate term. It does not express the meaning of the thought which is in our minds. In the beginning of this Republic, the States were supreme. They surrendered a portion of their power to the Federal Government in order that the Union might exist. But there were three great bodies of rights. There were the rights which the State had over its citizens; there were the rights which the States surrendered to the Federal Government; there were the great body of rights which neither State nor Federal Governments ever had over its citizens, those rights which contain personal liberty and the freedoms which make life worth while. When the Federal Government moves against rights which the States had, then the term "States' rights" is applicable. When it moves against that great body outside any government to control, as it is doing now, then it becomes the enemy of every free American. That will not stop government, that thought, since government lives and thrives on power. But it behooves those of us over our citizens in a Republic still free to be on guard always against this invasion of our freedoms and to remain determined to resist to the end.

As most of Alabama knows, I have never been one of those who fomented hatred between the two races. There is room for both, separate and apart. Segregation is our way of life, essential to peace and good will. There are many Negroes among us completely worthy of full citizenship, honest, decent, self-respecting, and God-fearing people. They are being given the vote; they live their own lives, leaders among their own. They wish no forced association with white people; they know its consequences in bitterness and terror. They, as we, are victims of the political situation in the doubtful States, where Republican and Democrat alike offer us as the mess of pottage with which elections are to be purchased—cynically betraying their own blood and heritage for political spoils .

We are faced by facts, not theories. We have worked out a way of life, in difficult circumstances, between the two races. The Negro race has progressed further in three-score years than any race in history. It has progressed because it has had the sympathetic help of the southern white people of good will. It can continue to progress only with a continuance of that sympathetic help. That assistance is based on segregation, on keeping the races apart, a system necessary for white as well as blacks. Destroy it and chaos will result.

The question is continually asked, "What can we do? Where are we going?" This is what the convention is here to decide. We have several possible courses of action. I will mention only two. We can name a candidate for President and Vice President and recommend to the people of the several States that they elect electors pledged to those nominees. It is thought by some that this is the proper method of procedure. Another route which can be followed is to suggest to the various Southern States the selection of free electors. This is the system that we have followed in Alabama, and in the beginning of this movement, we planned that the electors from Alabama should, after the general elections in November, meet with the electors from the other Southern States and agree upon a candidate for whom their votes should be cast. This was the system which was planned by the founding fathers of this Republic, and this is the system which we in Alabama have wanted to follow. We are not, however, determined to follow any course that will not fit the needs and necessities of the other Southern States. We are willing to go to any length to secure unanimity of action.

Should this be a Republican year, then of course we will have accomplished nothing, save to enforce our demands for recognition in the Democratic Party. Should the party of Truman succeed between now and the general election in gaining enough strength to be a real contender, then this movement could easily become the deciding factor in the American political scene, since we would have approximately 129 electors and might easily be able to throw the election into Congress. There is not much satisfaction with Dewey among the Republican States. There is not much satisfaction with Truman among the Democratic States. Congress might easily turn to an outstanding American selected by us for the next President of the United States.

A word of caution also to those who are of the opinion that this is not a grass roots movement. I have been in receipt of hundreds of telephone calls, most of them from so-called little people, not office holders, not people of particular prominence. There is a firm conviction in their minds that they are not being properly represented by those who are in positions of authority over them. There is a feeling in their minds that the office holder is more afraid of the loss of his job and of his perquisites than he is enthusiastic for the call of the people. I have been amazed at the intensity of this action. There may be those among the occupiers of high public positions in the South who think that they can weasel their way through and weather the storm. But if I am any political prophet, our people are more aroused than they have been in many, many years, and they will repay by retirement to private life the efforts of any so-called southern leaders who hope to carry them into the camp of Harry S. Truman in the coming election.

We people of the South have had our divisions. The Nation was treated to a sample of those divisions at the Philadelphia Convention, when a portion of the Alabama delegation and the Mississippi delegation in a body walked out, while other States with people just as truly southern and as truly loyal as ours remained in their seats after the adoption of the plank approving this iniquitous so-called civil rights legislation. We have our divisions in Alabama politics, every southern State has divisions within itself in its political life. These are part of the workings of democracy itself. These divisions, however, cease in the face of a common danger to us and to our wives and children. These divisions cease in the face of the threat to our very existence. We who are active in this movement want the help of every man, woman, and child—we want all divisions forgotten. We want the strength that comes with unity. We want and we must have, if we are to have any hope of success, the men and women of the South united, determined, self-sacrificing, devoted to this common cause.

The people of the South are still a proud people, and they are determined not to submit to those who have repudiated the doctrines which have been those of democracy throughout all the years. They are determined not to submit to those who would wreck and destroy their civilization and mongrelize our people. They are determined, thank God, to preserve the basic principles of democracy and to prevent the establishment in this land of ours of a police state, vicious as all police states are vicious, and to prevent the end of human and personal freedom throughout this land.

Inside Labor

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ABRAHAM J. MULTER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1948

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include an article by Victor Riesel which appeared in the New York Post on July 26, 1948:

INSIDE LABOR

(By Victor Riesel)

PHILADELPHIA, July 26.—Well, now Henry Wallace no longer can do anything about it. His new party no longer is his.

I've just seen the Communist "apparat," led by men and women trained in special agitation-propaganda schools in Russia and the United States, take over the Progressive Party machinery.

And I say that when Mr. Wallace and those wonderfully enthusiastic kids, the open shirted boys, the pretty girls in the low-cut, backless dresses who hitch-hiked and rode day coaches to come here from the country over, try to use their party they'll find they're on a political dole.

They'll survive just so long as the Communist apparatus is gracious enough to let them use the Progressive Party.

I'm not just guessing, I say bluntly that most of the important decisions for the final convention arrangements were made at a secret hotel caucus of Communist functionaries, and their pro-Communist operators late last Thursday night, at which Wallace's and Rex Tugwell's views were sneered at.

I say bluntly that I was in the lobby of the elegant Hotel Warwick when America's highest pro-Communist labor chief, Harry Bridges, came down from his room and was told to get up to the resolutions committee and keep his eye on it.

Harry, who apparently just loves to live well when he's out of sight of his San Francisco longshoremen, got right up to the resolutions committee to see to it that it followed the dictates of the pro-Communist "fraction" (secret committee) which had met beforehand to decide just what the resolutions would be. Many of Wallace's wishes were ignored here too.

I later was near and on the convention platform. And I charge that much of the convention machinery was run by a man whose work it has been for more than 5 years to try to see to it that CIO politics followed the Communist line. I won't mention his name because I don't want to embarrass the union he worked for until recently. But his sister is public relations officer of the Communist Party national headquarters. His wife has been, for more than 25 years, a leading Communist editor.

And I say that on the key rules committee, which finally came in with a set of by-laws that permanently gives the pro-Communist "apparat" in New York and California control of the new party, were three of America's toughest pro-Communist labor men. Because the comrades knew how important the committee was, they threw at least another seven of the country's leading pro-Communists on it. They had it tied up so that the Wallace forces couldn't do a thing with it—and right there the new party was taken from Henry Wallace.

There's no sense calling the roll. There were shrewd pro-Communist Party people strategically placed on every key committee, people who had been doing the very same job inside CIO since 1935.

This was hardly a convention. Had there been empty electric light signs for hockey scores and prize fight rounds it would have been Madison Square Garden on the night of some Communist-front rally. In Convention Hall were virtually all the pro-Communist CIO leaders from New York's CIO council, from its chief, to doll faced, little Saul Mills, to a lady trained in Moscow's special schools.

Wallace has been moved in on. And this isn't reported just to needle him. He'll feel sharper pain if he ever tries to use the Progressive Party as his own.

Federal and State Taxation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. E. H. MOORE

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, July 28, 1948

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, the Conference of State Governors held at Portsmouth, N. H., on June 13, gave consideration to Federal and State taxation. Gov. Horace A. Hildreth, of the State of Maine, presided over this conference, at which Federal and State taxation were among the items discussed. Robert B. Dresser, a prominent lawyer of Providence, R. I., addressed a letter to Governor Hildreth wherein he discussed revamping of Federal, State, and municipal systems of taxation, and also a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States depriving the Congress of the power to impose death and gift taxes, and limiting the power of Congress to impose taxes on incomes in peacetime to a fixed minimum rate.

The discussion submitted by Mr. Dresser is, in my opinion, of such vital importance to the general welfare that I believe it merits inclusion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to further its distribution among the people, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that this letter of Mr. Dresser's be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROVIDENCE, R. I., June 9, 1948.

His Excellency HORACE A. HILDRETH,
Governor of the State of Maine,
Augusta, Maine.

DEAR GOVERNOR HILDRETH: I am writing you as chairman of the Conference of State Governors to be held at Portsmouth, N. H., on June 13, at which, according to a press report, Federal and States taxation are among the major items to be discussed.

I have felt for some time that it was imperative that a constitutional limitation be placed upon the taxing power of the Federal Congress and that there should be a complete revamping of our Federal, State, and municipal systems of taxation so as to prevent as far as possible the duplication of taxes by the several taxing authorities.

To this end, I submit to you and the Conference for consideration the adoption of a resolution favoring an amendment to the Constitution of the United States (1) depriving the Congress of the power to impose death and gift taxes, and (2) limiting the power of Congress to impose taxes on incomes in peace time to a fixed maximum rate.

The adoption of this amendment would, I submit:

1. Provide needed assurance, which statutory law cannot provide, against recurring abuse of the Federal taxing power, and aid greatly in the formation of much needed venture capital.

2. Increase the national wealth and, over the years, the Federal revenue.

3. Aid in saving our free enterprise system.

4. Free the States from Federal domination and aid in preserving our present form of constitutional government.

5. Terminate the duplication of death and gift taxes by the Federal Government and the States and leave that field of taxation exclusively to the States.

As an example of the form of amendment which I consider desirable I enclose a copy of a proposed resolution for adoption by State legislatures "Memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to taxes on incomes, inheritances, and gifts," from which you will observe that Congress is deprived of the power to impose death and gift taxes and its power to impose income taxes in peacetime is limited to a maximum rate of 25 percent, with power by a vote of three-fourths of each House to fix a rate in excess of 25 percent, but not in excess of 40 percent, for periods of 1 year each which may be either successive or not, as Congress may determine.

I am also enclosing the following material bearing upon the foregoing proposal:

1. Brief dated July 2, 1943, in support of the amendment in its then form, which was somewhat different from the enclosed form.

2. Article published in the Tax Institute Bulletin of December 1944 in support of the amendment in its then form.

3. Suggestions for changes in the Federal tax laws in 1948, on pages 9 to 12 of which appears an argument in favor of depriving the Federal Government of the power to impose estate and gift taxes and leaving that field of taxation exclusively to the States.

The gravity of the present situation cannot be overemphasized. In this connection a review of the Federal expenditures and taxes during the past 35 or more years is both illuminating and disturbing. These figures are set forth in a petition to the President and the Congress of the United States presented by certain citizens of the State of Rhode Island under date of February 26, 1948, and are as follows:

	Receipts	Expenditures
Fiscal year ending June 30—
1912	$692,609,000	$689,881,000
1916	782,534,548	734,056,202
1918 (war year)	3,664,582,865	12,697,836,706
1919 (war year)	5,152,257,136	18,522,894,705
1920	6,694,565,389	6,482,090,191
1925	3,780,148,685	3,529,643,446
1929	4,033,250,225	3,848,463,190
1930	4,177,941,702	3,994,152,487
1932	2,005,725,437	4,947,777,000
1935	3,800,467,000	7,583,434,000
1939	5,164,824,000	8,765,338,000
1940	5,387,125,000	9,127,374,000
1941	7,607,211,852	12,774,890,324
1945 (war year)	46,456,554,580	100,404,596,685
1946 (part war year)	43,037,798,808	65,018,631,991
1947	43,258,833,189	42,505,045,529
1948 (estimated)	45,210,386,347	37,727,775,361
1949 (estimated)	44,476,862,051	39,668,993,983

Since the above petition was filed, the situation has become even more serious, as has been pointed out in a most able and important speech by Senator HARRY F. BYRD, delivered in the Senate of the United States on May 19, 1948, a speech which I wish every person in the United States would read. In a memorandum summarizing certain portions of this speech Senator BYRD makes the following statements:

"Enclosed is a copy of a speech I made in the Senate on May 19, with respect to the fiscal condition of our Government.

"The estimates of expenditures for fiscal 1948, 1950, and 1951 were made after consultation with officials of the Government. The figures I have given are in agreement with official estimates, allowing for a variation of approximately 5 percent in the total amounts. It is my confident belief, as conditions now appear, that the total expenditures given by me are conservative and are more likely to be exceeded than reduced.

"On the income side, the Treasury estimates, on the basis of $208,000,000,000 of national income, a tax income of $40,000,000,000. If the national income declines, then the Federal Government loses in Federal taxes at the ratio of $1 to a $3 reduction in national income. If additional inflation occurs, the gain in income taxes will be balanced by the necessity of making larger appropriations for the purchase of military equipment, materials, and increased salaries.

"The financial picture of actual outgo and income for the next 3 years can be stated conservatively as follows:

"Fiscal year beginning July 1, 1948:

Expenditures	$43,800,000,000
Income	40,000,000,000
Deficit	3,800,000,000

"Fiscal year beginning July 1, 1949:
Expenditures	$47,500,000,000
Income	40,000,000,000
Deficit	7,500,000,000
"Fiscal year beginning July 1, 1950:
Expenditures	49,600,000,000
Income	40,000,000,000
Deficit	9,600,000,000

"It can readily be seen that we may face shortly an increase in taxes of $10,000,000,000, which pyramided upon existing taxes, will place a crushing burden upon the private enterprise system and the taxpayers of America. A deficit of approximately $7,000,000,000, in the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1949, will make it necessary to pass a new tax bill next spring. Therefore, the danger is imminent and presents a great menace to our system of free private enterprise.

"The economy program here at Washington has almost completely collapsed. It is only an aroused public sentiment that will prevent the catastrophe of a tax burden which may weaken, if not destroy, our capitalistic system."

I quote also the following excerpts from Senator BYRD's speech:

"The time has come when the Members of Congress must recognize that we must vote to preserve the solvency of the United States Government, and that Senators and Representatives should not be influenced to vote for what the chairman of the Appropriations Committee terms a 'pork-barrel' measure merely because there may be projects for their respective States.

* * * * *

"* * * up to date, little, if anything has been done to reduce the number of Federal employees on the regular rolls. The year before the war we had less than 1,000,000 employees. We now have more than 2,000,000 employees, and the Federal employees are increasing now at the rate of 500 a day. Every 24 hours we are adding 500 new Federal employees to the pay roll for the taxpayers to pay. In fact, it is anticipated that even a larger daily increase will occur from now on.

* * * * *

"It is true, of course, that from the peak of the war there has been a reduction of employees, but an investigation will disclose that the reduction has occurred mainly in those employees engaged in industrial work incident to the war, and that the clerical employees attached to the regular departments of Government have been increased since the beginning of World War II. Mark that, Mr. President, they have been increased. I shall report to the Senate on this subject in the near future. The cost of the Federal pay roll is now at the rate of more than $6,000,000,000, and it so happens that this sum is nearly twice the total cost of the Federal Government when I came to the Senate on March 4, 1933.

"I warn the Senate that we are rapidly approaching a real crisis in our Federal expenditures. We have undertaken obligations that could readily destroy our free-enterprise system. The private-enterprise system is the foundation stone, and a fundamental of our freedom. It is also the foundation of our progress. It is the base on which the great glories of our Republic have been achieved. I do not believe we can maintain that private-enterprise system and collect annually in Federal taxes $50,000,000,000, in addition to $13,000,000,000 or more for local and State expenditures, making a total of approximately $65,000,000,000. This is more than 30 percent of the present combined personal incomes of all Americans."

May I add also the suggestion that great good could doubtless be accomplished through the adoption of a policy, preferably embodied in an amendment to the Federal Constitution, limiting the spending power of Congress to matters primarily of national concern as distinguished from those primarily of State or local concern. This would be in line with the following resolution passed by the Indiana Legislature in January 1947:

"House Concurrent Resolution 2

"Indiana needs no guardian and intends to have none. We Hoosiers—like the people of our sister States—were fooled for quite a spell with the magician's trick that a dollar taxed out of our pockets and sent to Washington, will be bigger when it comes back to us. We have taken a good look at said dollar. We find that it lost weight in its journey to Washington and back. The political brokerage of the bureaucrats has been deducted. We have decided that there is no such thing as Federal aid. We know that there is no wealth to tax that is not already within the boundaries of the 48 States.

"So we propose henceforward to tax ourselves and take care of ourselves. We are fed up with subsidies, doles, and paternalism. We are no one's stepchild. We have grown up. We serve notice that we will resist Washington, D. C., adopting us.

"Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the General Assembly of the State of Indiana (the Senate concurring), That we respectfully petition and urge Indiana's Congressmen and Senators to vote to fetch our county courthouse and city halls back from Pennsylvania Avenue. We want government to come home.

"Resolved, further, That we call upon the legislatures of our sister States and on good citizens everywhere who believe in the basic principles of Lincoln and Jefferson to join with us, and we with them, to restore the American Republic and our 48 States to the foundations built by our fathers."

A similar resolution, I am informed, was passed by the Michigan and New Jersey Legislatures last year, and in addition a resolution of similar character was passed last year by the Rhode Island Senate.

States and municipalities are, I submit, much better fitted than the Federal Government to perform the services which are primarily of State or local concern and they can undoubtedly do so at much less cost. Performance by the Federal Government means a continuance of a vast horde of bureaucrats supported at the taxpayers' expense.

With minor exceptions every dollar spent by the Federal Government comes from the very sources of revenue that are available to the States. They should raise the revenue and spend it themselves. Responsibility for the raising of the revenue is one of the best checks upon extravagant and unwise expenditures. It is too easy to spend money raised by someone else.

Not only is the existing practice dangerous from a financial and economic point of view, but it also threatens the independence of the States through making them dependent upon hand-outs from the Federal Government.

In drafting a constitutional amendment to give effect to the foregoing policy, the matter of definition may be difficult, but perhaps the desired purpose could be accomplished by providing expressly that the Madisonian view of the meaning of the General Welfare Clause in the Federal Constitution, rather than the Hamiltonian view, should be adopted, and that a State might bring suit in the courts to determine whether an appropriation made by Congress is for a purpose authorized by the Constitution, with power on the part of the court to grant relief by injunction or otherwise.

For example, such an amendment might, perhaps, take a form somewhat as follows:

"SECTION 1. The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises, and to appropriate the moneys received therefrom for the following purposes only, namely: To pay the debts and provide for the common defense of the United States and to provide the funds required for the exercise of the specific powers granted to the Congress by the Constitution of the United States and its articles of amendment.

"SEC. 2. The courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction in any proper case brought by a State of the United States against the proper public official or officials to decide whether any appropriation made by the Congress is for the purposes authorized by this article of amendment, and to grant appropriate relief by injunction or otherwise."

This, you will understand, is only a rough and imperfect draft designed merely to get the idea before you.

It is manifest, I submit, that unless these problems are dealt with promptly and in a vigorous and sound manner, our economic system of free enterprise and our form of constitutional government will go and in their place will be substituted a system of national socialism. This has been the fate of all the other major nations of the world, which have followed the course now being followed in this country, and there is no reason to suppose that the United States will be an exception to the rule. It is tragic to think that the economic and governmental systems that have made this the strongest and wealthiest country in the world, with the highest standard of living of any nation in all history, may be thrown into the discard.

As Governors of the 48 States, it lies in the power of you and your associates to exert a tremendous influence toward the adoption of adequate measures to remove the existing danger.

A copy of this letter is being sent to the Governor of each of the other States.

Respectfully yours,

ROBERT B. DRESSER.

Civil Rights

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES O. EASTLAND

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, July 28, 1948

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a radio broadcast made by the Honorable Samuel B. Pettengill over the American Broadcasting System network on the night of Sunday, July 25, 1948.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Today I shall discuss the delicate but important question of civil rights.

In his message to Congress this week, President Truman will demand that the South be coerced to comply with a Federal civil-rights program.

This will be done when world war III seems to hang on a thread at Berlin; when, because of the lost peace, millions of our boys are to be drafted into the Army.

It is at such a moment that politicians in both parties propose to add a cold civil war to a cold international war.

In a time when American unity is essential, they propose to inflame the country on one of the most delicate of all questions.

They propose to use force to settle a moral question.

To me, this is the negation of statesmanship. Are the politicians interested in promoting good will among men, or in getting votes? No subject has been turned into a political football with more cynicism and hypocrisy than this. In proof of that statement, I cite the following:

First. The question of segregation in the armed services. Without any action by Congress, it is my understanding that the President, as Commander in Chief, has the power by Executive order to end segregation before sunset tonight. But he does not do so. He prefers to pass the buck to Congress. Congress prefers to pass it to him.

Second. The question of segregation in the schools. I call your attention to the situation in the Nation's Capital, Washington, D. C. No constitutional question of States' rights is involved there. In the District of Columbia the Federal Government has total and exclusive power to act. Yet the District of Columbia has segregation in the schools.

This has been true for years under both Democratic and Republican administrations. It prevailed all through Mr. Roosevelt's 12 years as President, while he had overwhelming majorities in both House and Senate.

According to the report of the Committee on Civil Rights, appointed by Mr. Truman, white school buildings in the District of Columbia have a capacity 27 percent greater than actual enrollment. In the colored schools capacity is 8 percent less than enrollment. Less than 1 percent of white children, but over 15 percent of Negro children, receive only part-time instruction.

Politicians in both parties are responsible for this situation in the Nation's Capital. Yet they make a political football over a similar situation in the Southern States.

You feel like saying to the Federal political doctors, "Physician, heal thyself." The Bible might say to them, "Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eyes, and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye."

Third. Consider how the civil-rights plank in the Democratic platform was adopted. The platform committee recommended a milk-and-water plank on civil rights. Then a substitute was offered on the convention floor, pledging the party to a program of specific action. Who opposed the substitute? The delegates from the South opposed it. Who else? Why, the leaders of the Truman administration. They joined forces with the South to defeat the substitute.

On this point, I quote the veteran reporter of the New York Times, Mr. Arthur Krock: "The President's spokesmen tried to reject specific endorsement of him and his program in an effort to prevent total revolt in the South—cynical politics was never better served than today."

Joseph and Stewart Alsop, writing for the New York Herald Tribune, said: "By the President's instructions, his few faithful henchmen * * * tried frantically to pass the resolutions committee's weasel-worded civil-rights plank."

On the vote on the substitute, the delegations from Mr. Truman's home State of Missouri and Mr. BARKLEY's home State of Kentucky voted to defeat the substitute plank.

The substitute was, however, adopted, and the southern delegations walked out of the convention. It is against this background of double-talk, if not of the double-cross, that politicians start a crusade for the civil rights of minorities.

No political deal was ever more sordid than this. This is why America needs a league of honest men. It is a shame that the hopes of men and women who believe in the Golden Rule by all toward all should be subjected to such double dealing.

It is time for each of us to examine his own conscience on this matter, divorced from politics and votes.

I state my own view without hesitation—that any act of violence or denial of constitutional right toward any American not only violates the principles of Christian civilization, but also lessens our moral prestige in the eyes of the whole world. But if this delicate and difficult question is to be thrown into the arena of a national political struggle for votes, let's come clean. If the long-accepted constitutional division between the authority of the Federal Government, and the rights and power of the States, is to be overruled, then the following must be clear:

If the Federal Government can lawfully impose on State and local governments its own political ideas on poll tax, lynching, etc., then it can and should make violence and rioting in labor disputes also a Federal crime, and send the goon squads and muscle men to Federal prison also. But who proposes in a national political convention to make mob law in labor disputes a Federal crime?

If Congress is to spend these critical weeks of an international crisis trying to pass a Federal antilynching bill, when there was only one lynching in the whole country last year, then Federal police should invade the fountain head of civil-rights agitation, New York City, where in 1946 there were 325 murders, 14,525 felonies, and 697,734 crimes.

There are several questions to be considered in this matter of civil rights.

1. Should we attempt to find its solution in legislation? On that point, I quote one of the greatest leaders the colored race ever produced, Booker T. Washington. He said: "Brains, property, and character for the Negro will settle the question of civil rights. The best course to pursue in regard to the civil-rights bill in the South is to let it alone. Let it alone, and it will settle itself."

2. If this is to be dealt with by legislation, should it be by Federal legislation or by State legislation?

3. Would Federal legislation on civil rights be any more effective than Federal prohibition?

4. Which is more important, especially now, the matter of civil rights or the unity of the Nation? How much of this civil-rights agitation now dividing our country is promoted by Communists who want America divided?

The greatest denial of the civil rights of a minority was human slavery. Abraham Lincoln was against slavery. In his famous debates with Stephen A. Douglas in 1858, Lincoln said: "A house divided against itself cannot stand. I believe this Government cannot endure permanently half slave and half free. * * * I do not expect the house to fall, but I do expect it will cease to be divided." That utterance, 5 years before his Gettysburg address, makes Lincoln's place in the history of human rights secure for all time.

But how did Lincoln expect the Union to cease to be divided?

Not by war, my friends. Not by war against sections and people. Lincoln believed that the healing processes of time and the growth of moral sentiment which he did so much to promote, would eventually free slaves in the South, as they had already been freed, without bloodshed or Federal laws, in Northern States.

When Lincoln was inaugurated on March 4, 1861, seven Southern States had already seceded. What did Lincoln say to them? He said: "I have no purpose, directly or indirectly, to interfere with the institution of slavery in the States where it exists. I believe I have no lawful right to do so, and I have no inclination to do so."

Lincoln was opposed to the extension of slavery in the Territories, but he would not make war on the South to abolish slavery where it then existed. Lincoln had faith that the wisdom and justice of God would find solutions not to be found in fraternal strife.

Lincoln then read to both South and North the platform plank of the Republican Party, upon which he had been elected: "Resolved that the maintenance inviolate of the right of the States, and especially the right of each State to order and control its own domestic institutions according to its own judgment exclusively, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our political structure depend."

You will note that the position taken by the Republican Party today on this subject completely reverses the position taken by the party in the first election it ever won.

More than a year later, in August 1862, in his famous letter to Horace Greeley, Lincoln wrote: "The paramount object in this struggle is to save the Union, and is not either to save or to destroy slavery. If I could save the Union without freeing any slave, I would do it; and if I could save it by freeing all the slaves, I would do it; and if I could save it by freeing some and leaving others alone, I would also do that. * * * I have stated my purpose according to my views of official duty; and I intend no modification of my oft-expressed personal wish that all men everywhere could be free."

It was not until after this, that Linclon issued his emancipation proclamation on New Year's Day 1863. That was done as a war measure to weaken Southern resistance. It applied only to slaves in those States and parts of States then in rebellion and under Southern control. It did not emancipate a single one of the 430,000 slaves in the States of Delaware, Maryland, Kentucky, or Missouri which had remained loyal to the North. That came later, by congressional action and the adoption of the thirteenth amendment in December 1865, after Lincoln's death.

Lincoln believed there was something more important than any effort of the Federal Government to end slavery by force. That was the preservation of the Union and, as he said, "the restoration of national sympathies and affection."

He said: "Why should there not be a patient confidence in the ultimate justice of the people? Is there any better or equal hope, in the world? In our present differences, is either party without faith of being in the right? If the Almighty Ruler of Nations, with His eternal truth and justice be on your side of the North, or on yours of the South, that truth, and that justice, will surely prevail, by the judgment of this great tribunal, the American people."

When you hear these words, do you wonder that Lincoln became "a man for the ages"?—the best friend the North and the South have ever known?

If Lincoln were here today, reading reports from Berlin of the terrible chance of another world war, watching the efforts of Communists to stir up strife and hate, would he not seem to you a giant in contrast to the political pygmies who would hypocritically divide America for votes?

I close with the last words of Lincoln's first inaugural. He said:

I am loath to close. We are not enemies, but friends. Though passion may have strained, it must not break our bonds of affection. The mystic chords of memory, stretching from every battlefield and patriot's grave to every living heart and hearthstone, all over this broad land, will yet swell the chorus of the Union, when again touched, as surely they will be, by the better angels of our nature."

America needs that spirit today.

Democratic Platform Economics

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. E. H. MOORE
OF OKLAHOMA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Wednesday, July 28, 1948

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Democratic Platform Economics," by Henry Hazlitt, which appeared in Newsweek for July 26, 1948.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM ECONOMICS
(By Henry Hazlitt)

The ideal that emerges from the Democratic platform is the complete paternalistic state. Less and less are the people to do anything for themselves. More and more are the bureaucrats to do everything for them—insure their health, federalize their education, build their homes, boost their wages, raise the prices at which they sell and lower the prices at which they buy. Everybody is expected to owe everything to the officeholders in Washington. Everybody is expected to forget that the officeholders can give nothing to B and C and D unless they have first taken it from A. A is the taxpayer, the forgotten man. The effect of confiscatory taxation on his incentives and on the national production is ignored. Spend and spend, tax and tax, and elect and elect?

The sheer effrontery of some of the economic planks in the Democratic platform makes them read like intentional humor. "The Republican Eightieth Congress is directly responsible for the existing and ever-increasing cost of living." Why? Because it refused to give Mr. Truman power to dictate prices. Mr. Truman thinks that the cause of inflation is the absence of price control. Nowhere in the Democratic platform are the real causes of inflation so much as whispered. Nothing is said about the threefold increase since 1939, brought about by Democratic fiscal and monetary policies, in the volume of money and credit. No connection is pointed out between all the foodstuffs being shipped abroad under the Marshall plan and the consequent rise of food prices here.

The plaform, in fact, demands still higher Federal spending on everything—social security, education, housing, veterans, public works, TVA's, school lunches. Though the American taxpayers stagger under the greatest absolute peacetime burden of expenditures that the taxpayers of this or any nation have ever been asked to bear, they are calmly informed that their expenditures are still inadequate.

Affecting to deplore high prices on one hand, the plaform boasts of them on the other. It is stuffed with figures on the increase of wage income, farm income, business and professional income. It never once seems to have occurred to those who inserted these figures that they are simply high prices looked at from the other side. If the Republican Congress is responsible for the high prices that consumers pay, then it should also get credit for the high prices that producers receive. They are precisely the same prices. But the Democrats blame the first on the Republicans and grab credit for the second themselves.

Indeed, they want to boost prices and costs still higher. They insist on jacking up minimum wages from 40 to 75 cents an hour—an increase of 87½ percent. This would, of course, push up wages all along the line, for skilled workers would insist on the maintenance of existing differentials. Pushing up costs further would push up prices further.

The plaform insists on still more direct ways of increasing prices. Though in one section it complains that food is becoming too expensive for the average wage earner "and the prospects are more frightening each day," it demands at another point "a permanent system of flexible price supports for agricultural products"—to make the prospect still more frightening. If a permanent system of price supports for agricultural commodities, why not a permanent system of price supports for all commodities? Why the discrimination? Could a shabby and unprincipled scramble for votes have anything to do with the matter? Yet while demanding that the prices of unioneers and farmers be pushed up by law, and that the prices of nearly everybody else be pushed down by law, the plaform blandly declares itself in favor of "free enterprise" and opposed to any "arbitrary and discriminatory restrictions."

On labor relations the platform is even more inconsistent, if that is possible. It demands "the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act." This is a direct repudiation of the party's own congressional record. Only 81 Democrats in Congress voted against the Taft-Hartley law, while 120 voted for its enactment. In fact, 126 Democrats in Congress voted to override the Truman veto, compared with only 93 who voted to sustain it. What a plank for that record.

Arrival of 16 Jet Planes in Germany

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. BURNET R. MAYBANK
OF SOUTH CAROLINA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Wednesday, July 28, 1948

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an article by Ansel E. Talbert, a very distinguished South Carolinian, relating to the arrival of 16 jet planes in Germany, published in the New York Herald Tribune of July 26, 1948.

There being no objections, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SIXTEEN JETS REACH UNITED STATES AIR BASE IN GERMANY ZONE—F-80'S FLYING TIME FOR 5,000-MILE TRIP IS 12½ HOURS; B-29'S AT FIELD

(By Ansel E. Talbert)

FUERSTENFELDBRUCK, GERMANY, July 25.—The long-range arm of the United States Air Force completed today the first flight on record of jet-propelled aircraft from the United States to a strategic center deep in the European continent. Sixteen Lockheed F-80 fighter planes of the Fifty-sixth Fighter Group of the Strategic Air Command sped from Odiham, England, through the mists which shrouded western Germany to land here at 2:05 p. m. (8:05 a. m. New York time).

The landing, at a field already bristling with several score B-29 Superfortress bombers, completed in 12 hours 30 minutes flying time a trip which began on July 12 more than 5,000 miles away at Selfridge Field, Mich. The flight of American jet fighters to the former Luftwaffe equivalent of the United States Randolph Field training center, now probably the most important United States Air Force installation in Europe, is regarded here as an accomplishment of outstanding strategic importance.

The trip was completed withcut incident. The planes flew by way the northeast United States, Labrador, Greenland, Iceland, and the United Kingdom before stopping here. Some of Great Britain's newest jet fighters flew escort for the unit today as it departed from the British Isles.

In no sense was the flight a stunt or a speed trial. It was organized with the idea of developing a basic technique for moving jet-propelled fighter planes from the United States to Europe, or any other part of the world.

General George C. Kenney, head of the Strategic Air Command, which has the primary mission of conducting long-range air operations in any part of the globe, gave his approval to the flight as a method of developing America's global air power.

Lt. Col. David C. Schilling, who commanded the jet flight, told this correspondent that his main consideration was to work out an air-transfer system which can move 1,600 or 16,000 jet fighters as easily as these 16.

The reason for this emphasis on jet fighters now is obvious. During World War II, American-built bombers were delivered by air to overseas destinations, but the smaller fighter aircraft, needed to escort the bombers to their targets and to protect forward American air bases from enemy attack, were sent overseas by surface shipping.

It was found in the war against Germany that with proper fighter escort, American bombers could attack any strategic target. Air Marshal Hermann Goering, when asked after the war by Allied interrogators to name the day on which he knew positively that Germany had lost the war, replied "The day I saw American fighter planes over Berlin escorting your bombers."

Goering's comments on the air war were made available to Soviet Russia by British and American authorities, and it is likely, according to American strategists here, that they have been digested by the Kremlin.

Tonight Brig. Gen. James F. Powell, Assistant Chief of Staff of the United States Air Force in Europe, said at an interview that the 16 F-80's would be here for several weeks, engaged in training for high altitude interception and escort work with the B-29 bombers.

At about the time they returned to the United States, the Thirty-sixth Fighter Wing, one of the Air Force's crack jet fighter units, will move here permanently from the Panama Canal Zone.

BRITISH JETS AT WASHINGTON

WASHINGTON, July 25.—Six British Vampire jet fighters on a visit to Canada and the United States arrived today at Andrews Field, near Washington, they recently flew the Atlantic, being the first jet planes to make the over-water crossing. Similar American jets, en route to Great Britain, waited at Goose Bay, Labrador, until the British planes had crossed.

After an official welcoming ceremony here tomorrow, the British planes will give an aerial display before leaving for Greenville, S. C. They will take part in United States Ninth Air Force maneuvers there.

They will return to Trenton, Ontario, August 10, after joining in International Air Show events at New York July 21 to August 8.

The Situation of the Democratic Party

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLAUDE PEPPER
OF FLORIDA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Wednesday, July 28, 1948

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a statement issued by me respecting the situation the Democratic Party today faces.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Democratic Party today faces a repetition of the split of 1860. That breaking up of the Democratic Party assured the election of the Republican Party and that in turn to the division of the Nation and the War Between the States.

A Republican victory in November would not lead to a civil war but it most certainly would contribute to a divided world, and might mean world war III. Certainly, such selfish and ruthless forces as now command the Republican Party would, by their insatiable striving for power and for profit for the few at the expense of the people, hasten the curse of a depression which would threaten the Nation and the world with the utter collapse of economic and political democracy.

I am but one of many Democratic Americans who, since the death of Franklin D. Roosevelt, has fought to stave off the very splintering of the Democratic Party so essential to real democracy in America which is about to be consummated in the convention.

The present leadership of the Democratic Party has proven incapable of holding the party together. That failure is due not alone to its inability to follow in the footsteps of President Roosevelt, an impossible task for any living person, but to an unwillingness to accept and to carry out with real fidelity the high principles and purposes of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

That failure in moral purpose led to the first breaking of the party solidarity and the forming of a national third party.

Bungling and ineptitude by the present leadership of the party, however well intended, are now by the announcements of responsible leaders of a bloc of Southern States to lead to the formation of a fourth party.

The party clearly cannot stand these unhealed breaches.

With many other Democratic Americans, I have done everything in my power to prevent this tearing up of our great party. The responsibility for the consequences must be borne by all the elements of the party involved. All have been uncompromising. All have been selfish as well as short-sighted.

I cherished until Friday noon last that Gen. Dwight Eisenhower would accept the certain draft of this convention and lead this Nation, burdened with the destiny of mankind, to a new unity and the human race to an abiding peace and progress. That hope failed.

Earnest delegates sought others for the same role. They declined, or refused to decide. Late Sunday afternoon when a representative committee of delegates asked me to lead one more open effort to reunite the segments and sections of the party, disregarding all personal considerations, I accepted.

I thought only of my country and my party.

With untiring fellow delegates I have labored day and night. I have appealed to all factions to gather again upon the humanitarian principles and policies of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

I, as a southerner whose roots stretch back over two centuries in the South's proud past, have appealed to my fellow southerners not at this critical period for human freedom to array themselves as their forefathers did in 1860 against human rights for any part of our people.

Our best efforts have failed to find the unity we so earnestly sought.

We who have fought for this party peace have now determined that our continued efforts can only make a bad situation worse.

Hence with a heart full of gratitude for the many loyalties which I can never forget, I release all promises of support and request that I not be nominated for any office within the power of this convention.

All I see that I can possibly do now is, utterly removed personally from the consequences of the decision, to make one last appeal to all groups to get together and save the party for America.

The future of the party now lies in the hands of those Democrats who put the party and country above continuation of personal power and the venting of passion or prejudice.

Attachments of both loyalty and conviction make it impossible for me ever to fail the Democratic Party when I can with my little talents serve it.

Whatever this convention may do, therefore, in selecting its nominees they will be mine. I shall support them and with all my strength I shall strive to see the Congress in January in the control of Democrats who dedicate themselves to making the Democratic Party truly the party of peace and the people.

The Convening of Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. H. ALEXANDER SMITH
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Wednesday, July 28, 1948

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, under date of July 16, I received a letter from Mr. Thomas Jefferson Wertenbaker, who was formerly head of the department of history of Princeton University, and one of the leading authorities on American history in all of our American institutions of learning. As Professor Wertenbaker's name indicates, all his life he has been a so-called Jeffersonian Democrat, but he is one of the strongest opponents of the unsound fiscal policies of the New Deal administration.

I can heartily commend to my colleagues in the Senate a careful reading of Professor Wertenbaker's brief letter and a contemplation of the fundamental reforms that he suggests for the present inflation difficulties in which we now find ourselves.

I ask unanimous consent to print Professor Wertenbaker's letter in the Appendix.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JULY 16, 1948.

Senator H. ALEXANDER SMITH,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR ALEC: I am sorry that President Truman has called Congress back, not only because as Douglas Freeman says, it looks like a political trick, but because it interferes with your well-deserved rest.

Like everyone else, I am deeply interested in the Presidential campaign, and so am taking the liberty of giving you my thoughts on one important point. Mr. Truman will certainly blame the Republican Congress for the present high prices and contend that had his program of controls gone through it would have stemmed the tide.

The truth is that the Democrats are solely responsible for the inflation which is plaguing the country. It is not primarily the excess of demand over supply which has caused the trouble, but the printing of billions of paper dollars and the filling of our banks with negotiable securities. Some of this may have been necessary during the war, but pump-priming, waste, and deficit-spending were not necessary. Ed Kemmerer warned us of what would happen, but he was helpless in the face of the New Deal spending spree.

As for Mr. Truman's ceilings, when we tried them they not only proved futile but put a brake on production. I may add that we tried the same thing during the American Revolution with exactly the same result. There is nothing to be gained by treating the symptoms of the disease, and it has been shown over and over again that ceilings cannot add a cent of value to depreciated currency.

And when adjustments have been made to the shriveled dollar we have all been witnesses to the fact that they have disrupted the economy of the country. Who but the New Dealers are responsible for the series of strikes which has marked the last few years, or the injury to our educational system by the resignation of thousands of underpaid teachers? Who was it who halved the endowments of hospitals and universities and confiscated a large part of widows' pensions and clergymen's retiring allowances? We were told when we purchased Government bonds that we were making the safest investment in the world, but now these same bonds buy far less than when we bought them.

So I am greatly heartened by the plank in the Republican platform which promises currency reform. I hope that the Republican speakers will keep hammering on the fact that it is the dollar which has shrunk in value rather than that commodities have risen in value, and point out that inflation is the natural fruit of the New Deal policies. To do so will give new hope to millions who have been the victims of these policies.

Sincerely yours,

T. J. WERTENBAKER.

Tax on Margarine and Color

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. BURNET R. MAYBANK
OF SOUTH CAROLINA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Wednesday, July 28, 1948

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a very able statement written by Hunter A. Gibbes, of South Carolina, relating to the Federal tax on margarine and color.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEDERAL TAX ON MARGARINE AND COLOR

During the current discussion concerning the proposal in Congress to repeal the discriminating Federal tax on margarine, perhaps it is in order for the public to know something of the historical and legal background of this tax.

At least 24 States have laws prohibiting the manufacture or sale of margarine. The law of Minnesota is typical. It prohibits the manufacture or sale of margarine "which shall be in imitation of butter of any shade or tint of yellow, unless such oleomargarine shall be made and kept free from all coloration or ingredients causing it to look like butter of any shade or tint of yellow." In the case of State v. Hancock (118 Minn. 85), the court declared that this law is valid and was violated by "a sale of oleomargarine purposely made of any shade or tint of yellow by a judicious selection and combination of fat, oil, and other necessary ingredients, though no artificial coloring matter is used."

The object of the law is, of course, to induce people to buy and eat more butter and maintain a high price for the product. It is based on the utterly false idea that margarine is an imitation of butter. It is certainly not an imitation. It is an excellent substitute only, and in every respect equal to good butter in wholesome food value. It is far better than some butter on the market today. The fact that a pound of margarine looks like a pound of butter is no proof that one is an imitation of the other. The radio has taught us the important fact that similarities are frequently wholly coincidental. If our 1941 Chevrolet looked like a T model Ford—heaven forbid—it would be absurd to say that General Motors is imitating Mr. Ford. The law seems also predicated on the grave assumption that years ago, while a great majority of the American people had their backs turned or were asleep the Almighty came down from above and granted to Minnesota, Wisconsin, and other butter-producing States the exclusive right to use any and all shades and tints of yellow. I seriously doubt that it happened. Certainly no proof has been submitted by the butter people. Yet several dignified judges of the Supreme Court of Minnesota practically said in effect it did happen.

Years ago the Members of Congress, supposed to look out for the interest of all the people, went along with Minnesota and did exactly what the butter people demanded, to wit: They enacted a tax law, not for revenue as claimed, but for the definite purpose of discriminating against margarine. This Federal law defines butter as the product of the cow. It also defines adulterated butter, renovated butter, and processed butter. It then proceeds to state that margarine shall be considered under the law as renovated butter, adulterated butter, or processed butter. The law practically and solemnly declares that margarine is one of these things. Anything that is made to resemble butter is either renovated butter, adulterated butter, or processed butter. See United States Code of Laws, 1926, section 571, page 778. The Federal law discriminating against the use of yellow coloring in margarine came later on account of the increased use of colored margarine. Yet at certain seasons of the year the same yellow coloring is extensively used in butter.

By no stretch of an elastic imagination can it be truthfully said that margarine is renovated butter, adulterated butter, or processed butter. Yet in effect Federal law practically says they are one and the same and taxes them accordingly.

Congress trailed along with Minnesota and Wisconsin in their apparent alleged claim of Divine right to the exclusive use of "any and all shades and tints of yellow" by taxing coloring only when used in margarine. Some years ago Senator MAYBANK made a vigorous, but unsuccessful effort to get these Federal laws against margarine repealed. On the defeat of the Maybank bill a "Wisconsin Senator was gracious and generous enough to indicate that if margarine manufacturers would use green or blue in place of "any and all tints and shades of yellow" he and Congress and the Almighty would interpose no objections. No doubt about 120,000,000 people who cannot afford to use butter at 95 cents a pound are grateful for this generous concession. Perhaps we should be also grateful that this unseemly prohibition in the use of "any and all tints and shades of yellow" has thus far not been extended to curtains and clothes. At present we need not skimp on yellow for either underwear or bathing suits.

In the case of Hammond v. Montana (58 U. S. 935), the United States Supreme Court sustained the State law against margarine "on the ground that it put margarine in a class by itself, and discriminates between it and butter, and the law is for revenue only." In the case of Kolleck (165 U. S. 813), the same Court sustained the Federal tax on the ground that "the primary object is to produce revenue." The word "revenue" is thus compelled to cover a multitude of sins. In spite of these solemn declarations of the Court simple justice seems to indicate that butter and margarine should be on a parity, just as oranges of California are now on an equal basis with oranges of Florida. Concord grapes of New York are permitted to compete in the market with different varieties of grapes in California. Food is vital. One State should never be permitted to interfere with its free sale and distribution under the guise of revenue. How the Russians will gloat over this unjust phase of our democracy.

In addition to the State and Federal slanderous statutory utterances against margarine designed to maintain a high price for cow butter, the dairy interests continue to ridicule margarine by scornfully referring to it as "bull butter," another unseemly device to bull the price of the product of the cow.

In absurdity and injustice to a large majority of the people both State and Federal laws against margarine compare favorably with the rule of 600 years ago when one had to be a good Catholic or else burned at the stake. Neither condition reflects on the principles of justice or religion. Both simply show greed and stupidity of mankind.

These discriminatory taxes add to the high cost of living. There is insufficient butter to go around. There will always be a demand and market both for butter and margarine. The one is for those who can afford to pay 95 cents or more per pound; the other is for the great majority who like margarine and wish to buy it free from discriminatory taxes and at a reasonable price, within the reach of us ordinary people. The use of either butter or margarine is an important element in a balanced diet for maintenance of good health for all the people.

Since the beginning of history special interests have been protected and promoted under the false guise of revenue, contrary to the wishes of a majority. However, Congressmen should not be criticized too severely. They are only human. In order to continue in office they must keep on getting votes. Under our democratic system legislation favorable to special interests is sometimes exchanged for the promise of votes. The respectability and justice of such procedure is often questioned, but both Democrats and Republicans rarely ever try to do anything about it. The protection of special interests is too often cleverly made to appear as beneficial to all the people.

Both Republicans and Democrats in conventions assembled have indicated a determination to override special interests by repealing the Federal laws taxing margarine and coloring. The public desirous of a reduction in the high cost of living, awaits the outcome. It is a matter of public interests against the butter lobby.

HUNTER A. GIBBES.

Civil Rights and State Rights

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES O. EASTLAND

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, July 28, 1948

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a radio broadcast delivered by the Honorable Samuel B. Pettengill, over the American Broadcasting System network on the night of Sunday, February 29, 1948, dealing with the subject of civil rights and State rights.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CIVIL RIGHTS AND STATE RIGHTS

(Text of broadcast by Samuel B. Pettengill over ABC network, Sunday, February 29, 1948)

You have been hearing a lot about Mr. Truman's civil-rights message to Congress and the reaction to it, especially in the Southern States.

I don't suppose many of you have had the chance to read the President's message clear through, or the report of his Civil Rights Committee of 15 upon which his message was based.

You may be glad to have some facts and light on the subject. I said "light"—not heat. I will not be a party to stirring up any feelings on this matter. All my life I have practiced racial and religious tolerance. As a Member of Congress, I nominated Catholic, Protestant, and Jew to such places as West Point and Annapolis. But, back of today's heated discussion are principles of sound government as well as the rights of individuals.

There are two parts to this question—civil rights and State rights.

Both are important. A man loyal to the Constitution might vote for many things as a member of a State legislature, which he would not vote for as a Member of Congress.

This very human question of civil rights has become a political football—kicked around by both Republican and administration party leaders.

What I object to—and I think a league of honest men objects to—is the almost complete lack of sincerity with which the matter is being tossed into the mad scramble for the votes of minority groups.

SHORN OF POLITICAL QUACKERY

If the Man of Galilee were advising us, would He toss this question into the arena of party politics? He said: "A new commandment give I unto you, that ye love one another." I know of no case where He asked a political boss to take over in the delicate field of human relationships. One man, Gandhi, in India, did more for racial tolerance and the civil rights of the down-trodden than all the law books of India put together.

A British viceroy wrote Gandhi: "In one province I have 50,000 troops and riots. Where you are, I have one man—and peace."

The great Negro scientist, George Washington Carver, the great educator, Booker T. Washington, the sportsmanship of Joe Louis, and the Brooklyn Dodgers putting Jackie Robinson in a big league baseball uniform have done more to ease social tensions than any law that Congress can pass.

Now let us see how much sincerity there is in the partisan, political approach to this question.

DEPLORABLE WASTE OF TIME

Let us take the brutal crime of murder called lynching. The President, and Republican leaders, are going to, at least, go through the motions of stopping lynching by Federal law.

With the country facing questions of staggering importance, with Europe and Asia falling apart, Congress is going to take time out, for perhaps weeks on end, in going through the motion of forcing the passage of a Federal antilynching law.

Is this to stop lynching?

When you hear the figures I shall give you, I believe you will say that the real purpose is not to stop lynching, but to stop another party from getting votes. Meantime, sectional feeling will run high and the unity of the Nation will be torn in two. This will be welcome news to cunning men in foreign capitals.

ONE LYNCHING IN 1947

Let us look at the record of lynchings in this country during the past 50 years. You will find them in the World Almanac for 1948, page 451:

In 1900 there were 115 lynchings; in 1910, there were 76; in 1920, 61; in 1930, 21; in 1940, 5; in 1944, 2; in 1945 only 1 lynching; in 1946, 6; in 1947, again, only 1 lynching.

These figures show the growth of public opinion, North and South, East and West (and let me say that only 6 States in the 48 have been wholly free of this crime). The figures show that lynching has practically disappeared in America without any Federal antilynching law.

Yet there are other crimes—staggering in number. But are the political crusaders for a Federal antilynching law, to be forced down the throats of the Southern States, are they hot and bothered about Federal laws to punish other crimes all around them? No. Why? Because they don't see any votes in beating the political tom-toms about these other crimes.

Compare these other crimes, Nation-wide, in 1946, with lynchings:

Murder and manslaughter, 8,444; lynchings, 6.

Rape, 12,117; lynchings, 6.

Robbery, 62,782; lynchings, 6.

Automobile theft, 229,920; lynchings, 6.

Burglary, 357,991; lynchings, 6.

Larceny, 941,738; lynchings, 6.

In New York City, where most of the agitation for a Federal antilynching law comes from, there were in 1946, 325 murders, 14,525 felonies, and a total of 697,734 crimes reported to the police. That is for one city in 1 year. In the entire United States, with 140,000,000 people, there were six lynchings.

Did not these robbed and murdered men and raped women have some civil rights?

Do not the men beaten up by goon-squads in labor riots in northern cities also have some civil rights—the right to work?

But who weeps political crocodile tears for them?

Yet Congress is going to try to pass a Federal antilynching law to cure six lynchings when New York City had 697,734 crimes.

In the light of the facts I have given you, this Federal antilynching bill must strike you like using the 18-inch guns of a battleship to kill a wolf.

WILL THE VOTERS BE FOOLED?

I do not know how many voters will be fooled by all this noise, but I believe the number will be small when they know the facts.

One of the great objectives of our National Union—so stated in the preamble to the Constitution—is to "insure domestic tranquillity." With the Nation and the world in their present critical condition, would great and sincere statesmen inflame sectional feeling by a public auction for votes on an essentially local matter?

It is important to all of us that the Federal Government retain the respect and affection of the American people. It can do so only by limiting its activities to essentially national affairs. When it attempts to invade the field traditionally assigned to State and local governments, which they know best how to handle, and sends its detectives and snoopers to prosecute citizens in every police court, the Federal Government loses prestige. Federal prohibition should have taught us that. State and local officials dumped the whole problem on to Washington, D. C., until every Federal courtroom was loaded down and cheapened by a crowd of bootleggers, and law enforcement became a joke.

It is sound and humane public opinion that we need—not more law. The only law that counts is what the public will back up. You solve nothing in this matter by turning it over to the Federal Government. Conditions in Washington, D. C., where the Federal Government is supreme, prove that conclusively. The government of the city of Washington is the sole responsibility of the Federal Government.

WASHINGTON'S SORRY RECORD

From the standpoint of crime, slums, disease, crowded schools, and racial discrimination, Washington, D. C., has a record scarcely exceeded by any city of its size in the Union. I pointed this out 10 years ago in my book Jefferson, the Forgotten Man.

President Truman's Committee on Civil Rights says of Washington, D. C.: "It is a graphic illustration of a failure of democracy. * * * The situation that exists in the District of Columbia * * * is intolerable."

Yet, ex officio, President Truman is the mayor of Washington and, ex officio, Congress is its board of aldermen. Do you think a government with this dismal record in its own Capital is going to improve civil rights in every county and State of the American Union?

Read Matthew 7, verse 3: "Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye."

BRANDEIS WARNED THE NATION

That great judge, and my personal friend, Louis D. Brandeis, of the United States Supreme Court, said the Federal Government already does too many things too poorly to take on the doing of more things. He said: "The United States * * * has bitten off more than it can chew. It should go back to the Federation idea, letting each State evolve a policy and develop itself." This great judge and humanitarian saw this clearly years ago, when the burdens on the Federal Government were a tiny fraction of what they are today.

So you see, my friends, how much political bunk there is in this appeal to Federal force to solve local and individual problems. Why should we always appeal to the force of government and never to the souls and spirits of men?

President Coolidge had something to say on this subject that is worth repeating. He said:

"There is no way by which we can substitute the authority of law for the virtue of man. The real reforms which society is seeking will come as a result of our religious convictions, or they will not come at all."

This crusade against lynching and for civil rights is a job for the home, the school, and the church, and not for the mailed fist of big government in a wild stampede across the barriers and limits of the American Constitution.

WELL STATED IN POTSDAM

Now listen to this: The Potsdam agreement for the government of Germany, signed by President Truman in the summer of 1945, set forth at least one sound principle. That was that the local governments and states of what was once the German Republic should be restored to their former powers over their own affairs. Here is the exact language: "The administration in Germany should be directed toward the decentralization of the political structure and the development of local responsibility. To this end, local self-government shall be restored throughout Germany on democratic principles."

The men who wrote that must have read the Constitution of the United States. It was sound doctrine. Hitler rose to his evil power over 70,000,000 people largely through destroying the German states and concentrating all power, political and economic, in Berlin. The time then came when no one dared oppose him for fear of losing some government contract, or export or import license, or some subsidy, or tax exemption. But pay day came. The bill was paid, in part, by 300,000 young Americans who will never see the blue sky over their homes again. And the liberty-loving people of Czechoslovakia are paying again for that same mistake.

THE IRONY OF POLITICS

Yet, it is the irony of politics that the same administration in Washington that insisted on restoring state rights that a dictator had destroyed in Germany, is bent on further destroying State rights in America. What right of self-government do Saxony and Bavaria have that Virginia and Texas do not have?

Some of the same methods that Hitler used are proposed here. In international power politics they are what we now call "economic sanctions," legal penalties such as the withdrawal of Federal subsidies, or the use of the Federal taxing power on States that don't go along.

The President's Civil Rights Committee recommends that such weapons be placed in the hands of the Federal Government. I can think of nothing better designed to promote bitterness and disunity in this Nation.

This threat has moved so calm and moderate a man as Senator BYRD, of Virginia, to say: "If such coercion becomes a reality * * * I pray God that Virginia will lead the Southern States in renouncing for all time every dollar of Federal aid."

NEED NOT RESORT TO FORCE

Why this resort to force, the coercion of centralized power? A league of honest men would resist every attempt to rob us of our heritage—one unique in all history—a country where political power is divided among the Nation, the States, counties, cities, and towns—and because power is so divided and limited, a land where men have been free.

There is a way to foster and promote civil rights in this country. It is not the political way. It is by education and public opinion formed in church, and school, and home. We have the Bill of Rights in the Constitution, yet a poll shows that one-third of our people never heard of the Bill of Rights; another third could not identify it, and only one in five has a reasonably accurate understanding of this bulwark of human liberty.

Now here is something constructive to do. Let our schools cut out some of their frills and do-dads, and teach the Constitution and the Bill of Rights.

Let the spirit of every high-school boy and girl be warmed and ennobled by a study of Judge Norton's book, or some similar book on the American Constitution and the rights of man. Let the Golden Rule be taught to children in every church and practiced everywhere. When that job is done and done well, we shall have a league of honest men and there will be little crime or cruelty left.

As Woodrow Wilson said: "Our civilization cannot survive materially unless it is redeemed spiritually—only thus can discontent be driven out and all the shadows lifted from the road ahead."

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the text of an article which I prepared for the magazine Partners. This article was published in the July 1948 issue and is designed to encourage labor-management harmony and effectiveness at the conference table.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HARMONY AT THE CONFERENCE TABLE

(By the Honorable ALEXANDER WILEY, United States Senator from Wisconsin)

How can labor and management achieve true harmony at the conference table?

How can real understanding be arrived at when representatives of unions and employers get together to discuss problems of wages and hours, overtime, bonuses, pensions, vacations, sick leave, and the like?

Must these conferences be doomed to fall into the category of verbal slugfests? Must they lead inevitably to stalemates, followed by ruinous strikes which deprive labor of pay envelopes, management of profits, stockholders of dividends, and the public of badly needed goods?

There seems to me to be no need for abject pessimism. On the contrary, real encouragement lies in the fact that throughout our country far-sighted leaders of both labor and management are demonstrating new and impressive skills in the holding of conferences and in reaching workable compromises. If we are not fully aware of how many work stoppages are thus prevented and the extent to which labor-management equity is secured, the fault, I suggest, lies with much of our press reporting, prone as it is to highlight the uncompromised dispute while underemphasizing or ignoring utterly the peaceful settlement.

Years before I came to the Senate, I had some experience in serving as a mediator in labor-management disputes. Out of that experience and out of experiences I have since enjoyed in the Senate—particularly as chairman of the Judiciary Committee—I have been close enough to the general problem to view it with considerable personal optimism. The productive conference, I have good reason to suppose, lies well within the grasp of both labor and management.

Because the problem affects not merely the industrial parties involved but the welfare of 145,000,000 Americans as well, my interest in it is far more than casual. More, I consider it a personal obligation to do whatever I can to encourage future conferees. There are open doors to harmony at the conference table. The chances that a productive settlement may be achieved are always good. Final results are mainly dependent upon the spirit of initial approach.

Therefore, in the hope that I may be of some constructive assistance to both labor and management, I offer a few guiding rules which I have formulated through the years:

1. COME TO THE CONFERENCE TABLE WITH AN OPEN MIND

It is dangerous for any conferee to enter the conference with mind completely closed to the viewpoint of the other side. A labor conferee, for example, can deceive himself when he imagines that all he can do is to present his side of the case and afterward to stand pat with only deaf ears for the story management is there to tell. The situation can be, and often is, reversed when the representative of management presents only a similarly closed mind to the arguments of labor.

The truth is, neither the delegates of labor nor the delegates of management are sent to the conference table with instructions to ignore completely the other side of the case. Certainly labor, for one, wants its interests fully represented and protected, but indeed those interests cannot be adequately tended if labor's representatives are to assume that all right and all justice lie on labor's side alone. And the same is true of management.

2. GET SOME HUMOR INTO THE CONFERENCE

One of the factors that can help release tension is to introduce a touch of humor into the proceedings. I do not mean that a mere joke or wisecrack is anything of a panacea for the creation of harmony, but I do know from experience that a wholesome tale told in a respectful manner can clear the air, relieve men's tautness of outlook, and make everyone present more fully adequate to their responsibilities.

I have found this to be the case in the United States Senate. There, in the midst of the most crucial of debates, with antagonists facing each other before packed galleries in an atmosphere of livid rage and shaking fists, I have seen some Senator rise and break the tension by making some humorous remark. Instantly the fighting mood relaxes, fists are no longer clenched, and faces, grim with bitter anger but a moment before, melt into a smile. After which all parties concerned proceed to handle adequately the problem before them.

To emphasize this point of humor, I have written a little book entitled "Laughing With Congress" and which has been published by Crown Publishers, of New York. Many Senators have commented to me that the wholesome message this book conveys is as important to our national legislature as it is to that of any State—and, for that matter, to every other forum, large or small, public or private, throughout the land. The introduction of a little healthy humor into our affairs serves well to restore our perspective.

3. BE SURE THAT GOD IS AT THE CONFERENCE TABLE

This may seem like a wholly impracticable and theoretical statement. By it, I mean that conferees should make sure that the spirit of the all-knowing, all-seeing Creator—the spirit of justice and understanding—is recognized as being present. A conferee once remarked that before every conference he places the Holy Bible on the table and says, in effect, "Gentlemen, I place the Bible between us. Let its teachings be our only guide. Let us strive to embody its concepts."

The Bible is filled with injunctions to conferees: "Do unto others as ye would be done by"—"Come, let us reason together"—these and countless others. The Bible informs us that human beings are meant to be adequate, that men are expected to achieve harmony in place of discord, understanding in place of blindness; therein are they enjoined to abandon the ways of sin and tread the paths of righteousness.

God, as revealed to us by the Bible, belongs at every conference table.

4. THINK, THINK, THINK

Some fellows approach a conference as though it signaled the end of all thought and as though the only course of action left open were to pound the table, glare at their opponents and thrash around in the manner of a person about to dash from the room and slam the door behind him. Other conferees, I am sure, realize that a conference establishes the time to begin, not end, one's thinking.

It has been stated that "There is nothing a man will not do to spare himself the effort of thinking." We all know how true this is in our daily lives. It is even more true at the conference table. Men will think synthetically, will consider a proposal for 30 seconds or less and immediately offer an automatic reaction to it. A man will do this, instead of objectively appraising the merits or demerits of such a proposal in the light of the group he represents and in the light of the public interest.

A conference, in order to lead to a productive result, must consist of a genuine meeting of minds. Mere prejudice and emotion had best be checked at the door. If a true meeting of minds is to occur, the need of all conferees is to think, think, think.

Possibly some folks will say that these four guiding rules I offer are of a wholly impractical nature. And yet, I have found that frequently it is just such general rules as the above which turn out in the long run to be the most practical of all. For it is, of course, the spirit behind the conference and behind its governing rules, rather than the letter, which offers the truly helpful avenue of approach. In the words of St. Paul, "The letter killeth but the spirit maketh alive."

Obviously, there is a vast variety of important techniques which serve to make for a successful conference. Careful preparation for the conference, the reduction to writing of as many of the controversial points as possible, preparation of graphic charts and other aids to clearing up points at issue—these are some of the specific means. But the most important single approach, in my humble opinion, is for both sides to recognize at the very outset that strikes and other forms of work stoppage are far from being the real answer to any labor dispute at hand.

I know very well that, where management proves itself to be wholly obstinate, completely self-centered and entirely unwilling to reason and compromise, a strike or stoppage of work may possibly be the only weapon in labor's arsenal—where a public utility or key industry is not involved. But I nevertheless insist that both labor and management must be educated to realize that the public interest requires the exhaustion of all possible alternatives of mediation and arbitration in order to prevent the disastrous consequences which always accrue when labor goes out on strike.

We are all, in the final analysis, members of but one union—our American Union of 48 States—the union of all hearts and all hands in a Constitutional Republic.

Open-mindedness, humor, God's guidance, and plenty of honest head work—let these and other inestimable advantages frame our concept of the truly American conference.

Civil Rights—When and How?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLYDE R. HOEY

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, July 28, 1948

Mr. HOEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an editorial entitled "Civil Rights—When and How?" published in the Christian Science Monitor of July 26, 1948.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CIVIL RIGHTS—WHEN AND HOW?

Civil rights has become an irrepressible issue. It exploded at the Democratic convention. It threatens to deadlock the special session of Congress. It overshadows this election. It will continue to reshape American politics through many elections.

Today millions of Americans have a new awareness of injustices long accepted in their midst. The shaking up and mixing caused by the war; the antipathy aroused by Nazi racism; the books and movies graphically portraying the plight of second-class citizens, and the new political power of Negro and Jewish groups—all these have combined to focus attention on the problem.

Signals of a tremendous change have been accumulating. Court decisions supporting the right of Negroes to participate in primaries have accompanied a rising tide of liberal opinion and practice in the South. Southern efforts to stop lynching and to improve Negro educational opportunities have gained speed even while Federal legislation was being blocked. But the most dramatic evidence that something very big has happened came in the recent Democratic convention.

First a Negro delegate was given full opportunity to present the civil-rights case from the rostrum. Then the delegates not only voted down a State-rights plank but upset the party managers by throwing out a compromise plank of generalities on civil rights and substituting one which spelled out specific reforms. This was largely possible because the big-city bosses who defeated Henry Wallace in the 1944 convention on this issue decided that it has now become politically profitable to support civil rights.

This slapping down of the State-rights defenders undoubtedly strengthened their movement to run a separate ticket. One need not belong to that group or be greatly concerned about the shifting of power in the Democratic Party to have some uneasy questions about these developments. For with both parties now committed to civil-rights legislation and the Democratic Party largely in the hands of men ready to press it, either from conviction or for political advantage, such a measure as a Federal fair employment practices act becomes an early possibility.

This newspaper has advocated careful anti-lynching legislation. The South's own public opinion condemns lynching. But Federal laws designed to end segregation, to force social equality and revolutionize the customs of a whole people, must be questioned.

Action of this kind can do more harm than good. The new awareness of injustices is a healthy development. Reform is overdue. But reform is a much bigger thing than passing a law. Unhappily, much of the civil-rights issue is today surrounded by ignorance and intolerance as between races and sections which retard real reform.

In the South even those most ready to concede the need for change feel that the South is misunderstood, and are resolved to defend their own rights of local self-government. In the North, hasty, doctrinaire concepts of reform tend to foster an unfortunate holier-than-thou attitude and to overlook the discriminations—often unconscious but still cruel—experienced by Negro and Jew in the North.

There is really little disagreement on the need for reform. The big question is, How? Both education and legislation are needed in the great enterprise of extending and developing civil rights in America. But legislation—impelled by a combination of sincere but overzealous reformers and politicians seeking partisan or personal advantage—can easily get too far ahead of education. Such measures would be 10 times harder to enforce than prohibition; they would be nullified and in the process would engender new bitternesses.

The great need in the civil-rights picture today is not for more coercion, but for more Christianity. With more understanding—more willingness to put oneself in his brother's place and to examine the beam in one's own eye—reform can be speeded.

President Truman and the Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. E. H. MOORE
OF OKLAHOMA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Wednesday, July 28, 1948

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an article by John O'Donnell, appearing in today's issue of the Washington Times-Herald.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

CAPITOL STUFF

(By John O'Donnell)

For a seasoned and smart politician, one who came up the hard way through the tough Pendergast school of public office holding, Harry S. Truman has developed a surprisingly acute case of campaign buck fever and the jitters.

There's plenty of evidence. The special session of Congress which has just opened on such a sour note. The well-delivered but poorly thought-out Truman acceptance speech in Philadelphia was another.

The sudden shooting from the hip with two hastily drafted Executive orders designed to end the segregation of Negroes in the armed forces and in Federal employment. That last indicates that the temper and tone of the Wallace convention in Philadelphia got under the Truman political hide and that now every desperate and hasty move must be tried to hold the thousands of Negro and Jewish votes which Franklin Roosevelt gripped so firmly in the last four Presidential campaigns.

But Franklin Roosevelt was a much smarter politician than Harry Truman and had a much brainier staff of White House thinkers. F. D. R. had his FEPC official set-up and got away with it without stirring up a revolt among the southern Democrats.

Truman, spurred by the lively threat of defeat, is now slapping together speeches and plans without first getting the facts from his advisers. He is playing the dangerous game of making political issues of race and religion without getting the advice of recognized leaders and experts in the field. And Truman's legislative proposals are being drafted apparently without giving a damn whether they can stand up in court.

When it comes to going off half-cocked, consider Truman and his play for votes on the displaced-persons legislation.

In the course of his "cone one, come all" challenge to all political foes, tossed from the rostrum of the Philadelphia Convention Hall on July 15, the President declared:

"I shall ask for an adequate and decent law for displaced persons in place of this anti-Semitic and anti-Catholic law which this Eightieth Congress passed."

Now that statement of Truman's was deeply disturbing to the Catholics of America—and deeply resented.

In the first place it was flatly untrue. No responsible American Catholic, either in clergy or laity, had ever even suggested that this piece of legislation by the Eightieth Congress discriminated against individuals of his faith.

Furthermore, the Catholics didn't like this move by Truman to inject the religious issue of Catholicism into this coming bitter campaign where it certainly has no place. And they didn't like the idea of Truman angling for what is rather insultingly referred to as the Catholic vote. One White House move along that line had been squelched a few days earlier at the convention when prominent Catholics in the party turned thumbs down on a suggestion from a Truman representative that the Vice Presidency go to a Catholic—United States Senator O'MAHONEY, of Wyoming, being prominently mentioned.

This in effect was the reply sent back on the Catholic-for-Vice-President idea:

"No. In the first place you're wrong on the assumption that there will be any such thing as a solid Catholic vote next November. There will be Catholic votes for Truman, for Dewey, and Warren, and probably some for Wallace.

"In the second place, the idea of a Catholic getting into the White House through the back door solely on a vote-angling expedition is repugnant. If and when an American Catholic of national stature and ability comes forward, then let the convention nominate him on his merits—not on his religion or his vote-getting ability."

Truman's gratuitous hauling in of the Catholics in his denunciation of the displaced persons legislation at Philadelphia was taken so seriously that an official reply now has come from Catholic hierarchy of the United States.

The bishops of all dioceses had created the National Catholic Resettlement Council to study this displaced-persons problem and legislative action to meet the condition. Their chairman and the spokesman for them on this occasion is Msgr. Edward Swanstrom, of New York. States Monseigneur Swanstrom, and this statement was only made with the authority of the bishops:

"The displaced persons legislation is not discriminatory as far as Catholics are concerned.

"No leading Catholic authority or any official representative of the National Catholic Resettlement Council has ever spoken of the measure as being anti-Catholic despite reports in the public press."

And, we may note, the only reports in the public press on this issue are the quotes from President Truman as he spoke in the convention hall July 15, last.

The official Catholic attitude is that although the bill can be improved it is not, under any stretch of the imagination, anti-Catholic. When the Congress sent the bill to the White House for Truman's signature the National Council of Catholic Men, the National Council of Catholic Women, the Knights of Columbus, and other Catholic organizations sent messages to the President urging him to sign the measure.

Now to find Truman denouncing as anti-Catholic a measure which the Nation's outstanding Catholics had urged be made a law, creates another weird development in this already fantastic political campaign. No one believes that Truman deliberately planned to offend Catholics by his remark. It was just that he didn't know any better—or was too rattled to know what he was saying.

The Post Office Department

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE M. GRANT
OF ALABAMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. GRANT of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of S. R. Young, executive assistant to the Postmaster General, before the annual convention of the Ohio chapter of the National Association of Postmasters, Cleveland, Ohio, June 2, 1948:

I should like first to express my appreciation to your distinguished secretary, Hon. Algy R. Murphy, for his thoughtful invitation to me to attend this great convention.

As you can well imagine, I am called on to attend many postal conventions and meetings in every part of the United States, but nowhere in this great Nation have I found warmer hospitality or more enjoyable companions than here with you in the city of Cleveland. Your sincerity is indeed inspiring and your good fellowship the kind that makes any man want to be a part of you.

One has but to be here and look out upon this fine audience to appreciate and value the support and strength that you give to the greatest Postmaster General the Postal Service has ever had, the Honorable Jesse M. Donaldson.

In you he has resources of wisdom, of zeal, and of high purpose upon which he relies at all times.

No group knows better than the postmasters of this country the benefits to be derived from membership in an organization that has the respect and confidence of the executive officers of the Federal Government and the entire membership of the National Congress. Look, if you will, at the results that your national organization has achieved, and you will understand what I mean.

I am delighted at this opportunity to congratulate the officers of the Ohio chapter of the National Association of Postmasters upon the way they have arranged and conducted this convention, and upon the substantial contribution your chapter has made to your national organization and to the department.

I am proud also that I have this occasion to salute your national president, your good friend and mine, the Honorable Burris C. Jackson. He is not only an able president of your national organization, but a loyal and efficient postmaster. I know, perhaps better than you, how close he is to Postmaster General Donaldson, how strong the friendship is that exists between them, and how much Mr. Donaldson values that friendship. I know too the valuable contributions to the entire postal service that have come from the fertile and active brain and the unremitting toil of Burris Jackson. Never before has there been a stronger bond between the Post Office Department and the postmasters of the Nation, and all of us owe a debt to Burris for his great part in bringing this about.

You showed your confidence in him by electing him your national president at Los Angeles last fall, a convention that I was happy to attend.

Every departmental official and every Member of Congress knows that Burris Jackson is motivated by his desire to help the Postal Service and the postmasters—all postmasters, big and little—everywhere in the United States. It is because I am so familiar with the good that he has done through the years, as a colonel in the Army Postal Service during the war—where he solved postal problems that looked insoluble—as a postmaster, as an officer in your national association, and now as your national president, that I am prompted to speak of him as I have.

Now perhaps you would like to know a little something of the way Postmaster General Donaldson has organized the Post Office Department. Of course, he keeps in close touch with the heads of all the bureaus of his Department. His door is always open to receive them with their problems, and you may believe me when I say that they are with Mr. Donaldson but a few minutes before they come out with the right answers.

At the right hand of Mr. Donaldson is the office of the First Assistant Postmaster General, the Honorable Vincent C. Burke, who serves as Acting Postmaster General when Mr. Donaldson is absent from Washington; and at the left hand is the office of your humble servant.

The Postmaster General receives in the neighborhood of 1,000 letters a day, and our efficient and courteous corps of secretaries see to it that this considerable volume of mail is promptly handled, bringing to the attention of the Postmaster General those matters of great importance, and bringing to my attention other matters that he should know about.

The main job of the executive assistant to the Postmaster General is to relieve him as much as possible of the multiplicity of detail that could literally swamp any man. The Executive Assistant is also in close and constant touch with the Postmaster General and with all of the officials in every bureau of the Department. It is a part of his job to see to it that the policies and decisions of the Postmaster General are well known and understood by everyone in the Department, and of course the executive assistant does his part in seeing that those policies are observed.

It is with pride that I avail myself of the presence of this representative and distinguished portion of the postmasters of the State of Ohio to give you a brief picture of the over-all postal administration that comes each day before the eyes and under the hand of the Postmaster General of the United States.

When I tell you that in the course of 1 year Postmaster General Donaldson is called upon to review and place his signature upon approximately 50,000 important letters and documents, that he must receive and confer with an average of 20 callers a day—Senators, Congressmen, postmasters and postal patrons—and then present himself on an average of 100 times a year as a witness before the committees of the Congress in behalf of postmasters, postal employees and postal patrons, and, too, keep himself fully informed upon the intricate details of the vast postal operations, you will begin to understand that his job is not alone in making the mighty decisions which form the policy of the Postal Service, but that it has tremendous physical exactions as well. But you will be happy to know that Jesse Donaldson thrives on it. He is in excellent health and in a cheerful mood at all times.

Today we have 143,000,000 people in this country who secure mail service through 42,000 post offices, with the help of 500,000 men and women employees. Bear in mind that postal transactions range all the way from the purchasing of a 1 cent stamp to the sending of hundreds and hundreds of tons of newspapers and periodicals at the somewhat complicated second-class postage rates; from the receipt and delivery of mail on a rural route, emanating from one of the smallest post offices, to the tens of thousands of letters that ebb and flow from the great business establishments in our large cities; and you will begin to appreciate the ramifications of the vast postal operations, and at least some of the burdens that rest today upon Postmaster General Donaldson and the 1,730 people who assist him in the Department in Washington.

But yet, we in the Department realize that we do not know everything about the postal service. The first thing we do when something comes up about which we need information is to call upon you postmasters for it. You always have the answers, and the right answers.

Yes, we have the world's biggest business, or rather service organization. The postal service has the largest savings bank in the world—over $3,000,000,000 on deposit in postal savings.

We are the world's largest transmitter of cash—during the fiscal year we handled $4,300,000,000 of other people's money through the money order system, representing 325,000,000 transactions.

This fiscal year we will transport and deliver 40,000,000,000 pieces of mail, weighing 4,500,000 tons.

We own the largest fleet of trucks in the world—over 10,000 (yes, many of them are 10 to 20 years old)—and we rent 50,000 other trucks.

We are the world's largest real-estate owner, having buildings or rented space in 42,000 places, with property value of many billions of dollars.

Each day we sell 118,000,000 stamps of all kinds to about 20,000,000 people.

Each day we use over 6,000 miles of twine just to tie letters and packages.

We are the world's largest employer, with 500,000 people on our pay roll.

Why, the New York City post office alone does more business than the entire Canadian postal service. Chicago does more than the whole continent of Australia. This fine post office here in Cleveland, under the administration of our able and distinguished host postmaster, the Honorable Guy R. Lucas, does more postal business than Greece, Egypt, Chile, and Bolivia, combined.

I do not have to remind you that the cost of just about everything has gone up—everything from potatoes to postal supplies. Whenever you visit a grocery or dry-goods store you learn just how much it has gone up; but not the price of postal service we give to the people of this country. The fact is, there have been some reductions—the air-mail rate, for instance, and the money-order fees from the temporary rates that were tried out during the war.

The postal volume has doubled in 10 years, yet our equipment items are far below what is needed—only what we had 10 years ago. We are literally bursting at the seams, and Mr. Donaldson is trying to do something about it.

Our total receipts for the present fiscal year will reach the $1,400,000,000 mark—twice what it was 10 years ago. And our expenses this year will be about $1,750,000,000—a deficit of $350,000,000. Of course, that deficit is of great concern to your Postmaster General, and it comes about through the increased costs to railroads, air lines, equipment items, yes, and through increases of salaries of clerks, carriers, and postmasters, too—and every cent of those increases are deserved and more. As you know, Congress is now considering additional increases, and Mr. Donaldson appeared before the committees of Congress in behalf of that legislation. At the same time he has recommended to the Congress that consideration be given toward wiping out the deficit or a substantial part of it by moderately raising the price of the services that we have for sale. That, however, is a matter for Congress.

Bear in mind that we can neither control the time, the place, nor the volume of the mail given to the postal service for distributing, transporting, and delivering. Yes, we are a service organization. The only thing we ever make any money on is first-class mail and through postal-savings investments. Every other service given by the Post Office Department is at a financial loss, yet they are services needed by the people of this country.

I wonder how many of you realize that the great State of Ohio has 1,342 post offices, whose gross receipts last year were $64,000,000—an average of $48,000 for each post office?

That the salaries of he Ohio postmasters last year amounted to $3,260,000—an average of $2,447 for each postmaster, including those at fourth-class offices?

Do you know that the Post Office Department spent last year $54,700,000 in Ohio for salaries to all postal people in post offices, and for rent, maintenance, and such items, but this does not include pay to railroads, air lines, or star-route contractors.

Are you aware that you postmasters in Ohio sold 13,500,000 money orders, valued at $186,000,000, and that you cashed 12,500,000 money orders, paying out $196,000,000? Big business.

Why, do you realize that you have 184,000 postal-savings depositors who have entrusted $160,000,000 of their savings in your care?

Or that you sold $338,000,000 worth of war and savings bonds to your patrons from 1941 to 1947?

How many know that Ohio has 1,535 rural routes serving the people who live in the rural sections; that they travel each day of service a total of 71,000 miles—nearly three times around the earth at the equator?

In doing all of these things your Postmaster General and all of us in the Department know you are giving excellent postal service to the 7,773,000 people who are fortunate to live in this great State. I think you have done mighty well.

Now, of course, in administering so vast an enterprise, Postmaster General Donaldson has to have the assistance of able and loyal men and women, such as you postmasters here today. He has the help, too, of able and loyal men in Washington. I know of no one upon whom Mr. Donaldson relies more or with greater confidence than he does on the able and distinguished First Assistant Postmaster General, the Honorable Vincent C. Burke, whose career so closely parallels that of Mr. Donaldson—clerk, supervisor, post-office inspector, Deputy First Assistant Postmaster General, postmaster at the city of Washington, D. C., for over 10 years, and now First Assistant Postmaster General. He is your friend.

There is another man in the Department whose voice is heard in behalf of postmasters and clerks and carriers wherever he goes—a tried and true friend of the Postmaster General, an able and hard worker in behalf of everyone in the postal service—the distinguished Third Assistant Postmaster General, Hon. Joseph J. Lawler.

I only wish it could have been your privilege, as it has been mine so often, to hear Postmaster General Donaldson, aided and supported by all of the officials in the Department, such as Mr. Burke and Mr. Lawler, when he appears before the Bureau of the Budget and the committees of Congress in behalf of appropriations sufficient to enable us in Washington to authorize you to give to the people of this country the kind of postal service to which they are entitled. It would do your heart good, as it did mine.

You know I have been in Government service almost 30 years—nearly long enough to qualify for the dubious rank of bureaucrat. In my time I have seen Postmasters General come and go. They have left their marks upon the Postal Service, and all of them have made splendid contributions to it.

But ladies and gentlemen, I do not hesitate to say that in Jesse Donaldson as Postmaster General of the United States, the postmasters of the land and the employees in every line of postal endeavor have the finest friend and best-informed Postmaster General in the 170-year history of the United States Postal Service.

Yes; in Jesse Donaldson you and I have the foremost champion of good mail service, and good treatment to the people who give that service, who ever graced the Cabinet of any President.

He began his career as a city letter carrier in a little town in Illinois 43 years ago, with hope in his heart, faith in his fellowman, and the ambition to do a good job in his soul. He progressed through the ranks as clerk, post-office inspector, inspector in charge, deputy second assistant, deputy first assistant, chief post-office inspector during the most trying period in the history of the inspection service—the late war—when I had the honor and pleasure of serving as his assistant chief inspector—then on to First Assistant Postmaster General, and now, after over four decades of honorable and distinguished service, he has arrived at the pinnacle of his illustrious career, Postmaster General of the United States.

From the top rung of the ladder, Jesse Donaldson stretches forth his strong hand of friendship to aid you and me in giving better service to the people, and in helping us in our hopes and our ambitions. How fortunate we are that his wisdom, his experience, and genius are ours to lean upon.

I happily place on record my conviction, shared I believe by every person in this room and every postal employee in the land, that in the life, character, and career of Jesse Donaldson, and by his actions as our Postmaster General, he has changed decisively and permanently for the better the moral standard of postal employment by placing the postal service irrevocably upon the highest plane of its long and proud history.

His life and service to the people and to those of us who labor with him must be regarded as the most commanding event in postal destiny.

Where could you find a better example of the American way of life than in the postal career of Jesse Donaldson?

These are some of the reasons why I view Mr. Donaldson's appointment as symbolic of unity through the vast domain of our service, free from prejudice and indifference, as evidenced by the unprecedented acclaim his appointment received in every quarter of our land, from men and women in every walk of life.

Let us be aware of the new importance and higher value everyone in this great organization has acquired through the presence of our friend Jesse Donaldson as Postmaster General of the United States. Let us renew our pledge of loyalty, of honest effort, and share in the mighty responsibilities that rest serenely today upon the broad shoulders of our beloved chief.

Already I have consumed more time than I intended, and with this brief word I shall conclude. I hope that each of you ladies and gentlemen will take from this convention the thought of the personal and sincere appreciation of the Postmaster General and of all of us in the Post Office Department. Mr. Donaldson, as is everyone in Washington, is mindful of your fine work, your devotion, and your loyalty. When you go back to your offices remember that this Postal Service of yours and mine, which in truth belongs to all the people, will never be greater than the men and women who give their time and talents in its labor. From the days of Benjamin Franklin, the first Postmaster General, down through the administrations of 56 Postmasters General, to this good hour under our beloved Jesse Donaldson, the Postal Service has been judged and measured and weighed by the character of service—courteous and efficient—that it gives to everyone who seeks to use it, and you and I have no more sacred trust than to protect and promote the confidence that the public has in us.

That is why I say, ladies and gentlemen, that this Postal Service is more than a mere paper record. It is a spirit, a faith, and a cause. This Postal Service has been no accident, but rather the result of endless toil, boundless faith and enthusiasm. There will be more to that record if we here today are as true to its ideals as those who have gone before us were in theirs.

Let us hold high the torch.

The Special Session and Prices

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROBERT A. TAFT

OF OHIO

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, July 29 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an address on the subject "The Special Session and Prices," broadcast by me last night over the facilities of the National Broadcasting Co. and the Mutual Broadcasting System.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SPECIAL SESSION AND PRICES

The Constitution says that the President may convene Congress in special session on extraordinary occasions. There is no national emergency or extraordinary occasion today. The President did not even refer to the critical situation in Berlin.

This call was announced by the President after 2 o'clock in the morning in the midst of a political speech to the Democratic Convention, solely as a political maneuver in the President's campaign for his own reelection. In the same speech he denounced the Eightieth Congress as the worst in history in spite of the magnificent cooperation he has received in every phase of foreign policy and in many fields of domestic policy. The session was called without consultation with the leaders of Congress, after Congress had adjourned with the full acquiescence and approval of the Democratic minority leaders. We would be fully justified in adjourning at once until the election is over.

Serious legislative problems cannot be satisfactorily handled in the midst of a political campaign. Legislation should be a deliberative process, and every important measure should be debated from the viewpoint of the public interest. In the Eightieth Congress our debates have been remarkably free of partisan argument. The Eightieth Congress enacted a tremendous program of foreign and domestic legislation and completed all routine and emergency matters generally recognized as an extraordinary record of accomplishment. Few realize that Federal legislation today covers such a wide field of subjects that only a fraction can be properly studied and handled in any one year. It would take at least 6 months to give proper consideration to the President's omnibus left-wing program. We agree with Senator BARKLEY'S statement made in the Senate a month ago before politics entered the situation:

"I have done what I could to cooperate with the majority in bringing about an adjournment because I think if we sit here until after the convention, or if we sit here between the conventions, or after the two conventions, the entire time of the Congress will be taken up with political bickering and political legislation and political oratory, and I do not want that to be brought about. I want to finish what we can finish and adjourn the Congress, and I have tried my best to cooperate with the leaders on the other side to bring about an adjournment."

The President's quarrel with the Eightieth Congress is not its failure to enact legislation, but a fundamental difference in Government philosophy between the President and Congress. The President would fix wages, fix prices, expand Government spending, increase Federal taxes, socialize and nationalize medicine, and generally regiment the life of every family, as well as agriculture, labor, and industry, and his proposals would ultimately create an annual budget which could not be less than $60,000,000,000. Such expenditure would make inflation inevitable and permanent. The Congress believes that progress must be made and all our problems solved within the principles of liberty, equality, and justice to all men which guided this country for 150 years. This difference has resulted in a constant conflict, resulting in many vetoes by the President, and frequent action overriding his vetoes. Constructive legislation on liberal lines which the President did not dare to veto, has been criticized and attacked by him. It is difficult and dangerous to work out great public problems without the slightest cooperation from a hostile President. The only way this fundamental difference can be resolved is by vote of the people at the November election.

In the President's program there is very little of an emergency nature. Most of the social-welfare legislation proposed is of a permanent character, which can be considered more thoroughly next winter. The Democrats controlled Congress for 14 years, professing the greatest interest in social-welfare legislation. Now they say that they failed to deal adequately with social security, education, health, and housing, and blame the Republicans for not enacting the program they failed to enact during 14 years.

We have determined, therefore, that this session should be limited to a short period of perhaps 2 weeks. Our committees are carefully examining all of the President's recommendations to determine whether there are any matters which can be dealt with promptly on an emergency basis.

The situation which gives concern to members of both parties is the spiral of inflation resulting in constantly higher prices. But, of course, the higher prices are caused directly by the greatly increased purchasing power of the people competing for all kinds of food and other commodities. Thus, even at the frightful prices of meat, the American people are eating 15 percent more meat per capita than before the war. In his message to Congress, the President deliberately omitted any reference to the income side of the picture. The fact is that the cost of living for an urban family has gone up 72 percent since 1939, just before the war. But in the same period the average hourly earnings of 13,000,000 factory workers have gone up 100 percent, and average weekly earnings have increased from $23.86 a week to $52.81 a week, or 121 percent. It is quite true that the price index has finally reached the same level where it was in 1920, but the earnings in 1920 were $26 per week, while today they are more than $52. Personal consumption expenditures have increased 150 percent since 1939.

Unfortunately, there are many families who have the high prices without sharing adequately in the increased income. This Congress increased the salaries of all Federal workers, and I believe that the wages of all workers should be increased at least in proportion to the cost-of-living increase since 1939. But still the high prices spell hardship for millions.

The President boasts that there has been a tremendous increase in farm income, and says that if the farmers don't do their duty by the Democratic Party, they are the most ungrateful people in the world. He boasts of the fact that there has been a tremendous increase in the income of labor, and claims that all workmen must be ungrateful if they do not vote the Democratic ticket. In other words, he claims credit for high wages and high farm income, and then tries to blame the Republicans for the other side of the picture—the high prices which must inevitably result from high wages and high farm prices. Such a claim cannot be characterized otherwise than demagoguery.

Who is responsible for the inflation spiral today? It is the result of many policies all sponsored by the administration in power for the last 15 years. They vastly increased the debt before and during the war, creating huge amounts of money which is still coming into the market to drive prices up. Immediately after the war they adopted the theory that a general 30-percent increase in wages could be granted without price increase. This theory was disproved even by OPA, which promptly had to increase coal and steel prices. Prices have been chasing wages ever since.

They have permitted a steady increase of bank loans at the rate of five to seven billion dollars a year. By making loans, the banks create money for use in buying more goods to force up prices.

There has been a great expansion of mortgages for houses. Only last week the Reserve Board pointed out that there have been increases of $8,000,000,000 in 2½ years, stimulated by Government action creating money to bid up the prices of building materials and homes.

In 1947, we exported $11,000,000,000 more goods than we imported. If we let foreigners come in here and buy huge amounts of American goods without their being able to produce goods to furnish to us, of course that foreign demand forces up prices. This year the excess of exports will be between seven and eight billion dollars.

The President insists on expenditures of nearly $40,000,000,000 a year, and nearly all of this money finds its way into the markets to help force up prices.

The Government tax burden is more than forty billion a year, and many businesses and individuals today are able to pass on those taxes into the price of the goods that the housewife buys. When you buy a pair of shoes, you pay some of the taxes of the farmer, the feeder of the cattle, of the packer, of the hide processor, of the shoe manufacturer, and the shoe retailer. The consumer finally pays. Probably 25 percent of the price you pay for manufactured goods represents taxes.

These are the causes of inflation and while we go on creating money and increased buying, we cannot be surprised at higher prices. Each of the programs has merit. None perhaps can be wholly eliminated. But if we do not want high prices we will have to cut all of these programs in a reasonable proportion.

The President has power to cut many public expenses. He has never shown the slightest interest in economy of any kind. I have yet to see the project for spending money which he has not endorsed. He wants to increase taxes, and three times vetoed our tax-reduction bills. The Federal Reserve Board has power by raising the rediscount rate and limiting its purchases of Government bonds to force a reduction in bank loans. In fact, its power is so great that the danger is, if it were carelessly used, it might not only reduce all prices, but precipitate a depression.

The President does not lack power to reduce prices. The fact is he does not want to reduce prices, certainly not before the election. He wants votes from the farmers for high farm prices. He wants votes from the workmen for high wages.

We will look over the field and see whether any other reasonable powers can be given him by which he can restrain the expansion of credit, but I feel quite confident he will never use them before November. Fortunately, bountiful crops have already reduced the price of corn, wheat, and other grains, which is bound to be reflected in a lower price for food. Otherwise the only hope for lower prices lies in getting rid of administration inspired by the New Deal philosophy of spending and spending and taxing and taxing.

The President tries to blame high prices on the Republicans because they have refused to restore to him power to fix prices, fix wages, allocate and ration commodities. In October 1947 the President said that such controls were police-state methods. He was right; they would mean the end of economic freedom in this country. The President wants to reestablish OPA, WPB, and all the wartime agencies. He represents that he only wants these powers for stand-by purposes, and that they will be sparingly used only with relation to vital commodities in short supply. This Congress has learned that when powers are once granted to a left-wing administrator they are freely used. If there is one thing we learned from OPA in the war, it is that you can't do price control partially. Every important commodity is interrelated. You can't fix the price of meat unless you fix the price of corn and wheat and chickens and dairy products. Once you start to fix prices, you have to regulate every detail of every sale transaction. This Congress certainly is not going to grant powers on the theory that they won't be used.

Apart from the destruction of liberty, there are three practical objections to adopting police-state methods:

1. They choke production, instead of increasing it. What we want is more production to give people what they need at reasonable prices. Surely the memory of the American people is not so short they can't remember OPA after the war. The housewife couldn't buy any butter, any meat, any soap, or canned goods. No man could find a white shirt or a new suit. There was no leather because of the black-market slaughtering of beef, and no shoes. There wasn't any lumber or building materials, except in the black market, and none of them came back until we got rid of OPA. The English have complete price control and rationing, but they haven't got enough to live on. They have no incentive to get production, and they rely on American aid for a standard of living far below our own. Many countries in the world have controls. In all of them incentive to produce has vanished.

2. In the second place, nobody knows enough to do the job of control as well as it is done by natural economic law. There are probably a billion transactions a day in this country, and no one knows enough to fix the prices and conditions to govern those sales. I saw the little men who struggled with the problem in the OPA bureaus. They created books and books of regulations and had to amend them daily. If their rules fitted the East, they didn't fit the West or the South, and there was no relief from bungling and injustice.

3. Price control and rationing won't work in America in time of peace. In time of war a morale develops which makes it possible to maintain some control, but once peace came, remember the black markets which existed here? Eighty percent of the meat was in the black market. There was no lumber in the lumber yards, but millions of feet on black-market trucks. The American people don't like to be regimented and they don't like to be ordered around by Federal officials. Morals are broken down, because it pays to be a criminal. The moment the Government fixes the price of corn at less than its natural price, most of it goes into the black market.

Price control won't work. Surely, the President's memory must be short. He took off price controls, not the Republicans. Let's remember what really happened. July 1, 1946, the Democratic Congress renewed price-control powers with various modifications designed to increase production and the provision that they should be gradually relaxed. The President vetoed the bill, resulting in the complete removal of control for a period of 30 days. By the time the Congress could enact another bill—and remember this was a Democratic Congress—it was almost impossible to reimpose controls on basic agricultural products. The President's own decontrol board then removed controls on dairy products and grains. The attempt to control meat was such a fiasco that the President himself took off those controls just before the 1946 election, because he was told that no Democratic Congressman could be elected if they remained in effect. Then after the election, it was the President himself who took off almost all other controls before the first Republican Congress in 14 years could even meet. He could have reimposed controls at any time up to July 1, 1947. He did not do so, and did not ask for a renewal of his powers. Can he sincerely believe that the Government could now enforce the controls he is asking for without a vast army of enforcement agents; or even with such an army? He knows that no reasonable man would give him such power, and personally I believe he is only asking for it because he knows it will not be granted. The President's adoption of this police-state program represents a complete surrender to politics, and to the left wing which is so tempted to stray away to the support of Henry Wallace.

The policies of the administration have caused inflation. An administration which has been in power for 16 years cannot escape the results of its own action. It has the powers to check inflation today—we may grant additional powers—but the only real recourse of the people against inflation is at the election on November 4.

Address by Hon. Scott W. Lucas, of Illinois, at the Democratic National Convention

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. FRANCIS J. MYERS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, July 29 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD the address delivered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] at the Democratic National Convention held in Philadelphia on July 14, 1948.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the convention, I am grateful for the opportunity to appear before the Democrats assembled in this convention and tell you briefly why it is necessary that the people of this country return the control of the United States Senate to the Democratic Party in the election next November.

The one great issue on which the American people are united, regardless of party, is the issue of permanent peace.

In the span of a single generation, we have passed through two World Wars, in which we played a decisive part. We know at first hand the iron cruelty of war.

Deep down in the heart of every American burns the hope that never again will we have to pour out our blood and treasure in the holocaust that is modern war, to defend the freedom we cherish.

Yet today, 3 years after the close of the Second World War, the press and radio bring us their daily quota of alarms and rumors of threats to the uneasy peace we now enjoy. The anxious task of our time is to find the sure path to world peace.

How shall we achieve this humanitarian objective? What must we do as a government and as a people to make sure that another generation of Americans is not visited with the horrors of modern war?

Next November the people of this country will be asked to make a momentous choice. On election day they will be called on to place their confidence in a President and a Congress to lead them through the thorny years which lie ahead. Whether we shall have permanent peace may well be decided by the kind of leadership these men will provide.

While the President is the architect of our foreign policy, it is not alone his responsibility. The Senate of the United States has an equally important role to play in the shaping of that policy.

The President has the power to make treaties, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, provided that two-thirds of the Senators present concur. The Senate alone has the power to refuse to confirm Presidential appointments responsible for administering our foreign policy. Yes, the President makes our foreign policy, but the Senate can unmake it. It has done so in the past. The wrong kind of a Senate could do it again.

Most of us are not too young to remember how high our hopes were raised by President Woodrow Wilson's bold proposal for the building of a League of Nations after the First World War. A war-weary world cried out for the creation of a body which could resolve disputes among the nations without bloodshed.

But a wrecking crew of Republican Senators decided that America was not to join the League of Nations. They forced America to cut herself off from the rest of the world. They fostered that spirit of isolationism in our foreign policy that has been a contributing factor to policies which involved us in two world wars.

It was proposed that we join in the activities of the World Court at The Hague. Again it was a group of Republican Senators who successfully resisted even this mild venture in international cooperation.

In the last decade great strides have been made to take the foreign policy of this Nation completely out of politics. There exists today under our great leader, President Harry S. Truman, a foreign policy bipartisan in its formulation and execution. It is designed to stop politics at the water's edge. The man primarily responsible for this new and so necessary spirit of cooperation between the executive and legislative branches of the Governmont on foreign affairs was the late, lamented President of the United States the Honorable Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

Today in the Senate of the United States this policy is being carried forward faithfully under the leadership of the able and distinguished Republican from Michigan, the Honorable ARTHUR VANDENBERG.

In spite of the praiseworthy efforts of VANDENBERG and other Republican leaders to wean their party away from isolationism, many Republican Senators still cling tenaciously to that repudiated doctrine. My friends, until the Congress of the United States stands solid, united, and firm in our relations with other nations, the enduring peace for which we daily pray will always be threatened.

Ladies and gentlemen of this convention, 18 of the 32 Senate seats which are to be filled next November are now held by Republican incumbents. These 18 men are hopelessly divided on the issue of isolationism. The importance of this issue demands that every American voter study the voting record of these isolationists with meticulous care and prudence.

Only a victory for the Democratic candidates for the Senate can give the American people the assurance they demand, that never again will the ghost of isolationism rise to kill America's determined effort to live in a peaceful world.

I make this plea for a Democratic Senate not in any selfish spirit of partisanship or through devotion to my party. I make it out of the profound conviction that no other course is open if we are to create the conditions which must underlie a durable peace.

One of America's revered patriots, Patrick Henry, once told us: "I have but one lamp by which my feet are guided, and that is the lamp of experience. I know of no way of judging the future but by the past."

Let us cast the bright light of experience on the record of some of these 18 Republican Senators. We shall then see clearly why they must be replaced by members of the Democratic Party.

Mr. Chairman, if there has been one piece of legislation which has stopped the expansion of communism in Europe, it is the European recovery program. It is better known as the Marshall plan. Here was an enterprise which demanded boldness and imagination. It was a program designed to reconstruct and make self-sufficient the western democracies of Europe.

Unless Europe once again is made up of nations friendly to us, capable of defending themselves against economic chaos, Russian communism will surely step forward to fill the vacuum created by the war. This was an issue on which to test the strength of isolationist sentiment in the Senate. This was an issue to determine whether or not there had been any reformation in these isolationists who voted before and since Pearl Harbor against practically every measure designed for the defense and security of this Nation.

Let us examine the record. Let us see how these 18 Republican Senators voted on this issue. The first vote came on a motion by Senator TAFT, of Ohio, to reduce the amount authorized for the plan by $1,300,000,000. Ten of these eighteen supported Senator TAFT in his effort to convert the Marshall plan from a measure which held genuine hope for the successful reconstruction of Europe, to a measure which would merely provide relief to the stricken of Europe, thereby keeping them on the dole.

On the final vote on the Marshall plan, which was one of the most important votes ever recorded in the interest of America, we find nine of these Senators voting against this new cornerstone of our foreign policy, which is now proving itself so effective. These Senators, acting from deep-seated isolationist motives, from which they cannot divorce themselves, were unfortunately joining hands with the American Communists and their fellow travelers who are doing everything within their power to uphold the Kremlin in its desperate effort to destroy the effectiveness of the European recovery program.

On the question of the renewal of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, which is the other half of the Marshall plan, we find the philosophy of most of these same Republican Senators rooted deeply in economic isolationism. If "we shall say what we mean and mean what we say," we should offer the world our hand in international good will. We should adhere rigidly and faithfully to those trade-agreement policies which were enunciated and laid down many years ago by that cool, farsighted, and distinguished statesman of Tennessee, the Honorable Cordell Hull.

The Eightieth Congress, controlled by the Republicans, did its best to kill the act without destroying it completely. They deliberately tried to fool the American people into believing that the reciprocal trade agreements program has been continued for another year. But, my friends, they burdened that program with a complicated, unnecessary, and time-consuming procedure for the negotiation of agreements that will practically spell the death knell for all trade agreements. The program got a 1-year reprieve, with a protective tariff ax hanging over its head.

Fifteen of the eighteen Republican Senators, whose terms expire this year, voted for this destructive measure. They voted against all amendments seeking to renew the reciprocal trade agreements without change.

Let us turn to their record on the vote by which the appointment of David Lilienthal was confirmed as Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission. Much more was involved by that struggle than the merits or demerits of Mr. Lilienthal.

The bomb which dropped on Hiroshima ushered in a new age of mankind. The whole future of the American people is closely tied up with the civilian and military applications of this great new scientific force. They realize that atoms are not Democratic or Republican.

Yet, suddenly, with almost no warning, a storm of Republican opposition broke over the confirmation of the Chairman of the Commission. The whole issue of civilian control of atomic energy was cast into the arena of politics. The whole country became uneasy at this shameful performance. The ranks of the Republican Party were split open by this issue. When the fight was over, Mr. Lilienthal was confirmed. But where did our 18 Republican Senators, whose terms expire this year, take their stand on this issue? Fifteen of them voted against confirmation.

Time prohibits me from discussing the record of these 18 Republican incumbents on domestic issues. Most of these same Republican Senators who challenged with all their might and main the foreign policy of this country also fought Federal aid to education, public housing, and the expansion of social security. Every laboring man in America knows how the Republican-controlled Congress has injured and impaired his cause. The question in this great campaign is whether or not this same laboring man will rise to meet this Republican reactionary challenge. This is the year in which labor must stop the reactionary trend against it, or all may be lost.

Mr. Chairman, the majority of these 18 Republican Senators is bound by hoops of steel to the reactionary and isolationist tradition of the Republican Party. We have recently seen, in this very hall, how powerful the Grundys and Pews remain in the councils of the Republican Party. We have seen how delighted Tom Dewey was to take these dyed-in-the-wool reactionaries into his inner council. The people will not be fooled. These isolationist Senators are confronted with the hard necessity of running on their records. We shall know them by their works.

Ladies and gentlemen of this convention, progress and peace can be achieved only through courage, vision, and imagination. The world is moving faster than we think. There is nothing static in this atomic age. The Senate of the United States is the greatest deliberative legislative body in the world. It is presented with a great challenge. Members of that body, as a result of the role they play in our foreign policy, are the guardians of our future. If we are to achieve peace and abundance for all, there must be unity, vision, and solidarity in our foreign policy. The isolationists must be retired forever from public life. The golden opportunity for the people of this Nation to render high public service in the interest of peace and security lies in making certain that next November these Republican Senators are replaced with Democrats—Democratic Senators who realize that the mantle of world leadership has been placed upon the shoulders of America; Democrats who realize that the destiny of all mankind is in our hands. Yes, only through strong, vigorous, and unselfish leadership in this noble land God has given us can America remain free. Only through this same type of leadership can the world move in the paths of righteousness and peace.

The Poll Tax

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BURNET R. MAYBANK

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, July 29 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD several editorials pertaining to the poll tax and the poll tax differences in the seven States which require the payment of a poll tax. I may say that I shall have the honor of addressing the Senate following the remarks to be made by my distinguished friend, the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART], as I understand. I believe he will talk at some length, so probably I shall not have an opportunity until tomorrow to present my remarks to the Senate, but I wish to have these editorials printed in the RECORD, to be available tomorrow.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THAT POLL-TAX ISSUE

That hardy perennial, the anti-poll-tax bill, is up again before a Senate committee, and South Carolina public officers are among those who will now be given the opportunity to argue against it.

What is proposed in this pending bill is that Congress should enact a law declaring that no poll tax payment should be required as a condition for voting in any election in any State at which Federal officials are to be chosen.

To the average citizen even in States where there is this poll tax payment requirement, this may seem to be a really trivial matter—at least one not worth getting up any high blood pressure over.

But it ought to be recognized that it does involve a basic principle. This payment of tax of about a dollar a year for males has been one of the qualifications for voting in certain States. It is the spirit, if not the specific language of the Constitution that the States themselves should determine the qualifications for voting. And there is no question that this is a principle to which we should strictly adhere.

If the Federal Government undertakes to legislate concerning this particular voting qualification, it could by the same precedent determine all other voting qualifications in the various States. Is that what the American people wish? We don't believe so, and if they don't, they should object most vigorously to this proposal for congressional legislation on poll taxes.

As a matter of practical fact the poll tax requirement for voting is of little consequence. This newspaper itself has favored the elimination of that qualification for voting in South Carolina. The poll tax requirement is no deterrent to voting. It is in no sense a "racial" matter. It applies only to males regardless of race, and not to females of any race. It is only by the most fantastic stretch of the imagination that the move to eliminate it can be called an implementation of civil rights.

Of course, no matter what Congress does, the poll tax which the State levies as a source of revenue for schools is not affected. Male citizens are supposed to pay this tax whether or not they vote.

[From the Washington Sunday Star of February 29, 1948]

DANGEROUS LEGISLATION

Favorable committee action in the Senate on a bill to outlaw the poll tax and in the House on an antilynching bill marks the first step in the process of enacting the substance of the civil rights program advocated by President Truman. It is a dangerous step, and if it should be followed up by final enactment of the program the stage will be set for developments that can be extremely serious.

There is no valid excuse for the passage of these bills, and if they become law there will be ample justification for the inference that the motivation behind enactment was on a low political level.

The poll tax is on its way out in the South. It is effective today only in seven States—Virginia, South Carolina, Alabama, Tennessee, Arkansas, Mississippi, and Texas. Initial steps have been taken to give the people of Virginia opportunity to vote on repeal of the poll tax, and there is strong sentiment against it in Tennessee.

Much the same thing is true of lynching. There were 231 lynchings in 1892. But the total has been going down steadily, with the result that there was one lynching in 1945, six (including the mass murder of four Negroes in Georgia) in 1946, and again only one in 1947. Thus, while other crimes of violence, including murders not classed as lynchings, have been increasing in number, the crime of lynching is approaching the vanishing point.

One objection to these bills is that, in certain aspects at least, they probably are unconstitutional. There are those who are indifferent to this, who think the Constitution can and should be stretched to cover almost any situation. But even these people should hesitate a bit and reflect on the implications of the statement made by Senator MORSE in connection with his lynch bill: "I think we are entering a field of constitutional law that requires giving to the Constitution applications not previously given."

When the Constitution was adopted it was supposed that only limited powers were being conferred on the Federal Government, and that all other powers were reserved to the States. But over the years the Congress by legislation and the courts by a tortured process of interpretation have been steadily enlarging the Federal powers at the expense of the State powers. The so-called civil rights program, if enacted and sustained, would be another big push in this direction.

Aside from the constitutional aspects, however, these bills are dangerous because they would project an unsettling Federal power into a situation which is being well handled, though not perfectly handled, by the States. Even a single lynching is one too many. There is no reason to believe, however, that enactment of a Federal lynch law would end all lynchings, while there is more than a little chance that it would aggravate rather than improve the situation. And this most certainly would be true of the Fair Employment Practice Act if that proposal should become law.

The Southern States are making real progress in the elimination of abuses of civil rights. They have a long way to go, but that does not justify Federal intervention which is of dubious constitutionality and even more dubious wisdom. It will be better if none of these measures is passed.

[From the Washington Post of March 14, 1948]

SOUTH CAROLINA'S MILDEST—POLL TAX DIFFERS IN ALL SEVEN STATES

(By Henry Lesesne)

To what extent does the poll tax disfranchise southerners, white and Negro alike? To what extent is the South itself trying to abolish the poll tax?

Two years ago under Ellis Arnall, Georgia repealed the poll tax. That left seven States retaining the tax in some form or another. In recent years North Carolina, Florida, and Louisiana also have repealed the poll tax.

It was repealed in Tennessee a few years ago, but the Supreme Court declared the act unconstitutional. In South Carolina, Gov. J. Strom Thurmond is asking the legislature to repeal the tax, and one branch of the legislature has already voted to do so.

The poll tax is not alike in any of the seven States retaining it. South Carolina probably has the mildest. It does not apply to the Democratic primary, the real election, but does apply to the general election, in which no one much bothers to vote, anyway. It is $1 a year and noncumulative.

THIRTY-FOUR PERCENT DIFFERENCE

In the 1944 Presidential election 27.9 percent of the potential voters of the 13 Southern States voted, as compared with 61.9 percent of the potential voters in the rest of the country. That the poll tax is one of the causes of this disparity goes without saying.

In States like Mississippi and Alabama—particularly Alabama, where the tax is cumulative up to $36—it is a financial burden, particularly when it is considered that these States are at or near the bottom of the list economically. But mostly the poll tax has its value in the fact that it is just a nuisance.

Largely, it restricts voting to property owners. They make out county tax returns and are billed for the poll tax. Other people rarely think of paying the tax or, if they do think of it, it is too late. It is, of course, a frequent complaint in the South that the poll tax is paid by political machines for their friends.

But the poll tax is probably not the greatest deterrent to mass suffrage in the South. There is often an arbitrary interpretation of complicated registration laws. In Alabama, for instance, a person registering must interpret the Constitution to the satisfaction of registrars, all white men.

VIRGINIA "CEILING"

In Arkansas the poll tax is $1 a year and noncumulative. In Mississippi there is a $2 annual poll tax which must be paid for the 2 years preceding the year in which the election is held. In Mississippi, persons desiring to register must also interpret the Constitution.

The Virginia poll tax is $1.50 a year and is cumulative for 3 years; the maximum tax with penalties is $5.01. It must be paid 6 months before the general election, before the people get interested in the primary. In Texas the poll tax is payable only from October to February.

It is interesting to note that Indians are exempt from the Texas poll tax. In Alabama all war veterans are exempt.

South Carolina has a peculiar deterrent to voting aside from the poll tax, a relatively negligible factor. It is the only State without even the semblance of a secret ballot in the general election. Secrecy in voting is not only impossible, but, under the laws, a split ballot is impossible.

ADVICE TO REFORMERS OF THE SOUTH

Ever since the hauling into this country of slaves from Africa was outlawed and the revenue of the New England shippers was cut down thereby, these same New Englanders and cooperators, on down through Thaddeus Stevens to President Truman, have been trying to ram one reform or reconstruction down the throat of the South.

But it so happened that the South did not take kindly to being drenched with ideas and plans originating from foreign sources. It proved not to be a child whose nose could be held while the castor oil was poured down its throat. The South would not stand tied just because one reformer or another wanted us to do as they thought we ought to do or think as they wanted us to think.

No doubt some of the plans that these do-gooders have for the South have some merit. No doubt some of them might be looked upon kindly by Southern States if presented to them in the right way without stepping on the toes of their rights, insulting their intelligence, or trying to use the force of Federal law. The history of these would-be reformers, however well-meaning, has been charged and supercharged with ineptitude. They go at everything the wrong way.

For some of the so-called reforms that have been planned for the South there is probably no right way. In some matters the South probably will never change; certainly not in the forseeable future. If it changes at all it will be only after a long, long time.

Not even a southerner familiar with his own people and well versed in the ways of motivation could say just how each and every worth-while change in the South might be accomplished. For the very idea that either outsider or insider is trying to force something on a southerner automatically sets up a reaction and a sales resistance that makes Gibraltar look like a pin cushion.

As a matter of fact, the one outstanding, fundamental, and obvious fact is that the first and last rule for getting along with the South is not to try force. She cannot be brow-beaten, bullied, or ridiculed into any changes in the law of its States, or practices of its people by outsiders. Any movements for changes must come from within, when there is no agitation therefor from without.

The North tried during reconstruction times to keep the South down. And as soon as it was physically possible the Southern States threw off the yoke and asserted themselves, despite the presence of armed troops and the laws forbidding the southerners to bear arms.

This ignoble experiment created a breach between North and South which inept reformers persist in keeping open. If they would mind their own business and let the South shuck its own nubbins there might be a chance that the South would eventually voluntarily do more of the things that others would like to see us do. But not under pressure from above the Mason and Dixon's line. Every salting of the old sore sets the reformers back and hardens the South's defenses against these plans. But the reformers never learn. They go at it again.

Nomination of Hon. Edwin C. Johnson, of Colorado

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EDWIN C. JOHNSON

OF COLORADO

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, July 29 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, on July 24, 1948, at the Democratic assembly in Denver, Robert S. Bee intended to second my nomination. The convention limited the number of nominating speeches to three, and Mr. Bee was denied the privilege he sought. I am especially proud of the speech he had prepared, and ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. President, I am very anxious to be of service to the veterans who carry on their bodies the scars of war, and I wish to be counted among those who would defend America against all our enemies. We must have a powerful air force, as Robert Bee points out.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

As a disabled veteran who saw combat service during the First World War and on behalf of the many, many veterans who have publicly declared EDWIN C. JOHNSON as their friend and confidant, I take extreme pleasure in seconding his nomination as United States Senator from the great State of Colorado.

It has been my great pleasure to have worked with Senator JOHNSON for the past 25 years and I have always found him most cooperative.

My interests have been in the welfare of the disabled veteran and aviation. In these two movements Senator JOHNSON has been of great help to all concerned. He has consistently introduced and backed legislation that would increase our air force so that it would be second to none in the world. He feels today that there should be a trained reservoir of flyers, ground crew, maintenance men, and so forth of at least 100,000. If this idea was put into legislation this country would be, indeed, the best equipped along air strength in the world.

In the field of veterans legislation ED JOHNSON has endeared himself to veterans not only in Colorado but in the entire Nation. By association with veterans from other States I know that they look up to ED JOHNSON as their guardian angel and know that they have a friend who will represent them to the fullest of his ability.

The disabled veterans, their widows and orphans especially are behind Senator JOHNSON because down through the years ED JOHNSON has been their champion. Recent legislation pertaining to increased compensation to widows and orphans and increased payments to disabled veterans with dependents is a sample of what ED JOHNSON has been doing for the veterans who were disabled in line of duty in time of war. Senator JOHNSON is and will continue to champion the cause of the disabled veteran and his widow and orphan—the veterans need and request that Senator JOHNSON be returned to the Senate. One of the happiest announcements to the veterans and those who are interested in the welfare of their country was when Senator JOHNSON announced his candidacy for another term of office. This decision was made in response to public demand which came from all walks of life and from many sections of the Nation. To even think of replacing Senator JOHNSON at this critical time is not in the best interests of our Nation.

In seconding the nomination of Senator JOHNSON, I respectfully request that the El Paso county delegation cast its vote with that of the entire State for the nomination of ED C. JOHNSON.

A Call of Statesmanship in the Political Welter

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RICHARD B. RUSSELL

OF GEORGIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, July 29 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an editorial from the Atlanta Journal of July 22 commending statements made by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN].

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A CALL OF STATESMANSHIP IN THE POLITICAL WELTER

Out of the welter of politics emerges a voice of statesmanship. That was the venerable Senator GREEN, of Rhode Island, a Democrat, saying how glad he would be to give glory to the Republicans, if, in the coming special session of Congress, they do the things desperately needing to be done.

He was thinking, of course, of the whirlwind of inflation now taking on new force. The price of food rises sensationally. More significant is the push upward given steel. We have the announcement of more wages in this industry, to be followed by higher prices, to produce yet more claim to yet more wages, and so on to calamity.

In only one place in all the world is there justified joy at the spectacle of our political confusion and economic folly. That one place is the Kremlin whence comes the pressure to drive us from Berlin. This is all according to theory for the Stalinites. Helpless in the grip of capitalistic circumstances, we are doomed to slip over the depression precipice. Our bubble burst, our gates will be down. The Communists can march in.

Our chance to prevent an economic collapse here by which the whole world could be wrecked, lies with the Congress soon to assemble in Washington.

Did President Truman call this session just to play politics? However that be, the session gives Congress and the country a saving opportunity. It gives Congress a chance to pull America back from the brink of depression and so to confound its enemies by an exhibition of patriotic competence. The special session puts the Republican Congress, it is being said, on the spot. In fact it puts the members of all parties on the spot. It puts the candidates for President of both parties on the spot. These two are jointly responsible in this emergency. Does Truman play politics? Then let Dewey, eschewing politics, lead the Congress of his party in successful attack on the peril confronting us, and all decent Democrats, along with Senator GREEN, will call him blessed.

Fifteen years ago a descending spiral, an unending deflation, was dragging the Nation down to doom. A Republican President stood by helpless, doing nothing to check the fall. A Democratic President with fearless force found ways to stop that slide and start an upward course. Today the spiral is upward, assuring, if not soon checked, a collapse to plunge us down again. Would Republican Dewey like to stand forth now among the saviors of his country? Here is his chance to prove beyond argument his fitness to be President.

Address by Hon. Francis J. Myers, of Pennsylvania, at Democratic National Convention

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. FRANCIS J. MYERS
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, July 29 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an address entitled "Both Ends Against the Middle," delivered by me at the opening session of the Democratic National Convention, Philadelphia Convention Hall, on July 12, 1948.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BOTH ENDS AGAINST THE MIDDLE

We're proud and happy to have you here in Philadelphia. But, of course, you know that already.

It isn't enough, though, that we are happy to have you here. Our purpose is to see to it that you are happy about being here.

We have history on our side in that ambition, because you are going to be nominating the man who will take the oath of office as President of the United States in Washington next January.

And that knowledge should make you very happy.

You are going to be setting the stage for another 4 years of intelligent American administration, of decent American administration, of Democratic American administration.

And that should certainly make you happy.

Furthermore, you are going to prepare the way for the election in November once again of a liberal, alert, progressive Democratic Eighty-first Congress and that will make everybody in America happy indeed.

Everybody, that is, except the "gimme" boys, the "grab" boys, the "me first" boys, the American patriots, junior grade, who set out 2 years ago to stuff America into their own pockets.

Now those fellows aren't going to be happy about what you do here. They won't like it a bit. In fact, they'll be very sad about it.

You see, things have been so nice and cozy for them these past 2 years while the Republicans were running things in Congress—while the Republicans were running roughshod over the hopes and aspirations of the American people—that these special favorites of the special-favor gang just don't like at all the prospect of a Democratic Congress back in business once again under a Democratic administration.

And they're going to spend plenty and plenty of the Republican inflation profits in this campaign to try to prevent what they fear the most.

But we'll be there, we'll be back in that Eighty-first Congress in full strength, in control once again of America's destiny. We'll be back at the old stand, back at the Roosevelt-New Deal stand under Harry S. Truman.

Now that we know where we're going, let's take a look for a moment at what's ahead of us.

We face one of the bitterest political struggles in American history. And I mean bitter.

The stakes in this fight are the future, not only of America, but of the world.

And we're fighting a two-front war all over again, the same sort of fight we had in 1940.

We're fighting two extremes—the reactionary dominantly isolationist Republican right—and the left—the totalitarian Communist left, which preaches isolationism for every nation but Soviet Russia.

Just like in 1940. Exactly like in 1940.

You remember that fight. Franklin Roosevelt was our nominee. Franklin Roosevelt believed America could stay free only in a world in which freedom could exist. Freedom, he knew, could not exist for long in a world dominated by totalitarian aggressors.

He knew it; we knew it; the people knew it.

But the Republican right didn't know it and didn't believe it when the people tried to tell them so.

The Communist left knew it all right, but its mission was to talk the people out of it.

Not for the people's good, of course; not for America's good; not for the world's good; but for Soviet Russia's good.

Those were the days, you remember, when the Soviets and the Nazis were playing partners.

And so the Communists of the far left, who were playing Russia's game in America, and the reactionary dominantly isolationist Republicans of the far right, who were playing for power in America, also played partners and together played the isolationist game.

It was both ends against the middle.

But Franklin Roosevelt, and the Democratic Party, and the people of America, stood together against both extremes and placed their faith in the party of decency and justice and collective action against aggression.

Now I do not say, and I do not insinuate, that every Republican in the Congress is isolationist—that would be ridiculous and untrue. Nor do I imply that everyone in the camp of the left is a Communist.

But I do say, emphatically, that the dominant leadership of the Republican Party is still isolationist and was effectively isolationist in the Eightieth Congress and that the dominant leadership of the Wallace gang, whether Henry realizes it or not, is Communist.

So it's once again extremism of the left and the right—both ends against the middle, both extremes fighting as informal but tacit allies against reason and intelligence and decency in America; against safety and security for America.

Each of these extremist groups—the right which fought Roosevelt and the left which fought Roosevelt—are fighting Truman and the Democratic Party today because each hopes to see the Democratic Party lose, so that the progress we have made in 14 years, under a Democratic administration and a Democratic Congress, in building a better America, can be reversed; so that the valiant efforts of the President and the handful of Democrats in the Eightieth Congress to stop the march to reaction can be made futile; so that America can be plunged into chaos.

That is their common goal. Each hopes to pick up the pieces of America, to capture and control what's left.

The leftists know, as the people know, that a Republican victory in November means not just a walk, but a rush back to reaction. They know that reaction in America means an acceleration of the boom-bust cycle; a speed-up to sudden deflation and depression and misery and despair.

And that's their dish. That's where the Commies start picking up the pieces of America. Kill off liberalism in America, as it was killed off in so many countries abroad, and they set the stage for a tragic dilemma for the people, for a fatal choice of alternatives, for a choice between dictatorship of the right and dictatorship of the left.

I'll give the Republicans credit that they don't want any such disaster for America. Of course, they don't. But they do want power, and they want it badly. In the twenties and early thirties they had that power, and they used it badly, so badly as to ruin the Wilson hopes and the American hopes and the world's hopes for world peace, so badly as to ruin the American economy and render us bankrupt.

If the Republican Party had ever recanted those errors and redeemed its tragic blindness the prospect of Republican victory would not be so frightening for the peace of the world and the security of America.

My friends, a few weeks ago, in this same hall, the Republican Party met and picked its standard bearer for 1948. The Republican Party is repeating history. It is putting up the same fellow we licked the last time.

And we'll lick him again, with a different standard bearer of our own this time, but with the same weapon, the weapon of truth and decency in American political and economic democracy.

We will see to it that in addition to repeating history by picking their best loser that the Republicans do not repeat history by giving America another dizzy decade like the crazy twenties, another tragic 3 years such as the early thirties.

Their standard bearer is a young shining knight of old, of old King Joe the tariff maker. Grundy named him. Grundy usually collects his debts.

But old Joe the tariff man won't collect this debt. And old Joe in Moscow won't collect, either. He had his best chance in America in 1932, when misery, poverty, and despair stalked America, cultivating the breeding grounds for communism.

Old Joe in Moscow lost that chance, his last chance in America, I hope, because the Democratic Party put the faith back in the American people, faith in the strength and the power of America, faith in the free-enterprise system of America.

And old King Joe the tariff man lost out that year, too. We got rid of the high-tariff wall he built around America; we tore it down. We set up shop for reciprocal trade, and King Joe the tariff man, who owns the first mortgage on the Republican candidate for President, on his shining knight, isn't going to build that wall again.

We'll build walls all right, but not the peace-wrecking walls, the high-tariff walls of Joe Grundy.

We'll build walls of brick and stone and concrete and lumber for houses, for homes, for our veterans.

We'll build walls against aggression.

We'll build walls against inflation; walls against depression.

Yes, my friends, in this bitter campaign ahead, this campaign of both ends against the middle, we will carry America forward to a Democratic victory, for the middle ground—our ground—is the common ground of the American people.

So rally around, you Democrats of America; rally around this old party of ours. Rally around and protect for the American people the sacred heritages of decency and justice and tolerance and understanding left to us as a people by Jefferson and Jackson and Wilson and Franklin D. Roosevelt; a heritage which our man in the White House, Harry Truman, has defended with the true courage which comes from faith in the right.

Propaganda Feeds on Feuds in United States

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLYDE R. HOEY
OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, July 29 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. HOEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a very interesting discussion by Drew Pearson, in his Merry-Go-Round, on the subject, Propaganda Feeds on Feuds in United States.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DREW PEARSON'S MERRY-GO-ROUND—PROPAGANDA FEEDS ON FEUDS IN UNITED STATES

WASHINGTON.—A lot of my southern friends have been telling me I should be awfully careful how I discuss the current political rebellion below the Mason and Dixon's line. Undoubtedly they are right.

But, since so many people are already sore because of my nose-poking into all sorts of things, from the high cost of ambassadorships to Secretary of the Treasury Snyder's bibulousness at the President's birthday dinner, I suppose it won't hurt to get a few more people sore. So here goes.

One thing I can't help thinking about the civil-rights row is that the boy who is getting most satisfaction out of it all is Joe Stalin. He and his pals in the Kremlin must be licking their chops—and pumping stuff out over the Moscow radio every day about how Americans are feuding and name-calling over civil rights.

I also can't help thinking that a time when we are very much on the spot in Berlin is a time when we ought to be preserving a reasonably united front back home.

WHAT THE RUSSIANS FORGET

The Russians, of course, don't know—or care—that all things are relative and that we've made a lot of progress in this country. It was only as recently as the 1919–20 postwar period that a horrible massacre of Negroes occurred in East St. Louis, while disgraceful race riots took place even in the Nation's Capital. The present postwar period has been largely free from such violence.

And on the same night Birmingham was staging its rebellion, Satchell Paige, Negro pitcher for the Cleveland Indians, pitched against the Washington Senators in the Nation's Capital and a white batter who tried to unnerve him was booed.

I remember also the great furor created when Oscar De Priest, Republican Negro Congressman, was invited to a White House tea in the Hoover Administration. The Republicans were supposed to be the champion of the Negro, but so many of them protested and Mr. Hoover got so worried, that Congressman De Priest discreetly stayed away.

In recent Democratic administrations, two Negroes have served consistently in Congress, both Democrats; and Representative DAWSON, of Chicago, has informed me that his colleagues from the South have treated him with respect and courtesy. There has been no protest when Negro Congressmen were invited to recent White House receptions.

And today in Georgia, a Negro is running for the United States Senate against Senator DICK RUSSELL and is free to campaign where he pleases throughout the State.

These are things the Soviet propagandists will not mention.

THE SOUTH'S REAL LEADERS

They also will not mention—and a lot of people have forgotten—that Gov. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, the man now leading the Dixiecrat revolt, is the same Governor Thurmond who got a lot of his own southern white friends boiling mad when he insisted on trying some taxi-drivers for lynching a Negro near Greenville, S. C.

Local sentiment was violently against Governor Thurmond, but he insisted that the men charged with lynching be prosecuted—which they were.

There are a lot of southerners honestly working for fair play in the South. Only they don't like to have reforms rammed down their throats by outsiders. Ellis Arnall, when governor of Georgia, had no trouble getting Georgia to abolish the poll tax. Most Georgians took pride in this, though currently a lot of them have their backs up and if the poll-tax issue came along today they would vote the other way.

What northerners don't always realize is that the Talmadges, the Rankins, and the Bilbos aren't really typical of the South, and that there are a lot of fine southerners who don't at all share their views.

Anyway, it seems to me we should all work a little harder on both sides of the Mason and Dixon's line at understanding each other.

WIPING OUT THE MASON AND DIXON'S LINE

The other day I met a man who has been doing his part at better understanding between the North and the South—a gentleman named Champ Pickens, of Montgomery, Ala., who has organized the Blue and Gray Association. He is trying to get folks who followed the Confederate gray during the Civil War, and those who followed the Federal blue to get together at least once a year at a football game between the all-star team of the North and the all-star team of the South. He stages the game at Montgomery, cradle of the Confederacy, and as many northern folks as possible are invited down to see the game.

Perhaps it might be a good idea for us to stage a lot of things like this—and to think a little bit more about our own internal problems. We have been giving a lot of thought to friendship abroad—which cannot be neglected—but we must also work at friendship at home—which is equally important.

For instance, most people don't realize that there is no one Memorial Day to commemorate the veterans who wore the blue and the gray. Memorial days are sprinkled all over the calendar. While the North sets aside May 30, North and South Carolina set aside May 10, Louisiana, Tennessee, and Kentucky June 3, while Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, and Alabama commemorate April 26.

Also, it might be a fine idea for the Rotary clubs, the Kiwanis, and Lions clubs, and the Junior Chambers of Commerce which all do such a good job of promoting worth-while community enterprises, to take up the problem of better understanding between the North and the South. If some of the southern clubs invited northern clubs down to their cities, and vice versa, a lot of solid friendship might result.

It may seem foolish to say that we need more understanding right here in our own country, but the fact is that we do.

It's not a matter of Democrats or Republicans, but rather of sympathy on both sides and presenting a united front at home at a time when the whole world—especially the Russians—is watching us intently.

High Prices

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN W. BYRNES
OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the President has called us back into a special session. In his message to the joint session of Congress last Tuesday, he asked Congress to enact legislation dealing with inflation. The program he recommends is similar to the program which he presented to the Congress when we met in special session last November.

The basic facts relative to this problem of high prices are no different today than they were then. The President was unwilling to face up to the facts at that time. He is unwilling to face up to the facts today.

There is no easy road to lower prices. It cannot be accomplished by legislation alone. It cannot be accomplished by passing a law saying that prices shall go no higher. We can solve the problem of high prices only by attacking the causes of high prices.

Following the President's message of November 17, 1947, I discussed the question of high prices on two successive radio broadcasts over stations in my congressional district. I repeat today what I said then. The following is the text of my broadcasts of November 24 and December 1, 1947:

THE CAUSES OF HIGH PRICES

(Broadcast of November 24, 1947)

Today I'd like to talk over with you the very serious, very important, and very baffling problem of high prices. Along with its companion problem—aid to western Europe—this is the major issue of the day in Washington as it is indeed all over the Nation.

The problem of high prices is a very real one. The housewife comes face to face with it daily in trying to make both ends of the family budget meet; the workingman feels it when he pays his monthly household bills; the farmer faces increased costs in things he must buy in order to produce; the merchant, the businessman, and the manufacturer, all are concerned with the same problem in replacing their stocks of goods. In truth, very few of us, if any, escape the impact of the rising cost of goods and services in the country today.

Thus we are concerned with a very concrete problem. "Inflation" is the term economists use to describe it. It is here, and none of us like it. What can we do about it? What is the answer?

There have been many cures suggested. President Truman, in his message to the opening session of Congress a few days ago, suggested a 10-point program which he claims will cure inflation. Among the things he suggested were a return to controls over prices and the rationing of scarce goods. This portion of his program has been vigorously attacked by Republican leaders. But before going into these suggested cures, let's take a look at the basic causes for inflation. It only seems logical that a doctor should first determine what's wrong with the patient before he begins his operation. Let's see if we can discover what has caused our fever of high prices.

First, let's look back a little into history. When have we experienced similar periods of high prices? Only three times before have prices been as high as they are at present, once in 1814, again in 1866, and again in 1919. The first period followed the War of 1812; the second, the Civil War; and the third, the First World War. Thus it would appear that inflationary periods are closely related to, and generally follow, periods of war. Further than this, history tells us that inflation is not fickle. It appears in every country that engages in armed conflict. It is world-wide today. There is no country in the world today not faced with grave inflationary pressures.

What happens during wars which invariably leads to high prices when those wars have been concluded? Let's take a look at what happened in our own country during the war period. Wars, of course, are great wasters, not only of human life, but of our natural resources. Most of the tremendous amount of goods that we produce during wartime are good for only one thing—to wage war. They are not adapted to use in everyday life. In addition to this, in a modern war we require unbelievable quantities of these goods which, once the war is over, are of little value to us in supplying our needs for living. During the last war, for example, we produced huge quantities of guns, shells, military planes, tanks, fighting ships, and other armaments—all vitally necessary in the prosecution of the war—but which we later either shot up, used up, or sold for junk. An important question to ask at this point is: How did we finance the tremendous cost of these war weapons?

Part of it was paid for by high taxes. That we know. Sharp rises in taxes always must accompany extraordinary spending on the part of the Government.

Another great share of our huge bill was paid for by Government borrowing. We all bought war bonds. Actually, many people found there was little else they could do with their money during this period. Production for war had reduced almost to a vanishing point the goods that we ordinarily buy to increase our standards of living, like washing machines, refrigerators, automobiles, and a thousand and one other items that our Nation normally produces.

Now, thus far, we had created no serious inflationary threats. Individually, we could not spend the money taken from us by taxes; and bond buying when it was financed through individual savings and incomes, was not inflationary.

But, even all of this money wasn't enough to pay for the cost of the war. The Government also borrowed about $75,000,000,000 from commercial banks. Now, the effect of this was actually to create new money. When the Government sold its bonds to a bank, the bank, instead of paying money for them, gave the Government credit to its account. The bank's deposits were increased by the same amount. The Government then spent the credit for war goods. It were as though new money had actually been created. This was inflation, pure and simple.

The immediate effect of this process is that three times as much buying power exists today as existed before the war. This increase in buying power is reflected in the incomes of almost everyone. The people collectively are now receiving money from one source or another at the rate of $210,000,000,000 a year; in 1939, before the war, they received only $71,000,000,000.

This increase in buying power, brought on by our creation of new money to pay for the war—is one very important aspect of inflation. It has created an ability to pay for goods. At the same time, and for the same reasons, there arose a new factor, a real need for goods. During the war, we deprived ourselves of things we needed, like washing machines and automobiles. In fact, while we were producing for the waste of war, we were unable at the same time to produce these useful and necessary commodities, and so, when the war ended, there was a great need for these necessary goods. This need, coupled with the increased buying power, created a tremendous demand. There, then, we have the first factor in the root cause of inflation, because we know that when 100 people need and are able to pay for an item of which only one is available, the price of that item will skyrocket. Economists say that supply has not kept pace with demand.

What about this other factor in inflation—the factor of supply? Well, after changing over from war production to peacetime production, our economy has increased production of civilian goods tremendously. But the plain and sad fact is that this still isn't enough. We are eating up this production at the rate of $159,000,000,000 a year compared with $67,000,000,000 in 1939. Our population has increased; we are individually eating more food and using more of consumer goods. On top of this tremendously increased domestic demand, we are sending abroad over $10,000,000,000 worth of goods annually in excess of the goods we receive from abroad.

These, then, seem to be the causes we are looking for. First, the creation of three times our prewar purchasing power; second, the building up of a need for commodities during the war when consumer goods weren't being produced; third, a huge foreign demand for our goods; and fourth, production which can't keep up with the tremendous demand created by the above factors.

Having looked at the causes, I think we are better equipped to try to find the proper cure.

Next week, I'd like to discuss with you my ideas on how we should go about curing the disease of inflation.

THE CURES

(Broadcast of December 1, 1947)

We're talking to you again today from your Washington office in the House Office Building after a Thanksgiving holiday which we hope that you enjoyed as much as we did. It is good, in these days of confusion and trouble throughout the world, to pause for a short time during our harvest season and give thanks for the many blessings that are ours as citizens of this great country. When we contrast our lot with the rest of the people on this globe, we can be truly thankful that we are so richly blessed with a fruitful land, a sound government, and an industrious and freedom-loving people.

Today, in the democratic way, we are attempting to solve one of our most complex problems in recent years—the problem of high prices. We are doing this by free discussion and open debate—in the American way. I'd like to encourage you to enter into this debate, and that is one of the purposes of this visit together. I'd like to know how you feel, too.

I began this discussion of high prices last week. We looked into causes primarily, because we knew that in order to determine the cure, we first had to find out what was causing the disease. We looked carefully for those causes, and we decided that our inflationary high prices were due basically to four things: (1) a threefold increase in our national purchasing power during the past 8 years; (2) a great need for consumer goods which were not produced during the war; (3) large shipments of goods to war-torn nations abroad competing with domestic demand, and (4) production which has not been able to keep pace with the tremendous demand. Keeping in mind these basic causes of inflation, let us look into ways and means of meeting this growing threat to our economic stability.

At the outset, I'd like to expose two sets of fallacies concerning high prices.

The first is that there is some "royal road" to a low-price level. As a matter of fact, there is no single method that is going to bring prices down to prewar levels at once, leaving us at the same time a tremendously increased national income. That cure is simply not in the books. We should recognize from the start that our price level is high, that our income level is high, and that they will both remain at much higher levels than in prewar days unless we have an extreme reversal of the present situation—in other words, a large supply of goods that people are unable to buy because of low wages and unemployment. That would make the cure worse than the disease. What we are looking for is an end to the upward spiraling of prices and then, a slow steady down-turn, leveling off at prices high enough to secure prosperity but low enough to insure a high standard of living for all.

The second fallacy is that action by the Federal Government is the only action needed to stop the upward spiral of prices. If we adopt this attitude, we might as well sit back and watch prices burst through the roof, because the plain fact is that it is going to take concerted action by all of us, individually and in our capacity as consumers and producers of the wealth of our Nation, to curb inflation.

Now, then, if our analysis of the causes of inflation is correct, surely our attack upon inflation must aim toward the eventual removal of these causes. We must, therefore,

(1) reduce the amount of inflationary money in circulation, (2) lessen the domestic demand for consumer goods, (3) bring our exports to and our imports from foreign nations into better balance, and (4) increase production to shorten the gap between supply and demand. Any program that we evolve must be considered in the light of how well it aids or hinders the accomplishment of these objectives.

For example, let us take two of the items in the President's 10-point anti-inflation program—price controls and rationing of selected commodities in short supply.

The Milwaukee Journal, in a recent editorial, summed up some of the reasons why those controls just would not work. The paper said:

"During the war, when patriotic fervor was high, selective rationing and general price controls did not operate too effectively. There was counterfeiting of rationing coupons and there was black markets—and these things were preceded and accompanied by hoarding. A new system, created in peacetime and partial rather than complete, would work even less smoothly and less effectively.

"How could we, for example (the editorial asks) ration flour under price controls and with wage controls for workers in flour mills, when many other items and the workers producing them were completely free? We might end with the flour mills closed down for lack of employees and with what flour there was selling on the black market."

Beyond their unworkability, however, there is a far greater objection to these measures. Price control attacks none of the basic causes of inflation. Price control is, in effect, an attempt to curb prices by laying down a law that prices shall go no higher. We can go too far in passing laws; eventually we arrive at a point where law enforcement becomes impossible because the forces encouraging disregard for it become too strong. King Canute, in old England, once stood on the beach and commanded the sea to roll back. When the tide came in and lapped around his royal robes, he demonstrated to his fawning court that there was a limit to earthly authority. The days of OPA likewise demonstrated the inflationary pressures pushing at our price structure were too great for the Government to command prices to roll back. As the Journal pointed out, we had black markets and counterfeiting of coupons by persons who had no qualms about breaking an unenforceable law. But even worse than this, we had a great lowering of production of the necessities of life because many of our producers refused to break the law and, at the same time, refused to produce at a loss. They either produced something less rigidly controlled or else stopped producing entirely. Thus, price controls and rationing, we found out to our sorrow, add fuel to the inflationary fire because they prevent one of the things which will stop inflation—greatly increased production of the things we need to bring supply within reach of demand.

So far I've adopted the negative approach in this discussion. I've told you about one of the things I think we should not do to curb inflation. Let's discuss now a positive approach. What are the steps in this program? Remember that we are seeking to remove the causes of inflation, and that we have decided that there are four things we must do; reduce the amount of inflationary money in circulation, ease the domestic demand for consumer goods, bring our exports and imports into better balance, and increase production. Remember, too, that it is going to take concerted action on the part of all of us, as consumers and producers, as well as action by our Government to accomplish these things. Remember, finally, that curing inflation without bringing about an economic collapse into a depression is a long, uphill fight and that it will not be easy. With those admonishments, let's consider the important aspects of an antiinflationary program.

First. To reduce the amount of inflationary money in circulation. This is a most important field for Government action. The Government must reduce expenditures, which themselves are inflationary because they are not productive. Government must operate with a surplus. This surplus must be used to pay off the debt held by the banks, because, as we pointed out, this $70,000,000,000 portion of our debt is inflation, pure and simple. Remember, it has been estimated that every dollar of bank-held debt supplies six extra dollars of inflationary credit. While using its surplus to attack this portion of the debt, savings bond sales to individuals should be pushed, and the proceeds likewise used to reduce the bank-held debt.

Management should refrain from short-term credits which increase check money volume, and banks should refrain from lending money for purely speculative purposes. All of us should save wherever possible and purchase savings bonds. They will not only be worth more if we can eventually bring our prices to a lower level, but their purchase greatly assists the Government in attacking inflation now.

Second. To alleviate the impact of the huge domestic demand. The Government should continue to regulate installment buying and other consumer credit. It should discourage bank loans except for productive purposes by increasing reserve requirements for banks. It should move to halt speculation on the commodity exchanges—a practice which adds to domestic demand. All of us—as consumers of goods which are scarce—should put off purchases of anything that we do not absolutely have to have. As the President said, a dollar saved for future use is one less dollar added to the inflationary stream. We must conserve food especially. With bad weather threatening our crops, it is vitally necessary that we save large quantities of food.

Third. To bring our exports and imports into balance. We are currently sending $10,000,000,000 more goods abroad than we are importing. This gap must be shortened. Here we run into what seems to be an almost insoluble dilemma. In order to keep Europe from falling into communism we must send huge quantities of food and goods abroad. We do this in the hope of preventing another world war. We must recognize that this is inflationary, but we must also recognize that we are trying to get the world on its feet and producing for itself so that the foreign trade gap may be shortened by less goods going abroad and by more coming into this country. We can accomplish this only if we get Europe through its present crisis. Intelligent foreign aid, in the long run, will help fight inflation at home. But efficiency, thrift, and common sense must govern our foreign-aid program. From most estimates here in Washington, it doesn't look like a sound foreign-aid program will increase the amount of goods we are currently sending abroad. In addition, the Government should exercise its power to control exports. Only those goods should be sent abroad during this inflationary period that are absolutely necessary to meet our foreign commitments.

Fourth, and finally, to increase production. This is perhaps the most important step in curbing inflation. We must all take part. The Government must provide an atmosphere in which increased production is possible and this cannot include restrictive price control measures. It must encourage investment in productive enterprises; our tax structure must be such that it encourages venture capital seeking new and better ways of producing goods; our farm program must be geared to a program of plenty rather than a program of scarcity.

All of us are going to have to work harder. Labor, working hand in hand with management, must increase its output per man-hour. Management has a special responsibility. It must increase efficiency, seek better ways of producing, and engage in industrial research. It must hold the line on prices, cutting them wherever possible, and its savings in increased production should be passed on to its labor and to the consumer.

Those, then, are salient features of an anti-inflation program. They are not dramatic; they will not end inflation overnight; they represent hard work, thrift, and cooperation on the part of all. Whether we lick high prices or not will depend upon our willingness to accept these measures willingly and wholeheartedly in the spirit of enlightened self-interest. Too much is at stake to permit us to fail.

Count of Electoral Votes

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY CABOT LODGE, JR.

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, July 28, 1948

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in view of the keen interest shown by many individuals and organizations, and of the published report of the intention of certain persons to try to throw the next Presidential election into the House of Representatives, I believe it especially timely once again to call attention to Senate Joint Resolution 200, providing for a constitutional amendment under which electoral votes for President and Vice-President would be counted in proportion to the popular vote. I ask, therefore, unanimous consent there be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an editorial from the Worcester Telegram dated June 21 which deals with this matter, and a statement which I have prepared and revised which concisely gives the arguments for Senate Joint Resolution 200, and which I plan to distribute in pamphlet form. This statement also includes such arguments as may have been made in the past against this proposal and the answers thereto.

In addition to my statement, I ask that a copy of the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD, together with a letter from the Brookings Institution and sample newspaper discussion of this question.

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Worcester (Mass.) Telegram of July 21, 1948]

"ELECTORAL DEFECTS"

Senator LODGE'S proposed constitutional amendment for electoral reform is getting new notice now on account of the bolt by the southern Democrats, and well it may. This doesn't mean that people are expecting that the Thurmond-Wright ticket will pull enough electoral votes to upset the apple-cart, but even the remote possibility of an electoral deadlock is enough to furnish a good argument for those who want a change.

Theoretically our Presidential electors use their independent judgment in balloting for President and Vice President. The framers of the Constitution intended that they should make their own decision. Actually, the electors do nothing of the sort. They act as rubber stamps, as mere agents of the political parties to which they belong. When form and substance are so far apart, trouble is bound to come some day.

Further, although there have been only a few times when electoral vote and popular vote conflicted, we have to thank chance rather than wise planning for that. Of course nobody can devise a perfect system of electing our Presidents and Vice Presidents, with ironclad safeguards against delays, deadlocks, vacancies, and dangerous disputes, and with full protection against the peril of splinter parties. The present setup can, however, be greatly improved.

STATEMENT OF HON. HENRY CABOT LODGE, JR., OF MASSACHUSETTS

In this pamphlet you will find all the essential arguments on a matter so vital that it actually underlies your whole system of government. It is Senate Joint Resolution 200, which provides for a constitutional amendment so that the electoral vote for President and Vice President will be counted in proportion to the popular vote. After many years of study, this proposition, embodied in House Joint Resolution 9, has received a unanimously favorable report from the House Judiciary Committee and favorable action by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

In this Presidential election year, its significance will be even more vividly clear than usual. At this moment we read reports of those who are scheming to throw the election into the House of Representatives, with all the tumult and unrest which this would cause. Probably they will not succeed, but the mere possibility is disturbing.

Every citizen has the chance to express his or her approval of this vital reform. You have it in your power to make our Presidential electoral system thoroughly honest and thoroughly democratic.

EXAMPLES

Some ask what would have happened in past campaigns had the proposed amendment been in effect. Any answer to this question is purely speculative. Under the proposed amendment, candidates and issues might have been, and in some cases certainly would have been, very different. For example, some contend, with great logic, that had the proposed amendment been in effect in 1944, Governor Dewey would have received at least 1,000,000 more popular votes in the so-called solid South. Assuming, however, that the popular vote in 1944 would have been identical under the proposed amendment, the following table illustrates how the vote would have been divided and counted:

States	Popular vote		Electoral vote		Electoral vote under proposed plan
	Roosevelt (Democrat)	Dewey (Republican)	Roosevelt (Democrat)	Dewey (Republican)	Roosevelt (Democrat)	Dewey (Republican)

Total	25,602,505	22,006,278	432	99	300.726	223.529

To a fourth objection that under S. J. Res. 200 the present requirement of a majority vote (instead of a plurality) in the electoral college is abolished, let it be said that the present system goes hand-in-hand with the unit rule whereby all the electoral votes in a State go to the candidate receiving a plurality of the popular vote in that State. In terms of popular vote, therefore, the present provision is a plurality rather than a majority provision. If a majority requirement were included in Senate Joint Resolution 200, it would undoubtedly in many cases be necessary to take one of two steps: (1) a run-off election, which would be fraught with delay, expense, danger, and confusion; or (2) the universally condemned system of taking a deadlocked decision to the House of Representatives. Moreover, election by plurality is the general rule for elections in this country, and this resolution adopts the same rule in the election of the President.

Under our present system, as amply demonstrated in history, the electoral votes often do not run parallel to the popular vote. If it could be said that the judgment of the electoral college was a particularly wise judgment, this failure to conform to the popular vote might be tolerated. But the fact is that the verdict of the electoral college does not reflect the opinion of a selected group of especially wise citizens. Although this was the original purpose of the founders in establishing the electoral college, the members of the college in modern times are—and are meant to be—rubber stamps for the popular vote. If they are not accurate rubber stamps there really is no excuse for their existence.

[From the Washington Post of July 6, 1948]

"MAKE EACH VOTE COUNT"

The Republican plank calling for a revision of the procedure for the election of the President and Vice President which will more exactly reflect the popular will did not come out of a clear sky. It is a direct endorsement of the resolution for this purpose sponsored by Senator HENRY CABOT LODGE, JR. Since Mr. LODGE was chairman of the resolutions committee at Philadelphia, it is not surprising that he should have woven into the platform a favorable reference to what may well have been the most important measure he sponsored in the last Congress. The Republican hierarchy was well advised in any event to accept this constructive proposal. It ought to become a major party objective if they win in November.

There is nothing partisan, however, about the resolution itself. In the House a companion resolution was sponsored by Representative ED GOSSETT, a Democrat. The proposal won approval on its merits in the Judiciary Committees of the House and Senate, without partisan division. Its acceptance as part of the Constitution would benefit both parties and give the country a more precise system of electing the President. Superficially, it may seem to be of greater interest to the Republican Party because it would unquestionably encourage a Republican invasion of the solid South. Even more important, however, is the rejuvenation of the Democratic Party in the South that might be expected from bringing that area once more into the arena in which Presidential contests are fought.

Ever since the days of reconstruction the South has been taken for granted. There have been occasional breaks in its solid Democratic voting, as in the rebellion against Al Smith in 1928. But for the most part it has not been worth while for a Republican Presidential candidate to seek votes in the South and few Democratic candidates have considered it necessary to do any wooing of voters south of the Potomac and the Ohio. Of course, the Republicans similarly take Maine and Vermont for granted. The unit-voting system, giving all of each State's electoral votes to the high man, has had the effect of concentrating campaign efforts in a few large strategic States in the East, Middle West, and far West.

Under the proposed amendment candidates for the Presidency would have only such strength in electoral votes as they could win in popular votes in each State. Every Republican vote in Mississippi and Georgia would thus count toward the election of the Republican candidate and the same would be true of Democratic candidates in Maine and Vermont. The country would have a more accurate expression of the popular will in the choice of the Chief Executive and the danger of electing a candidate with a minority of the popular votes would disappear. The amendment is so obviously desirable from the viewpoint of good government and healthy political development that it might be endorsed by the Democratic National Convention, too.

Civil Rights

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. RICHARD B. RUSSELL
OF GEORGIA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, July 29 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD the column written by George E. Sokolsky, published in the Washington Times-Herald for July 22, 1948, in which he discusses what he says are euphemistically called civil rights.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THESE DAYS

(By George E. Sokolsky)

By what is euphemistically called civil rights in this campaign is meant the Negro question. And let us call it that from here on. Since the Civil War, the Negro question has been a major American problem inadequately discussed and considered except by southerners who had to live with it and in recent years by the Communists and their fellow travelers and competing liberals who hope to garner votes out of it.

Under our Constitution and within the sanctions of moral law, the legal equality of Negroes and whites cannot be questioned. Historically and traditionally, the question is not so simple either in the North or the South.

Those northern Democrats who make such a terrific to-do about racial discrimination in the South are generally liars—they will not live in Negro areas in their cities; they do not entertain Negroes in their homes; they do not hire Negro secretaries or clerks, except political ones, which is part of the vote-getting technique; they do not encourage association between their children and Negro children.

In a word, none of them practice in their private lives what they preach for others. It is a simple matter for a resident of Minnesota or Wisconsin to grow powerfully indignant about a problem that does not face him but that does face a citizen of Alabama or Mississippi. Minnesota's Negro population, according to the 1940 census, was 9,928; Wisconsin's, 12,158; Alabama's, 983,290; Mississippi's, 1,074,578.

If the Civil War had not ended in the reconstruction era, during which Thaddeus Stevens created an unassimilable minority for political advantage, we should perhaps today not be facing this problem as the principal campaign issue of 1948.

Perhaps had Abraham Lincoln not been assassinated, the emancipated Negro slave would have been brought into American life without malice, with charity for all.

But that did not happen. Instead the northern carpetbagger and his Negro associates left in the South a heritage of bitterness which has continued to the present time. Franklin D. Roosevelt tried to solve this problem by exporting Negroes from the South to the North, placing them on relief rolls and forcing them into industrial enterprises on a quota basis. Thus, in many northern and western areas, the Negro population increased startlingly.

The northerners met the problems by segregating Negroes into ghettoes. Make no mistake about that: in the North, the Negro is as segregated as in the South, in spite of the lies northern politicians tell. Harlem is a Negro ghetto; the Bedford district of Brooklyn is a Negro ghetto; the South Side of Chicago is a Negro ghetto.

The technique employed in New York is for the whites to clear out as soon as the Negro moves in. If you want to see that process at work, you can study it, if you are so inclined, in the east Bronx of New York.

I am not justifying these conditions either on moral or legal grounds; I am only describing conditions as they exist and I am protesting against lies and liars.

The politicians who are shrieking civil rights are seeking Negro votes in the northern cities.

They are appealing to prejudice and indignation and they are fanning the flames of race antagonisms not because they want to improve the condition of the Negro in Mississippi but because they want the votes of the Negro in Harlem and south Chicago.

The anxiety of the northern Democrats to be recorded as voting for the civil rights plank of the Democratic platform after a voice vote had passed it, their insistence upon Senator BARKLEY'S announcement of how they voted, was for the consumption of the northern Negro voter. They fear that if they do not get that vote, Wallace, who represents Soviet racial concepts, will.

Were that the entire story, it would be little more than an appeal for the Irish, the Jewish, or the Italian vote. But this Negro question is pitched on a high emotional level and can result in riots and death.

It requires thoughtful and considerate handling. It requires sympathy and understanding. It comes upon us acutely when we dare not have internal disturbances.

Those who have gambled upon it may also have gambled upon the domestic peace of the United States.

Civil Rights

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLAUDE PEPPER
OF FLORIDA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, July 29 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an article by a distinguished Southern journalist, Mr. Ralph McGill, of the Atlanta Constitution, on the civil rights question.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IN 1860 THEY HAD A RUMP CONVENTION

(By Ralph McGill)

Footnotes to history: In 1856, under attack from northern radicals, the South became ultrasensitive at much of the false and unjust criticism. There also was the deep conviction that slavery was a matter for the States and not the Federal Government.

There were efforts made by the moderates to bring about Federal legislation which would abolish slavery, but which at the same time would reimburse the southern slave owners (not many southerners owned slaves) for their property, out of Federal funds. This effort was not a new one. It was made first by Thomas Jefferson. It was last made by Abraham Lincoln. He had made it previously, but he repeated it at the ill-fated "peace conference" at Hampton Roads in February of 1865. This was attended, among others, by Georgia's Alexander Stephens, then Confederate Vice President. But the peace commissioners were so restricted in their instructions by President Jefferson Davis that nothing came of it save futility. Stephens went home, never again to speak to Davis during the war, and to consider the Mississippian as having once more ruined the chance of the Confederacy for an honorable peace or end to the war.

BIRMINGHAM

So, in the end everything was lost. I try here to speak of what I conceive to be the best interests of the South. I do not think they are being served by the sound and the fury of the Birmingham rump meeting of disaffected Democrats. Even if they have some little success in the primaries and the election of November, they are doing harm to the future interests of the South. I am willing to concede they believe they are serving those interests. But the thoughtful southerner will see they are not.

As in 1856–60 when we were led to defend slavery as God-given and God-endorsed; when we were so needled and infuriated by the northern politicians, who were often false and hypocritical, that we stubbornly made slavery the "keystone" of the new nation, we were tricked and pushing into supporting a moral wrong.

That is about to happen to us again.

The position of the Birmingham rump meeting is, for the moment, a popular one. It is the place where the bands play "Dixie" and men cheer the old shibboleths.

But the true southerner will see that, despite the hypocrisy and the infuriating smugness of the North, we cannot longer oppose civil rights. It is true that they are pushed cynically by the big city machines for votes. But, the fact remains that under the Constitution, all citizens have a right to vote and to the protection of the law. We cannot defend a moral wrong. The convention showed that every State outside the South was against us.

We still have the protection of the Supreme Court and the Constitution of the United States. There are rights reserved to the States under the Constitution. It is true that many persons have come to believe the Supreme Court is too liberal in its interpretation of the Constitution. But, even so, they cannot remove it entirely. The fact is, citizens have a right to vote. But qualifications can be made. The fact is, citizens have a right to protection of the law, from the gang killings of the East and lynchings in the South. We shall have to take what the Supreme Court says about that when the legislation has been passed and tested in the courts. The South may not lose everything it fears. I doubt if life in the South will be greatly changed. Basic segregation will remain.

EQUALITY

The platform calls for "equal treatment" in the armed services. Whether that means an end to segregation in the services remains to be seen. The laws have not been written, much less introduced, passed and court-tested. The platform calls on Congress to pass legislation giving equal rights in employment. The laws relating to that have not been written or introduced. They may or may not contain features greatly objectionable to the South. These laws, generally referred to as the FEPC (Fair Employment Practices Act), are the ones most objectionable to the South. Whether they be constitutional has not yet been determined. There is no mention of social equality.

The point is—nothing has been done as yet.

SOLUTION

Now, how does the South propose to meet these threats? Some go to Birmingham. As far as I am concerned, those who go to Birmingham are on the road to a political Damascus with the scales still on their eyes. Their sort of action can withhold electoral votes, which will be meaningless if the Republicans win as expected.

Those really devoted to the South are seeking the long-time answer.

As of now, there seem to be but two. One is for all those who want to quit the Democratic Party to do so and join in an effort to establish the Republican Party. You don't do that merely by voting for it. You do it by establishing party machinery at the precinct level.

The second procedure is for those who stay in the party to uphold the hands of our Congressmen and Senators, and not to destroy them and remove them from committees by setting up a southern ticket which will destroy even their minor committee and prestige positions.

We have got to do the best we can. The rest of the Nation is against us. The Republican Party proposes the identical measures. This time we have got to act differently and with less blindness than in 1856–60 when they also walked out and held a rump meeting and played "Dixie" and whooped and hollered. It sounds good and is exciting. But the results are disastrous. We don't seek disaster.

Federal Highway Appropriations for Montana

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. MIKE MANSFIELD

OF MONTANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, in view of many communications which I have received from many parts of western Montana, I am inserting replies to my letter to the Commissioner of Public Roads. It is my hope that the information contained therein will be of interest to those who have written me as well as all citizens of Montana who are interested in the Federal highway appropriations for Montana roads in recent years.

The letters follow:

WHITEFISH CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Whitefish, Mont., March 22, 1948.

Hon. MIKE MANSFIELD,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: It seems to be utterly impossible for us to have any action from our local highway department for the necessary improvement on Highway No. 93 in northern Montana. Consequently, we are earnestly soliciting your support for the early completion of this highway.

As you already know, this is one of the heaviest traveled highways in the State of Montana, and any assistance you can give us with the Idaho delegation in getting their part completed will be most gratefully received by all members of this group.

Sincerely,
WHITEFISH CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
BRAD SEELY, President.

APRIL 9, 1948.

Hon. MIKE MANSFIELD,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. MANSFIELD: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of April 1, 1948, and letter of March 22 from Mr. Brad Seely, president of the Whitefish (Mont.) Chamber of Commerce relative to US 93 in northern Montana.

Under the Federal highway legislation the State highway department selects the projects for improvement, and is responsible for determining the location, surveying, preparing plans, and supervising construction of Federal-aid projects subject to review and approval by Public Roads Administration. US 93 from Whitefish northerly to the International Boundary is included in the Federal-aid primary system which establishes its eligibility for Federal-aid primary funds in its improvement. The portion of the highway located in the Flathead National Forest is also included in the forest highway system and is eligible for improvement with forest highway funds. It is not included in the current program for the utilization of these funds.

The Montana State Highway Commission proposed a project in 1947 for the improvement of a portion of the highway north of Eureka northerly to the Canadian line. Approval of this project was withheld until suitable arrangements had been made by the State with the Canadian authorities in respect to continuing the improvement across the international boundary and regarding the acceptability of the location at the line. No action can be taken on this project until the State highway commission completes these negotiations. We have not received a request from the State for Federal assistance in the improvement of the balance of US 93 between Whitefish and Eureka.

We are sending copies of this correspondence to our western headquarters for their information in discussing future proposals by the State highway commission. Any information Mr. Seely may have in support of the improvement in which he is interested should be sent to the State highway commission at Helena.

The letter from Mr. Seely is returned for your files.

Very truly yours,
THOS. H. MACDONALD,
Commissioner of Public Roads.

PUBLIC ROADS ADMINISTRATION,
FEDERAL WORKS AGENCY,
Washington, July 23, 1948.

Hon. MICHAEL J. MANSFIELD,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. MANSFIELD: Reference is made to your inquiry of July 13, 1948, concerning the amount of Federal-aid funds apportioned to Montana since 1944 for highway construction, extent of Federal and State participation in construction and maintenance after construction and concerning improvement of certain sections of highway in the vicinity of Kalispell, Mont.

The following is a summary showing the funds of the three classifications apportioned to Montana under the provisions of the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1944:

Fiscal year—	Primary funds	Secondary funds	Urban funds	Total
1946	$4,547,996	$3,107,277	$307,665	$7,962,938
1947	4,543,707	3,104,425	307,665	7,955,797
1948	4,484,330	3,063,876	303,721	7,851,927
Total	13,576,033	9,275,578	919,051	23,770,662

The Federal funds authorized to be appropriated under Public Law 834 of the Eightieth Congress, known as the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1948 for the fiscal year 1950 are to be apportioned to the States not later than September 1, 1948. The approximate amounts of the three classes of funds to be apportioned to Montana under this act are as follows:

Fiscal year—	Primary funds	Secondary funds	Urban funds	Total
1950	$4,036,000	$2,757,000	$273,000	$7,066,000
1951	4,036,000	2,757,000	273,000	7,066,000

The pro rata Federal participation in the cost of improvements in Montana effective March 1, 1948, is not to exceed 57.05 percent Federal funds to 42.95 percent State funds for regular construction items, and 42.73 percent Federal funds to 57.27 percent funds under the control of the State for right-of-way items.

Under the Federal legislation the obligation to maintain roads built with Federal-aid funds rests with the States and in some States, as in Montana, it is carried down to the counties. Federal funds are not available for maintenance of Federal-aid projects. Our field engineers make periodic inspection reports of the condition of maintenance of Federal-aid projects and unsatisfactory maintenance conditions are called to the attention of the State and through them to the county if responsible. Continued unsatisfactory maintenance of Federal-aid projects in a county may result in withholding approval of Federal participation in further improvements in the county until the unsatisfactory conditions are corrected. The Public Roads Administration has no authority over the upkeep of State or county roads in which Federal funds are not involved in their improvement.

Our letter of May 4, 1948, in response to yours of April 19 relative to the unsatisfactory condition of a 14-mile section of highway between Big Fork and United States Highway No. 2, advised you that efforts made to induce the county to remedy the unsatisfactory features had up to that time met with little results. Subsequently our western headquarters advised us that the State has guaranteed to provide satisfactory maintenance of all Federal-aid projects in the county. On June 9, 1948, approval was given to the request by the Montana State Highway Commission for the addition to its post-war Federal-aid secondary program of project S. 102 (11), providing for grading and oil-surfacing on the 14.5-mile section of the highway between US 2 east of Kalispell and Big Fork. This project may now be advanced to construction as soon as the State submits satisfactory plans to our district engineer with the assurance that the necessary right-of-way or right of entry is secured. It is understood that this provides for the improvement of the 3.1-mile section referred to in your inquiry.

United States Highway 2 from the north end of the above project west into Kalispell is included in the Federal-aid primary system. It is also a State highway, and the State highway commission is responsible for its maintenance. We have not received a request from the State for Federal assistance in the improvement of this section of highway.

In regard to your inquiry relative to the maintenance of roads built by the Public Roads Administration we presume that you refer to forest highway projects. These projects are undertaken under a cooperative agreement executed by the State highway commission and the Public Roads Administration. This agreement establishes the responsibility for the maintenance by the State or county after construction is completed. The Public Roads Administration performs the maintenance for a 1-year period for high-type paving and a 2-year period for grading and low-type surfacing, after which the State or county assumes responsibility.

There is no change in the status of US 93 from Whitefish northerly to Eureka and southerly to Kalispell from the information given you in our letter of April 9, 1948, in response to your inquiry of April 1 and letter from Mr. Brad Seely, president of Whitefish Chamber of Commerce.

Very truly yours,

C. D. CURTISS,
Acting Commissioner of Public Roads.

United Nations Organization

REMARKS
OF
HON. FREDERICK C. SMITH
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the following article appeared in the Evening Star, Washington, D. C., July 28, 1948. It is self-explanatory, though it should perhaps be mentioned that the Secretary of State, Marshall, is the same individual that tried to persuade the United States to crawl in bed with the Chinese Communists. This article is of considerable importance at the present time because the House Committee on Foreign Affairs is proposing a bill to provide $65,000,000 to build a permanent home for the very people Secretary Marshall proposes to have investigated.

It would be unfortunate, indeed, should the Congress grant this request. First, it is a fraud upon the American people to call this a loan because as everyone well knows the United States would in the end be compelled to pay the full amount. Furthermore, the passage of this proposal would add an additional $65,000,000 to the inflation potential. On top of all this, it would aggravate the building material shortage situation and actually deprive veterans and others of homes that otherwise would be made available to them.

MARSHALL NAMES THREE TO CHECK ON SECURITY RISKS AT UN

Secretary of State Marshall today created a committee of three citizens to investigate whether the United Nations is bringing persons into this country who are a danger to American security.

Members of the committee as announced by General Marshall are B. M. McKelway, editor of the Star; James H. Rowe, Jr., former Assistant Attorney General, and now a member of the Commission on Organization of the executive branch of the Government, and Marcellus C. Sheild, retired former clerk of the House Appropriations Committee.

The investigation will cover all classes of persons associated with the United Nations General Marshall said, including foreign delegations and their staff, newspapermen and other reporters, members of specialized UN agencies and the staff of Secretary-General Trygve Lie.

The investigation grows out of testimony of two State Department officials before a congressional committee that hundreds of secret agents from Europe's Communist countries may be using UN credentials as a means of getting into the United States to stir up trouble.

General Marshall reiterated today what he said a week ago after this testimony was given out—that he knows no instances in which any person here on United Nations credentials had actually jeopardized the security of the United States by actions outside his official duties.

Since then, General Marshall said, he has been having what he called a very careful check made of all the records. That inquiry has developed nothing so far, he said.

UN OFFICIAL SAYS UNITED STATES LACKS RIGHTS FOR INQUIRY

LAKE SUCCESS, July 28.—Arkady A. Sobolev, Acting Secretary General of the United Nations, declared today neither the United States nor any other nation has a legal right to investigate UN officials or conduct an inquiry on UN property.

He added, however, that the UN has nothing to hide.

Commenting on an announcement in Washington by Secretary of State Marshall that he is setting up a committee of three citizens to investigate United Nations personnel and delegations, Mr. Sobolev said:

"The United Nations welcomes any public discussion of this matter. We have nothing to hide."

He would not comment further. He added that he could not speak for UN delegations.

Mr. Sobolev, who returned yesterday from a vacation at home in Russia, is Acting Secretary General while Trygve Lie is in Europe on a tour of UN centers.

Building of United States Air Arm Is Long-Range Job

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES R. CLASON
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. CLASON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article written by me:

BUILDING OF UNITED STATES AIR ARM IS LONG-RANGE JOB

(By Representative CHARLES R. CLASON, Republican, of Massachusetts, chairman, Subcommittee on Air Matériel, Committee on Armed Services)

The long-term program for rebuilding of American air power initiated by the Eightieth Congress is one of the most decisive steps ever taken to strengthen national security. Public support for the orderly development and completion of that program must be retained throughout the years ahead if our air power is to remain modern and effective. The appropriations voted this year are only a start, and not a substitute, for a consistent long-term air-power program.

The Eightieth Congress has been air-minded. It has enacted laws which have established the Air Force as one of the three great military services. It has appropriated $822,000,000 more money than President Truman requested in order that the aims of the military air chiefs might be carried out adequately.

Members of the Eightieth Congress have studied the broad field of aviation thoroughly in several different committees which have given effect to the more important recommendations of the Congressional Aviation Policy Board. This Board, composed not only of congressional leaders but of top men in industrial and commercial aviation, devoted many long hours to an exhaustive study which has secured wide approval.

FIVE-YEAR PROGRAM

I believe that in 5 years the United States will have such a powerful Air Force and air arm of the Navy that war involving the United States will be unlikely.

Further, Congress is seeking to aid the proper development and expansion of our commercial air transport, both passenger and cargo. Speed of transportation in the United States has been a great factor in our prosperity of the past. Today greater speed can be secured by air. The Government wishes to cooperate in the advancement of proper aims.

A measure which will authorize the design of prototypes for cargo planes for long hauls and for short or pick-up hauls was passed by the House on the last day of the session. (The bill was not approved in the Senate.) The best designs will be selected by a competent board. The transports are intended to provide planes which can be operated by commercial lines on a profit basis while serving as possible auxiliary planes in time of war. Meanwhile, the Air Force would be using them for its own needs.

REBIRTH OF INDUSTRY

Other measures have provided for better travel protection, for the development of airfields and for countless other purposes allied to aviation. I believe that the Eightieth Congress has made possible a rebirth of the aviation industry while establishing the most modern military defense and the best commercial lines in the world.

There is a real danger, however, that adoption of the military appropriations and authorizations and the announcement of original purchase orders will delude the public into thinking that the task of rebuilding American air power is completed.

FIRST STEP

Purchase orders announced early in June by the Air Force and the Navy constitute merely the first step toward a long-term program. That long-term program provides an orderly step-up in the production of new and modern aircraft each year so that by the end of 1953 or in early 1954 our two air striking arms should be equipped with the world's best airplanes, and will be maintained at this level.

It is because of the over-all limiting tendency of time—time required to design and develop an airplane and time to expand production of airplanes that it is absolutely necessary that this country follow an orderly long-term program of aircraft procurement.

Israel

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EUGENE J. KEOGH
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by Herbert I. Sorin, president of the Glory of Israel Hebrew Institute, Pennsylvania and Blake Avenues, Brooklyn, N. Y., at their meeting on Saturday evening, July 25, 1948:

Every person must meet challenges that show up his true colors. He indicates his determination and backbone by the manner in which he stands the test. We are presently being proven in a similar way. Let us show that we are made of the material that is, indeed, a credit to all; after all, if we live up to our responsibilities today, we will show that we belong to that gallant group that helped George Washington in his great struggle for real freedom in the genuine democracy of our glorious Nation.

There are modern fighters for liberty who are determined to win their democracy from the same power that the colonists had to endure. The whole world stands amazed at their fantastic courage and military genius in spite of overwhelming odds against them. It is a sad fact that the power that was entrusted with the mandate of the Holy Land and has thereby been granted the confidence of the various nations, does not trust and surely does not respect the world governments. In her last words, His Majesty's Government plainly insulted the United Nations. England has the audacity to rebuke the leaders at Lake Success and to heap insult upon the United States of America that has been feeding them with billions from the same "fools" that they speak of in their press. Their hypocrisy and perfidy is unbounding. They followed the policy of divide and rule. They did this by providing bloody warfare and then by blaming a minute group of extremists who felt that the civilized world must become aware of this terrible scandal. The good people should know that England uses part of that American money to help an organized army of Arab Nations and even supported them with leadership in their battles even while there is an official embargo on arms to both Jews and Arabs.

Will America live up to its historical place of honor in aiding smaller nations to become free? Will the United States who fought valiantly against tyranny help Israel to become independent and unmolested? The promises and encouragement to Dr. Weitzman and Israel must not be vain hypocrisy. There shall never be reason to condemn our great Nation that was founded by such men as the great Thomas Jefferson who said that we are all entitled to our inalienable rights that the greatest document next to the Scriptures proclaims. If the State Department and those who formulate international policy will not live up to this challenge against America's honor, it will definitely be a black spot on our people that will not be forgotten by those nations who will fight for their right to be free. Will we lift that shameful embargo? Will we grant a proper loan to Israel that will be a real ally and that will always stand for democracy? If we are interested in the way that the founding fathers knew and gave so much for, we must see to it that a new democratic fortress shall arise in the ancient cradle of world religions.

My dear people, we, too, have a great job to do. We must not forget our part, not even for a moment. We dare not relent in our efforts to help in bringing about the birth of our people's dream. We must make it a reality. Let us be the supporters of this heroic struggle for the rejuvenation of the predictions of the prophets who told that there would be new and eternal life for that land and that people that brought the Bible to this world.

We must unite, and, together with our distinguished Rabbi Solomon Goldman, let us show our true colors as loyal Americans who love democracy.

May our sanctuary of worship and scholarship and our Hebrew religious school continue to add new recruits who will surely be loyal Americans and a credit to us.

The President and the Eightieth Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES A. HALLECK

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address made by me last night over the National Broadcasting Co. network:

After this Republican Congress was elected in 1946 President Truman publicly stated that the people had spoken, that he accepted their verdict, and that he would cooperate with the Republican Congress. That pledge he has not kept. On the contrary, he has sought constantly to block the will of the people as expressed through their duly elected Representatives.

Mr. Truman vetoed measure after measure, only to see his vetoes overridden by overwhelming majorities in the Congress. And that, bear in mind, took Democrats as well as Republicans, and they spoke for the people.

More recently he began a vicious and completely unjustified attack on the Congress, an attack so obviously political and so petty as to reduce even further his already rapidly disappearing support among the people.

Mr. Truman's attack on the Congress and his insistence on having his way without regard to what the people's Representatives believe, must remind many of a similar attack once made on the Supreme Court of the United States. Then the Supreme Court stood against a one-man government. Today the Congress stands against a one-man government. Today the Congress stands as an independent branch of the Government, rightfully rejecting Executive domination, recognizing only its obligation to all the people to legislate in the best interest of the Nation as a whole.

When Mr. Truman first took office, he called Republican leaders to the White House on many occasions, laying legislative requests before us and asking for our cooperation. He did this with respect to domestic matters and many times with respect to foreign affairs where he had an initial responsibility. We cooperated with him in everything we deemed to be in the best interests of the country. But what a contrast is seen in his subsequent warring on the Congress and in his constant refusal to cooperate with Congress on matters primarily of its concern.

You remember the President called this special session of Congress in the course of a partisan political speech at a political convention in which he almost failed of renomination by his quarreling, divided bolt-ridden party. He did not consult with Republican leaders in Congress about the call for the session. He did not attempt to work out a program.

The American people are well acquainted with the cry "emergency." They heard it throughout the New Deal again, and again, and again. The American people and this Congress are willing to work and sacrifice for any real emergency. But a political emergency is an entirely different thing.

It cannot be denied that Mr. Truman, in calling the session sought political advantage at whatever expense to the country rather than sane, sensible legislation to be worked out in a spirit of harmony and cooperation for the good of the country. The very volume, number, magnitude, scope, and importance of the dozens of legislative demands Mr. Truman stated in his message is final proof, if any be needed, that the affair in the Capitol yesterday officially opened the New Deal-Democrat campaign at the taxpayers' expense and with the Congress furnishing the back drop. This is a continuation of his war on Congress. I believe the people resent such tactics.

In spite of the attitude of a hostile President bent on bolstering his crumbling political fortunes the Republican Congress, will, in this special session as always in the past do whatever may be found necessary in the public interest as an emergency matter.

But we are not going to bankrupt the country, socialize the country, or regiment the country by police-state methods. We are not going to destroy production instead of increase production and otherwise jeopardize our solid and sound progress by sacrificing the true national interest on the altar of political expediency.

What is the record in that regard?

Back, before the 1946 elections, the Republicans in Congress joined in a statement of principles and policies. On that we were elected. On those pledges we have delivered. For that the people commend and applaud us and for that they will reelect us and elect our candidates, Dewey and Warren.

We then said:

"Today's major domestic issue is between radicalism, regimentation, all-powerful bureaucracy, class exploitation, deficit spending, and machine politics, as against our belief in American freedom for the individual under just laws fairly administered for all, preservation of local home rule, efficiency and pay-as-you-go economy in Government, and the protection of the American way of life against either Fascist or Communist trends.

"We believe that genuine social and economic progress can be achieved only on these American constitutional principles and it is our purpose to give our citizens this clean-cut choice."

That was the issue in 1946. Truman's sweeping proposals are clear proof that that is still the fundamental issue for 1948. That is his basic conflict with the Congress—a conflict between two different philosophies of government.

The Republican Congress, with understanding, courage, and foresight, hailed the challenge for the preservation of the Republic and, reversing the ruinous New Deal policies, established solid foundations upon which our country is now going forward again.

Here is what we did.

We liberated the people from 76,000 rules, directives and orders, releasing their energies and capacities to produce goods urgently needed to maintain ourselves at home and our friends abroad. True, many things are yet in short supply. Why wouldn't they be with so many demands from abroad and at home? But this much can be said, except for the Republican Congress prices would be higher and houses scarcer today.

We have cut the cost of government and balanced the Federal budget. We did away with unnecessary government functions and pay rollers, pruned Mr. Truman's spend-thrift budgets, and cut the national debt with the biggest surplus in the history of the Nation. Excessive Government spending is one of the causes of high prices. To cut the cost of government and pay on the national debt reduces inflationary pressure and cuts prices. Secretary of the Treasury Snyder just this month said as much, and then predicted that we are close on the edge of having Government expenditures exceed receipts. Why, then, does Mr. Truman call for programs costing billions and billions of dollars to put us completely in the red and make inflation and high prices inevitable and permanent?

We cut personal income taxes with 71 percent of the tax relief going to persons with incomes of less than $5,000. More than seven million in the lowest bracket now pay no taxes at all. That reduces the price of everything we buy, from a haircut to an automobile, and also puts more money in the hands of consumers. Also tax reduction has simulated much-needed production.

We passed the Taft-Hartley Act providing fair and just procedures for peaceful settlement of labor-management disputes. Labor's right to organize, bargain collectively and strike is fully protected. Rights of employers and the general public are also safeguarded. Peaceful settlement of disputes is going forward. Labor is obtaining good contracts, and above all, production is proceeding without interruption. That is the production so badly needed to keep prices down, and meet our commitments at home and abroad.

We have exposed the Communists and battled for the elimination of Communists,

Fascists and other subversives from the Federal Government and other places where they can carry on their nefarious schemes to wreck our country.

We have aided foreign nations. We have appropriated billions to relieve impoverished humanity in foreign countries, to reestablish their economies, and restrain Communist aggression. This has been done with the full knowledge that the great export of goods involved would necessarily raise prices in this country as well as add to inflationary pressures because of the great spending involved. But the Congress, with the people and at the President's request, believed this aid program to be in the national interest. High prices resulting from such foreign-aid programs should not be charged to the Republican Congress in an effort to get votes as Mr. Truman seeks to do.

The tense international situation has required tremendous sums for national defense. We have provided for the national defense, with increased appropriations for all branches of the service, particularly the Air Corps, and with temporary selective service.

We have cared for the veteran and his dependents, passing 188 bills meeting needs of veterans, including increased compensation for the disabled, survivors of war dead, subsistence payments for student veterans, for on-the-job training, the cashing of terminal leave bonds, and aids for veterans' housing.

We generated a building boom through the removal of red-tape and unnecessary restrictions and by legislation directly aiding in the construction of homes, particularly for veterans.

We adopted a long-rang farm program designed to give the farmer reasonable assurance for the future and at the same time stimulate the maximum production of much-needed goods.

We forwarded reclamation, flood control, river and harbor improvement, rural electrification and rural road building. For these meritorious projects we appropriated record sums since they are all essential to expansion and protection of our national economy.

We expanded social security, passing a bill to increase payments for the needy, aged, and blind.

We provided a cost-of-living increase for postal and other Federal employees.

We extended the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act with fair amendments designed only to give proper consideration to American agriculture, labor, and industry.

These and many other things we have done. The measures we enacted are benefiting every segment of our population and creating wholesome conditions for prosperity and happiness.

So this Eightieth Republican Congress has made a great record of accomplishment. It has made a record of which we who have helped in its achievement take justifiable pride. It is a record of which the overwhelming majority of the American people approve.

Of course, the work of the Congress is never done. Always there will be something which someone believes should be enacted and probably ought to be enacted. Possibly we might have been able to do a few more things before we adjourned a few weeks ago had the President stayed here in Washington on the job, working with the Congress, instead of playing hookey and going across the country at the expense of the taxpayers on a political expedition.

But that is water over the dam. Today, it is undoubtedly true that some prices are too high, and we do not have all the housing we need. The Republican Congress has been considering the whole situation and will continue to do so.

Beyond that, and looking at things about me, I am not as pessimistic as some about the future. Everywhere I see homes being built, utilizing every available nail and board and man. In my own State of Indiana, and elsewhere, I see the most bounteous crops ever to favor a grateful people. As they are being harvested, prices are dropping way below the peaks of the past. Inevitably that means decreasing consumer prices for foodstuffs. In all of these things Washington can help and is helping, but the big job of actual production must be done in the country.

One thing finally, the Republican program, as such must necessarily be enacted when we have a Republican President to cooperate with a Republican Congress when we meet next January. We shall elect Dewey and Warren, and a Republican Congress, in November, and then we shall move to the complete accomplishment of our program.

How Red Are the Wallace Progressives?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. KARL E. MUNDT

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me by the House, I am taking this opportunity of preserving for the permanent archives the following report by Miss Dorothy Thompson, noted columnist and speaker, on what took place behind the facade of the recent Wallace Progressive Party convention in Philadelphia. This excellent and penetrating report by Miss Thompson should be read by every alert American. It reveals the startling similarity of the Wallace and Hitlerian approaches in the matter of molding mob psychology through the inciting of racial and selfish hatreds and the appeal to those who would climb upward by pulling others down. Since the tactics of Hitler and the tactics of Stalin are so closely similar it also reveals the identity of Communist and Fascist techniques since, as Miss Thompson so authentically points out, the pattern of behavior and performance at the Wallace Progressive convention was developed and controlled by the Communists who have so effectively—with a welcome from Wallace—injected themselves into what might otherwise have evolved into a legitimate and constructive political influence in America.

Miss Thompson's article follows:

[From the Washington Star of July 28, 1948]

THIRD PARTY CONVENTION, ALTHOUGH OVER, STILL HAS ALL QUALITIES OF A NIGHTMARE

(By Dorothy Thompson)

Even now that it is over, it still has the quality of nightmare—the whole show, from the preposterous press conference Friday to Henry Wallace's riding into the convention in a midget automobile to take hysterical and deeply sincere cheers from a mass audience too exhausted by spent emotion to listen to what he had to say.

If my colleagues, confessing to the same sense of dream, did not confirm it, I would think I had imagined the grotesque combination of revolution and turkey-in-the-straw; of snakelike venom and sentimental corn; of camp-meeting revival and smoothly engineered purpose. VITO MARCANTONIO really could not have performed his soap-box contortions before an audience that never giggled, but gave wild cheers while some raised clenched fists in Communist salute in the bleachers.

And certainly GLEN TAYLOR could not—he really could not—have minced onto the platform with a cherry-red mouth rouged for television, swaying his body and raising his arms in the ally-oop gestures of an acrobat. He could not have made a speech bristling with revolution, with the flirtatious smile of the professional entertainer, and then—surrounded by his family, baby on shoulder—croon sweet music in barbershop harmony into the microphone. But I didn't dream any of it. My colleagues—persons as sober as Mrs. Anne O'Hare McCormick—saw it too, and just the same way.

ANYTHING COULD HAPPEN

There were young persons dancing among the newspapermen and sighing ecstatically, "Don't you see now that we are going to sweep the country? It's dynamic; it's invincible." They certainly, I thought, believed it; and God knows in these times anything could happen.

The young Wallaceite, addressing me in tones half menacing and half coy, cried, "Now tell the truth, Miss Thompson. Be sure you tell the truth about us." And I saw she really believed I was a good woman gone wrong in the toils of the capitalist interests. But tell the truth? How can I convey the sound, taste, smell, and haunting sense of having seen it all before, which is certainly subjectively true, and shared by others? Who would believe what telegraphed itself to my instinct and mind unless he had experienced the birth of other movements, equally fantastic, bringing ruin to peoples in the name of salvation?

The crowds gathered there were not a social class; they were certainly not predominantly workingmen and their wives. They were a psychological class, a mass of persons sick from resentments and fears, arising not from economic suffering but from other kinds of suffering—the suffering, I thought, from a sense of fear of inferiority magnified to pathological proportions. What an amount of psychoneurosis gathered under one roof, or under the clear stars.

Now the Guru letters no longer seemed to me unimportant. Since the Friday press conference, it seems apparent that Mr. Wallace did write them, or why in the world should he not give a simple answer to a straightforward question? And they reveal a curious state of psychosis and mental insecurity such as you find in people looking for signs and portents and their fates in stars. I have seen before, in other places—in one place in particular—the powerful psychic hold that a neurotic personality can have on a neurotic community.

However, there were two people in my immediate vicinity who did not seem at all neurotic. These, in response to our introduction of ourselves, revealed themselves as Mr. Alexandrov and Mr. Morev, Russians of the Soviet Tass Agency.

Mr. Alexandrov's eyes and mouth revealed a sense of humor which he had superbly disciplined. An occasional dimple indicated that he, like my colleagues, found Senator TAYLOR's antics very funny—the "red smear" on the painted-for-television lips really was funny. And Mr. Alexandrov's suppressed merriment was not, like our own, embittered by embarrassment. When Paul Gallico asked, "Do you have shows like this in Russia?" he answered with a twinkle, "Not—not quite so personal," and could be drawn no further.

Mr. Morev was ferociously dour and industrious, obviously contemptuous of everything—of the show, the crowd, and his "colleagues" in the press box. Both followed the speeches closely, checking utterances against scripts and making notes.

CABLES TO MOSCOW

And thus they were able to cable to Moscow—later no doubt to be confirmed there with television and sound effects—that 30,000 people cheered wildly while candidates for the American Presidency and Vice Presidency charged that Gen. George C. Marshall, Chief of Staff of the victorious American Armies of World War II, Gen. Lucius D. Clay, Commander of the American Army of Occupation in Berlin, the present President of the United States, and the most likely next President of the United States, are nothing but tools of intriguing national bankers; that our troops have no military right in Berlin; that the object of the United States Government is to turn Germany into a colony and dominate the whole world; that the Republicans and most Democrats are pro-Nazi; that our name is cursed by the people of the world; and that, in short, every charge against us by the Soviets is 100 percent true, and not the half of the villainy; and that, by logical deduction, every measure taken against us by the Soviets is sheer self-defense, after incredibly long suffering.

So that before you read this column the Russian press and radio will have American authority for all their propaganda; so that if they shoot down our planes in the air corridor, they can claim in the name of Henry Agard Wallace that they are only shooting Nazis; so that obviously Stalin is infinitely preferable anywhere to President Truman or Governor Dewey. So around we are, full circle:

"I would rather see Hitler in the Champs Elysees than Leon Blum."

All this the industrious and reserved Tass correspondents noted as fully as we American journalists noted it. When I glanced at Mr. Morev he tried most insolently to stare me down. And my whole contribution to the honor of my country was not to turn my eyes away first.

But inwardly I did turn away first. My heart was drooping in shame. Mr. Alexandrov and Mr. Morev never had heard their people groveling cravenly before the United States and praising, say, Roosevelt to the disadvantage of Stalin.

I felt ashamed before those Russians, for the speakers and the masses in the bleachers were my countrymen and I cannot divorce myself from any of my countrymen, however much I feel ashamed of them. I was unable—and unwilling—to explain that the curious, aggressive mass who nonetheless got such odd masochistic pleasure from hissing our Government, wartime officers and occupation forces were not America, could not possibly be America—as the Tass correspondents certainly seemed contemptuously convinced they were.

What Congress Should Do

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HOMER D. ANGELL
OF OREGON
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Portland Oregonian of July 27, 1948:

WHAT CONGRESS SHOULD DO

The Eightieth Congress, reconvened by President Truman for campaign purposes, could remain in session for months, brawling with the President and accomplishing little. But this would be pointless. The Congress should pass an adequate housing bill and go home. This is the single large and important program, thoroughly predigested in committees, left undone.

There is not the slightest chance that the Republican-controlled Congress and the Democratic President can get together on inflation controls. They just do not think alike. Congress is even less likely to hand over to Mr. Truman the managed-economy authority he demands, while smarting from the political call-back and his intemperate denunciation of the assembly, than it was heretofore.

President Truman knows as well as anyone that he cannot even depend upon majority support of Democrats in Congress for a price-control program. All he expects in that line is the excuse to denounce the Republican Congress for refusing to give him unprecedented peacetime powers. Even if he were not, in all probability, a "lame duck," Congress wouldn't do it.

The Presidential record since 1946, when Republicans won a majority in each House, shows as clearly as could be that the Nation cannot expect real leadership from the Federal Government until there is harmonious cooperation between Congress and the White House. That can come only from election of a Republican President this November. It would be almost as futile, while retaining a Congress of Republicans and anti-Truman Democrats, to elect Harry Truman for another term as it would be to put in Henry Wallace.

Mr. Truman's vote-catching demands for inflation controls do not merit consideration unless both political parties and the entire Nation are willing to go all the way. It was the Truman administration that dumped wage and many price controls as soon as the war had ended, because the people were heartily sick of them. Nor will the people now trade a free economy, though prices still rise, for a system of rationing, wage limitations and the black market.

The President's civil rights program is an old and dusty herring. He demands that the Congress enact in a brief special session, legislation which Congress and the Nation have divided on for years. In an election year, he pretends to expect Republicans to help him defeat the Southern wing of his own party. Some of this legislation must be approved, and the Republicans have promised in their convention platform to vote it when they come to power. But it can well wait the next regular session.

We think the Republican Congress should have come to agreement before it recessed on a sensible version of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill, to stimulate private building and to provide subsidized, low-rental housing under local auspices. Housing is the real emergency in America today, and the bill has been considered thoroughly. Other important legislation should await the seating of a new Congress and a new President who will be in substantial agreement on the national needs and desires.

Congress Should Reward This Humanitarian

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM LEMKE
OF NORTH DAKOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, there have been so many inaccurate and in many cases deliberately false statements made by a few retired professors parading under the name of doctor concerning H. R. 462, a bill that I introduced to prohibit the torturing of dogs alive in the name of scientific research.

The truth is that many doctors including some eminent physicians, such as Dr. Allen, of Chicago, have repudiated the vivisection of dogs. These have stated openly that it is not necessary to torture man's best friend. I may add, also, that it is not necessary to torture alive not only man's best friend, but the child's best friend and protector.

The time has come that this brutality be stopped. There is nothing that anyone can claim that he has learned from dogs that he could not and would not have learned from other animals.

It is, therefore, with pleasure that I include in my extension of remarks, an editorial from the Hearst newspapers of July 1. Read it carefully, and I am sure that you too will agree with Frank B. Marks, Poundmaster of the District of Columbia.

Here is the editorial:

CONGRESS SHOULD REWARD THIS HUMANITARIAN

Frank B. Marks, of Washington, D. C., the only poundmaster serving under congressional authority, has administered to all vivisectionists and practitioners of medical torture a well-deserved rebuff which is of national significance.

Marks flatly rejected a request for healthy living animals from the National Capital's pound for functional demonstrations at the Howard University School of Medicine in Washington.

Functional demonstrations commonly include crushing or maiming conscious dogs to observe the effects of shock, experiments to determine how much pain an animal can withstand, and application of electricity to exposed nerves.

During the 12 years Marks has been the National Capital's poundmaster he has spurned similar requests from a number of Government agencies and institutions. Howard University itself is supported by congressional appropriations.

What makes Marks' latest refusal of national significance is this:

Vivisectionists and others who inflict needless pain and suffering on living animals in the name of science are conducting a Nation-wide campaign to open all pounds to their sadistic uses, and to compel poundmasters to turn over to them any or all unclaimed dogs, cats, or other pets.

Their campaign has been only partly successful, with Chicago possibly the blackest example.

There the notorious Arvey ordinance makes pound animals available for laboratory butchers.

Chicago, however, represents to them only a local victory.

What the vivisectionists really desire is a national accomplishment.

Their goal is the District of Columbia pound.

It is the only pound in the United States under the jurisdiction of Congress.

Congress determines its appropriations, fixes the salaries of the Poundmaster and his employees and, in effect, determines its policy.

When and if at any time the Government's own pound lets down its bars to vivisectionists, they would celebrate their success in every city and town as a pattern that has been accorded official Federal approval.

That scheme is blocked for the present by Poundmaster Marks.

Marks says he will continue to block it as long as he holds his present office. He asserts:

"There will be no dogs or cats at this pound turned over to laboratories, medical schools or medical teachers or students as long as I am poundmaster.

"I think that anyone who would obtain an animal at a city pound to experiment on it or destroy it in a brutal way should be put in prison."

Humane leaders in the District of Columbia have extolled Marks for his high principles and "moral conscience."

Mrs. Alma T. Opal, president of the District of Columbia Anti-Vivisection Society, states:

"Mr. Marks is one Government official who realizes fully his responsibility to the people he serves.

"He is aware that in his office he holds a trusteeship over property belonging to others—property which, in most instances, has sentimental value and holds the deep attachment of its owners.

"To turn this living property, which he holds in trust, over to medical torments, would be a violation of his responsibilities. He refuses to do so.

"Our organization and scores of other humane groups throughout the Nation commend him."

Mrs. Opal continued:

"What right and title do medical laboratories have over any property belonging to others, whether or not it is in the custody of a Federal or city government?

"The answer, of course, is: 'None.'

"Vivisectionists may argue that this property is lost, strayed, or even stolen. That in no way extinguishes the legal right of the owner.

"To concede that laboratories have such a right would be to concede that they also have a right to lost children or to abandoned waifs; that they would have the right to take babies from foundling homes or children who have been kidnaped from their mothers.

"Such an assumption is, of course, inconceivable. But the principle is much the same.

"By upholding these rights in their application to pets at the Capital Pound, Mr. Marks has not only protected the property of thousands of dog and cat owners, but has prevented an ugly smear on our national escutcheon."

The Nation should commend and honor Mr. Marks for his public service and his great humanitarianism. And our Congress should see that he is properly appreciated and supported in the performance of his duties.

Stop This National Gyp

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HELEN GAHAGAN DOUGLAS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, under permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I wish to insert an editorial from the Los Angeles Daily News of Monday, July 26, 1948.

The present law has been proven inadequate to prevent such reprehensible acts as have been imposed on veterans at the hands of irresponsible builders. It clearly becomes the duty of Congress to strengthen those laws, or to initiate others that will protect the citizens of this Commonwealth.

I have, therefore, introduced a bill which would remove the inequities in the existing and inadequate regulations governing veterans' housing. It is my hope that this Congress will take immediate steps to pass this or similar legislation to avoid what is fast becoming a national disgrace.

The editorial follows:

STOP THIS NATIONAL GYP

The Daily News calls for an immediate congressional investigation of the entire GI housing program so that the taxpayers who are footing the bill may find out how it happened that no laws exist for the veterans' protection.

The Government's most important housing case in the Nation has just been concluded in Fresno where three men were acquitted by a Federal court jury of all charges.

This means that no laws were violated and no crime committed in the construction or sale of the cracked-up little shanties of which the veterans and the Government complained.

Who is responsible for these houses?

It is the clear responsibility of the United States Congress to find out, inasmuch as it was this same Congress that passed the Servicemen's Readjustment Act and other legislation specifically designed to extend a privilege to a specific class of citizens—our veterans.

For some months past the Daily News, in a series of stories, has brought to public attention the fact that hundreds of such "Fresno" houses exist in this and other major cities.

There are the houses; they stand as concrete, irrefutable evidence of a national scandal.

Why is it that the legislation—through VA and FHA regulations—provided such generous protection to builders and lending institutions but none to veterans?

Why is it, if it was the intent of the legislation to provide that protection through responsible behavior of lending institutions, that these institutions have failed to exercise that responsibility?

Why do the regulations provide absolutely no guaranty to the veteran? Why have the VA and FHA been so ineffective in protecting both the veteran and the taxpayer whose money is being used in these insurances?

How did it happen that the Congress, so bent on economy, gambled so recklessly with the public funds?

This is an issue of concern to every citizen; not just to the veteran whose house is falling to pieces. Each of these houses is protected by $4,000 Government insurance—insurance to the lending institution. Each of these houses was built under title VI of the FHA—at practically no risk to the builder, but at high profit.

Why is the law so inequitable?

What good does it do to appropriate $2,000,000 to the Office of the Housing Expediter to increase its staff of investigators to handle the complaints if there is no law under which to prosecute the builders and the lending institutions responsible for this national shame?

For all these reasons, therefore, the Daily News calls on the Congress to investigate this situation and to rectify its own errors, through the amendment of existing legislation or the enactment of new laws to prevent a repetition in the future.

The Daily News also urges United States Attorney James Carter and his staff not to relent in their courageous fight in behalf of the swindled veterans and taxpayers.

The United States attorney has more than 1,500 veterans' complaints in his files. This newspaper urges Carter to test their claims under older statutes since the Fresno court has shown the special legislation is inadequate to protect the veterans.

Specifically, Carter is asked to consider two statutes under which new indictments might be brought: the laws covering conspiracy to defraud the Government, and the crime of making false statements to the Government.

The Daily News also respectfully reminds the United States attorney of his long-standing promise to bring a civil declaratory relief action in the Federal court, and urgently requests that he do so as soon as possible.

This is the Government's last and strongest weapon in behalf of all of us. It is the means through which the Federal court will be asked to tell us, once and for all, who is responsible for these shabby houses—the veteran, the builder, or the lending institution. Then we will know whose responsibility it is to protect the taxpayers' stake in these properties.

We have done the veteran no favor by devising a one-sided program which permitted him to buy these houses at high prices. The Daily News therefore urges the Congress and the United States attorney immediately to do everything in their power to demonstrate that the same Government which so recklessly became a party to his victimization is capable, by rectification of a gross injustice, to restore his trust.—S. B.

Supply and Demand

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HUBERT S. ELLIS

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, today when all of us are concerned with the high-cost-of-living problem, I direct your attention to an editorial from the Huntington Advertiser, published in Huntington, W. Va., and edited by Mr. Clyde A. Wellman. The Advertiser is the leading Democratic newspaper in this section of the Ohio Valley. The statement is forthright and timely.

In the discussion of this important subject, Supply and Demand, it may be well to refresh our memories on a little history.

Price and ration controls broke down long before Congress terminated the OPA in 1946.

In May of that year the Bureau of Labor Statistics stated that 85 percent of the stores had no veal, more than four-fifths were without pork loins, ham, or bacon, and that almost 7 out of 10 had no beef or lamb.

The meat cutters' union at the same time said Government regulations of the meat industry were unenforceable and that impossible regulations were building up an army of meat bootleggers.

Within 1 month's time after the death of OPA employment in the meat-packing industry jumped from 93,000 to 163,000, and 2 months later it had increased to about normal levels of 180,000 workers.

In October 1946 the President said in a statement that the Government had considered going out to farms and ranges to seize cattle for slaughter, but it was decided that it would be an impractical move.

In the same statement the President said another remedy proposed was seizure of the packing plants. He said that proposal was turned down as useless because the packing houses were empty.

The editorial follows:

SUPPLY AND DEMAND

Wage and salary income of all kinds in the United States increased 179 percent from 1939 to April 1948. From June of 1946 to last April wages and salaries jumped 22 percent.

These figures reflect the high degree civilian employment has attained in the United States, much of it coming since the end of the war.

Employment is at an all-time peak. A few over-all comparisons will illustrate the tremendous increase in employment. In 1940 there were 55,640,000 persons in the civilian labor force of the country. Of this number, about 8,120,000 comprised an army of unemployed. That would leave 47,520,000 gainfully employed.

The peak of wartime civilian employment came in July 1943 with a labor force of 57,680,000, of whom 56,290,000 had jobs and only 1,390,000 unemployed.

There was a shrinkage in the labor force after VJ-day, because many workers especially women, who had been drawn into the labor force in the war period, withdrew from the labor force. The prediction of Government officials that we would have at least 8,000,000 unemployed during the reconversion period never materialized. At no time since VJ-day has unemployment exceeded 2,700,000 although statisticians allow a "float" of about 3,000,000 for so-called frictional unemployment. In August 1945 there were 54,460,000 in the labor force of whom 53,630,000 were employed and only 830,000 unemployed. A year later (August 1946) there were 59,750,000 in the labor force with 57,690,000 employed and 2,060,000 unemployed.

In June of this year (1948) the "mythical" 60,000,000 jobs was surpassed when 61,296,000 were employed out of the total expanded labor force of 63,497,000 with 2,184,000 unemployed.

The condition reflected by these figures alone is a powerful contributing factor to present-day inflation and high prices. It probably is the most important factor. Sixty-three and a half million people mean that number of people in the market 365 days out of the year for consumer goods of every kind and quality. It is the largest number of buyers the American market has had in history. When people have money they try to buy what they want when they want it. Although production in nearly every line is above prewar levels, there still is not enough output to meet the demand. With demand excessive and supply still limited, obviously bidding is intense for the things that are available.

Here is one factor in our current inflation that Congress and the political fixers will have difficulty in overcoming. History teaches that man-made devices for controlling the ancient and inexorable economic law of supply and demand are futile. Sixty-three million persons receiving pay checks regularly has put demand out in the lead, with supply trailing far behind.

Abolition of the Poll Tax

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE H. BENDER

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the text of a letter which I sent on yesterday to each member of the majority party in the other body:

JULY 28, 1948.

DEAR SENATOR: As the author of H. R. 29, the bill to abolish the poll tax in Federal elections, I am taking the liberty of writing to you in regard to the pending action in the Senate in regard to this legislation.

The proposal for a constitutional amendment is a shabby device to evade the issue. All of us who have worked over the years for the abolition of the poll tax and the restoration of a free ballot to the American citizens who are now denied the right to vote by the poll tax know that the proposal for a constitutional amendment is a meaningless gesture. The millions of Americans who are watching this Congress know it.

My bill, as you know, was passed by the House of Representatives with an overwhelming majority more than a year ago, on July 21, 1947. It has been favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration. It is now before the Senate for action. It should be brought to a vote and enacted now.

The constitutionality of my bill is clear. It has been passed by large majorities by the House of Representatives in four successive Congresses. It has been found constitutional and favorably reported as constitutional by four successive Senate committees which have considered it.

In its platform the Republican Party has pledged action on the abolition of the poll tax. The passage of my bill by the Senate is the only road to the effective abolition of the poll tax. It is the only way the Republican Party can keep faith with the American people on this issue.

I cannot urge upon you too strongly the need for the speedy consideration and passage of my bill, H. R. 29, at this time.

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE H. BENDER,
Congressman at Large, Ohio.

Return of the OPA

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. A. L. MILLER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I am certain the President would use any standby powers given him to restore price controls, rationing, and allocations. It would be the OPA all over again.

Wartime price controls and rationing broke down long before October 1946, when the President put an end to the full force of the OPA. He took this action at the insistence of the Democratic leadership in this Congress, He thought he might save the political necks of some of the Democrats, but it was too late. The people were aroused, and wanted no more of these obnoxious controls. To reimpose the OPA in peacetime would be a grave mistake.

In the closing days of the OPA, black markets flourished, production was down. There was open contempt by our citizens to these unnecessary regulations.

In May 1946, the Bureau of Labor Statistics stated that 85 percent of the retail stores had no veal; 80 percent were without pork, bacon or beef. Meat controls would again bring shortages.

In May 1946, the meat cutters union said Government regulations in the meat industry were unenforceable and that impossible regulations were building up an army of meat bootleggers. The same could be said for all lines of industries.

The President, in June 1946, spoke of seizing the cattle on the ranges for slaughter and taking over the then empty packing plants. After careful consideration he thought it might be impractical at that time. Perhaps he feels that now he can roll back the prices and it can be done.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, prices are high, and I believe they will go higher if we continue to send our resources, far beyond our ability, all over the world. We are wasting them without any promise of a fair return. A proper balance of our give-away and export program would bring prices down at once. I believe inflation is just more money than goods. The cure is to have more goods than money.

Our country now has full employment and high wages. When we get our pay checks we like to buy the things we want. If they are scarce or not to be found at all, the price is high.

The people in Nebraska do not want a return of the OPA. They feel the President should use the powers he now has to control Government spending, bank credits, and interest rates. Most of the present inflation could be stopped, and indeed prevented, had the President made use of authority he now has to put the brakes on inflation.

If we adopted all the President's program, it would mean $15,000,000,000 to $20,000,000,000 added to the national budget. The tax burden should be less, not more.

I would suggest that the proper committee study the President's program carefully, holding full hearings, and if restoring regulation W or other credit controls are needed, apply them.

Perhaps title VI of the housing bill might be restored. There must be proper safeguards to prevent a small group of builders making a racket out of the liberal borrowing provisions of this section. Hearings may indicate it is not needed.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, passing a law will not stop inflation or build cheap houses. The Congress and the people of this great country will not be misled by a desperate administration saying our present temporary ills can be cured by a law. To build cheap houses there must be cheaper material and reasonable costs of construction. If we keep the material now being shipped all over the world in this country, better and lower-cost houses will be built and the cruel inflation will be whipped. The administration ought to know that you just cannot have your cake and eat it at the same time. Certainly a return to the OPA would only make conditions worse.

Adopted Children

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ABRAHAM J. MULTER
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced a bill today to amend the Immigration Act of 1924 so as to permit unmarried adopted children of American citizens to come to this country regardless of any quota limitations.

There are thousands of homeless orphans throughout England and the European continent who can find a home here, and the opportunity to become good American citizens.

I am sure that most Members of Congress have received the same type of inquiries that I have from good American citizens who desire to adopt such orphans, and to provide homes for them in our country where they can be raised in the traditional American manner.

Unfortunately, the law in its present state requires that such children meet all of the immigration requirements before they can be admitted. This proposed law will eliminate such restrictions without affecting our economy in the slightest, and will prove a blessing to those innocent children who are in no way responsible for their dire plight. I earnestly urge the Congress to enact this measure.

United Nations Vetoes Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HUBERT S. ELLIS
OF WEST VIRGINIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Chicago Tribune of July 28, 1948:

UNITED NATIONS VETOES CONGRESS

The World Health Organization, an agency of the United Nations, has asserted that UN possesses a legislative power superior to that of the Congress of the United States and, of its own motion, can override congressional acts.

This novel and dangerous doctrine, bringing into question whether the United States is in fact sovereign, was brought into the open at the meeting of the Health Organization in Geneva, Switzerland. As a condition to American membership in the body, Congress decreed that the Nation's financial contribution should not be 39.89 percent of the Organization's budget, the same proportion of costs which American taxpayers bear in supporting UN itself. A congressional limitation was intended to hold American support to about 25 percent, which is far more than any other nation is paying. The funds may be used to fight epidemics throughout the world, including Russian-dominated territory.

This failed to satisfy the foreigners, who are in the habit of looking to us on all occasions to catch the check. When the American desire for economy was expressed, our dear friends, the British, promptly moved that the scale of contributions conform to those in effect in the parent UN organization. The United States protested, but was supported only by Belgium, Holland, Turkey, and China. Twenty-seven nations, among them Britain, Russia, the Ukraine, and White Russia, ganged up on us and said we couldn't get away any cheaper than 39.89 percent.

Having done this, the combine began parceling out seats on the executive board and managed it so that America should get only a 1-year seat while some of the rest of them were taking charge of the spending of our money for 3.

The power of Congress to legislate for the United States and to decree the extent of its activities and the amount of its appropriations has thus been brought under direct challenge. If the Geneva ruling is to stand unimpeached, Congress will be in the position of having subscribed to the proposition that UN possesses power to override legislation. The next thing we know, UN may be canceling the Bill of Rights out of the Constitution.

When Congress voted to permit American adherence to the World Health Organization, it, fortunately, specified the reservation that the United States might withdraw on 1 year's notice. Mr. Truman's summons to Congress to meet in special session provides a convenient occasion for handing in the notice without loss of time. Otherwise, by sticking around, Congress will be subscribing to the theory that UN may shear it of its prerogatives.

Amendment of Labor Relations Act

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ELLSWORTH B. FOOTE
OF CONNECTICUT
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. FOOTE. Mr. Speaker, at the time of the passage of the National Labor Relations Act, I advised some 4,000 of my constituents who wrote me concerning this measure that if they called to my attention or I ascertained that any provision of this law was unworkable I would immediately take legislative action to remedy the situation. The requirement that the National Labor Relations Board elections be held before a union shop can be set up under a collective-bargaining contract, in my opinion, has proven unworkable and unnecessary. Such elections are costly and usually result in an overwhelmingly large vote in favor of the union shop. Since the great majority of workers want the union shop, I do not believe they need to be protected by a poll.

The National Labor Relations Board has been showered with petitions for authorization elections and without exception elections held so far have been won by large majorities favoring adoption of union-shop contracts. I believe there should be no hesitancy in repealing the union-shop election requirement and have today introduced a bill calling for the same, reading as follows:

A bill to amend the National Labor Relations Act so as to eliminate the necessity of holding an election as a condition to the making of an agreement requiring membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8 (a) (3) (ii) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows: "(ii) unless, following an election held as provided in section 9 (e) (2) within 1 year preceding the effective date of such agreement, the Board shall have certified that at least a majority of the employees eligible to vote in such election have voted to rescind the authority of such labor organization to make such an agreement, and if the Board shall have certified that such labor organization has complied with all the requirements imposed by sections 9 (f), (g), and (h) as conditions precedent to the Board's processing of a petition or a charge:".

SEC. 2. (a) Paragraph (1) of section 9 (e) of such act is hereby repealed.

(b) Paragraph (2) of such section is amended to read as follows:

"(2) Upon the filing with the Board, by 30 percent or more of the employees in a bargaining unit covered by an agreement between their employer and a labor organization made pursuant to section 8 (a) (3), of a petition alleging they desire to rescind the authority of such labor organization to make an agreement with the employer of such employees requiring membership in such labor organization as a condition of employment in such unit, the Board shall take a secret ballot of the employees in such unit and shall certify the results thereof to such labor organization and to the employer."

SEC. 3. Subsections (f), (g), and (h) of section 9 of such act are amended by striking out the words "no petition under section 9 (e) (1) shall be entertained," where they appear in each of such subsections.

The Duty and Responsibility of Women in the 1948 Campaign

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MARY T. NORTON
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by me at the recent Democratic National Convention:

Mr. Chairman, distinguished guests, delegates, ladies and gentlemen, this is a call—no, it is an appeal to the conscience of every woman in America to wake up and recognize her duty, her obligation, and her responsibility to civilization and to mankind, in this, the most critical period in world history. I make this appeal because we are facing a very important election—an election which may well decide the future of America. The stakes are high, so high that the contest will be bitterly fought.

The Democratic Party in 16 very difficult years presents a record of progressive achievement greater than that of any 16 years in the history of the world, from a tragic Republican depression in 1932 to an all-high national income of more than $160,000,000,000 in 1948. The Republican Party, controlling Congress two short years with a new low in legislative record, anxious to assume control of government, seems to have learned very little about what the people in this country really want from their Government. I say this for all indications point to the same old reaction that finally brought about the depression of twenty-nine and the early thirties. The Republican Party is definitely the conservative party—ours the progressive party. What do the people want? I believe that they want progress and more progress, a people's government, the kind of government which they have enjoyed for the past 16 years under Democratic leadership. I feel in my heart the people in this country do not want a government controlled at the top by men who will give first consideration to the great financial interests of our counrty—high tariff and all the other selfish objectives that brought what seemed great prosperity in the years following the First World War and ended in disaster within 10 years. These are the issues. They are clearly drawn and the women of America, I believe, will decide which party will win the election for there are a million and a half more women than men eligible to vote. Their votes may well decide the election of 1948. I prayerfully hope we will make the right decision. It is a very great responsibility. May God direct us in the months ahead.

I've been in politics a long, long time—sometimes I think too long. I feel so deeply about our duty as citizens that I would gladly give the few remaining years of my life if I could make women realize how powerful they are and start them moving.

I make this appeal because it is my conviction that we women have never realized our power and do not fully understand the tremendous necessity of exerting that power now.

It is 28 years since women became voters. I think that you and I should be ashamed of ourselves because in no election in all those 28 years have more than 50 percent of us taken the trouble to go to the polls on election day and vote. The fact that the men haven't done any better does not excuse us. Only about one-third of the voters voted on election day in 1946. Do you realize that, as the result of that laxity—that neglect on the part of two voters out of three on that day—we in the United States are now being governed by a minority, by a Congress elected by only one-third of the people. Sometimes I get very tired of all our talk, our boasting about democracy, about our way of life. If we really believe in our way of life, the very least we can do is to overcome our lethargy—our downright indifference—and get out and vote on election day. Believe me, this tendency to ignore our privilege and our responsibility as citizens is a terribly dangerous thing at this time. Suppose we continue to allow ourselves to be governed by a minority, with the minority growing smaller in each election—what finally happens? Do we find ourselves being governed eventually by a minority of one—a Stalin or a Hitler? It could happen.

What do women want out of life? What do we expect from our Government? I believe that we want health protection for our families. We want good schools for our children. We want a decent standard of living, and we want security in our old age—not too much surely to ask of the richest country in all the world. And, more than anything else in the whole world we want peace—a lasting peace, relief from worries and the everlasting talk of war.

What have we done to achieve these objectives? These things simply aren't going to be handed to us on a platter. We've got to work for them. How do we work for them?

When we were children we were taught that, if we wanted a thing badly enough and put our heart and soul into achieving that objective, we would get it. I have known women—and so have you—to make sacrifices, to work, to drive themselves to a point almost beyond human endurance for a personal objective—for instance, to obtain a college education for a child. If we women were willing to put even a fraction of that concentrated effort, that drive, behind these larger objectives, we could attain them. Of this, I haven't the slightest doubt.

Apparently women never have seen the connection between their objectives—health, education, standard of living, security—and their government. Most of us, even after 28 years, still think of politics as something having no relation to our homes and ourselves. We still shrug our shoulders. We still think of politics as something not quite clean, something to be left to the men. Well, we've left it to the men—and see what we have. My opinion is that had we more women in the Eightieth Congress, that Congress would have done more than serve the high-price propagandists who forced their will upon the Republican leadership.

Examine the history of the Eightieth Congress—and I dare you to point to a single constructive law, with the exception of the Marshall plan, which would serve the best interests of all the people. Some may say the tax bill did. I do not think so. Time will tell—and it may not be very long—whether the tax bill was honestly meant to relieve the taxpayers or was merely a political trick to catch votes.

Let every woman remember that written into the Republican platform at Philadelphia are promises to do many of the things the Republican Congress had the power and failed to do in the Eightieth Congress. How can any thinking person believe in glib words when their votes could have accomplished much that they are now promising. Surely our memories are not so short as to forget their opportunity and their failure to check the high cost of living; to provide a decent housing bill; to extend social security to cover the agricultural and domestic workers; to raise the minimum wage law from forty to seventy-five cents an hour; to provide greater educational opportunities for the children of America. These and many other badly needed welfare laws were sidetracked to make room for that tax relief bill to aid high income taxpayers but which provided very little relief to those in the low income tax brackets.

With millions of people in this country begging for homes, what did the Eightieth Congress do? They listened, not to the people, but to the real-estate lobby.

With the cost of living going up day by day, not a single thing was done to stop it—beyond humbly suggesting that private industry do something about it, and we all know how private industry responded.

With disgraceful and terrifying lack of educational opportunities facing this country, the Federal education bill was left to die in committee, and, speaking about education or lack of it, ask any resident of New York State about the record on education of Governor Dewey, the Republican candidate for President.

Who can trust a party to carry out pledges which were completely ignored when that party had the power and the votes to adopt greatly needed laws to provide a large measure of security and happiness to those mostly in need of such laws, and failed miserably.

I shall not discuss the deliberate shortcomings of the Eightieth Congress in any further detail. They have been dealt with by other speakers but it is true that again and again President Truman proposed legislation aimed to achieve those objectives that every woman wants—only to be ignored by the do-nothing Congress, Republican controlled.

Who elected that Congress? As I have said, about one third of the voters of the Nation, so I come back to the question, "What are we women going to do about the situation?" It would seem to me to be perfectly obvious.

The first thing that every woman should do is to study the qualifications and record of the candidates for Congress in her district and vote for the candidate she considers best qualified and most trustworthy to stand in Congress for the things which are important to her as an individual, as an American, and as a citizen of the world. We cannot escape the fact that we are now citizens of the world and a tragic war-torn world is looking to us for leadership and cooperation. We cannot, and we must not, fail.

I believe the duty of every woman citizen extends beyond merely voting in an election. That is only her first responsibility.

I believe—as all of us here at this Democratic National Convention believe—in our American two-party system. Under that system during the last century and a half we achieved a democracy that is the wonder of the world. It has served us well. Under our two-party system a kind of basic philosophy has grown up around our two major parties. I am a Democrat because the Democratic Party has always been the party of progress, the party that has stood for those objectives that mean so much to women.

I have been in Congress 24 years. During the first 5 years, in what was supposed to be the most prosperous period in American history, I served in a Republican Congress—a Republican Congress drunk with power, absolutely indifferent to the welfare of the little people—a Republican Congress blind to the signs of approaching trouble—a Congress whose stupidity, whose ineptitudes eventually permitted this country to plunge headlong into the worst depression we had ever known.

I recall the despair of the people of this country, Democrats and Republicans alike, in the black days just before Franklin D. Roosevlet gave his first inaugural address on the steps of the Capitol in Washington. And I remember—as we all do—the days following when despair turned to faith and hope and how well the promises made that eventful day were kept by a great President and a Democratic Congress.

During those first 5 years, the Republican Congress in which I served did not pass a single law to benefit all the people of this country, not a single thing was done to prevent this Nation from falling from its highest peak of prosperity into the depths of despair.

We all know what happened when the Democrats took over in 1933. A new philosophy of government was inaugurated. It was a people's government. New methods were tried. The welfare of all the people—that was the objective of the President and the Congress. And how well it succeeded is history. I need not recall that history. You have lived through it.

Unfortunately, World War II was in the making. Many plans had to be postponed. With our allies we stopped the mad march of Hitler. A Democratic Commander in Chief and a Democratic Congress saw us through perhaps the most perilous period in our whole history. Our democratic way of life was preserved.

Then through the tragic death of President Roosevelt, it became the responsibility of President Truman to pick up and carry on the plans that had to be postponed. No man ever gave of himself more generously or honestly or displayed greater courage than President Truman has in this effort—an effort in which he has been thwarted at every turn by a Congress led by a group of cynical, selfish, and wholly irresponsible Republicans.

I have given you some of the reasons why I think it is so important for women in this year, 1948, to do a real job in electing a Democratic President and a Democratic Congress. For, I repeat that there will be no progress made in carrying out the plans of President Roosevelt and President Truman unless we elect Democrats to do the job.

I have been asked repeatedly by women, "What can I do? How can I help?" "I feel so small," they say, "so unimportant. What can one lone woman, however interested she may be, do in this situation?" Well, she can do a great deal. If all the lone women pooled their individual strength, the results achieved would be tremendous.

Work in politics is not glamorous. It is mostly hard work. You encounter many disappointments. It is a test of courage, faith, unselfishness, and strong belief in the objectives that are sought. If I could clothe it in the drama, if I could give it the urgency that inspired you to do the wartime jobs you did so gloriously, there would be no doubt of success. Unfortunately, there is little drama in political work. It takes lots of courage and hard common sense but it is well worth while.

And then so many women complain to me that we have never gotten anywhere in politics—that we have merely multiplied the votes without really achieving anything. Well, of course, we have not made much progress, and while I hate to say this—it would be much easier to praise than criticize—truth compels me to say that the reason we have not elected a greater number of women to public office is because the majority of women have never put their hearts and souls into the work. However, we Democrats should not forget that under President Roosevelt and a Democratic administration a woman for the first time in history was appointed to a Cabinet position and Miss Perkins not only served more years than any other Cabinet member but was responsible for bringing to the Department of Labor great efficiency, which was practically destroyed in 2 years by a Republican Congress through niggardly appropriations to maintain the Department. The Republican Party is not now, and never has been, a friend of labor, and we should not forget that hundreds of women were appointed by President Roosevelt and President Truman to high executive and judicial positions and to the United Nations where a woman we all love—Eleanor Roosevelt—is serving her country and the world with honor and great distinction.

When I was asked to address the convention today, I selected this topic because I know what women can do. I know what they will do if it can be brought home to them that they have the ability and the power to make politics serve their best interests and the best interests of their country.

I have a very great faith in women. I believe that to the average woman, next to her home and her family, her own community is more important than the affairs of the Nation. If that is true, then the place to start political work is in her own community. We understand the needs of our own community. We never hesitate to work in our church organizations, our civic organizations, the Red Cross, Parent-Teacher organizations. Most of these are in a sense controlled by politics. Yet women active in these organizations do not seem to see the connection between their work in these organizations and politics.

If women were truly interested in politics, we wouldn't have election days when only one-third of the voters get out and vote. If we are truly interested and want to strengthen our party, or if we want to advance ourselves politically, I believe that we should be active, intelligent workers not merely during a campaign but throughout the entire year. One thing absolutely necessary for women in politics is for them to stand on their own feet, to work with men but not to depend on men financially or otherwise. As long as women remain subservient to men in politics, they will never achieve greatness. If any woman feels that she cannot succeed politically, I would call her attention to a recent primary election in Maine, where a woman, without funds, with no organization backing her, but with a very good record of service to her district in the House of Representatives, won a victory over three powerful, influential, and wealthy opponents, one of them the Governor of the State.

If, in my enthusiasm, I have said some things you do not like, they have been said out of the experience of a very long and what has sometimes been a difficult life, and not in unkindness, rather with the desire to serve my country, my party, and the women who fought through a generation to make all women free, responsible American citizens.

I have enjoyed all my years in politics. I love my work. And because I want to share the joy I have experienced and because I know there is a great untried spiritual force in women which could be translated into politics and be of great value to promote and sustain fundamental rights, particularly when they are concerned with our own welfare and the welfare of our country, I have spoken to you from my heart. I have the utmost faith in my party, its leadership and the women of America, who, as I have said, want progress, health protection for their families, good schools for their children, a decent standard of living, security in old age, civil rights impartially administered.

These are goals to be attained through a liberal progressive Democratic victory.

Much more than our own welfare as women is at stake in this election—more than the welfare of our children—yes, more than the welfare of our country which we love. Across the seas, in many lands uncounted millions of men and women—the little people we mean when we use the word humanity—are watching the outcome of this election. For to them it may mean the difference between the kind of democratic life we are privileged to enjoy—the kind of unfettered freedom that is ours—and enslavement by a dictator.

They are hoping and praying that God will direct the people of America on election day. Their hopes, their fears, yes, maybe the lives of many of them, will be tied up in the result of the election of 1948.

They have confidence in the party of Woodrow Wilson, of Franklin D. Roosevelt, and Harry S. Truman. They remember that it was another Democrat, Woodrow Wilson, who had the vision and courage, which, had he not been betrayed by a willful group of Republican Senators, would have prevented the Second World War, so infinitely more destructive than the first war. Now we have not a League of Nations but a United Nations. The eyes of the world will be on us during the coming months and across the seas those uncounted millions are watching, wondering, waiting, and praying.

Statement by George J. Burger

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WALTER C. PLOESER
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to extend in the Appendix of the RECORD a statement of George J. Burger, director in charge of the Washington office of the National Federation of Small Business, Inc., made before the Republican Resolutions Committee at the Philadelphia convention. Undoubtedly it had an influence in the resulting small-business plank in the platform which has pleased the members of the House Small Business Committee.

The statement follows:

I am George J. Burger. I appear before you as director of the National Federation of Small Business, Inc. I am in charge of the federation's office at Washington, D. C. The National Federation of Small Business, Inc., is a national organization of small, independent business and professional people in all lines of business and in all walks of life. It has the largest individual membership of any business organization in the United States.

The federation was founded, and is supported by its membership, on the firm belief that our free American way of life must be preserved at all costs. The federation and its members hold that this cherished way of life is best protected and expanded by the actions of the Nation in protecting and expanding our system of freedom of opportunity in the economic field. They hold further that full freedom of opportunity is possible of attainment only in an economic system of free, competitive, independent, capitalistic enterprise. Their considered thought is that the presence of such an economic system is best and most truly indicated by the presence in our economy of a healthy, vigorous system of small, independent businesses.

Members of the federation are deeply and reverently conscious of the vital part played in our way of life by the Federal Government in all its functions, executive, legislative, and judicial. They are aware keenly of the importance of our tried and proven successful political party system as a means of determining the attitude of Government toward current problems. And they recognize the essential part played by the political party platform both in determining the positions of the various parties and in expressing clearly party attitudes to the public in general.

I am here today to urge the adoption of a strong, clear, comprehensive "freedom of opportunity" plank in your party's platform. Naturally, as I have explained earlier, such a plank will take into consideration the requirements and wishes of all independent business and professional people over the Nation.

I would not even attempt to dictate the shape of this plank in your party's platform. That is your right and duty. But I will outline for your consideration, and (I trust) favorable action, the requirements and wishes of independent enterprisers as we of the federation have determined them through periodic Nation-wide polls. In this connection it is significant to note that the actual ballots cast in these polls have been, in every instance, delivered into the hands of Congressmen representing the voting business and professional people.

ANTITRUST PROGRAM

First and foremost, members of the federation desire that a consistent, vigorous, effective antimonopoly campaign be waged by Government. To this end, federation members have repeatedly urged their Congressmen to vote adequate appropriations to the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission. To this end, officers and directors of the federation have constantly contacted Congress and congressional committees, including the congressional Joint Committee of the Economic Report, suggesting that both these agencies be freed to voluntarily inform congressional Committees on Appropriations whenever, and the extent to which, their budget requests have been cut by the Bureau of the Budget.

In this connection, federation members have consistently demanded that Congress strengthen our antitrust laws wherever needed and have urged Congress and Government to refrain from all actions designed to weaken these laws. Recognizing the fact that present antitrust-law-violation penalties are really insignificant and ineffectual, they have repeatedly asked Congress to legislate stiffer penalties for violators of these laws. And, in recognition of the fact that antitrust-law litigation is many times subjected to suffocating delay, it has been requested that Congress act to provide some means of speeding action on this type of litigation.

You may wonder at the stress that federation members lay on this phase of Government activity. The fact is that the tendency in our economy is toward more rapid and more certain concentration of power in the hands of a relatively few business giants, both in private hands and in the hands of cooperative-type organizations. Pacing this trend toward concentration is an increasing disregard for the rights of independent business, which is mirroring itself in increasingly serious curtailment of economic freedom of opportunity. Our members see as one of their main bulwarks the antitrust laws of the Nation, and they demand that these laws be used for that purpose.

SMALL-BUSINESS COMMITTEES

Second. Federation members have repeatedly urged their Congressmen to maintain in Congress active, effective, and intelligently directed committees on small business. It has been suggested time and time again that these committees be given permanent status, with all the rights and privileges of standing committees of the Congress. In this connection, it is not at all amiss to recall the yeoman service the committees rendered to small business during the trying days of the war and to recall the fact that the late change in political control found these committees reestablished. Since that time their actions have been of great benefit in helping to solve some of the special problems in the paper, steel, oil, and rubber fields confronting the small independent.

GOVERNMENT COMPETITION WITH PRIVATE ENTERPRISE

Third. Federation members have demanded constantly that Government cease competition with private enterprise whenever and wherever the national welfare permits. In this connection, it must be emphasized that the ordinary business activities of certain Government corporations and agencies often conflict, and in many instances unfairly, with run-of-the-mill small, independent business activities. I have but to mention reports we have received of tax-free selling by Army and Navy Department stores to other than military personnel, low-price sales by Government departments to their employees and by such agencies as REA to the general public to indicate the need here expressed.

SMALL, INDEPENDENT BUSINESS REPRESENTATION

Fourth. Federation members have consistently urged that independent, small enterprise, and no less than giant enterprise, farmer and labor groups, be adequately represented on appropriate governmental and international boards and commissions by genuine spokesmen drawn from the ranks of small, independent business. That the Congress has passed legislation providing for such representation is a fact, and for that it is to be praised. It is significant to note that federation members in Nation-wide ballot urged this action on their Congressmen. Yet, complete and adequate representation of this nature has not come about.

GOVERNMENT ECONOMY AND TAXES

Fifth. Federation members have indicated repeatedly their consciousness of the fact that, as long as Government expenses remain high, taxes of necessity will remain high. In this knowledge, they have repeatedly expressed themselves on the necessity for the strictest and sincerest possible congressional watchfulness over budgetary matters. They have repeatedly urged that Government expenses be maintained at the barest possible minimum consistent with adequate fulfillment of only absolutely necessary governmental functions. At the same time, recognizing the existence in our taxation system of a number of inequalities, that place a relatively heavier burden on small independent enterprise than they do on giant private and cooperative-type enterprise, they have asked action to equalize our tax system. Chief criticism in this regard has been leveled at Federal taxation of the early stages of corporate income, at the excise tax laws, and at the differing application of these excise tax laws within individual industries.

In this connection, evidence gathered recently by the Small Business Committee of the House amply proved that current rates of taxation on small business have, for all practical effects, about eaten its entire earnings, have made it impossible for small independents to finance desirable plant expansions and modernizations, and are increasingly making small business a less desirable outlet for risk capital.

LABOR PRACTICES

Sixth. Federation members have indicated repeatedly their wish that Congress act to outlaw certain practices of labor which are regarded as monopolistic in nature and oppressive to freedom of opportunity. Among the practices censured is that of industry-wide bargaining, under which system, many times, wage agreements are forced on smaller firms by virtue of the fact that their voice in reaching these agreements has been hardly heard. Federation members have also condemned largely the "follow the leader" type of wage negotiation, wherein agreements reached by labor unions with industry giants are practically forced on smaller firms who are thereby seriously weakened.

However, federation members are aware fully of the fact that any curtailment of giant union power without vigorous antimonopoly action against concentrations of industry with which labor must contend, would result only in weakening labor's ability to present its case. So, they contend that action to destroy the monopoly power of labor must of necessity be accompanied by action designed to curb the monopoly power in industry. They contend further that such action as this would enable a reduction in the size and power of Federal Government, and effectively restore vast areas of freedom of opportunity. It would also relieve the businessman of many onerous, but under present circumstances practically necessary, intrusions of Government on his private affairs.

GOVERNMENT REGULATION OF BUSINESS

Seventh. Federation members have repeatedly demanded that Government to the further practical extent reduce the number and complexity of regulations it exercises over private business. It must be remembered that the small independent is not as well equipped as his larger competitors to keep abreast of current regulations, let alone cope with additional regulations. The practical necessity of doing so, however, therefore forces him into a relatively less favorable position vis-à-vis his giant competitors. In this connection, it is appropriate to recall that federation members have demanded consistently that the problems of our economy be worked out to the furthest extent possible under our free, competitive enterprise system—that wartime controls not be reimposed.

These, gentlemen, are the suggestions offered by the Nation-wide small, independent business and professional people of the National Federation of Small Business, Inc. I call your attention to the fact that no special privileges have been sought by them in any of their stated requirements or wishes, that federation members have sought in all cases only the justice and equality to which they are rightfully entitled.

I urge your favorable attention to, and action on, all of these suggestions, with special emphasis on the first two—without which the last four would be only idle gestures. In these days, when our free way of life is under ceaseless attack from extremists of both the far right and far left, it behooves us to take all necessary actions to strengthen our freedom of opportunity, the one factor that has been the taproot of our success, and which has made us at once the hope and envy of free men everywhere.

For the members of the federation and for myself, I thank you for the opportunity to present these views.

Who Wants Price Controls?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES A. HALLECK

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Indianapolis Star:

WHO WANTS PRICE CONTROLS?

Mr. Truman is demanding that GOP Congressmen reverse the course of legislative action which the voters elected them to take in 1946. His proposals call for increased Federal programs of housing, health, wages, and price rationing, which will cost more billions of the taxpayers' money. He asks return to the price controls of 1946 when the people revolted in disgust and elected a Republican Congress.

Who really wants price controls, and all they involve? Does the farmer want price controls? Does he want the Federal Government to "roll back" his income to whatever level the bureaucrats deem sufficient? Does the worker want price controls? Does he want the Federal Government to set a price on his labor, freeze his wages, and prevent collective bergaining? Does the businessman want price controls? Does he want to have a Federal official tell him that he must sell his products below cost so that he must stop producing or go in the red, lay off workers, or cut their wages? This is what we had in 1945 and 1946. This is what the American people protested against in 1946 when they couldnt' buy the things they needed and wanted because farmers and businessmen refused to produce at a loss.

Who wants price control? The blackmarketeer is the only one who really wants to return to the days of easy profits from greedy people who were willing to break the law to get what they wanted. Who wants price control? Farmers might want controls on farm machinery but not on food. Workers might want it on food but not on wages. Auto makers might want it on steel but not on cars. But price controls cannot be selective. They never have worked and never will work unless everything, wages, prices, and profits are all set by Government formula. In a peacetime economy this is tantamount to Government control over every farm and industry in the country.

President Truman says that "the Eightieth Congress is directly responsible for the existing and ever-increasing cost of living." But his Democratic platform says that the Democratic administration is directly responsible for high farm income (which means high farm prices), high industrial wages (which has caused high industrial prices) and high profits (which result from high prices and inflation of the money market). The Truman administration takes credit for trebling the national income, but it refuses to face the fact that the tripled money supply with a production that has only doubled is the chief reason for inflation.

There is only one answer to high prices. Increased production and decrease of the money supply. Mr. Truman's proposals would force a decrease in production (people will not produce at a loss) and an increase in the money supply (more Government spending). No wonder his haberdashery business in Kansas City went on the rocks.

Enactment of Veterans' Legislation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I submit the following correspondence received by me, as chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, from the national legislative commission, the American Legion, in which is presented that organization's desires concerning veterans' legislation now pending before Congress:

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
Washington, D. C., July 27, 1948.

Hon. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS,
Chairman, Veterans' Affairs Committee,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MADAM CHAIRMAN: When Congress adjourned on June 19, several bills in which the American Legion is particularly interested were either pending before congressional committees, had been favorably reported and were on the House or Senate Calendar, or had been passed by one branch of the Congress.

I enclose herewith a list of some of these items which are in accordance with official mandates of our two governing bodies, our national conventions and national executive committee, all of which had been given some consideration at the time of adjournment. Some of these bills are of vital importance to disabled veterans and their dependents, in view of the serious condition in which they have been placed by virtue of the fact that the cost of living has reached an all-time high. The American Legion bill, H. R. 4488, to create the Veterans' Homestead Act, is on the House Calendar and, if enacted into law, would greatly improve living conditions of many veterans who have been seriously handicapped in their readjustment to civilian life by chaotic housing conditions. Present threats to the security of our country make it absolutely necessary that universal military training and the Mundt-Nixon bill to combat communism be promptly enacted into law.

On behalf of the American Legion, composed of 3,250,000 veterans who honorably served their country, and the American Legion Auxiliary, with a membership of approximately 1,000,000 wives, daughters, mothers, and sisters of war veterans, I strongly urge that the bills enumerated on the attached list be favorably acted on during the present session of the Eightieth Congress.

It will be greatly appreciated if you will call this letter, with its enclosure, to the attention of the House of Representatives, including their insertion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN THOMAS TAYLOR,
Director, National Legislative Commission.

Widows and orphans

H. R. 4242, to increase annual income limitation on pension for: (1) Veterans unmarried to $1,800; married, or with minor child or dependent parent to $3,000; (2) widow without child, or a child, $1,800; widow with child, $3,000; (3) to deem parents dependent for death compensation if annual income not in excess of $1,800 for one parent or $3,000 for both; (4) not count as veterans' income, retirement annuities for age or disability or social security for age, or as dependent's income; expense of last illness, or burial of veteran in excess of $150, or private life insurance payments. Reported to the House July 21, 1947. Objected to on the Consent Calendar January 19, 1948. Objected to and stricken from Consent Calendar February 3, 1948. H. Res. 428 was referred to the Rules Committee January 20, 1948. Rules Committee held hearing June 7, 1948.

H. R. 4900 is in the Committee on Veterans' Affairs. No hearings have been held. Section 2 of the bill has been enacted into law as Public Law 868, Eightieth Congress, approved July 1, 1948 which provides for increased rates of wartime and peacetime death compensation for widows, children, and dependent parents effective September 1, 1948.

Enactment of the remaining sections would increase disability compensation rates of veterans of World Wars I and II, disability pension rates of veterans of World Wars I and II, and death pension rates of widows and children of war veterans.

Presently the award of pension for permanently and totally disabled veterans of World Wars I and II does not compare favorably with that granted veterans of prior wars. Also it is not determined by the VA in innumerable cases that entitlement to pension exists, because of restrictive VA administrative criteria for the assignment of a permanent total rating. Enactment of H. R. 4242, H. R. 4900, and H. R. 5616 would place veterans of World Wars I and II, disabled from non-service-connected causes to a degree rendering them unemployable, in a position which would cause no further demand for service pensions, in my opinion.

The cost of living was considered in this Congress to be the basis for the need of enactment of legislation granting higher wages to all employees of the Federal Government. H. R. 4900, the Sarbacher bill, would elevate compensation and pension rates of disabled veterans and pension rates of widows and children who are also experiencing financial distress because of living costs.

The $1,000 and $2,500 annual income limitation pattern was adopted in the first veterans' regulation promulgated as an Executive order by the President following enactment of the iniquitous Economy Act in 1933 in the depths of the depression. The House Rules Committee denied a rule sought by the chairman, Committee on Veterans' Affairs after hearing testimony of the chairman, Subcommittee on Compensation and Pensions, on H. R. 4242. The enactment of this bill would elevate the limitation to a reasonable extent and this is made necessary by the fact that today, 15 years later, we are in the era of greatest prosperity this country has ever known with living costs at the highest peak in the Nation's history. Alteration of the basis for income computation by means of certain exclusions provided in the bill would permit, as would the elevation of the limitation, placement on the pension rolls of many worthy disabled veterans and surviving widows and children of those who served and placement on compensation rolls of dependent parents of veterans whose deaths resulted from service.

H. R. 2716, to provide additional disability compensation for veterans of World Wars I and II for wife, child, or children and dependent parents. Hearings before subcommittee of House Veterans' Affairs Committee July 2 and 10, 1947.

H. R. 5301, to amend paragraph 2 of part VIII of Veterans Regulation No. 1 (a) to extend education and training benefits of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act to unremarried widows of World War II veterans whose death was service-connected; and to their unmarried children born prior to January 1, 1947. Hearing was held by the House Veterans' Committee May 20, 1948.

H. R. 3691, to amend paragraph VI of Veterans Regulation 10, to provide compensation or pension to children of deceased World War I or II veterans after their eighteenth birthday while pursuing a course of instruction at an approved school not to exceed 4 years if commenced before age 21; and to provide subsistence allowance of $50 per month to children over 16 years of age of such veterans whose death was due to service in addition to compensation and earnings not to exceed 48 months; such benefits to cease at age 21 if child is entitled in own right to vocational rehabilitation or education or training under parts VII or VII of Veterans Regulation No. 1 (a). Bill referred to a subcommittee of Veterans' Affairs Committee, and some action is needed now. H. R. 3840 is an identical bill.

World War I Veterans

H. R. 5616 is in the Committee on Veterans' Affairs. Hearings were held March 18 and May 14, 1948, by the Subcommittee on Compensation and Pensions.

This bill would require consideration of developmental abnormalities and congenital defects in evaluation of extent of disability for pension purposes in determining entitlement to benefits of permanently and totally disabled war veterans. It would liberalize by statute the requirements as to age and percentage of disability for the assignment of permanent and total disability ratings for pension purposes.

H. R. 1235, to provide 100-percent compensation for presumptive service-connected disabilities for World War I veterans. (Before the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs; no hearing.)

H. R. 4243, to amend Veterans' Regulation 3 (a), to provide that any veteran with active tuberculosis of compensable degree which has become completely arrested, shall be rated totally disabled for 2 years following date of arrest and 50 percent for an additional 5 years, and 40 percent thereafter for life if diagnosed far advanced, or 30 percent for life if moderately advanced or less. Reported July 19, 1947. House Resolution 438: Rule for its consideration filed January 20, 1948; on which hearing was held June 7, 1948.

H. R. 4007, to authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to pay not to exceed $1,600 on the purchase price of an auto for any war veteran entitled to compensation for loss or permanent loss of use of one or both feet or one or both hands or permanent impairment of vision of both eyes of certain prescribed status. This bill is on the Consent Calendar and was passed over without prejudice April 20, May 3, June 8, and June 16, 1948. House Resolution 308, a rule for its consideration, has been pending before the House Rules Committee since July 17, 1947, without action. S. 1391, companion bill, passed the Senate July 19, 1947.

Insurance

H. R. 1328, to provide $10,000 national service life insurance (gratuitous-automatic) for persons who were killed or died, or who were totally disabled or taken prisoner between October 8, 1940, and April 20, 1942; also gratuitous insurance for 120 days after enlistment prior to September 3, 1945; protects flying cadets in same manner between October 8, 1940, and June 3, 1941.

Hearing held by the full committee February 4, 1948.

Social security—Credit for time in armed services

H. R. 69 provides service credit for veterans for purposes of title II, Social Security Act—in other words, protection for those in the armed services formerly in positions covered by social security. This bill is pending before House Ways and Means Committee.

National cemeteries

H. R. 1109, to provide for one national cemetery in every State and Territory and such other national cemeteries in the States and Territories as may be needed for the burial of war veterans as provided for in section 281, title 24, United States Code, as amended. Bill reported to the House July 14, 1947, and objected to July 21, 1947, when it was called up on the Consent Calendar.

HOUSING

Veterans Homestead Act of 1948

H. R. 4488, the American Legion bill to create the Veterans Homestead Act of 1948 was reported to the House May 3, 1948, and is on House Calendar. This bill would greatly relieve the chaotic housing conditions faced by veterans in their desperate efforts to secure by rental or purchase housing at prices they can afford to pay. At its meeting in May 1948, the national executive committee of the American Legion adopted a mandate supporting the so-called Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill provided the provisions of H. R. 4488 were included as an amendment to that bill. Any housing legislation enacted during this session of Congress should be amended to include the provisions of H. R. 4488, as presently on the House Calendar.

NATIONAL SECURITY

Universal military training

H. R. 4278, American plan for universal military training, was reported to the House on July 26, 1947. Regardless of the fact that sentiment throughout the country was strongly in favor of universal military training, as evidenced by all national polls as well as letters, telegrams, and petitions sent to Members of Congress, the House Rules Committee has refused to issue a rule in order that the bill could be debated and voted on by all Members of the House. Since the recess of June 19, more American citizens than ever before are in favor of universal military training. We ask immediate consideration and passage of H. R. 4278.

REHABILITATION

World War I and II and widows and orphans

S. 2125, to provide additional disability compensation for veterans of World Wars I and II for wife, child, or children and dependent parents. This is pending before Senate Finance Committee.

S. 1458, to amend paragraph VI of Veterans Regulation 10, to provide compensation or pension to children of deceased World War I or II veterans after their eighteenth birthday while pursuing a course of instruction at an approved school not to exceed 4 years if commenced before age 21; and to provide a subsistence allowance of $50 per month to children over 16 years of age of such veterans whose death was due to service in addition to compensation and earnings not to exceed 48 months; such benefits to cease at age 21 if child is entitled in own right to vocation rehabilitation or education or training under parts VII or VIII of Veterans' Regulation 1 (a). Bill now pending before the Senate Finance Committee.

S. 2258, to increase annual income limitation on pension for: (1) Veterans unmarried to $1,800; married, or with minor child or dependent parent to $3,000; (2) widow without child, or a child, $1,800; widow with child $3,000; (3) to deem parents dependent for death compensation if annual income not in excess of $1,800 for 1 parent or $3,000 for both; (4) not count as veteran's income: retirement annuities for age or disability or social security for age; or as dependent's income: expense of last illness, or burial of veteran in excess of $150, or private life insurance payments. Hearing held by the Senate Finance Committee on May 26, 1948.

Insurance

H. R. 4160, to amend section 602 (n) of the National Service Life Insurance Act, as amended to provide: (1) Waiver of premiums, for 6 months continuous total disability of insured, becoming due on or before October 8, 1940, and prior to this enactment, upon application within 1 year after enactment; (2) premiums paid during effective waiver period shall be applied to payment of premiums later becoming due unless insured requests a refund; (3) the beneficiary, within 1 year after death of insured or enactment, may apply for waiver if insured died without applying; (4) application filed by the beneficiary shall have same effect as if filed by insured; (5) where premiums are not waived solely because insured died prior to continuance of total disability for 6 months, upon such proof filed within 1 year after insured's death or enactment, the insurance shall be deemed in force at death, the unpaid premiums shall be waived and that subsection (r) of section 602, which requires that such unpaid premiums become a lien against the proceeds, be repealed. This bill passed the House July 25, 1947.

Social security

H. R. 6777, social security benefits which should be amended by the inclusion of protection for those in the armed services formerly in positions covered by social security—a service credit for veterans for purposes of title II, Social Security Act (language of H. R. 69). H. R. 6777 passed the House June 14, 1948, and is now before the Senate Finance Committee and should be amended to provide this credit for honorably discharged members of the armed services.

AMERICANISM

Anti-Communist bill

H. R. 5852, to combat un-American activities by requiring the registration of Communist-front organizations, and for other purposes.

This bill passed the House May 19, 1948, by the overwhelming vote of 319 and was referred to the Senate Judiciary Committee. This bill is a measure which is most necessary at this time, and should be enacted in the special session.

HOUSING

Veterans Homestead Act of 1948

H. R. 4488 was favorably reported to the House May 3, 1948, and is now on the House calendar.

A companion bill, S. 1759, is now pending before the Senate Finance Committee.

We urgently request that favorable action be taken upon this bill and veterans' housing legislation be enacted by this Congress before adjournment.

S. 1901, provides that all disability benefits paid to a veteran for service-connected disability will not be classed as income in determining eligibility for occupancy in low-rental housing projects. This bill is before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee.

NATIONAL SECURITY

Universal military training

The Senate Armed Services Committee has held hearings on S. 651—the Legion-sponsored UMT bill.

We urgently request that a companion bill, H. R. 4278, favorably reported in the House and now on the calendar, be passed in the Senate before adjournment.

Memorial to Susan B. Anthony

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. KATHARINE ST. GEORGE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following remarks of my colleague the Hon. KENNETH B. KEATING, when he placed a wreath on the grave of Miss Susan B. Anthony as the representative of the seven women Representatives in the Congress:

This wreath I have placed on the grave of Susan Brownell Anthony on behalf and as the representative of the seven women, my distinguished colleagues, who now serve their country in the Congress of the United States. Each of them, I am sure, if she could be here, would voice her ambition to make her contribution to the welfare of the Nation patterned on the life and works of this zealous, valiant campaigner for right and justice whose memory we honor today.

This daughter of Rochester belongs to the ages. Let us who follow profit by her example by clinging steadfastly and, if necessary, militantly to the ideals and principles which conscience, rather than expediency, dictates.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I desire to include the following two articles from the Rochester Times-Union describing the ceremonies:

WOMAN'S RIGHTS DRIVE SPURRED AT SESSION HERE

(By Anne Griffith)

The Woman's Rights Movement, vigorous after a century-long, purposeful life, was given a new turn on its one hundredth birthday in Rochester today.

A plea to turn the movement into coeducational channels was presented by Miss M. Eunice Hilton, Ph. D., dean of women at Syracuse University, at the start of all-day centennial observances here.

The celebration moved here today after a 2-day program in Seneca Falls, thus paralleling the first woman's rights convention in 1948, which met for 2 days in the canal village, then adjourned to Rochester.

SPEAK AT CHURCH SESSION

Miss Hilton and Miss Alma Lutz, of Boston, author of many books on the movement and of a yet unpublished life of Rochester's famed woman's rights leader, Susan B. Anthony, spoke this morning in First Unitarian Church, which 100 years ago gave shelter to the history making at its former site in Fitzhugh Street N.

Mayor Dicker and the Reverend David Rhys Williams, D. D., pastor of the church, delivered greetings. The church ceremonies were followed by a luncheon at Gannett House, a pilgrimage to Miss Anthony's grave in Mount Hope Cemetery, and an open house and dedication of a State marker at the refurbished Anthony home at 17 Madison Street.

Miss Hilton, speaking on "Women in the World Today," declared: "The psychological tenor of the times has changed; women must use different techniques to achieve their aims, notably increasing the activities in which they work side by side with men in the community."

SAME FIGHT CONTINUES

"We should not be satisfied until superior women hold the positions held by inferior men today," she held. "The breach between the sexes needs healing, but not at the expense of stopping one iota short of the aim of the women assembled in 1848—the aim of securing the place for woman for which her natural powers and desires fit her."

She reminded the listeners, which included nationally known women leaders and relatives of the first suffragists, that the fight today is the same as the fight in 1848—"It must be directed against attitudes which die hard, regarding 'woman's place.'"

Miss Lutz reviewed the history of the first convention.

"In order to understand why women at this time felt it so important to call conventions to discuss woman's rights, we must look at the laws affecting women and at the traditions which had been built up regarding woman's sphere," she said.

WOMAN'S SPHERE DESCRIBED

"By 1848, only Negroes, Indians, convicts, the insane—and women were disfranchised. In most of our States a married woman had no property rights. * * * Only one college, Oberlin, admitted women. * * * A very definite sphere had been marked out for women, limited to her husband, her home, and her children. To step out of this sphere was to defy what was then thought to be the will of God. * * * The only occupations open to women were housework, sewing, teaching and, in some localities, factory work."

She said American democracy has been "immeasurably strengthened" by granting the vote to women. "But until women are recognized by our Federal Constitution and by all of our State constitutions as complete citizens, it will still need strengthening."

The Reverend Doctor Williams called upon the women present "to carry out the wider implications of that convention whose centennial we celebrate today."

"I believe," he declared, "that if those noble women of 1848 were living in this third year of the atomic age they would be bravely fighting for some kind of world order to lift the crushing burden of armament from the back of all humanity and to secure civilization from self-destruction."

Among notable women present were Dr. K. Frances Scott, of Smith College, president of the National Federation of Business and Professional Women; Miss Marjorie C. Smith, assistant dean of women at Syracuse University, State president of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, Inc.; Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, of Washington, D. C., past chairman of the National Women's Party; and Mrs. Dora Steven, of Croton-on-the-Hudson, national officer of the Women's Party.

MAKE PILGRIMAGE TO GRAVE

Luncheon at Gannett House was served by Women's Alliance of First Unitarian Church under supervision of Mrs. Sherman A. Clute.

The mayor and members of his committee, including Councilman William A. Doane, Public Service Bureau Director Harry J. Gaynor, and Commissioner Harold S. W. MacFarlin led the one procession to Miss Anthony's grave and placed wreaths. A bronze grave marker was placed by Mrs. Edgar B. Cook, representing Irondequoit Chapter, DAR. Representative KENNETH B. KEATING also participated.

Special exhibits of Anthony documents were shown today at Rochester Museum, Public Library, and Historical Society.

SUSAN B. ANTHONY MARKER UNVEILED IN FETE CLIMAX

The one hundredth anniversary celebration of the first Woman's Rights Convention ended here yesterday with a tribute to Susan B. Anthony, famed leader in women's fight for equality.

Climax of the day-long observance, which followed a 2-day program in Seneca Falls, scene of the first Woman's Rights Convention, was the unveiling of a State marker at Miss Anthony's home, 17 Madison Street.

This ceremony followed a meeting at First Unitarian Church, to which, in 1848, the first convention was adjourned, a luncheon, and a pilgrimage to the grave of Miss Anthony in Mount Hope Cemetery, where Mayor Dicker and others placed wreaths.

PRESENTED BY MRS. GANNETT

W. Stephen Thomas, director of the Rochester Museum, presided at the marker presentation ceremony. Mrs. Frank Gannett, member of the State Board of Regents, made the presentation. Susan B. Anthony 2d, New York, grandniece of the suffragist, unveiled the marker, and Mrs. George B. Howard accepted it on behalf of the Susan B. Anthony Memorial Home.

Blake McKelvey, city historian, in remarks at the ceremony said that citizens never do reach the ultimate goals for which they strive and that this was Miss Anthony's challenge. He added that it is not alone those who initiate great movements but those who struggle to carry them on who reach that final triumph that Miss Anthony knew.

Tribute to Mrs. Howard, moving spirit behind the Rochester portion of the centennial, was paid by Frank Gannett.

In the ceremony at the grave Mayor Dicker said he knew he spoke for the people of Rochester when "we honor and revere" Susan B. Anthony and express pride in her achievements.

Representative KENNETH B. KEATING, placing a wreath at the grave for the seven women Members of Congress, urged others to follow Susan Anthony's example by "clinging steadfastly and, if necessary, militantly, to the ideals that marked her struggle."

Susan B. Anthony 2d declared, "The future must be fought for and worked for, and not along national lines. Women all over the world today are united in one desire—peace."

Roses were sent to the ceremony at the grave by Miss Margaret Shanks, 81-year-old Canandaiguan who was Susan B. Anthony's nurse.

Wreaths were also placed by Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, Washington, past chairman of the National Woman's Party and one of four suffragists jailed in 1917 in attempting to vote; Mrs. William H. Goldring, Cobleskill, president-elect of the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. Guy W. Cheney, Corning, former State federation president and assembly woman; Mrs. Robert W. Rowe, Rochester, president of the New York State Congress of Parents and Teachers; Dr. K. Frances Stott, Northampton, Mass., national president of the Business and Professional Women's Clubs; Miss Marjorie Smith, Syracuse, State president of the Business and Professional Women's Clubs, and Councilman William Doane.

Flowers from the gardens of residences at 141 and 151 Plymouth Avenue South were also laid on Miss Anthony's grave. The residences were the homes of Mary and Sarah Hallowell, who attended the first Woman's Rights Convention in 1848 and in their later years were close friends of Miss Anthony.

Mrs. Howard reported today that numerous checks had been received for the Anthony Memorial Home from persons unable to attend yesterday's functions. Among them was one from Mrs. Worthington Scranton, Scranton, Pa., Pennsylvania national Republican committeewoman, sent in honor of Mrs. Charles W. Weis, Jr., Rochester, New York State national GOP committeewoman.

The Legislative Situation and High Prices

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ALEXANDER WILEY
OF WISCONSIN

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, July 29 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD the text of a current broadcast in which I participated with the distinguished and veteran news commentator, Mr. George E. Reedy. In this broadcast Mr. Reedy sheds light on the legislative situation, and discusses in particular the problem of high prices. With his customary keen analysis he has pointed up many facts in which our citizens will be deeply interested. As many of my colleagues know, Mr. Reedy is Washington representative of a great new radio chain, the Arrowhead Network, which represents a vital addition to the Nation's broadcasting scene.

There being no objection, the broadcast was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Good evening. This is George Reedy, your Arrowhead Network reporter in the Nation's and the news capital of the world, Washington.

Here on Capitol Hill, on the floors of Congress which President Truman has deliberately made the first battleground of his campaign for election to the Presidency, there are a lot of furiously angry men, these days.

Southern blood is at the boiling point, and the Republicans—to a man—are only slightly less than furious. Mr. Truman—who has caused it all—is a bit miffed, too. Then, of course, there's that element called the people. They're mad, also.

In fact, things are not too calm, along the Potomac, right at this point. Everybody would like to think that something constructive will emerge from this special session of Congress, but the odds are heavily against it.

When Mr. Truman used the announcement of his special-session-call as the kicker, in his acceptance-speech-indictment of the Republicans at the Philadelphia convention, he removed any possibility of a bipartisan approach to the problems he submitted for consideration by the Congress, Tuesday.

IMPOSSIBILITY OF PRESIDENT'S PROGRAM

He was asking for a legislative miracle, when he demanded that Congress do something about high prices. And it was very plain, that inflationary trends cannot be curbed by limited price-controls and rationing, without the removal of farm price supports, and drastic reductions in public spending and wages.

Mr. Truman didn't ask for any of these things. Yet, he expects to saddle the Republicans with responsibility for present living costs—if they fail to accomplish it. He is happy to claim full credit for high wages, while blaming the Republicans for high prices. Yet, the two, are in effect, Siamese twins.

CIVIL-RIGHTS ISSUE

So much for the Republican's anger. As to the beef of the Dixiecrats, those boys south of the Mason and Dixon's line, the cause of their high temperatures is, of course, that matter of the civil-rights issue.

It could very well be, if racial legislation is pushed to the front of the rest of the President's program, his program may receive no attention at all. It most certainly will drive a deeper wedge between the angry southerners and the Truman administration.

Then, of course, there is that matter of the people. The people, meaning you and you and you—according to reports—have been getting madder and madder about prices. The big question has been, Will their sputtering indignation get under the skins of the reassembled Congress?

PRICES MAY BE GOING DOWN

Well, whether it does or not, and whether they do anything about it or not, I have some small evidence to the effect that prices may have reached their peak—at least on one commodity that most of us like to have on tables—namely, meat. Here in Washington, that is.

And whether President Truman realizes it or not, there are many signs of lower prices in many things, all over—not alone in Washington.

For instance, my authority in the matter of meat and staple goods prices, is Mrs. Reedy, who keeps house for Toby, our kingsize tiger cat, and me. Mrs. R., who always asks the price of any meat and such before she makes her purchases—and is, therefore, the bane of existence for those guys who weigh their thumb with the meat—tells me this about prices here in Washington:

Round steak, which up to last Saturday retailed in the chain stores at $1.15 per pound, has suddenly dropped to 98 cents. Porterhouse, which wasn't even available at $1.25 a pound for some time now, is back on the butchers' counters—and at 98 cents a pound. Whole hams—good, nationally known brands—which have been 79 cents a pound for some time, now are available at 59 cents and seem to be in plentiful supply—as do the other meats.

"As to staples, however, these seems to be no apparent change, either up or down. But there just seems to be a trend toward a reduction in meats, generally, of about 20 cents a pound, and a comparable reduction with regard to fresh produce."

Well, to me, that's the report of an expert in buying in the meat and grocery shops here in the Nation's capital.

But strictly on by own, I've noticed the reductions in things here in the East, such as radios, white shirts, shoes, and things, which, while they may not mean much, do indicate a trend to a point where even the common man so dear to the hearts of the Henry Wallaces and such—can start envisioning again—the day when they can start to live.

ITEMS BECOMING AVAILABLE

For instance, white shirts which were practically unavailable not so long ago—and when available—at not less than $5.50 to $10 each, can now be had in some of the best shops, at from $3.50 to $5—and good shirts, too.

Some authorities on inflation have been insisting that consumer resistance never amounts to more than talk. But those brands of shoes that formerly sold at $10 and $12—and which went to $15 and $20—were jet-propelled downward, this week, right here in Washington and other eastern cities, to $15 and $11.

Many theaters—movie and legitimate—have reduced their admission prices because of empty seats—and again, merchants are plagued by worries of consumer resistance—which, no doubt, is one of the causes, at least, of the trend.

I'd like to repeat, that whether Congress does—or has done anything about high prices, there are plenty of indications such as I have cited—that they are coming down. That doesn't go for steel, or steel products, as yet, though.

COMMITTEE WORK

But to get back on Congress. Committees on both sides of Capitol Hill have been giving the once-over-lightly to the President's suggestions to combat inflation. And Wisconsin's legislators appear to me to be most active.

For example, Wisconsin's junior Senator, JOE MCCARTHY, is a member of the Senate Banking Committee, and the Executive Expenditures Committee. His colleague, ALEXANDER WILEY, the senior Senator of his State, heads the Judiciary Committee and is a member of the Foreign Relations Committee.

CHAIRMAN WILEY, OF JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

And, speaking of Senator WILEY, in the century of years since Wisconsin became a State, there have been only two Members of Congress from the Badger State who have served as chairmen of the powerful Judiciary Committees of either House.

One of them, of course, is ALEXANDER WILEY, whom I just mentioned. Senator WILEY is from Chippewa Falls, Wis., and has served as chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee since 1947.

And here is an interesting fact—one of those things I never knew until just now—just 40 years ago, John James Jenkins, Member of Congress, also from Wisconsin's Chippewa Falls, served as chairman. But then, of course, you folks in Wisconsin knew that all along, I suppose.

DROUGHT-RELIEF BILL

And to show you how Senators WILEY and MCCARTHY are in there pitching for Wisconsin, they jointly sponsored and introduced a bill on the opening day of this special session of Congress, which, if enacted, would help solve the terrific problem facing northern Wisconsin's dairy farmers, due to the drought.

The bill would enable the Agriculture Department to pay subsidies on livestock feed shipped into northern Wisconsin. And on livestock sent out of that area for feeding purposes.

Senator WILEY is here in the Arrowhead Network's Washington studios with me, and there are a lot of things I'd like to ask him, which I know you folks would like to hear the answers to, also.

Well, Senator, the last I heard you were talking things over with our top Navy officers in Hawaii about America's mandated islands in the Pacific. Then all of a sudden it was Aloha Hawaii, and I found you back in the Capital.

Senator WILEY. Yes, George, when we heard that the President called the special session of Congress, I took the first ship back to the United States. It has always been my belief that when Congress is in session, it is the duty of a legislator to be on hand in order to represent the interest of his constituents.

NO LEGISLATIVE MAGIC

Mr. REEDY. Then, Senator, you expect that a lot of this legislation that the President has recommended will be passed by the Congress?

Senator WILEY. No; hold on a minute, George; I didn't say that. I can't predict just what the Congress will do regarding the President's request, but I think I know the feeling of the Congress and of the American people, and I can summarize that feeling as follows: You can't legislate America into the millenium. You can't expect Congress by a wave of the legislative wand to pass a lot of public laws and iron out every problem in our country today. I don't mean that we should expect everything to solve itself. But I do mean that the real solution to America's questions will be found at the grass roots of America, yes, the grass roots of Wisconsin, where the farmers, the businessmen, the laboring men, the housewives, and others, work and produce and meet their own problems.

BERLIN CRISIS

Mr. REEDY. Well, Senator, that may be true about the domestic picture, but you certainly can't expect the foreign situation to iron itself out just by hopes.

Senator WILEY. That is absolutely right, George. The present crisis in Berlin calls for strong American action, for clear thinking, and for a re-evaluation of our entire relations with Russia. The American people want peace. They have had enough of war. At the same time, they know that appeasement won't work with Russia. As a matter of fact, the greatest single failure of the President's whole speech is that he failed to mention the problem which is uppermost in the minds of the American people. That problem is: Where do we go from here in our relations with the Russians? How can we maintain peace with them without sacrificing our principles?

Mr. REEDY. Well, Senator, that is well and good for our foreign relations, but what about all these problems here at home? Doesn't the Congress understand the questions which the American people face?

DAMAGES OF INFLATION

Senator WILEY. It certainly does, George. We all recognize that we have a 50-cent dollar today. We recognize that many groups in our country have suffered real injury and hardship because of the rising cost of living. We know, for example, that our old people are trying to live on small pensions, that our white-collar workers, that teachers and others have been hit hard. Congress has made progress toward solving those problems. But the one thing that will really bring prices down is not, as I have said, some magic hokuspokus from Washington, D. C. It is the old-fashioned solution of full production which has always solved the problem of inflation when we have been confronted with it in the past. When supply meets up with demand prices tumble.

Unless we can get full production, unless management and labor and agriculture can work together as a team, then we can't expect the inflation problem to be licked. Work is the answer and has always been the answer to America's price problem. We must not forget too that our whole foreign aid program has aggravated inflation here at home by siphoning goods in short supply. That means that more than ever it is absolutely necessary to get a real volume of goods in order to bring supply into balance with demand.

FREEDOM AND PEACE

The people of Wisconsin don't want to be dictated to from Washington, D. C. They do want the opportunity to work out their own problems insofar as possible by themselves. They don't want black markets as we had in the past when OPA was riding roughshod. They want freedom here at home and peace abroad. That is why they are looking to the White House and to the State Department for a strong, sensible stand on the Berlin crisis, freedom and peace. Those are America's needs today and in the days ahead.

Mr. REEDY. Thanks very much, Senator WILEY. And now, until this very same time next week, folks, this is George Reedy, your Arrowhead Network reporter in the Nation's and the news capital of the world, saying good night from Washington.

Federal Aid to Education Should Be Passed at Special Session

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ESTES KEFAUVER

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, all of us recognize the importance of education in a democracy. Our hopes for world peace, world understanding, and the survival of freedom are tied up in education. We know that ignorance is the breeding ground for hatreds, mistrust, prejudice, and oppression. The concept of a democratic government, where every man would have a voice and the rights of all would be respected, was born of enlightened minds. It was born in the minds of men who threw back the cloak of tyranny to get at the basic truths that all men were created equal and were endowed by their Creator with the inalienable rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. To preserve these truths, to keep them alive and working in an age when they are threatened by false propaganda and ideologies of oppression, education is essential.

Yet today, when the structure of our free society is being attacked from all sides, education, instead of being able to come to the rescue, is itself in the midst of one of the most severe crises in its history. The end of the war found the schools with an inadequate supply of teachers, out-dated equipment, buildings in need of repair, and not enough money to stretch over budget increases produced by the high costs of living. In the three intervening years the situation has not changed. Attempts have been made all over the country to bring teachers' salaries up, as has been done here in Tennessee, but these increases have not been able to catch up with the rapidly climbing prices and better-paying jobs in other fields.

The counties in Tennessee, along with the State, are paying, for the most part, every bit as much as they can afford, to get their children educated, but today the State and local dollars just cannot be made to go all the way around. There are more than 50,000 children in America, mostly in rural areas, who are getting no education at all today. Approximately two million more of our children are not getting the benefits of a really good and sound education because of inadequate school facilities and temporarily certified, poorly trained teachers. One classroom out of every eight in the Nation has teachers who are not qualified for the job. A total of more than 102,000 teachers were teaching on substandard licenses in 1947–48.

With democracy at the crossroads, we cannot afford to furnish our children with anything but the very best education that it is humanly possible to give them. It is our moral duty to them and to ourselves. If we do not have the money, then we have to get it somewhere else. And the only other source we can look to for help is the Federal Government.

For this reason, I strongly favor a Federal aid to education program and I promise to do everything within my power to see that a bill is speeded through Congress providing for such aid. When I first came to Congress I filed a bill and have had one pending since. A bill has been reported by the subcommittee on Education in the House. The bill passed by the Senate called for $300,000,000 to be distributed among the 48 States on a basis of the number of children between the ages of 5 and 17 and the total income of residents in each State. If the bill had passed, Tennessee would have gotten an estimated $14,785,000. I believe that such aid would serve to strengthen the structure of our State educational system and be of benefit to all of us.

Federal aid would be offered, according to the terms of the bill before the last session of Congress, without Federal interference in the State schools. The money would be turned over to the States to be distributed locally by them.

Federal aid to education would help to reduce the extreme inequality of opportunity which now exists in various schools. The ratio now stands at 60 to 1 in the amounts spent per student. The better schools spend as high as $220 a year per pupil, while the poorest schools spend only $3.70. The proposals for Federal aid set $50 as the minimum which should be spent for the education of every child in this country. In a 1940 inventory, more than 1,175,000 children were in school systems which spent $18.50 or less per student. It is unbelievable to most of us that in this richest of countries so little could be spent for the education of such a great number of our future citizens. During 1944–45, when we were neglecting many of our children by furnishing poor schools and poor teachers, we spent $2,600,000,000 on elementary and secondary schools. During the same year we spent $2,700,000,000 on tobacco and $7,100,000,000 on liquor. Those figures speak for themselves. Federal aid would help to rectify this appalling situation and to more nearly balance the educational opportunities offered children in poorer communities against those offered to children in the wealthier sections of our country.

Federal aid to education is likewise needed to lessen the differences in amounts spent on education by States. Most of the money would go, of course, to the States now spending the least on salaries of teachers who are now paid on an average of $1,000 a year and under in the poorest States and $3,000 and over in the richest States. Teaching pays on an average of less than $2,000 a year in 60 percent of the schools in this country, and less than $1,200 in 16 percent of the cases. These salaries lack a good deal of being decent living wages in this period of high costs and they lack a good deal of measuring up to what people in other lines of work and professions are getting. Teaching actually pays less than factory work. From 1941–45, 350,000 teachers left their schools to go to war and to take better jobs, and few of them have been lured back into the profession by the present salaries. Federal aid will help to pull teacher salaries up, particularly in the States where they are now grossly underpaid. And more money will bring better-trained and better-qualified men and women into this vital profession.

If one State has poor educational facilities, the whole Nation bears the burden. Americans are constantly changing residence from State to State and the education that they get in one State may be put to use in another. Americans are also being called on more and more to give intelligent answers to national problems. It is false economy from which all of us will eventually suffer not to make Federal aid available when it could furnish much needed relief to our poverty-stricken school systems.

The Washington Post, one of the great newspapers of this country, in making an impassioned plea for Federal aid to education recently, pointed out: "Education is not a luxury. It is the fulcrum of a democratic society." To the words of the Post editorial writer, I would add the additional assertion that if we are to rid ourselves of such existing evils as juvenile delinquency, crime waves, abuse of minority groups, and social and economic inefficiency in general, we must give to every child in America the chance to find a better way of life through education. That is democracy's answer to communism, fascism, and all the other oppressive doctrines which thrive on mass ignorance and half-truths. When every person, through education, can intelligently and wisely contribute to the solving of a democracy's problems, a better and freer government than has ever been known to man will come into being.

The Present State of the American Merchant Marine

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. HENRY D. LARCADE, JR.

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I wish to submit a copy of a brief summary concerning the present state of the American merchant marine issued by the National Federation of American Shipping, Inc., of Washington, D. C.

Mr. Speaker, it is my opinion that this statement should be of interest to all of the Members of Congress and the country generally, as I feel that the American merchant marine problem is one that is of paramount interest to all of the citizens of the United States, especially, since our past history has demonstrated the importance of the American merchant marine as a requisite to our national defense, as well as to the importance of this necessary industry to our peacetime needs and to maintain our position among the nations of the world in this field. The article follows:

THE PRESENT STATE OF THE AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE

Notwithstanding the construction of a huge merchant fleet, largely of standardized types designed for war purposes, the United States is today faced with a critical problem in maintaining an adequate fleet of passenger and freight vessels.

We have only 49 active passenger vessels each with a capacity for approximately 100 or more persons compared with 97 ships of similar category before World War II. We are losing our rightful place in passenger trade on the most important world trade routes to other nations who are building new and modern ships of this class.

Our privately owned dry cargo fleet, while composed largely of fast, modern ships, is only a small fraction larger than before the war at which time we carried less than 30 percent of our own imports and exports. True, we do have a somewhat larger privately owned fleet operating in the foreign trades today but our domestic trades have been greatly diminished.

Except for some tankers being constructed, the completion of one bulk ore carrier for an American steamship company, and the finishing up of a few ships for foreign ownership, our shipyards are without the necessary backlog of work to keep them in operating condition.

These matters deeply affect our commerce and trade, and our national security. The President of the United States on March 11, 1947 (nearly a year and a half ago) appointed an advisory committee on the merchant marine. This committee, composed of practical-minded businessmen unassociated with shipping or shipbuilding, was requested to furnish the President with its recommendations as to a sound merchant-marine policy which would assist him in formulating proposals to the Congress for any necessary legislation.

PRESIDENT CONCERNED

Appointing the committee, here is what the President told each prominent member:

"With no new passenger liners and few cargo vessels scheduled to be built in the immediate future, the Nation is not assured of the existence of a balanced and modern merchant fleet. This is a matter that concerns not only our commerce and trade, but our national security as well.

"I feel that the whole problem should be carefully studied in all its phases by a group of citizens equipped by background and training to counsel the Government and assist in formulating a program to strengthen our merchant marine. * * * After studying the problem, the committee should present for my consideration its recommendations. * * * Its findings will assist me in developing a sound merchant-marine policy and in formulating proposals to the Congress for any necessary legislation. The heads of the executive departments and agencies concerned stand ready to give you all possible aid."

What has happened in that 17-month period? Here it is—

The President's Advisory Committee on the Merchant Marine, composed of top officials from the Chrysler Corp., Eastman Kodak Co., Westinghouse Electric Corp., Pacific Gas & Electric Co., and the president of the Society of Naval Architects and Marine Engineers, held more than 5 months of hearings. It heard testimony from every segment of the maritime industry; from Government agencies; from the military; from labor; and from importers and exporters.

In its report to the President on November 1, 1947, the Committee summarized its conclusions by declaring:

"The Committee concludes that the best prospect for a strong progressive merchant marine would be realized in one that is privately owned and privately operated on a remunerative basis in commercial services, receiving assistance from the Government to the extent necessary to put it on a fair competitive basis in its various foreign-trade routes, and to protect it from discriminatory practices in domestic trade."

INDUSTRY TAKES ACTION

The National Federation of American Shipping, representing about two-thirds of all privately owned American-flag deep water shipping, appeared before the President's Committee. The Federation recognized that the shipowners would ultimately be called upon to recommend a set of principles designed to provide the economic conditions under which urgently needed ships could be constructed by private interests, with assistance from the Government "to the extent necessary." It was apparent that some legislation would be needed.

Accordingly, a Long Range Planning Committee composed of the top steamship company executives, representing both geographical trading areas and types of services, was appointed to develop such principles—fair to industry and Government, and in the public interest.

While the Federation program was still in formulation, the House of Representatives Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee began hearings (March 17, 1948) on the general state of American shipping and shipbuilding.

Secretary of the Navy John L. Sullivan appeared before the committee on April 8, 1948. He called attention to the unbalanced condition of the merchant marine as it affected national security, and urged correction of the situation, declaring:

IF WAR SHOULD COME

"Despite the large amount of tonnage of both active and laid-up merchant ships now owned or under the effective control of the United States, there is a serious shortage of passenger-carrying ships to meet military requirements for the movement of personnel in the event of war.

"Assuming another emergency of the proportions of World War II, it appears that with the reconversion of all existing passenger and passenger-cargo ships, and with the utilization of the 70 transports now held by the armed services, the combined troop-lifting capacity would fall short of the total estimated requirement by approximately one-half. It is further estimated that we would be faced with this requirement earlier in a future emergency than in World War II.

"* * * The conversion of slow and medium speed cargo ships to transports * * * would be an unacceptable course of action for adoption in the event of a future war because of the known increased effectiveness of the fastest submarines.

"In the light of this situation, therefore, it should be obvious that interests of national security dictate the necessity of steps being taken immediately to augment our merchant marine in the category of passenger ships suitable for conversion to troop transports."

On April 18, 1948, the President of the United States wrote to the Chairman of the United States Maritime Commission, regarding additional appropriations he had requested from Congress for the merchant marine. He said:

"I am requesting, therefore, that immediate steps be taken by the Commission in connection with the shipping industry to determine what additional ship construction is economically justified at this time."

It is significant that while the industry's long-range planning committee was working to formulate the principles which would provide realistic and fair economic conditions under which the vitally needed ships could be privately built and operated, the President was urging that every effort be made "consonant with sound business principles" to expedite the initiation of a shipbuilding program.

On April 15, while the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee hearings were in progress, there was introduced legislation which embodied some of the principles to be set forth in the federation's long-range program.

The federation completed its work on April 29, 1948, and submitted its suggestions to the House committee in a formal appearance on that date.

On May 10, 1948, legislation was introduced which incorporated the remainder of the federation's recommendations.

OPEN HEARINGS, HOUSE PASSES BILLS

The 24-member Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee held extensive hearings on the general subject matter of the state of the merchant marine and of the principles embodied in House Joint Resolutions 377 and 398 on 14 days between March 17 and May 14, inclusive. The committee listened carefully to 35 witnesses of the maritime industry, the military, labor, and from important shipbuilding city officials.

After 826 printed pages of testimony had been recorded from these extensive hearings on the maritime situation generally, and the proposed legislation specifically, the committee reported unanimously and favorably on May 26 two joint resolutions constituting the committee rewrite of Resolutions 377 and 398, and dealing only with matters embraced in the resolutions which had been the subject of committee hearings; House Joint Resolution 412, to amend the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 to strengthen the American merchant marine, to encourage investment in the American merchant marine to build more ships, and to remove inequities; and House Joint Resolution 413, to amend the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 to strengthen the American merchant marine, to further promote the development and maintenance of the American merchant marine, and for other purposes.

On June 14, 1948, the House of Representatives passed both resolutions. The resolutions were transmitted at once to the United States Senate, where they were referred to the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Two companion bills were already before the United States Senate committee (S. 2696 and S. 2649). The chances of final enactment and the beginning of a sizable shipbuilding program which would produce the ships to balance our merchant marine appeared excellent.

ADJOURNMENT PREVENTS FINAL APPROVAL

Unfortunately the second session of the Eightieth Congress was drawing to a close. The extensive hearings held and the thorough and painstaking investigation by the merchant marine and Fisheries Committee, together with the length of time required by the shipping industry to formulate its recommendations, left only a few days within which the Senate could act on this very important legislation.

The Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee failed to act, and the House-approved resolutions which were expected to solve many of the current shipping and shipbuilding problems remained in that committee.

The merchant ships so urgently needed still have not been started.

ACTION STILL NEEDED

Congress has been called back into session on July 26, 1948. There is great urgency that the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee hold open hearings and take action upon the resolutions which have been passed by the House of Representatives and are now in the Senate committee. American shipping and shipbuilding industries are urging full and open hearings, and prompt action.

The problems of overcoming the serious deficiency in fast passenger vessels so urgently needed in our essential trade routes and as necessary naval auxiliaries must be solved.

The principles recommended by the federation and the shipping interests it represents which are designed to fairly and equitably meet these problems, and to permit private interests with Government support "as may be necessary" to overcome the deficiencies in our merchant marine, may be fairly summarized in 10 principal points. All of these points are included in House Joint Resolutions 413 and 412, passed by the House of Representatives and now before the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

These 10 principal points are:

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 413

The Government to pay (1) for national defense features, and (2) for excess requirements on United States ships: The armed forces in certain instances desire higher speed and other useful military devices on ships which features are not necessary for normal commercial uses. American ships, particularly passenger vessels, must also comply with compulsory Government construction features not required on foreign ships thereby making it more expensive and difficult for United States ships to compete equally with foreign ships.

Fifty percent construction differential subsidy for a temporary 3-year period: The 1936 Merchant Marine Act authorized the Government to pay the difference between foreign and American shipbuilding costs in order to put the American steamship operator on a parity with his foreign competitor. Since the beginning of the war it has been impossible to determine accurately foreign shipbuilding costs, and there are still no representative or comparable foreign shipbuilding costs by which to fix the amount that should be paid. In view of this situation and the urgent need of ships of particular types to balance our merchant marine and for national defense, the shipping industry has recommended that the maximum amount of subsidy be paid as a temporary expedient, and for a period of 3 years only, as has already been recommended by the President's Advisory Committee, Government agencies, and civic organizations.

Limited liability on passenger ships: This provision would permit American shpowners purchasing passenger vessels constructed with Government aid to sacrifice their investments in the vessels by surrendering them to the Government (the mortgagee) free of all liens and be relieved of any liability with respect to the payment of further sums due under the purchase contract. Passenger ships are extremely expensive equipment. One large liner may exceed the value of a whole fleet of cargo ships. Financial risks are far greater than in cargo operations. Prospects of financial returns are not bright. This is due to large crews and operating costs; the uncertainty of travel, and overseas air transport competition. A private shipping company cannot afford to take these risks and endanger its whole enterprise unless by a reasonable sacrifice it may avoid a foreclosure judgment for the over-all sum.

Adjust depreciation on reconstructed vessels: This provision would permit the writing off through depreciation for tax purposes of the owner's investment in a reconstructed vessel over a longer period than that fixed at the time of the vessel's construction where the United States Coast Guard certifies that the reconstruction or reconditioning has extended the life expectancy of the ship.

Amend trade-in provisions; liberalize trade-in values: At the present time the Maritime Commission cannot accept or trade in a ship less than 17 years old. This provision would permit the Commission to accept for trade-in vessels not less than 12 years old. It is felt that this trade-in arrangement would induce shipowners to build new vessels at an earlier date, overcome block obsolesence of the war-built fleet, maintain a fleet of more modern ships, and provide a more even flow of new construction for United States shipyards. The provision would also enable the Maritime Commission to accept the traded-in ship at a fair world market value.

Set interest rate on deferred payments at 3 percent: In view of the fact that the Government borrows its money for similar periods at an average of 2¼ percent, shipowners have felt that the present 3½ percent they are charged on vessels on which the Government holds mortgages, should be reduced to more nearly the rate at which the Government obtains its borrowed funds.

Repeal of requirements that the Maritime Commission establish minimum manning and minimum wage scales and working conditions for subsidized vessels: At present all manning, wages, and working conditions on almost all United States merchant ships are set by collective bargaining agreements between management and labor. Therefore, this requirement has been found to be a superfluous one and in conflict with collective bargaining principles. Its repeal is desired by management, labor, and the United States Maritime Commission.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 412

Extension of construction differential to ships in domestic trades: As it appears that sufficient merchant ships of certain types needed for national defense cannot be furnished from the United States fleet operating in foreign trades, authority should be provided to extend the same construction differential to such vessels to be used in the domestic trades when certified as essential for national defense by the Secretary of the Navy.

Accelerated depreciation: Shipping is an industry subjected to cycles of good and bad business, to good, bad or no earnings. A number of foreign maritime nations permit accelerated depreciations, or in plainer words, permit the shipowner to amortize the cost of his vessel during years which are profitable. This provision would permit shipowners to take depreciation as a deduction for tax purposes not in excess of one-fifth of the cost of the vessel during any taxable year, or they could take no depreciation during years in which they have no earnings.

Deposits in construction reserve; receipts from insurance paid to shipowners for lost ships, from requisition payments or from sales of ships: Deposits in the construction reserve fund must presently be expended for the construction or purchase of new ships. Under this provision depositors in the fund would be authorized in addition to new ships to use the deposits for reimbursement of operating losses, and liquidation of purchase money indebtedness on vessels, and, with the approval of the United States Maritime Commission, for expenditures in the reconditioning of vessels and the purchase of terminal facilities. Deposits in the fund on September 30, 1948, could be expended within a 3-year period under this provision for the above purposes. Deposits expended as explained receive tax deferment by a reduction in the tax base of the property acquired with such funds.

Speech of Charles J. Bloch at the Democratic National Convention in Nominating Hon. Richard B. Russell, of Georgia, To Be President of the United States

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LISTER HILL

OF ALABAMA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, July 29 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, at the Democratic National Convention at Philadelphia, Pa., on July 14 last, Alabama had the honor and privilege of yielding to Georgia to place in nomination our colleague, the junior Senator from Georgia, Senator RICHARD B. RUSSELL, for the Democratic nomination for President of the United States. I wish to ask unanimous consent of the Senate to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD the very able and eloquent address of the Honorable Charles J. Bloch, of Macon, Ga., in presenting Senator RUSSELL for the Democratic nomination for President.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I have the honor and privilege here today to place in nomination for the Presidency of the United States one of Georgia's most distinguished sons.

In doing so, I want to say to this convention that we delegates from Georgia are not bolters. We came to this convention to participate in its deliberations as Democrats—as Georgia Democrats.

We sit over there 72 strong, and we should be sitting there when this convention shall adjourn sine die and we shall then and there be opposing its nomination of any candidate who advocates the interpretation placed on the 1944 platforms of this party such as its so-called civil-rights program.

We shall be opposing the nomination of any candidate, be he President of the United States or not, who advocates, openly or tacitly, such proposals as have been made here today in the platform of this party.

DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

The other night in his speech before this convention, the distinguished keynoter quoted from Jefferson and the Declaration of Independence, saying:

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among them are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

I would have you construe with me these words in the light of the time and place in which they were written. They were written in 1776. Thomas Jefferson was a Virginian. The institution of slavery had not been abolished or even frowned upon. I daresay that Jefferson was a slaveholder, and that his slaves had been sold to him and his fellow planters by merchants who lived just a little farther north.

Thirteen years later the Constitution was adopted and ratified by the Thirteen Original States. It did not abolish slavery. On the contrary, it recognized slavery. It protected those who were engaged in the business of importing slaves and, for the most part, they were not southerners.

THE BILL OF RIGHTS

The Constitution provided that the migration or importation of slaves should not be prohibited until 1808. Article I, section 9, of the Constitution of the United States was not for the protection of the South. The North had not yet become imbued with the doctrine of civil rights.

A few years later the first 10 amendments to the Constitution were adopted as a unit. These constitute the Bill of Rights. By them freedom of the press, freedom of worship, and freedom of speech are protected. By them we are made secure from searches and seizures, we are guaranteed the equal protection of the laws and due process of law. We are guaranteed the right to bear arms.

These rights are dear and sacred to all of us. But equally important with the first nine of these amendments is the tenth and last: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

This is what we of the South are talking about when we talk about States' rights.

We are talking about rights and privileges reserved to the States of the Union, which are just as sacred to us, just as cherished by us, as the right to worship, write, and speak as we please, the right to govern and manage our internal affairs.

STATE RIGHTS DOCTRINE

Before the phrase "civil rights" had ever been dreamed of, the doctrine of States' rights had been firmly imbedded in its Ark of the Covenant, the Constitution of the United States. And we of the South request, nay, demand, that the States of the Nation comply with their contract with us—enforce the doctrine of States' rights—written into our Constitution eight score years ago.

In the 1944 convention of this party, there was written into the platform:

"We believe that racial and religious minorities have the right to live, develop, and vote equally with all citizens and share the rights that are guaranteed by our Constitution. Congress should exert its full constitutional powers to protect those rights."

Its full constitutional powers—bearing in mind the rights of the States to govern their internal affairs guaranteed by the tenth amendment to the Constitution. But the executive department, after a lapse of almost 4 years, was not content simply for Congress to exert its full constitutional powers. Congress was asked to go above and beyond the limits of the Constitution.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

On February 2, 1948, in this good election year, President Truman sent a message to Congress urging "modern, comprehensive civil-rights laws." There was proposed a specific law against lynching (which north of the Mason and Dixon's line is called gang murder); the ban of poll-tax provisions in the laws of the several States; a fair employment practice law, prohibiting discrimination by employers on account of race, color, religion, or national origin; the prohibition of racial segregation in interstate transportation facilities.

The message proposed a Federal fiat to revolutionize the political, economic, and social relations between whites and Negroes in the South. Instantly southern Senators and Representatives in Congress sprang into action.

In the forefront of this battle—nay in the very lead of it—was Senator RICHARD B. RUSSELL, of Georgia. He has fought valiantly, and thus far successfully, against having any such program choked down the throat of the South at the behest of the well-organized minority groups.

EFFECT OUTSIDE THE SOUTH

Let me quote to you from just one of his many speeches on this problem which so gravely concerns all of us—not merely us southerners:

"To those of you who are tempted to turn away from this issue with a shrug and a 'let those southerners squirm,' let me point out that many phases of this drastic program directly affect you and your rights. If it is enacted into law the everyday life of all citizens will be in some measure regulated and controlled by Federal bureaus and bureaucrats in Washington.

"If Federal power strikes down the individuality of any one State or group of States the rights of your State will be invaded. If Federal law creates an entirely new right for a member of a minority group at the expense of an inalienable right of any other citizen, your security and the enjoyment of your right is endangered.

"The passage of these laws will strip the once proud States of this Union of their last remaining rights and reduce them to a state of abject vassalage to Washington.

"Local self-government will become a mere fiction. Hordes of new Federal policemen will swarm over the country. The Federal Government cannot embark upon any such program without concentrating police powers. Any such centralization will inevitably lead to complete regimentation and to that disastrous loss of personal liberties which marks the centralized police state."

TRUE AND TRIED

Thus spake the foremost exponent of States' rights in the United States Senate today. You Democrats of the South—and of the North and the East and the West—who are seeking a leader who will preside over the Government of the United States under the provisions of the Constitution of the United States have found one in the person of Richard B. Russell—true and tried.

If you delegates who do not know him want first-hand evidence of his character, his integrity, his intelligence, his fidelity, turn to the United States Senator in your delegation, or the delegate of a neighboring southern delegation—turn to any United States Senator in this convention from any section of this country and receive evidence of great capabilities of this man for the leadership of our country.

We from Georgia who have served with him for the common good of our State and Nation these past 25 years can add our testimony. From 1921 to 1931, he served in the General Assembly of Georgia, the last 4 years as speaker. In 1931 and 1932 he was Governor of the State of Georgia—an administration of the affairs of our State which has never drawn anything but praise. During his administration as Governor of Georgia, he led to the Chicago convention of this party a delegation committed to the nomination of Franklin D. Roosevelt for the first time.

STOOD BY ROOSEVELT

In that fateful night, when the fate of the Nation, the fate of the world hung in the balance, DICK RUSSELL and the Georgia delegation stood unwavering and firm as a rock—at the side of Franklin D. Roosevelt. If you want testimony as to that, seek out any member of this convention who was there—and there are many famed ones here. In January of 1933, he took the oath of office as a United States Senator from Georgia. Reelected in 1936 and in 1942, he will be reelected this fall unless you call him to higher duties.

In presenting him to you, I say to you delegates from all parts of the Nation here assembled—you know or, if you do not know, you can learn here and now—you cannot longer take the South for granted.

The South is no longer going to be the whipping boy of the Democratic Party. And you know, or if you don't know you can learn here and now, that without the votes of the South you cannot elect a President of the United States.

I do not mean to suggest yet secession from the Democratic Party, but I do mean to say to you Democrats of the North, the West, and the East—paraphrasing the language of the great Commoner of a generation ago—you shall not crucify the South on this cross of civil rights.

EIGHTY-THREE YEARS OF ACCOMPLISHMENTS

The South has accomplished so much in the last 83 years. When Lee and Johnson and the other leaders of the Southern Confederacy were forced to surrender, and their war-weary soldiers tread their forlorn way homeward, they were left to fend for themselves. There was no treaty of peace. There was no southern recovery program. There was no Marshall plan for us—we had the force bill—bayonet rule and the tragic era of reconstruction which ended only with the Hayes-Tilden election of 1880—and we do not propose to return to that tragic era of reconstruction in the vehicle of "civil rights."

In the hands of the Democrats of the South are the traditions of the Nation—the last bulwark of democracy. But for the votes of most of the South 4 years ago Henry Wallace would be sitting in the White House inflicting upon us the civil-rights program. We propose to remain the last bulwark of a real democracy.

Typical of that real democracy is Senator RICHARD B. RUSSELL, of Georgia. Georgia offers her beloved son, her true Democrat, her patriot in times of peace and war to the Nation.

Bishop Ward Describes Conditions in China

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS A. JENKINS

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, probably no living American is better posted on conditions in China than is Bishop Ralph A. Ward, resident bishop for the Methodist Church in China. Bishop Ward has seen many years of service in China and has had opportunity to know intimately the prominent persons in the political and economic activities of that great Empire with its hundreds of millions of struggling people.

Bishop Ward has sent out a general letter to friends in which he discusses briefly the conditions in China at this time. I am asking that this letter be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The letter follows:

THE METHODIST CHURCH,
Shanghai, China.

To Friends in America:

It has been a long time since I sent you a bit of personal report from China. You have been often in my thoughts. Many of you have sent us very special help, in prayer, in money and in other ways. Of our gratitude—my own personal gratitude I could write at length.

The Christian Church in China lives in that postwar struggle which is found in many other countries. Eight years of war left vast devastation, social destruction, and upheavals. There is economic confusion. There is political confusion. There is moral breakdown in many places. But, more than ever before, there are Chinese of fine character, good preparation and efficiency who grapple courageously with the baffling problems.

Inflation of Chinese currency is a token—much more serious than a token if you have to cope with its effects. If a Chinese wishes to borrow money at the banks he is fortunate to get it at 25 percent per month. The banks will pay 9 or 10 percent per month interest on short term deposits. The decrease in value of the money is greater than such interest.

The issue with totalitarian communism is drawn—not merely by proclamation of the National Government. It is drawn in stern and menacing reality. China is but a section of the world-wide struggle-ground. Despite isolated "show-places" or where local Communists are not typical or are using the popular front there seems no immediate hope for the organized, evangelistic, out-reaching Christian church under a thoroughgoing communism of present type. Illustrations of that fact are ominously numerous.

We do not prove the value of Christianity by calling the roll of generals or statesmen who are Christian. Neither do we contend that Christians in high places are faultless. But realism reveals would be Christians at the center of major struggles in China today and they make the situation more promising.

Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek has been elected president under the new constitution. China is now further on the road actually to implement constitutional government, not dictatorship by a party. The fact that elections have been held at all, with millions of Chinese voting for the first time, is significant progress in registering political differences without resort to warfare.

Perhaps if a vote could have been cast by the total population of China the Generalissimo would have been elected by a greater plurality than any American who has been elected President of the United States in a century. Many people oppose him. The masses suffer from delayed reconstruction. They are having hard times. In China, as in America, the Government (be it Democratic or Republican) gets the blame. Yet President Chiang, unlike wartime leaders in most other countries, still remains the major personality round which forces for national unity and strength will rally more than around any other person. Without the experience of actually living in a democracy like the United States he is determined to develop China as a real member of the family of democracies.

What is happening in China, and presently will happen, is of critical concern to the rest of the world—including the United States. International struggles elsewhere reach into China. Their outcome in China will help to determine their outcome in other parts of the world. Chinese are increasingly conscious of their role in world affairs.

In this postwar situation lives and works the Chinese Christian church. It needs help from other countries. But Christianity in China is no longer mere foreign missions. The fierce wartime testing of its faith has occasioned the strengthening of its faith. Chinese Protestant churches are not political partisans. But individual Chinese Christians are in politics and should be. There is a difference.

The chief asset in any organization is personnel—the human factor. To keep thousands of Chinese pastors, teachers, doctors, nurses, and other Christian workers efficiently on a subsistence level in reasonably good physical condition is a relief measure. But it is far more than that. It provides an ideological and spiritual force to offset opposing ideological and destructive forces which are rampant. The Christian, the Christian spirit, attitudes and social outreach are a dynamic for a new and better social and national way of life.

Confusion? Yes. Mixed motives? Yes, queer combinations of them. Dangers? Always present. Possible and actual failures? Enough to discourage one who looks too much at them only. But new life? Yes. Promise for better things? Yes.

It takes a long time—contrasted with the years and decades of our short human lives—to regrow a civilization and develop a government of the people, by the people, with reasonable competence for themselves and others. But the growth continues. It always takes time from seed planting to harvest. The harvesting of one crop goes on while we plant for another crop. This is another time of both harvest and seed planting in China.

The Christian seed is the best seed to plant in China today.

Fraternally,

RALPH A. WARD.

Enactment of Veterans' Legislation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I would like to present the following letter which I have received as chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, from Mr. Omar B. Ketchum, director of the national legislative service, Veterans of Foreign Wars, and in which Mr. Ketchum presents that organization's viewpoint upon legislation relating to veterans and which is now pending in Congress.

I am introducing today a bill for an increase in compensation for the disabled veterans.

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS
OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., July 27, 1948.

Hon. EDITH N. ROGERS,
Chairman, House Committee on Veterans' Affairs, House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MRS. ROGERS: There has been so much controversy over the work and accomplishments of the Eightieth Congress that it is possible that some congressional committees and individual Members of Congress may feel that their work and efforts have gone unnoticed and unappreciated. The differences of opinion over the accomplishments of the Eightieth Congress are largely determined by political and economic viewpoints.

I should like to take this opportunity and method to express the appreciation of this office, as legislative spokesman for the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, for the work and accomplishments of the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs during the regular sessions of the Eightieth Congress. An impartial review of the hearings and bills favorably reported by the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs will reveal a thorough, conscientious, and sympathetic approach to the needs of veterans and their dependents.

If it had been possible for the Eightieth Congress to approve all bills which were considered and reported favorably by the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs I am sure there could be little, if any, valid criticism over the treatment of veterans and/or their dependents. We recognize that it is not always feasible or practical for the Congress to approve all bills reported by every congressional committee.

There are a few measures, acted favorably upon by your committee during the regular sessions of the Eightieth Congress which are deserving of consideration and approval during the special session. First, the bill to raise income limitations affecting the pension rights of certain widows and orphans as well as permanent and totally disabled, nonservice-connected, veterans of World Wars I and II, H. R. 4242, is of vital importance and should receive favorable approval by the special session. There is no question but what the present income limitations are completely unrealistic with respect to the present high cost of living, and I can find no objection in the Congress to this premise. On the other hand it is apparent H. R. 4242 failed to win clearance for final action because the Veterans' Administration would not submit an estimate of cost. I can appreciate the importance of cost estimates on legislation but it will be tragic if this obstacle continues to delay action on this meritorious legislation.

Second, the bill which would authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to provide, in certain instances, stenographic service for the accredited service representatives of nationally chartered veteran organizations, H. R. 3016, should also be approved during the special session. This is another instance where the cost factor may be difficult to determine in advance but we are certain the cost would not be excessive and that the legislation would not prove difficult and involved as predicted by one or two Members of the Congress.

Third, the spiraling cost of living accompanied by a third round of wage increases in the major industries together with a substantial salary increase for Government employees makes it imperative that early consideration be given another increase, percentagewise, for compensation and pension beneficiaries on the rolls of the Veterans' Administration, excluding of course those groups who were increased during the regular sessions of the Eightieth Congress. We shall immediately propose a straight 15 percent increase in the monthly rates of compensation and pension with the exception of those who have recently been increased.

There are a few other measures such as the present inequities in legislation affecting grants of automobiles to amputees, which are deserving of consideration, but I realize that we cannot expect the special session to cover the entire field of veteran benefits. I did want you to know that this office appreciates the work of the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs and I hope you will bring this letter to the attention of the entire committee at the earliest possible opportunity.

With best wishes and kind personal regards, I remain

Sincerely yours,

OMAR B. KETCHUM, Director.

Water and Power Shortages

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. NORRIS POULSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. POULSON. Mr. Speaker, 22 cities, including Los Angeles—now the third largest city in the United States—are faced with one of the most serious situations in their history.

I refer to the growing menace of a water and power shortage—in a country in which every drop of water and every kilowatt of power used must be brought hundreds of miles, a country that cannot exist without an assured water supply.

Because of a controversy over division of the waters of the Colorado River between Arizona and California, all plans for future development and for completing approved projects are now halted. California has done everything it can to bring about a settlement. It has offered to negotiate, to arbitrate, and finally to place the controversy before the United States Supreme Court. Arizona has refused every offer and fought every effort to achieve an agreement.

Before this Congress are several bills which, if passed, would let California place this vital controversy before the highest court for final adjudication.

To further impress upon the Congress the seriousness and urgency of this situation, I herewith present an editorial from the Los Angeles Herald and Express, which appeared on Thursday, July 22, 1948.

SUPREME COURT BILL ON COLORADO RIVER SHOULD BE PASSED

In view of the grave international crisis and the dark threat of war with Russia, it is vital that Congress in its special session next week should pass bills already introduced to authorize the United States Supreme Court to settle California's Colorado River water problems.

The Truman plan of playing desperate politics by calling the special session in the hope of gaining political support for his own Presidential campaign should be knocked into a cocked hat by legislators getting behind solid projects of national importance such as the Colorado River plan, universal military training, etc.

In the last war, the Nation looked to Southern California as one of its greatest arsenals of victory. Planes, ships, and other vital supplies were turned out here in record quantities.

Los Angeles and its neighboring cities could not have made their valuable contributions toward winning the war if they had not had the necessary amounts of water and electric power to serve huge new industries as well as civilian business and homes.

This area, even in peacetime, is running perilously close to the danger point in the matter of sufficient water and power. In the case of war, demands of great war plants running at full capacity would bring about a critical situation.

High-ranking Army and Navy officers have warned that this State must be assured of a dependable and adequate water supply. They stressed the danger of possible water and power shortages.

The Colorado River is the key to this area's water and power requirements. Twenty-two cities, with a combined population of 3,250,000, now use Colorado River water. If attempts being made by Arizona to obtain new water projects for that State should be successful, there would be drastic reductions in the water supply to this area.

The people of California are willing to allow such an impartial body as the United States Supreme Court to decide the issue. That is what Congress should authorize.

Message to Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDWARD J. DEVITT
OF MINNESOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. DEVITT. Mr. Speaker, an editorial in the St. Paul Pioneer Press for July 28, commenting on President Truman's message to Congress is, in my judgment, so poignant I want to make its contents available to all of the Members of the House. It is included herewith as a part of my remarks:

MESSAGE TO CONGRESS

President Truman's message to Congress yesterday was in part a campaign document, which accounts for the inclusion of so many items of business that have no necessary place in a special session. If Congress were to act upon them all this special session would not complete its work by Christmas.

But President Truman does not insist on these points. His self-justification for calling Congress back is that the housing shortage and, particularly, rising prices constitute a national emergency which cannot wait upon the outcome of the election and the meeting of the new Congress in January.

As far as housing is concerned, there is in fact a major public interest in overcoming the shortage, especially of low-cost rental dwellings, as quickly as possible. Whatever the President's motive may have been in putting his adversaries of Congress on the spot, they are now in Washington and should use the opportunity to complete work on the Taft-Ellender-Wagner Act which stalled in the House after having passed the Senate.

Mr. Truman, of course, can have small hope that the same Congress which so recently has flatly rejected his anti-inflation program will now have a change of heart just because he tells them that the situation has become an emergency. He has simply chosen this means of drawing a sharp issue between himself and the Republican leadership of Congress on price-wage controls and the rest of the apparatus for a controlled economy which he favors.

Reimposition of wartime controls and rationing now would be an immensely complex task, for which the administration is not organized. Even if the conception were sound, the difficulties in the practical administration of such controls in peacetime make the proposal seem fantastic.

President Truman is able to cite the undeniable fact that prices have risen since controls were taken off. But his conclusion that they would not have risen if the controls had been retained does not follow. Prices were rising before abandonment of the controls; in fact it was a question whether office of price control could get the ceilings lifted piecemeal fast enough to keep them from being blown off.

Artificial controls of this kind do not end inflation. They suppress it. This may be feasible during wartime and for short periods. But apart from that they can work only if the entire economy is brought under rigid governmental regulation, as in Britain.

So while Mr. Truman can point to what has happened without price control, he is unable to say, even if he wanted to, what would have happened if it had been kept. The probability is great that through black marketing and other means we should have been brought to an even sorrier form of inflation than the one we now have. The supply of money has tripled since 1939, chiefly because of the deficit financing of the war, and until the supply of goods has sufficiently increased, or the supply of money diminished, the only possible outcome in this vast land of free and easy people is higher prices.

Anyone who so badly misread the economic future as Mr. Truman did in the fall of 1945, when he acted on the theory that his big problem was to fend off a postwar deflation, should be more humble than he is on this subject.

The Proposed Kasinger Dam and Its Effects on Henry County, Mo.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MARION T. BENNETT
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. BENNETT of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I recently attended a meeting at Clinton, Mo., called by the county court of Henry County, relative to the proposal which will soon be submitted to Congress by the Army engineers for construction of a large flood-control project, known as the Kasinger Dam. This project, if it is approved by Congress and an appropriation is granted for it, will destroy most of the trade territory of Clinton, Mo., and completely upset the economy of Henry County and much of western Missouri. It is almost unanimously opposed by the people in the area which it affects. It is one of a series of dams which the engineers propose as an alternate to an earlier project, known as the Osceola Dam, which has now been abandoned and which has several times been repudiated by the House Appropriations Committee. The terrain and density of population in western Missouri make it inadvisable to construct huge flood-control reservoirs in that area. There is some need for flood control in the Osage River Basin but floods cannot be prevented by erecting huge dams which create permanent floods.

The president of the Henry County Anti-Dam Association is Mr. Emory Hurt, of Clinton, Mo. At the meeting to which I refer, and which I attended at Clinton, Mr. Hurt made a statement which outlines, in detail, the effect which the Kasinger project would have on Henry County. His statement is based upon official facts and figures furnished by the Resources and Development Commission of the State of Missouri. It summarizes the effects of this proposal in such excellent fashion that I ask unanimous consent to extend it as part of my remarks for information of the Congress, which will have to vote on this proposal, and for the information of my district. I cannot support any such project as this which helps one part of my district at the expense of another. I represent the whole district. We want the Army engineers to leave us in peace.

STATEMENT BY EMORY HURT ON EFFECTS OF THE KASINGER DAM UPON HENRY COUNTY

The data, the statistics, and the facts which I will present to you are taken from the report of the Missouri Division of Resources and Development. It was from a like report the Governor changed from opposition to in favor of this dam. I have not found it necessary to seek additional facts to prove Henry County's loss.

Sixteen townships out of nineteen in Henry County are partly within the proposed dam area. One-half of each of the following townships fall within the reservoir area: Bethlehem, Clinton, Fairview, Honey Creek, Leesville, and Osage. The assessed value of the real estate within the proposed reservoir is $2,029,149, or 12.9 percent of the total assessed real estate value of Henry County. The assessed personal property value in the proposed reservoir is $267,573, against a total assessed personal property value for the entire county of $2,269,966, or 11.8 percent of the total personal property assessment. Or roughly one-eighth of this total assessed property value of Henry County lies within the proposed reservoir.

Sixty-four school districts with a total of 2,735 pupils would be affected by the reservoir. This would require a drastic reorganization of these school districts along with drastic changes relocating the roads.

There are 2,365 farm units in Henry County; 695 of these are in the proposed reservoir area; 325 farms are in the low bottoms and 370 between the low bottoms and the high-water mark. There are 616 farm families, or 1,609 persons, living within this area. The average size farm is 180 acres to 200 acres; 79 farms were operated by people who did not live on the farms. Approximately 12 percent of the reservoir area is permanently idle. It is idle not because of the soil but because of flooding. In other words straightening the river, clearing its channel, would restore about 12 percent of the area to cultivation thus adding some mighty good soil for crop purposes. This would be increasing the tax valuation of Henry County, and not decreasing.

When you take 695 farms out of Henry County's total farms of 2,365 it is destroying trade and tax values at a very rapid rate. No matter in what part of the county you live this will be felt and realized. It is people who make trade. When over one-fourth of your farms are condemned, your trade, your business, your profession, your investments are seriously affected. If you wish this dam to be built just do nothing and it will surely come. It is not only our right but it is our duty to protest this proposed reservoir. The Members of Congress are our elected representatives. To them we must turn with our complaints and our demand for justice.

In 1946 Henry County ranked second in the State in the production of coal. More than 700,000 tons were mined in 1946, of which tonnage about 450,000 tons were mined by open-pit methods from the area immediately affected by the proposed reservoir. One hundred and fifty-six men were employed in this coal mining. The wages of coal miners earned in the area affected by this proposed reservoir was $314,431. Coal mining engineers and geologists maintain that coal 25 feet to 50 feet above the maximum flood level would be impossible to mine because of drainage problems.

There are 12,403.2 acres of Jordan coal (this is south of Grand River), or an estimated 16,371,000 tons of coal are recoverable in this field. There are 3,388.4 acres of Tebo coal (west and northwest of Clinton) or an estimated 11,181,000 tons of recoverable coal. These acres of coal are within the proposed reservoir. That is a total of 15,791.6 acres of coal land with an estimated 27,552,000 tons of recoverable coal. This is one of the natural resources of Henry County. The Kasinger Dam will flood this area. That $314,431 paid to labor in 1946 and the sale of that 27,552,000 tons of coal will be gone forever.

Do you think that annual $314,431 loss in labor, that the stopping the sale of 450,000 tons of coal annually will affect your business, your profession, your property, and your local investment? It most certainly will. Have we that stamina, that courage, that backbone that our pioneer forefathers had who came to old Reeves County and hewed out the civilization we enjoy today?

Clinton and Windsor in Henry County provide the only hospital facilities. Medical service is obtained at Clinton, Windsor, Urich, and Deepwater. Thus the whole population of the county is dependent for medical service on the doctors in these towns. At what cost and at what danger to Henry County citizens will the drastic changes in the roads and the length of time to make the changes cause? No one can answer, but we realize that the danger is real and great with the proposed reservoir.

In 1947 there were in Henry County 490 retail stores, 130 service establishments, 52 wholesale trade establishments, 24 hatcheries, 26 manufacturing plants (employing 729 people) 2 small plants producing stones and lime products and 1 plant producing clay products with 150 employees. This briefly with the coal companies is the picture of Henry County's commercial life, The question you and I may well ask is the effect of the proposed reservoir; when one-eighth of your assessed valuation is removed, when 616 families are dispossessed, when more than one-fourth of Henry County's farms are condemned, when the products from 695 farms are forever removed from the markets, when 64 school districts in the area of condemnation are affected, and when an estimated 27,552,000 tons of coal are inundated and lost, what will the effect be? The answer is plain and obvious. Each one of us in our business, in our profession, in our local investment will severely feel the above loss. There is no offset. There is no compensation for our loss. Paying the fair price for the land condemned to the individual owners is but a very small part of the terrific cost to Henry County. The major cost will never be taken care of and there is no offset or compensation to the rest of the citizens of Henry County to equalize the unjust burden of this proposed area of mosquitoes and moccasins.

There are 61,000 acres in this proposed area. It is estimated by the Resources and Development committee that approximately 30 percent of this area may be rented. Of what value is this 30 percent for rental purposes? In their own statement they state that twice in the last 25 years there would have been a full elevation of 730 feet. They state then an elevation of 720 feet would have been equaled or exceeded 6 times. They further state that an elevation of 710 feet would have been equaled or exceeded 9 times in the past 25 years. In most cases of excessive flood or where an elevation of 710 feet was exceeded the period of flooding lasted approximately four months. Further in their report they state that the flooding was approximately one-half of the time. Thus, we have a variation in their estimation between 4 months and 6 months in which the reservoir would be flooded. We have been informed, and that reliably so, that the flood gates of the proposed Kasinger Dam would be correlated with the Bagnell Dam thus affording to the Union Electric an additional supply of water—water which had been held four to six months—water in which the sedimentation had been left in the Grand River basin. This would be extremely valuable to the Union Electric.

A sampling of the farm population in the proposed area of snakes and mosquitoes shows that more than two-thirds of the farmers reported telephones, over 85 percent had automobiles, more than 70 percent lived on all-weather roads, about 25 percent used electricity, and a higher percentage used power washers. The average farmer had lived on his present place 15 years, had lived in the township more than 20 years, and in the county more than 30 years. The above facts simply mean that the dispossessed farm families have a very high type standard of living. It further reveals that they are very stable people, having lived an average of 15 years at their present location. That is the class of people that it is proposed to dispossess, move to town, forced to buy other farms and perhaps retire forever.

The report of the resources and development committee shows that there are 29,000 acres of permanent pasture in the reservoir. Their report further shows that an elevation of 710 to 720 feet would have been reached by floodwater nearly half the time during the period of 1921 to 1946 had the reservoir been in operation. At what risk would an individual assume renting this pasture land subject to overflow one-half of the time and perhaps the majority of the free time at the very time of year when stock is removed from the bottoms because of flies—flies so hearty that DDT has no effect upon them. The rental proposition as put forth is interesting. One hundred percent of the rent which the Government would collect from this area is paid into the National Treasury. Seventy-five percent of the said rental is then returned to the State treasury and at the direction of the State legislature would be apportioned to the schools and to the roads, to these two only. The question arises what part would ever come back to Henry County? It has become, at the present time, very necessary that our own county officials keep a close watch upon the State funds to see that Henry County received its due share. This is but another added care and demand for watchfulness to secure their just part of the little rentals, if any.

When we spoke of schools we spoke of the drastic changes that would be necessary in our roads. The proposed roads affecting Henry County's trade territory is Highway 13 together with the two railroads south of Clinton and an improved road in the LaDue neighborhood running from the south of Grand River to Highway 52, an elevation in a few places of Highway 35 east of Clinton and two elevations of Highway 35 northwest of Clinton. If you will stop and consider this for a moment you will realize that the efforts put forward in the last 30 years of building farm-to-market roads for the convenience of Henry County citizens is torn up, displaced, and the citizenry inconvenienced by new routes, by new construction, and by indefinite delay of building new roads. Outside of the major highways there is no provision offered to take care of the local roads which are a necessary convenience to our farm population of Henry County.

We have spoken of Jordan and the Tebo veins of coal. The largest area of coal is in the southwest part of the county. The St. Clair Hume Coal Co. has been leasing, contracting and preparing to open up this field. As to how much of this field is affected by the proposed reservoir, as to how severely they will be handicapped by drainage problems the Missouri Committee of Resources and Developments does not say. We realize full well that this vital coal field will be affected.

After this water is impounded it becomes contaminated by decaying vegetable and animal life. Those farms near the flood area might well plug off their present wells at 25 or 50 feet above the flood level and thus avoid contamination of water in the wells which they have used for a lifetime. Clinton's water supply would taste like the water after a snow storm, for decayed vegetation.

The farm population in every community depends largely upon native lumber for its constructing and building. A great supply of this native lumber comes from the proposed reservoir area. This wood consists of oak and hickory with a small amount of maple. Neither of these woods will stand an excessive amount of flooding. Even that water oak tree with which all of us are familiar, growing in the Grand River bottoms is easily killed by several weeks of water over the root system. With an establishment of the proposed reservoir area one source of cheap farm lumber is forever removed. As to the further production of timber outside of willows it would seem right that the low bottom would be hardly more than a swamp filled with willow and swamp brush.

As to the effect on the climate, for years it has been recognized that the forest controlled to a large extent our supply of rainfall and affected our climate considerably.

With the elimination of this forest clear across the county, with the substitution of swamp brush, what change it will make in the distribution of the rainfall in the climatic changes we do not know. If this reforestation started today that would be a subject of interest 50 years from now. The value of the nut crop in the two river valleys exceeds $160,000 annually. No small loss in money, but a real loss for many people who go nutting.

The report of the Missouri Division of Resources and Development states that the annual loss of $10,000 in value of fish and wildlife would occur. The streams which the great majority of our citizens use for fishing purposes would be forever removed. Ordinarily reservoirs provide recreational opportunities for local people and for outsiders. The recreational aspect of the proposed area is nil. It becomes a swamp filled with lagoons and pools—a breeding place of moccasins and mosquitoes. As to what arrangements may be made with the Federal Government for duck hunting in the fall of the year remains to be seen. From our previous experience with sports in governmental areas it is most thoroughly regimented. Gone, almost forever, is the farm boys' trap line and the money he obtained for furs. Thus another opportunity for the youth to learn of the great out-of-doors and become lovers of nature is shut firmly in their face.

Above Brownington, the gentle slopes, the fluctuations of the water level deter recreational improvement which discourages outsiders to come into this area for fishing and hunting. The towns of Henry County will lose a considerable volume of sporting merchandise because of the destruction of wildlife and fishing. Sportsmen need very little to find mosquitoes and moccasin.

The lands and property condemned will be paid for at a fair price. There will be few who will receive an excessive price—most will receive about what the property is worth. The average time those people have lived on these farms is 15 years. Fifteen years ago property sold at a lower price than today. Even though you receive a high price for your property, you will owe a substantial income tax. These dispossessed people receiving a high price for this land not only will pay a high income tax but will suffer a great loss in trying to buy back another farm at a high price and in a very competitive market. Mark it down as a loss but profit to the Union Electric.

The soil-conservation program which has been advanced for Henry County after the proposed Kasinger Dam is most worthy. No one but the most foolish could protest the building of a pond on every hillside and a grass waterway for every drain and ditch, the reforestation of worn-out hillside and gullies. But coming as it does it is but a sop—a sugar coating for the bitter pill we are asked to take. If a government can build ponds, waterways, and plant trees for you and me, it can, with equal justice, start at the mouth of Grand River, dig a ditch big enough, deep enough, and straight enough to carry this water off promptly and render available thousands of acres of the most productive land in the State.

This, in a limited way, represents the condition when Henry County is split in two by the moccasin area. Business will be stimulated during construction but the distance of Clinton and Windsor from the center of operation decreases the stimulation. Any curtailment of the coal-mining industry strikes at the very heart of our commercial life. This discontinuation of a $314,000 pay roll and the sale of 450,000 tons of coal is a substantial blow to your business life. The destruction of 695 farms will be felt throughout the country; the dislocation of trade and the hazard to health is most disheartening. I appear today before you not only appealing to you for your money in the support of this fight but begging, asking, soliciting, that you become militant missionaries in opposition to this injustice.

Thomas Jefferson, that grand Democrat, believed in the common man and special privileges to none. Abraham Lincoln, the father of the Republican Party, the grandest humanitarian the ages have produced, believed in the common man and special privileges to none.

Yonder flag still waves. It stands for justice. Beneath its color we have the right to protest and to demand that we be forever removed from the sacrificial altar of greed, avarice, and power. The answer is yours.

The Eighteth Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN C. KUNKEL
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, under permission to extend my remarks, I include a column by George E. Sokolsky, which appeared in the Harrisburg Evening News on July 19, 1948. This article answers some of the issues thus far raised in the present presidential campaign.

THESE DAYS—THE EIGHTIETH CONGRESS
(By George E. Sokolsky)

It is now clear that the principal target of Democratic oratory during the campaign will be the Eightieth Congress, its achievements and shortcomings. President Truman called it the worst Congress; Senator BARKLEY in his keynote speech hit at it with all the rounded oratory of a Kentuckian. SAM RAYBURN sank to a new low in the oratory of the trivial in his attacks on that Congress. It is understandable that the Democrats would hold the Eightieth Congress accountable; it is also undeniable that the Republicans must stand by that Congress and defend it. It is not necessary for the debate to be cheap, vulgar, or untruthful.

In the first place, whereas the Republicans had a clear and unmistakable majority in the House of Representatives, they only had an organizational majority in the Senate. This is one of the complexities of the American constitutional system which tends to weaken party leadership and party responsibility. Whatever measures, therefore, were passed in the Senate by the so-called Republican majority were really passed by a coalition of Republican and Democratic votes which made up for the Republican defections. The Taft-Hartley bill was passed in both Houses by such a coalition.

Senator BARKLEY indicated the nature of the Democratic attack on the Eightieth Congress. First and foremost will be opposition to the Taft-Hartley Act.

In hitting at that the Democrats are repeating the error of the Republicans in 1932, when they assumed that there was still another victory in prohibition. The Democrats apparently believe that there is still another victory in the tie-up between their party and the labor leaders. The Republicans will respond by pointing to the large number of Democrats who on every ballot voted for the Taft-Hartley bill, but even more, they will point to the fact that the law does work. If, as Senator BARKLEY indicated, the Democrats are to attack this Congress on the record of the Taft-Hartley Act, the Republicans ought to welcome the attack.

The next object of attack will be the Republican promise of economy, reduction of taxes, and the firing of unnecessary bureaucrats. There Senator BARKLEY was unfair and he knew it. After the Republicans had cut the budget and reduced the taxes, the administration created what amounted to a war scare. It was Mr. Truman who let the Army, Navy, and Air Force down after the peace, reducing staff and personnel with an unconscionable rapidity. Then when the Eightieth Congress gave the American taxpayer some relief, Secretary of Air Symington let out a howl that the Russians have a larger air force than the United States has. This scared the American people, although Symington never produced indisputable evidence as to the facts. Congress took his word for it as it took the word of the State Department concerning foreign aid in the form of the Marshall plan, ERP, ECA, and lots of other things which cost money.

Now along comes Senator BARKLEY and says that because the Eightieth Congress did not refuse funds to the administration for foreign aid and national defense, the Eightieth Congress failed to achieve the economies it set out to provide.

Furthermore, on the matter of bureaucrats, Senator BARKLEY's definition was clever and facetious, but it failed to say that the Eightieth Congress and the President appointed a Commission headed by Herbert Hoover to consider the reorganization of the executive branch of the Government; that one-third of the Commission was appointed by the President, the Speaker and the President of the Senate, respectively; that by agreement this Commission was to make no report until after election day so that its findings could not be used for political purposes. Senator BARKLEY knows that his party, along with all constructive citizens, is deeply concerned over the sprawling, duplicative, excessively staffed administration—and that is why the Hoover Commission came into being.

Why then did he pull that wisecrack about bureaucrats? To get a rise out of the convention? To draw applause? To start cheering among a roomful of bureaucrats? Well, he got what he wanted—but it was not the truth. It was just campaign talk.

Michigan Federation of Labor Convention

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN LESINSKI
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a letter dated July 9, 1948, from Robert P. Scott, secretary-treasurer, and copies of the resolutions passed by the Michigan Federation of Labor at its recent convention:

MICHIGAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Lansing, Mich., July 9, 1948.

Hon. JOHN LESINSKI,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Enclosed find copy of resolution passed by the Michigan Federation of Labor at our convention.

We respectfully request your support of the enclosed resolution.

Very truly yours,
ROBERT P. SCOTT,
Secretary-Treasurer.

RESOLUTION NO. 13—LEGISLATION FOR PUBLIC BUILDINGS

Whereas S. 1955 is pending in the Congress to provide for the acquisition of sites and preparation of plans for such Federal public buildings as may be deemed necessary by the Public Buildings Commissioner, under the supervision of the Federal Works Administrator, with the concurrence of the Postmaster General where his Department is involved; and

Whereas there are also pending in the Congress H. R. 5446 and S. 2260, which, if enacted into law, would renew the authority of the Federal Works Administrator to provide financial aid to non-Federal public agencies for such planning to the end that the public agencies may establish and continue to maintain a reserve of plans for useful public works; and

Whereas title V of the War Mobilization and Reconversion Act of 1944 authorized the Federal Works Administrator to make advances of funds to State and local governments to assist in the preparation of plans for public works, which authority terminated with the expiration, on June 30, 1947, of said War Mobilization and Reconversion Act of 1944: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Michigan State Federation of Labor, American Federation of Labor, as follows:

1. That this federation favors the passage by Congress of S. 1955, or a similar bill, in order that construction may proceed when the economic conditions are such that the public-welfare activities of the Nation would not be adversely affected.

2. That Congress enact into law H. R. 5446 or S. 2260, or a similar bill, which would continue the authority granted to the Federal Works Administrator under title V of the War Mobilization and Reconversion Act of 1944.

3. That is it beneficial to the national economy to have State and local public agencies build up a reservoir of plans for useful public works; and

4. That copies of this resolution be sent by the secretary to the President of the United States, the Governor of the State of Michigan, each Member of Congress from the State of Michigan, the chairman of the House Committee on Public Works, the Federal Works Administrator, and to the Postmaster General.

RESOLUTION NO. 19—CONDEMN ACTION OF GENERAL MOTORS CORP. ON LEGISLATION FOR WORKERS' EDUCATION EXTENSION SERVICE

Whereas considerable publicity has resulted from the unsubstantiated charges made by a representative of the General Motors Corp. regarding the character and conduct of a class sponsored by the workers' educational service of the University of Michigan extension; and

Whereas such charges were not made to the responsible people connected with administration of the university program but were made before an education committee of the House of Representatives at a hearing on the labor extension bills (H. R. 6202 and H. R. 6249), cn Tuesday, May 18; and

Whereas the only purpose of presenting such charges was to discredit educational services for workers in Michigan and throughout the United States so as to prejudice the possibility of favorable action by Congress on the labor-extension bill; and

Whereas the malicious and false nature of the charges made by the representative of the General Motors Corp. has been clearly demonstrated in the light of statements issued by spokesmen for the University of Michigan, students who attended workers' classes and representatives of responsible labor, business, and civic organizations: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Michigan Federation of Labor go on record as condemning the action of the representative of the General Motors Corp. which has resulted in unwarranted and needless publicity designed to discredit educational service for workers in Michigan and throughout the Nation; and be it further

Resolved, That chairmen of the appropriate committees in Congress, Governor Sigler, Dr. Ruthven, president of the University of Michigan; and all Michigan Congressmen and Senators be advised of our continued support for the workers' educational extension service as provided for in H. R. 6202, H. R. 6249, and S. 1390, and of our hope that favorable action will be taken on the bill during the present session of Congress.

RESOLUTION NO. 23—RETAIN PRESENT LAWS GOVERNING SUNDAY, HOLIDAY, AND NIGHT PAY FOR CUSTOMS EMPLOYEES

Whereas customs and immigration employees are required to be on duty 24 hours of every day in the year, including Sundays and holidays; and

Whereas these employees are also required to enter and clear vessels and airplanes and to perform other special services at any and all hours of the day and night in addition to their regular 8-hour shifts, and such services often require these employees to get out of bed at 1 a. m. or 2 a. m. or any other hour of the night and drive their own cars 20 to 50 miles in order to perform such services and return home, and the employees are then required to report for duty on their regular shifts the next day; and

Whereas 2 days' pay for Sunday and holiday services and extra compensation at practically the same rates of pay for services rendered at such unseemly night hours is just and fair pay; and

Whereas customs employees under the act of February 13, 1911, as amended, and immigration employees under their Act of March 2, 1931, are properly and justly compensated for Sunday, holiday, and night services with 77 percent of such compensation paid by transportation companies and others in interest; and

Whereas attempts are now being made to circumvent and repeal the above laws and thereby lower the rate of such compensation to customs and immigration employees, if not to deprive them altogether of Sunday compensation as such, and to place the burden of payment for such services upon the Government (the taxpayer): Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Michigan Federation of Labor support the American Federation of Labor by endorsing the attached resolution; that the Federation notify all Michigan Congressmen and Senators and the chairmen of the Senate Finance Committee and Appropriations Committee, and of the House Ways and Means Committee and Appropriations Committee, that it believes that the present laws governing Sundays, holidays and night compensation for services rendered by customs and immigration employees are fair and just and should remain in the statutes without change and urge their efforts to this end; and be it further

Resolved, That action taken hereon by the Michigan Federation of Labor be transmitted to the American Federation of Government Employees and to the American Federation of Labor.

RESOLUTION NO. 12—LEGISLATION FOR SEWAGE-TREATMENT PLANTS

Whereas S. 418, passed by the Senate of the United States, and recently reported out, with amendments, by the House Committee on Public Works, would if enacted into law require the Surgeon General, after careful investigation, and in cooperation with other Federal agencies, with State water pollution agencies and interstate agencies, prepare comprehensive programs for eliminating or reducing the pollution of interstate waters and tributaries thereof; and

Whereas said bill, if enacted into law, would authorize the Federal Works Administartor to make loans to any State, municipality, or interstate agency for the construction of necessary treatment works and for the preparation of engineering reports, plans, and specifications in connection therewith: Therefore be it

Resolved, By the Michigan State Federation of Labor, American Federation of Labor as follows:

1. That this Federation is fully aware of the stream pollution problem and urges prompt consideration of measures for the correction thereof;

2. That the policies of Congress, as expressed in S. 418, to provide for water pollution control activities are endorsed by this Federation;

3. That the enactment into law of S. 418, or a similar bill, is urged as a beneficial safeguard of the health of the people; and

4. That copies of this resolution be sent by the Secretary to the President of the United States, the Governor of the State of Michigan, each Member of Congress from the State of Michigan, the Federal Security Administrator, and to the Federal Works Administrator.

Run-Away Inflation Must Be Controlled

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ESTES KEFAUVER

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include remarks I made over the Mutual network on Wednesday:

We all agree that runaway inflation is threatening the welfare of the Nation. The spiraling of prices and wages to increasingly dizzy heights is gaining no lasting benefits for anybody. Inflation has destroyed the middle class of many nations and ours is suffering.

Doing something to hold down prices should not be a partisan matter. Recriminations between the Republicans and Democrats is not holding down prices. This is one problem we must try to solve at this special session. The people are crying for relief and they must have it.

In the past I have done what I could to prevent inflation. In early 1941 I supported the Baruch plan which would have substantially frozen everything—prices, profits, and wages. When this measure was defeated I supported OPA with all its imperfections. The OPA was badly administered but during its last 2 years the cost of living rose only 6.6 percent whereas during the last 2 years, it has risen 40 percent. Meat is up 91 percent over 1946 prices.

In this broadcast I am expressing my own views and not those of President Truman or the Democratic committee as to what relief action should be taken. I was asked to appear on this program by the Mutual network. The Democratic National Committee had nothing to do with it.

The essence of our present problem is to bridge the inflationary gap between the volume of incomes and the supply of goods. We let the balance get out of control during the reconversion period. Controls were needed then. But production is now high and the inflationary pressure is still heavy.

I do not think price control and rationing as we had under OPA would work. The people wouldn't accept them. Black markets would again result and it would take too long to put controls into effect. Selective price control should be tried as a last resort only.

The truth is that the end of the war found the world with a critical shortage of food and commodities. Our responsibility of world leadership and our fight against Communistic aggression requires that we send some things abroad, so during this period we are simply going to have to defer buying and building some of the things we would like to have. I think the Government ought to try to secure general cooperation, and particularly with State and Government agencies, to defer some of their major building programs. I think it is necessary to allocate steel so as to try to get more of it into veterans' homes. We ought to do what is necessary under the Marshall plan.

I think a cross check should be kept on foreign exports and, unless things are vitally needed abroad, they should not be shipped. Likewise, increasing our imports at this time wherever possible would be helpful. The amount of money available in September 1943 was $243,000,000,000, of which at least $110,000,000,000 was in the form of liquid assets. This is four times the prewar total.

Inflation could and should be checked to some extent by granting the Federal Reserve Board greater authority to regulate inflationary bank credits. Also some consumer credit controls should be reenacted. I think also authority should be granted to regulate speculation on the commodity exchange. I doubt if reenactment of the excess-profits tax would help very much. It is true that very large corporations have greatly increased their earnings during recent months, but I would rather see this diminished by the making of price reductions rather than the imposition of a tax which would again force part of the earnings into inflationary channels. Senator O'MAHONEY, of Wyoming, has a plan for a cooling-off period for price raises and for turning the spotlight of public opinion upon the high prices fixed by some few of the monopolistic corporations. I think the plan has some merit and might well be tried. Also I think the Government should again ask people with excess money to buy anti-inflation bonds. A campaign of this sort would take some money out of circulation and it could be used to focus the attention of the people to the absolute necessity of saving, rather than immediately trying to buy and build everything they have wanted during the past 6 years. All departments of Government should join in this anti-inflation program. The inflationary effects of Government buying and building should be considered and those projects which can be put off should be deferred. Other Government agencies should be asked to take the same attitude. I believe that a year's program of this kind would find us in very good economic balance and prevent our country from being devastated by a runaway inflation.

A firm and impregnable economy is the very cornerstone of not only our own recovery but world recovery itself. Economic disintegration on the home front would mean the end of the Marshall plan, the only bulwark we have against the spread of communism throughout the rest of the civilized world.

Freedom of the Individual

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROY O. WOODRUFF
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address by W. G. Vollmer, president, Texas & Pacific Railway, before the Dallas Traffic Club, May 10, 1948:

The subject I have chosen to discuss with you today has nothing to do with transportation.

My brief remarks will deal with the subject Freedom of the Individual, which is more important to you and me than transportation.

Why is America so rich, powerful, and prosperous while all other nations of the world are in short supply of even the bare necessities of life?

Why is it that famines for hundreds of years have plagued the peoples of other nations of the world while America has been spared the sweeping devastation, suffering, and death of such catastrophes?

Why is it that the people of this great Nation have a standard of living unknown to most of the world? Literally millions of people do not have the slightest conception of the volume and variety of goods and services which we consider commonplace and take for granted.

Nearly 2,000,000,000 people look to this country, with its small land area, comparatively speaking, for food, clothing, help, and leadership.

By comparison, our Nation is young. It has hardly grown to adolescence. Yet within the short space of less than 200 years we have become the greatest Nation civilization has ever known.

Other nations, from the standpoint of productive capacity, are mere pygmies.

How and why these staggering achievements?

Basically, are the people of our Nation any different from the peoples of other countries?

I don't think we are.

Are the natural resources of our country any greater in volume and variety than they are in many other nations?

They are not.

The lands, the climates, the human and natural resources of a number of countries are basically the same. We have no advantages in any of these respects.

Then where and what is the difference?

I am sure you realize what that difference is.

It is freedom.

When our young Nation looked out upon the world in 1776, freedom was a rarity, just as it is today.

England and France enjoyed it to a degree, but not fully. Kings and rules of one type or another stood in judgment over the people, did their thinking, told them what to do, when, where, and how to do it.

The situation elsewhere today is little different, in that respect, from what it was in 1776. Perhaps it is worse.

The individual is losing ground; the state is gaining in power. The sanctity of the individual is being sacrified upon the altar of state authority. This state authority takes on many forms—communism, socialism, fascism, dictatorship, and government do-gooders.

What it all boils down to under these types of government is that the individual is valuable only so long as he can serve the state which, acting through a single person, or a small all-powerful group, does all the planning and thinking for the people.

And if the people don't like the planning it's just too bad, for unless they do as they are told the dungeon swings open or a firing squad goes into action.

The people are merely so many chessmen to be moved about when and where the rulers may decree. The people are slaves of the State, subject to the dictates of those in authority. They are regimented mentally, morally, and physically.

Our Nation was founded upon a different concept of government.

Our Government is a servant of the people. Through its public servants, whom the people elect, the Government is kept subservient to the will of the people.

Because the people of our Nation have enjoyed the freedoms that our democratic form of government fosters and protects, they have been privileged to work out their individual destinies.

Each individual is thrown upon his own resources. He engages in whatever occupation, trade, or business that appeals to him.

He is free to try and to fail or succeed.

If he fails, he is free to try again and again without restraint or criticism.

He is free to dream, to plan, to create, to work, to move wherever the field of opportunity looks greenest.

He is free to enjoy the fruits of his labor.

This right to enjoy the fruits of their labor has been the major incentive which spurred the people of our Nation to great effort and miraculous achievements.

Take away that incentive and you destroy the vital spark in the breast of mankind to create and to produce.

The fruits of a man's labor take on many and varied forms.

They consist of his home, his farm, his job, his insurance, his investment, his business, his right to acquire property and to accumulate wealth for himself and his family.

People who pool their savings and invest them in a railroad, a manufacturing plant, a bank, or a grocery store, are simply exercising the right to use the fruits of their labor in the manner their judgment dictates.

These people who invest their savings in a business enterprise expect to make a profit. If the Government, through taxation or other methods, confiscates the profit, then it kills the incentive upon the part of the people, who own and operate the business, to produce, to create, to save, and to invest. And when that happens the business perishes.

Profit in business is not an evil thing. It is just as essential to the progress of our national well-being as is the right of the individual to enjoy the fruits of his labor.

In both cases people are involved, one acting as a group, the other individually. But in each case the incentive is the same, and if that is taken away, neither business nor the individual will prosper.

Save for governmental authority designed for the basic protection of life, property, the inherent rights and the general good of the people, the freedom to act rests squarely upon the conscience of the individual.

Freedom, and the sanctity of the individual, is what marks the difference between America and many other nations of the world.

You have seen the box score, I am sure, of the world's supply of goods and services and the proportion our Nation produces and enjoys. But I think it is worth repeating.

We need to look at this box score occasionally so we will not lose sight of our proportion of these good things of life which have come to us as a result of freedom. Here it is:

The United States has only 7 percent of the world's population, and 6 percent of the land area; yet it has 1 telephone for every 5 persons, 1 automobile for every 4 persons, 1 radio for every 3 persons, 46 percent of the electricity, and 32.2 percent of the world's total production.

Now let's see how this compares with Communistic Russia, the other great power of the world, the nation which years ago shackled and imprisoned freedom.

With a population of 8.8 percent and a land area of 14 percent of the world's total, Russia has only 1 telephone for every 188 persons, 1 automobile for every 252 persons, 1 radio for every 45 persons, an estimated 5 percent of the world's electricity, and only 18.5 percent of the world's productive capacity.

Freedom of the individual is the towering beacon which marks the difference between American and Russian ideology and concept of government.

It is freedom of action which makes the difference between the productive capacity of the two nations.

Freedom stimulates initiative, resourcefulness, ingenuity, and action.

Slowly over the years the people of our country, free to act according to the dictates of their best judgment, produced the tools of our present productive power.

The people of other nations where famines, pestilence, poverty, and fear stalk their daily lives work harder and longer hours than we do here in America.

But in spite of the long, hard hours of toil and terror, they have a mere pittance to show for their labors. These people work with their hands. In our Nation we work with tools, which multiply a thousandfold the energy of man.

A farmer in Russia, or India, or China, using an ox and wooden plow barely produces enough to keep together the body and soul of his family. And even to do that he must work from dawn to dusk.

In America, a farmer with a tractor and plow can produce enough food for five families. Yet he does not work as long or as hard as the farmer of these other countries.

The intelligent use of these productive tools spells the difference between the abundance we enjoy and the scarcity which plagues the lives of the other people of the world.

Our form of government is not perfect.

It has faults and shortcomings because it is the product of imperfect beings.

But what other nation, or what other form of government has brought within the reach of so many people such an abundant supply of the good things of life?

Can you name one?

I am sure you can't because no other nation has achieved such greatness or such productive capacity.

When you hear the radical, the Socialist, the Communist, or the Government do-gooder, condemning our system of government, our way of life, and our free competitive-enterprise system, ask him or her what other nation or form of government has nurtured and produced so much for its people.

Has socialism in England or elsewhere done it?

Has communism in Russia done it?

Has fascism done it?

Have the dictators and the rulers of days gone by, or of our time, done it? These various forms of government have been weighed in the scales of humanity and found wanting.

The history of our Nation since 1776 has been a pageant of progress. In the vanguard of this spectacular procession has been a float carrying a large banner with these significant words on it—"freedom of the individual to act, to plan, to dream, to create, to venture, and to have and to hold."

Our forefathers did not turn to the Government in Washington for help, for guidance or for security when plagued by the hard problems of their time.

They did their own thinking, their own planning, and solved their own problems.

For the sake and well-being of our Nation, it is well that they did. It is well that they did not trade their freedom, with all its trials and tribulations, for what so often is proffered as security.

Once people begin to trade their freedom for what they are deluded to believe is governmental security, then they start treading the path of socialism; they abandon faith in themselves and place it in the individuals who control the Government.

When a people start turning to their central Government for the solution of their individual and local problems, instead of working them out themselves, they swap a measure of their freedom of action for what they imagine is a measure of security.

When a people turn to their Government for fianancial support they are by implication asking the Government to do their thinking and planning. By inference, they say that they cannot think and work their way out of their difficulties, so they turn to the people in Government to do it for them.

There are certain functions which the Government should perform for the general welfare of the people, but thinking and planning and supporting the people do not come within that category.

If we are afraid to stand on our own individual and community resources, if we are afraid to meet the problems of our time, as did our forefathers in their day, but instead cry out to Washington to rescue us, then we are going to lose that precious heritage of freedom which has been handed down to us.

We should be on guard against the temptation to trade our freedom for the hollow security which we imagine a government can provide.

A government cannot give the people security. That is a snare and a delusion. Only the people themselves can provide security by production, by thrift, and by resourcefulness.

The only thing a government can give the people is what it takes from the people.

The government does not produce anything. It merely spends what the people produce.

The Government is a consumer of wealth; not a producer as some would have us believe.

What I have said here today does not embody anything that is new to you. It is largely a restatement, in a little different language perhaps, of the basic fundamentals of government to which all of us subscribe. But we need to repeat from time to time what freedom really means to us as a people and as a Nation.

It is easy to lose sight of these things and to take them for granted, just as we take freedom for granted.

But freedom can be lost. It has been lost before.

The process of losing it evolves slowly, almost imperceptibly.

We should always remember that freedom does not come easily or cheaply. It cannot be traded off today and recovered tomorrow. History records the grim fact that the pathway of freedom is covered with blood, sweat, and tears.

As good citizens it is my job and your job to see that we do not trade off our freedom for a mess of contaminated porridge temptingly garnished as security.

To safeguard freedom we should:

1. Register and vote in all elections.

2. Interest and inform ourselves in the functions and activities of the various governments.

3. Suggest, commend, and criticize our governments to the extent our judgment may dictate.

4. Resist the temptation to trade freedom of action for artificial security.

5. Accept the responsibility of solving local problems rather than turning to Washington for the answer.

6. Remember that whatever the government spend they must first take from the people, and that—

7. The more the governments spend, the less you and I have to spend on ourselves and our families.

It is our responsibility to see that the good things of life which have come to us as a result of freedom are preserved and protected for our children.

Ours is a grave responsibility, but if we shirk it, we and our children face graver consequences.

Federal Aid for Education

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM LEWIS

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. LEWIS of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, since I am one among the younger Members of the House, in terms of service, although there are very few Members of this House who have seen more years come in and go out than I have, I admit that I have some reluctance in engaging in discussing the merits or demerits of the various bills that have been introduced and are now pending before Congress.

It is true that I have had a very limited experience in the field of legislation, or rather the making of laws. However, I have had many years of experience in dealing with the law and especially the enforcement of laws, and I think I can fairly judge the merits or demerits of most bills pending before Congress for consideration.

House bill 2953 proposes to appropriate $300,000,000 annually to be distributed among the various States of this Union in proportion to their educational needs. This money is to be turned over to the departments of the various States that have control and supervision of the educational system of the States and to be used and spent by them without interference of the United States Government. Section 2 of the bill is as follows:

> No department, agency, officer, or employee of the United States shall exercise any direction, supervision, or control over, or prescribe any requirements with respect to any school, or any State educational institution or agency, with respect to which any funds have been or may be made available or expended pursuant to this act, nor shall any term or condition of any agreement or any other action taken under this act, whether by agreement or otherwise, relating to any contribution made under this act to or on behalf of any school, or any State educational institution or agency, or any limitation or provision in any appropriation made pursuant to this act, seek to control in any manner, or prescribe requirements with respect to, or authorize any department, agency, officer, or employee of the United States to direct, supervise, or control in any manner, or prescribe any requirements with respect to the administration, the personnel, the curriculum, the instruction, the methods of instruction, nor shall any provision of this act be interpreted or construed to imply or require any change in any State constitution prerequisite to any State sharing the benefits of this act.

I have heard of some opposition to this proposed legislation upon the alleged contention that this appropriation would violate one of the fundamental principles of America—the separation of Church and state. I am unable to find any merit in this contention. This proposed legislation does not in any way infringe upon any persons' religious views. It does not in the slightest degree interfere with any persons' right to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience. It does not even attempt to create a state church. It simply appropriates money of the Treasury of the United States to be used by the different States of the Union in educating and training our youth. I have had a good many letters from the Ninth Congressional District of Kentucky, as well as from other congressional districts of Kentucky, urging me to support this legislation. I am glad to say that I have had no protests, or requests from any Kentuckian to oppose this legislation. Kentucky was admitted to statehood in the year 1792 and aside from the Thirteen Original States, Kentucky is one among the oldest States of the Union, and yet we in Kentucky occupy an unenviable place among the various States of the Union when it comes to education.

Shortly after Solomon, son of David, ascended the throne of Israel, he had a dream in which God told him he might ask anything he desired and it would be given him, and Solomon was so impressed by this dream that he asked Jehovah to give him wisdom, and an understanding heart in that he might be able to correctly judge all questions that came before him as King of the Jews. And as the story runs God was pleased with Solomon's request, in that he did not ask for a long life or riches, and God gave him wisdom such as no one before or since ever had, and because he was pleased with Solomon's request he added to his gift great wealth and honor.

Years later Solomon wrote the book of Proverbs, a book containing the world's greatest epigrams and one of which was this: "Train up a child in the way it should go and when it gets old it will not depart from it."

I have heard it stated that the priests of the Roman Catholic Church claim that if their church was given the control of every child born in the world with normal body and mind until they reached the age of 9 years they could, and would, in a few decades take substantially the whole world into the Roman Catholic Church.

It is my candid judgment that if every child born in America with normal body and mind was given the proper spiritual, moral, physical, and mental training, that this would in itself solve many of the problems of America. It would in a great measure solve the crime problems of America, and would save millions of dollars every year that are spent for law enforcement. It would soon be a complete answer to the question of juvenile delinquency that we hear so much about in the press and from the pulpits of America.

Yes, Solomon was right, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." House bill 2953 is a step in the right direction, even though it be a belated step. If this Congress would appropriate $1,000,000,000 annually, for a good many years to come, to be distributed among the various States of the Union for educational purposes, in my judgment America would receive much more good from it than to be spending much of our wealth and much of our material income in trying to take care of the rest of the world. I could go along a part of the way with the Marshall plan, but it is my candid opinion and judgment that purchased friendship does not last long, no longer than our money holds out.

Look at Stalin, Molotov, and other Russian dictators and semidictators today. Look at their conduct and attitude toward America. Is it not true that they must have forgotten that at one time during World War II Hitler and the war lords of Germany were almost knocking at the gates of Moscow? Is it not true that if it had not been for the help they were given by America, in air power and other munitions of war, to say nothing of the blood, tears, and lives of brave American boys on the battlefields of France, Holland, and Belgium and even on the battlefields of Germany, that today Hitler and his lords of cutthroats and assassins would control most of the Russian empire, and that Stalin, Molotov, and their satellites would be running and hiding far behind the Ural Mountains, and in the frozen northlands of Russia, if they had escaped at all? Is not this positive proof that purchased friendship is soon forgotten?

Let us stop and think of the national debt. It is my recollection that before the First World War the estimated wealth of every man, woman, and child in America was approximately $300,000,000,000 and at that time our national debt was only a few billion dollars. My recollection also is that our national debt at the close of the First World War was around thirty-two or thirty-three billion dollars. What is it today? By the time we get through the Marshall plan and other gifts to the countries of Europe and Asia we will be indebted more than three hundred billion dollars. Since we are giving so freely, why not sit up long enough and think and listen, and then start on the policy of giving to every child born in America a thorough education, spiritually, morally, physically, and mentally.

I believe in charity, but I remember an old-time adage, "Charity begins at home." It is entirely proper and all right for America and Americans to help the hungry and clothe the naked of Europe and Asia insofar as they can, but at the same time take reasonable care of themselves. If any people of the world are hungry and poorly clothed and that was brought about by famine, flood, or pestilence, something over which they had no control, then I would say "Let's give them everything we can possibly spare and just give it to them." It may be all right for America to help rehabilitate and reconstruct war-torn Europe and Asia, but I think in doing so we might remember another biblical declaration: "He that will not provide for his own household has denied the faith already, and is worse than an infidel." Let me say further that if the people of Europe and Asia would learn to live together in peace and lay down their arms and quit fighting, and go to work, they would not need our help, and it is my belief that if we of America had spent more time in the last 32 years attending to our own business and giving to our people and youth the education they should have and let other people's business alone, the people of America would not be carrying the burden of $300,000,000,000 in taxation today. Just think of it, the great-great-grandchild of the youngest Member of this House of Representatives today will never live to see this tax burden lifted from the backs of our people. The people of America will pay and pay and keep on paying until most of us are dead, gone, and forgotten.

Let us take up now what we should have done more than 30 years ago, and spend more of our time from now on attending to our own business and educating the boys and girls of America, and keeping our nose out of other people's business. Let me urge the House of Representatives to pass this educational bill and give to the youth of America in part, at least, what is coming to them.

Statement of Paul A. Porter

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRANK BUCHANAN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statement of Paul A. Porter before the Banking and Currency Committee of the House of Representatives, Thursday, July 29, 1948:

I am appearing here as a special assistant to the President of the United States to urge the speedy enactment of a bill which will put into effect the recommendations submitted by the President to the Congress at a joint session on last Tuesday. My testimony will be brief and directed to the support of those recommendations dealing with high prices and the problems of inflation.

Members of the President's Cabinet and other officials of the executive branch will be available to this committee to testify in detail as to particular problems coming within their specific sphere of interest. In a sense, I am completing a return engagement with your committee after a 2 year interlude. When last I was here, we were engaged in a discussion of the renewal of price controls under the OPA. I regret, as I know you do, that these problems of high prices and inflation which the majority of Congress then thought might solve themselves are still with us. But the fact that these problems are an unavoidable and unpleasant reality cannot be ignored.

The simple truth is that the country is in more economic trouble now than 2 years ago. And, as the President emphasized in his message this week, the passage of time aggravates the critical nature of these highly complex conditions. It is, therefore, to be hoped that this committee and the Congress as a whole will consider immediate action to deal with the mounting inflationary pressures before it is too late.

The country today is in the midst of an unprecedented prosperity. By any index of material welfare, the average American should be more contented than ever before. I scarcely need to point out that such is not the case. This is an uneasy prosperity, haunted by fears for the future. It is also an unfair prosperity in which the condition of large groups within the country has become progressively worse. This paradox of good times and bad tempers, and the quite justified fear that our present prosperity may be built on quicksand, are primarily rooted in one fact: Higher and higher prices.

Prices have been rising rapidly for over 2 years and they are still rising. There is in fact danger that some of us have become so hardened to this process that we may assume that nothing can be done about it and thus forget the certain consequences. But for millions of people these consequences are very real today, as they see their purchasing power and living standards shrink.

Let us review briefly the price history of the last 2 years. Between June 1946 and June 1948, consumers' prices have, on the average, risen 29 percent, the retail price of food is up 47 percent, the retail price of apparel is up 25 percent, and rents are up 8 percent. Consumer prices are now at the highest point in our history. Wholesale prices have shown even more substantial increases. Thus, the average of all wholesale prices is up 47 percent, the wholesale price of food is up 61 percent, farm products are up 40 percent, and all products other than farm products and foods are up 42 percent. Wholesale prices are now more than double their prewar level and the highest in our national history.

This drastic rise in prices has had its inevitable effect on the real income of the average man. While the per capita disposable income rose from an annual rate of $1,086 in the first half of 1946 to $1,273 in the first half of 1948, a rise of over 15 percent, its real purchasing power has been cut by almost 10 percent.

The point I want to make is that these price increases are not something that happened only in the second half of 1946. They happened again in the second half of 1947 when wholesale prices rose 10 percent and consumer prices rose 6 percent. They are happening again now. Since the temporary decline early this year, wholesale prices by June had risen 3 percent. Consumer prices had also risen about 3 percent. Price rises on a broad scale are taking place right now. The situation in retail food prices, which have risen 6 percent between March and June, is particularly acute. It might be noted that, in the last few weeks alone, wholesale food prices have risen around 6 percent. How far are we prepared to permit this inflationary spiral to go? Can the Government, under its responsibility to the people, risk the consequence of further increases, which will undermine the foundations of economic prosperity and bring still greater hardships? The weight of evidence indicates that this is what will happen unless effective action is undertaken quickly.

If we look at the present situation in historical perspective, the country's precarious economic position becomes apparent. This chart shows wholesale prices annually since 1749. It brings out the fact that every previous inflation of this character has been followed by a sharp decline. Such declines have always been accompanied by unemployment and depression.

If we take effective action, even at this late date, there is reason to hope that the price readjustments which are inevitable in the future can take place without general depression and unemployment. The price increases which have already occurred have undoubtedly made such a successful readjustment difficult. If prices continue to rise, the possibility of successful readjustment will progressively diminish and may soon be lost entirely.

And there is every reason to believe that prices will continue to rise, unless we act to stop them. Many people may take false consolation in the hope that the peak of the postwar inflation has been reached, that salutary downward price readjustments are now in prospect. It is true that there are certain factors, such as the grain supply, which might tend to support that view.

However, from time to time during the postwar inflationary spiral, individual factors have appeared which seemed to herald the end of the inflation. Such hopes have on each occasion been false hopes. These particular stabilizing forces have served at best to halt the upward movement temporarily and have soon been outweighed by other factors. You may recall that throughout the second quarter of 1947 prices remained stable on the average, and early this year they actually declined. These pauses in the inflationary process misled many people into believing that the end had been reached. It is always hazardous to attempt to predict the future, but there is no reason for placing any more confidence in optimistic predictions now than there was before.

Prices in general are rising now. Recent wage and price increases in basic industries have not yet worked their way up through the price structure. Tax reduction has meant that the restraining influence of the Government surplus will be largely or wholly lost. Defense expenditures are being stepped up. Export demand remains high. There is no indication that the backlog demands of consumers and business, accumulated during the war, have yet been fully satisfied. The volume of liquid assets in the hands of individuals and corporations has scarcely been dented. These and similar factors portend continued inflationary pressure.

Two years ago many people expected that inflation would be solved by increased production. This expectation was disappointed. Industrial production did increase from 170 in June 1946 to 192 in June 1948, an increase of 13 percent. As a matter of fact that 13 percent increase had been achieved by November of 1947 and the volume of production has remained virtually stable for the past 9 months. But increased production did not solve the price problem, and it cannot be relied upon now any more than it could 2 years ago.

The American economy as a whole is working at full blast. Under such conditions, expansion of total industrial production depends largely upon improvements in efficiency. In a short period such increases cannot be large. In agriculture, where weather is an important factor, crop prospects are favorable. Improved feed supplies will produce a modest expansion in the production of some foods within a period of a year but could encourage producers to hold animals back from the market for heavier feeding. Really significant increases require the building up of cattle and dairy herds. This takes time. And it should be remembered that even the favorable feed outlook depends on the continuation of favorable weather conditions. The only possible conclusion is that while increased production will make an important contribution, it cannot increase fast enough to meet the problem.

The President in his message has outlined a balanced and constructive program of eight measures to stop inflation. This program has been incorporated into the anti-inflation and excess-profits tax bills which, it is hoped, Congress will consider and adopt. These bills are designed to halt further increases in the genral level of prices by a comprehensive program that attacks the problem of all the strategic points. This is necessary to deal both with the basic cause of the inflation and with the factors that cause it to spread through the whole price system.

The proposed bill deals with all of these points except taxation, which will be covered in another bill.

Title I of the present bill authorizes the reimposition of control for 2 years over consumer credit by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, but only with respect to installment credit.

Title II authorizes the Federal Reserve System for 2 years to increase the reserves that members banks are required to hold against demand and time deposits.

Title III authorizes the establishment of control over key prices and wages and then only under specified conditions. I do not propose at this time to treat with the standards in the pricing and wage provisions. The committee has just received the bill and I will be glad to appear in support of the criteria used at the pleasure of the committee and when the members have had the opportunity to study its provisions in greater detail.

Title IV gives the President power to establish allocations and inventory control over scarce materials or facilities that basically affect production or the cost of living and where they are necessary to fulfill defense requirements, carry out United States foreign policy or curb inflation, and also to establish priorities where necessary for these purposes. It is under this title that rationing would be established for key cost-of-living commodities in the event such rationing should become necessary. This title also extends export-control powers to June 30, 1950.

Title V authorizes the Housing Expediter to establish or reestablish maximum rents and strengthen enforcement.

Title VI gives the Secretary of Agriculture authority to regulate margins in connection with trading on the commodity exchanges, a power which he does not now have.

Title VII establishes an Anti-Inflation Coordinator in the Executive Office of the President to coordinate the anti-inflation activities of the executive agencies and an Anti-Inflation Advisory Board to advise the Coordinator; requires the President to submit a report to Congress at least once every quarter on the progress made in controlling inflation and on desirable legislative action; and contains certain miscellaneous provisions.

The process of inflation is characterized by three interrelated phases. First, there is the excess of total demand—by consumers, business, government, and foreign countries—over available supplies at existing prices. The effects of this initial phase are then intensified by the price-wage spiral. Finally, an increasing credit and money supply is essential to support the operations of the economy at the higher-income and price levels; and the increased money supply in turn tends to reinforce the excess demand.

An effective anti-inflation policy must at the same time limit the increase in total demand and, by selective action, bring to a halt the inflationary spiral. Without support of other measures a restrictive credit policy would have to be so drastic to combat inflation that it would run the risk of causing a depression.

No anti-inflationary policy can be effective that does not deal with the basic cause of inflation, the excessive demand. Since Government expenditures and foreign aid are determined by considerations of national policy of high priority, consumer and business demand must be limited and brought in line with available supplies of goods.

Most business expansion is financed by undistributed profits, some by bank credit and some by new capital issues. Adoption of an excess-profits tax and legislation that authorizes some tightening of bank credit controls are the most suitable means for limiting business expansion without interfering with desirable investment in bottleneck industries.

One method of limiting consumer demand is the reestablishment of consumer credit control. Higher down payments and shorter maturities for installment credit will limit other consumer expenditures at a time when supplies are still scarce. It should be frankly recognized that the tax relief given by the Congress to many people who are not among those hardest hit by the price rise has added billions to consumer purchasing power and has made more difficult the task of limiting it.

The curtailment of total demand, unless pursued drastically at the danger of causing a depression, will not in itself do the whole job. There is a momentum in the inflationary spiral that will continue even if the basic cause, excess demand, is effectively reduced.

There are prices that will increase because of past developments. Meat supplies will be low and meat prices high because of last year's short corn crop and high feeding costs. Wage demands are related to price increases of the past. A continued price-wage spiral may multiply even a small excess of demand that otherwise could be absorbed by an early increase in productivity and supplies. With respect to such a price-wage spiral, it is true that the best way to stop inflation is to stop it. If a price rise in items essential in the cost of living, like meat, or in industrial production, like steel, can be prevented, the basis is laid for a stabilization of prices and wages. Labor leaders have stated repeatedly that wages can be stabilized if the cost of living is held and if excessive profits are taxed. Gradual increases in the amounts of profits and in wages and gradual reduction of prices would then again become the method by which producers and consumers share in the fruits of technological progress and increased productivity.

It has been said that price and wage controls try to cure the symptoms rather than the cause of inflation. This argument overlooks the fact that the price-wage spiral is not only the result of inflation but also causes further inflation.

A reasonable policy involving a minimum of risk, therefore, should provide for a combination of various measures, some designed to curtail total demand, others to halt the inflationary spiral. In such combination, no measure needs to be applied drastically because each gives support to the other.

What we want, therefore, is a program which will hold inflation without incurring the risk of causing a depression. All of these requirements, we believe, are met by the balanced program proposed by the President. This program is embodied in the two bills before the Congress.

These bills should be regarded as a means of reducing excess demand; of restraining increases in prices and wages at key points which, directly and indirectly, influence the entire price and wage structure; and finally of securing the most desirable distribution of the chief scarce commodities. We do not expect these measures to reduce the general price level now. We do expect them to end the upward march of prices and to reduce, so far as is possible at this late date, the threat of future collapse.

I have attempted to give you only a brief outline of the seriousness of the present inflationary situation, of the need for effective action by our Government, and a summary of the comprehensive program submitted by the President to supply this action. I have not attempted to present a detailed statistical picture of the many facets of our economic situation which support the need for this program. We stand ready to supply you with whatever facts or analysis on specific or general points you may desire in the consideration of this program. The collective impact of individual studies, however, can only emphasize the general conclusion indicated by the over-all picture; inflationary pressures are still with us, prices are still rising and the living standards of large numbers of our people are being progressively impaired. Thus the basis for national prosperity becomes increasingly precarious.

I have also attempted to approach this problem without the hysteria which too often accompanies a discussion of matters touching so closely the interests of various groups in the economy. American industry, labor and agriculture are producing at a record rate. We are not faced with the hyperinflation or the intense general shortages that are present in most other parts of the world. The American dollar will not become worthless. Disaster may not be just around the corner. But the prospect that the patient will not die is no excuse for subjecting him to great suffering and misery.

There is also no point in attempting to assess the blame, among the various groups in the community, for what has happened or is happening to prices. I, for one, do not believe that such an assessment is possible. There is loose talk about profiteering by business or greediness on the part of labor and farmers. But despite some unfortunate monopolistic elements which exist, prices are still established throughout most of our economy in greater or less degree in the market place, by the interaction of supply and demand. We cannot expect the farmer to sell his wheat for less than the market price because you or I may feel that it would be in the public interest for him to do so; nor can we expect other groups individually to substitute your or my idea of the public interest for normal competitive practices in determining their returns. Our present price structure is the natural result of the operation of our economic system of private enterprise under the abnormal conditions of this postwar period. History indicates that nothing so weakens a system of free private enterprise as extreme instability of the type we are now experiencing. The blame can be laid only at the door of a government which miscalculates its responsibilities and neglects to provide measures to protect the system from the temporary and abnormal pressures carried over from the war. We propose, even at this late date, that this neglect be remedied.

Can Israel Help the Arabs?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JACOB K. JAVITS
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, the following article is a vitally important contribution at this time to answering the question of all our people as to the relations of the United States with Israel. It emphasizes first and especially what I have previously reported to the House—that an independent and effective Israel is capable of making the Middle East into a bastion of democracy and will be of enormous benefit to the forces of democracy everywhere, while chronic depression, illiteracy, and disease in the Middle East make it a breeding ground for disorder and anarchy now. It is a time for great measures to make democracy victorious. The transformation of the Middle East through the cooperation of Arabs and Jews is one of these.

[From the Atlantic Monthly of August 1948]

CAN ISRAEL HELP THE ARABS?

(By David L. Cohn)

(A Mississippian who graduated from Yale, David L. Cohn is a free lance who writes with authority on subjects close to his heart. In God Shakes Creation, he wrote of the relations between Negro and white, with a skill which drew the high praise of Sinclair Lewis. He has written about the tariff, about love in America, about Anglo-American relations, and feelingly about anti-Semitism. In 1944–45, at the behest of General Somervell, Mr. Cohn made an extended trip through the Far and Middle East and saw at first hand the amity between Jew and Arab which despite the recent ruction will, he believes, be a binding force in the Palestine of the future.)

After 30 years of struggle the new State of Israel has come into being. I am not here concerned with the folly or the wisdom of establishing this tiny state, nor with the jockeyings of the great powers with respect to the Arab-Jewish conflict. I am concerned with only one question. Assuming that Israel will become viable, how can its people help the Arabs?

This is a matter of great interest to the Arab world. It is perhaps of not less interest to the United States. The wider the boundaries of world prosperity, by so much is our economic security buttressed. The more prosperous others are, by so much does our democratic system find allies.

A thousand years ago Arabs were preeminent in astronomy, mathematics, medicine. Today they are largely poverty-stricken, illiterate, diseased, and so backward, by Western standards, that they seemed almost subhuman to thousands of American soldiers who saw them during the war. Multitudes of Arabs spend most of their waking hours in search of food. Their lives are short, their miseries long. Arab agriculture is much what it was in the time of Abraham. Arab industry, where it exists at all, is mostly in the handicraft stage. Arab education is principally concerned with teaching students to memorize the Koran. Arab medicine is largely exorcism of the evil eye. Statistics, Arab and Western, bear out these assertions.

There is nothing racial in all this. A once great people, and still capable of greatness, Arabs are not less natively intelligent than other peoples. Those who emigrate, for example, soon prove themselves; one has only to take account of the economic status of Arabian Americans. The dreadful state into which the Arabs have fallen arises from long warfare among themselves and with others; from the Turkish domination of many centuries; the brutality and backwardness of modern overlords of their own race; and that progressive disintegration which occurs when poverty, unchecked, breeds more poverty, disease more disease, illiteracy more illiteracy, apathy greater apathy. Yet it is reasonable to suppose that western technology and a square deal at home could go far toward rescuing them from medievalism; it could feed, clothe, and shelter them; heal their sore-infested bodies; open the eyelids of their trachoma-infected children; whisk them from the twelfth century to the twentieth.

Here it is that Jewish Palestine might, if it is permitted, help its Arab neighbors. Self-interest, if nothing else, dictates that it should do so. A tiny island in an Arab ocean, Palestine Jewry needs the warm friendship of Arabs. It must look to markets in the Arab world for industrial and agricultural products, and as a source of raw materials. Arab prosperity would mean Jewish prosperity.

It is not that Palestinian Jews are superior to Arabs. On the contrary, many Oriental Jews are identical with their neighbors in personal filthiness, poverty, ignorance, and a predilection for the evil eye. It is simply that Jewish Palestine is a fragment of the west set down in the east; that by virtue of forced and voluntary emigration from the west it contains an extraordinarily high percentage of scientists and technicians; that, in order to wrest a living from the soil of Palestine, its Jews not only had to toil with a frenzy approaching desperation, but also had to apply the most advanced methods in agriculture, animal husbandry, fishing, medicine, sanitation, engineering.

Prior to 1918 health conditions in Palestine were similar to those of other Arab countries. Malaria was widespread. Smallpox was common. There were constant epidemics of typhus and relapsing fever. Since the coming of large-scale Jewish immigration malaria has been almost eradicated and the incidence of other diseases has been so reduced that Palestine's Arabs are healthier than those of any other Middle East country.

The best single measure of health conditions is the number of years a person may expect to live. For Palestine's Jews it is 63.5 years—almost the world's highest life expectancy. Here Palestinian Arabs have enormously benefited. During the past two decades their life expectancy has risen from 37 to nearly 50 years. By contrast, the average in Egypt is 34 years; in Iraq only 27 years.

Twenty years ago 49 out of every 100 Moslem children died in infancy. As a result of economic progress and improved hygiene in Palestine this figure has dropped to 13–18 in districts directly affected by Jewish development, and to 21–27 in other districts. But no comparable improvement has occurred in neighboring Moslem lands.

The Middle East must remain in misery unless it improves the interrelated factors of health and agriculture. There is a huge milk deficiency in the Middle East. Jewish settlers in Palestine developed their own milch cows by crossing Dutch Holsteins and English Jerseys with Syrian and Lebanese breeds, which are far superior to native Palestinian stock. These cows average 3,500 quarts of milk annually, as against 800 quarts given by Arab cows. Similarly, the native Arab hen lays an average of 70 small eggs a year. Jewish farmers, by introducing the leghorn and crossing it with native breeds, have produced a hen that lays an average of 150 large eggs a year, and it is now found all over the country. Since these cows and hens were bred to flourish under Palestinian conditions of soil and climate, and since these conditions are similar to those prevailing in wide areas of the Middle East, it follows that their adoption elsewhere would enormously improve Moslem food production.

Jewish settlers have introduced the culture of sugar beets and sugarcane on a commercial scale. Through the use of scientific methods, they have hugely increased honey production. Vegetables, once rare in Palestine, may now be had all the time. Jews grow apples, pears, and other fruits; they produce cereals, beef, poultry, and dairy products. They have added to Palestine's food resources by growing tank-cultivated fish—an occupation at which they are so skillful that the South African Government has recently asked for the loan of experts in this field.

But the outstanding achievement of Jewish agriculture is the scientific growing, grading, packing, and marketing of citrus fruits. Early Jewish settlers found a high-quality orange, the Shamuti, which they cultivated and improved. They introduced Washington navel and Valencia oranges, and grapefruit. Jewish methods were adopted by the Arabs, with the result that Palestine is now the second largest citrus exporting country in the world.

The depressed standards of life prevailing among the agrarian peoples of the Middle East are primarily the result of the low level of real income and of consumption due to the low productivity of their agriculture. The methods through which a transformation can be achieved are indicated by the experience of Jewish agriculturists in Palestine, which serves as a unique experimental laboratory for new crops and techniques, reclamation practices, and soil-improvement systems. Many of its lessons are valid for other parts of the Middle East and deserve close study as an example of scientific approach to problems of agricultural development. The results achieved by Jewish pioneers in Palestine may be gaged from estimates of agricultural productivity. These show a figure of 603 international units (one unit is roughly $1) per male worker in Jewish settlements, compared with 186 in Arab farming in Palestine, 90 in Egypt, 97 in Syria, and 64 in southeast Asia.

Palestine Jewry has also created a modern industrial structure. Prior to the Second World War not much more than the beginnings of a manufacturing industry had been established. But by 1943 Palestine industry—principally Jewish—was accepting military orders to the value of nearly $50,000,000. As evidence of its versatility it turned out mine layers for the British Navy, shrapnel, steel castings, electric cable, hydrofluoric acid, plastics, beer, citrus juices, scientific instruments, industrial diamonds, clothing, pharmaceuticals, and jams. Now Jewish Palestine is building a sizable chemical industry based upon the enormous chemical resources of the Dead Sea. It has the only plate-glass factory in the Middle East, and the largest foundry in the region, equipped to manufacture bathtubs and fittings.

Multitudes of Middle East Arabs have flocked into Palestine, where they find an escape from the brutality of their feudal overlords, better wages and working conditions, and better public services than elsewhere. Palestine's non-Jewish population grew from 516,000 in 1919 to 1,064,000 in 1944.

The theory of the Marshall plan is that a prospering world is essential to American economic and political security; that if there were no Russian-directed expansion of communism, we should still need a prospering world; but since this expansion directly threatens us, we need it all the more. A Jewish Palestine offers to the eastern world an advanced model of scientific agriculture, land reclamation, afforestation, health services, social welfare, educational and cultural activities. The new state, serving as an experimental laboratory for the Middle East, might, without cost to the United States Treasury, do much to raise the standard of living of the depressed millions of that area.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LINDLEY BECKWORTH
OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I include in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a letter I have received from General Clay concerning bringing to this country scrap from Europe:

OFFICE OF MILITARY GOVERNMENT FOR GERMANY (U. S.),
OFFICE OF THE MILITARY GOVERNOR,
APO 742, Berlin, Germany, July 16, 1948.

Hon. LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: Your letter of June 22, 1948, on the subject of scrap shipments to the United States has been received.

You will recall, from your visit here, that the main problem in shipping scrap to any recipient was the lack of equipment for cutting, preparing, handling, and transporting the vast quantities of steel lying in fields and cities. We have pressed to overcome these deficiencies, and I am happy to be able to point to definite progress along that line. Another handicap was the reluctance of the Germans to part with any resource for their then badly inflated currency. Again, I am happy to say we have made definite progress through the recent currency reform.

Aside from the Canterbury contract which was negotiated with the United States Army and calls for the shipment of 147,000 tons of scrap to the United States, the Joint Export-Import Agency has signed or is negotiating contracts for some 400,000 tons to be sold to United States bidders in the near future. The improved conditions mentioned above make it possible to foresee an increase in the amount of scrap that will be available for early shipment, but it is too soon to hazard anything like a firm estimate of what additional amount will be made available for shipment during the coming 6 months.

Sincerely,

LUCIUS D. CLAY,
General, United States Army,
Military Governor.

Public Housing No Way To Solve Slum Problem

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. FREDERICK A. MUHLENBERG
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. MUHLENBERG. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the Appendix, I include therein an editorial from the Saturday Evening Post of July 17, 1948, by Melchior Palyi entitled "Public Housing No Way to Solve the Slum Problem." This is an exceedingly interesting editorial and one that can lead to some constructive thinking by legislators.

PUBLIC HOUSING NO WAY TO SOLVE SLUM PROBLEM
(By Melchior Palyi)

The United States Government has a $20,000,000,000 stake in housing through ownership and mortgage guaranties. Now it is proposed to overcome the shortage of housing for low-income families by more Government spending. The idea is that slums should be cleared and the slum dwellers housed in new Government-housing projects.

Who is a slum dweller? Suppose we define eligibility for Government housing in terms of incomes under $2,000. If so, every family receiving an income less than that is entitled to new housing with the rent reduced by way of Government subsidy. But the people with $2,100 income are not entitled to it. They will remain in older and less desirable housing than those in the lower-income bracket. Wherever the limit is drawn, it leads to this same uneconomical and unsocial result—a premium is placed on earning less * * * or convincing the housing officials that one earns less. The higher the limit is drawn, the more families would fall into the privileged class of subsidy receivers. Even at the modest income of $2,000, and below, some 12,000,000 families would become eligible for housing, at a total cost to the taxpayer of more than $150,000,000,000, using the per unit estimates of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill. Even prorated over a long period, this additional burden would just about bankrupt the United States. And construction resources would be siphoned out of the market for private housing.

Does this mean there is nothing we can do for the underprivileged family which is financially unable to provide itself with decent housing? There is a great deal we can do without further inflation of the national debt and without political control of housing which is implied in Government ownership.

The Bureau of Census reports that in the last 7 years we have made unparalleled progress in improving our housing situation. The 1947 housing survey showed 93.2 percent of all urban homes to be in satisfactory repair, as compared to 88.6 percent in 1940. Every year of prosperity will whittle the substandard housing count further. Both quantitatively and qualitatively American housing is at an all-time high and getting better every year, although this fact is somewhat obscured by population growth and migrations, as well as by artificial forces, such as income inflation and rent control.

Furthermore, the city of Baltimore is proving that enforcement of the existing city housing laws can go a long way in eliminating slum conditions. Block by block, the city is compelling property owners to meet minimum housing standards. The elimination of junk, broken fences and odd buildings in the yards alone has brought surprising results. The advantage of rehabilitation is that it does not reduce the supply of housing at this time of excess demand.

Where the whole neighborhoods are too deteriorated for rehabilitation, the local government can buy up slum tracts, clear them and sell the land for private redevelopment on a closely regulated re-use plan. Many cities already have such legislation; Indianapolis, and Chicago, to mention two, have put the programs in motion. In short, public housing is unnecessary because its major objectives can be accomplished without it, and at lower cost as well as without the corruption, inefficiency and waste which are bound to accompany bureaucratic encroachment into a basic economic function.

Civil Rights Vote

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HENRY D. LARCADE, JR.
OF LOUISIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Speaker, under authority to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD, I am including herein copy of an editorial from the New Orleans Times-Picayune, of date July 23, 1948, entitled "Civil Rights Vote," which follows:

CIVIL-RIGHTS VOTE

Among unexplored angles of the recent Democratic National Convention at Philadelphia is the significance of the close vote on the all-out civil-rights plank. This vote was 651 to 582—in percentage, roughly 53 to 47.

Delegations that unanimously supported the 15 southern and border States were Arizona, Delaware, Idaho, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Rhode Island, and Utah. Split delegations preponderantly voting with them were Maine, Montana, Nebraska, and New Hampshire. Closer splits on the "No" side were Oregon and West Virginia. More or less scattering "noes" came from six other States. The Canal Zone and a third of Alaska's vote completed the negative tally.

Eliminating the scattering vote on each side, and the non-State ballots, the percentage count is reduced to 52 to 48.

Convention and "platform practice" aside, this majority scarcely is of "mandate" order. It may mean little if anything in terms of congressional response—at the special session or next regular session. But it does leave open a question of "import," perhaps worthy of investigation on the part of southern congressional leaders, pending final decision on the proposed line of action drawn at Birmingham.

One source asserts that no comfort whatever is to be derived from the narrowness of the margin; that the spread would have been wider had not some of the States desired to show their support of the majority platform committee report, which was more general in its terms (it also omitted any States-rights reservation). "The South has no friends in this fight," insists this observer.

Other commentators assert on the contrary that some of the "yes" States were "forced" into that position by a variety of considerations. The southern delegations ought to know the answer—so ought Southern Senators and Representatives. If their impressions justify a more extensive canvass—quietly conducted—the results of that canvass surely should be of value.

The possibility of a 2-year Democratic control of the Senate, regardless of the Presidential choice, is not altogether remote. The question, among other questions in Democratic minds is, What kind of Democratic control this might turn out to be.

The Wallace Progressive Party

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDWARD J. DEVITT
OF MINNESOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. DEVITT. Mr. Speaker, as much as we may laugh at and ridicule Henry Wallace and his third-party movement, the fact remains that this group of radicals, psuedo intellectuals, pinks, Reds, and misfits constitutes an ever-present danger to our American system of life. One cannot read the platform of this new party without being impressed with the fact that its dominant tone is appeasement of Russia and encouragement of communism. We Americans should not laugh at the antics of this embryo group of politicians. We must take them seriously and fight them for what they are, a major challenge to American constitutional government. Enclosed herewith are two recent editorials from the St. Paul Pioneer-Press which intelligently discuss the ideals and objectives of the new Wallace Progressive Party. I include these editorials as part of my remarks:

[From the St. Paul (Minn.) Pioneer-Press]

REALISM STILL LACKING

There were inspiring sections in Henry Wallace's acceptance speech at Philadelphia Saturday night, as the preordained Wallace-Taylor slate was nominated by what is now to be designated as the Progressive Party. His idealism carried him to idyllic lengths in describing the "promised land," America—a nation fully devoted to the pursuits of peace in a world where wars and rumors of wars are known no more.

As a goal, that picture of America is attractive. But as a recognition of present-day realities, views expressed both in platform and acceptance speech show the same blind spots that have afflicted Wallace from the time his break with the Democratic administration began.

Henry Wallace says that if he were President, there would be no crisis in Berlin today. "I assure you," he stated in his acceptance speech, "that without sacrificing a single American principle or public interest, we would have found agreement long before now with the Soviet Government, and with our other wartime allies." Carrying that theme further, the third-party leader repeated familiar cliches about Wall Street dominance of foreign policy, ignoring of the public interest in favor of the banking-house boys and the oil-well diplomats.

He even spoke derisively of bipartisan support of foreign policy, ridiculed the idea that "partisan politics must stop at the water's edge." It is ridiculous even to imply that any nation can have two foreign policies. Henry Wallace should remember that, after his own very proper ousting from the Cabinet.

In both the Wallace acceptance speech and the party platform, there is a common acknowledgment, both expressed and implied. It is to the effect that differences with Soviet Russia are wholly this country's fault. It is not hard to see the kind of agreement with Russia Henry Wallace would have reached had he been President, making the present Berlin crisis impossible, as he said. It would have been an agreement acceding to every Russian demand, assuming blame on this country's part for every Russian breach of international commitments.

The platform, condemning the Marshall plan in which Russia is not a participant for the simple reason that she rejected this country's invitation, submits wholly illogical parallel proposals—bilateral discussions between the United States and Russia, and use of the United Nations in the settlement of international disputes. Seeking to prevent the UN's "transformation into the diplomatic or military instrument of any one power or group of powers," the platform implies that Russia is a mistreated member of the international organization. Russia's stubborn veto record, her continued policy of obstructionism, her refusal to submit issues to the United Nations have constituted the greatest obstacles in making that agency truly effective.

Catering to communism, appeasing Soviet Russia, promising Americans a utopian order in which the other fellow will always bear the cost—those are dominant features of the platform and the speeches launching the Wallace Presidential campaign. There is nothing more certain in American political life than the overwhelming rejection of that proffered leadership next November.

[From the St. Paul (Minn.) Pioneer-Press]

THE FATAL FLAW

Henry Wallace plunged into this third-party movement with all the fervor of a man of high ideals who had a vision of a new political movement springing into being almost overnight in the manner of the Republican Party on the eve of the Civil War.

The new party has now been launched. It displayed at Philadelphia much of the traditional liberalism of the progressive movement in America. There is, however, a fatal foreign element in the movement that takes it out of the stream of the American tradition.

Mingled with its liberalism and pacifism is the strain of pro-Russianism, which at its worst is downright submission to the Communist Party line and to Russian imperialism, and at its least worst is simply a sentimental inability to see the grim facts of international affairs.

This side of the new party was manifested Sunday night when the convention refused to permit amendment of the platform so as to cast the slightest suggestion of doubt over the present policies of the Soviet Government, even though indirect. Whatever their proportion numerically in the convention, the Communists were well enough organized and strongly enough placed in key positions to tie the new party to the apron strings of Moscow.

A new party which sees democracy in the totalitarianism of communism and pacifism in the aggressions and imperialism of Russian policy is not in the tradition of American liberalism. Until and unless it purges itself of this element it is headed for oblivion.

The Inflation and Housing Problems

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN W. McCORMACK
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following telegram:

CLEVELAND, OHIO, June 20, 1948.

Hon. ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.
Hon. KENNETH S. WHERRY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.
Hon. CHARLES A. HALLECK,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.
Hon. SAM RAYBURN,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Now that the Republican and Democratic National Conventions are over and people are advised of the principles set forth in their respective platforms, I urge that at the special session all Members of Congress set aside personal and political ambitions and do a genuine job for the millions of our worthy citizens who are obliged to reduce their standards of living because of inflated prices and likewise give favorable consideration to the millions of families in want of adequate housing by the immediate enactment of appropriate laws that will reduce the cost of living and insure the building of homes. No greater service can be given to a restless and disturbed people than a genuine cooperation on the part of Democrats and Republicans to serve the people and the Nation.

President, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

The Facts About Housing

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. ROBERT J. TWYMAN

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. TWYMAN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include a radio address delivered by my colleague, the Honorable EVERETT M. DIRKSEN, of Illinois, over the Columbia Broadcasting System on Wednesday evening, July 28 at 10:45:

THE FACTS ABOUT HOUSING

Yesterday at noon, President Truman came up to Capitol Hill and delivered his message to the special Turnip Day session of Congress.

It had a little of everything in it. In fact, the President presented Congress with three programs rather than one.

The first might well be called his "must" program dealing with high prices and housing.

The second might be called his "urgent" program which included civil rights, more money for power projects, price controls, a modification of the Displaced Persons Act, excess profits taxes, consumer controls and other items.

The third might be called the "spare-time program." The President indicated that if Congress had time, it could devote attention to such things as antitrust laws, universal military training, repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, national health insurance and other items.

If you put them all together, they would involve the expenditure of hundreds of millions of public funds.

Frankly, the President's message is something of a paradox. In one breath, he directed attention to the dangers of inflation and in the next, he recommended more expenditures and more credit, which is like trying to put out the fire by throwing gasoline on it.

From now until November, there will be a chance to fully discuss all these things. But tonight, I want to talk about housing.

Now folks, what, if anything has Government been doing about houses for people over the years? Well, I've been a Member of Congress for 16 years and remember most of the legislation that was passed. It began with the Federal Home Loan Bank Act in 1933 and the Home Owners' Loan Act to meet the distress conditions that existed in those days. In 1933 and 1934, Congress created a public housing program and also set up the Federal Housing Administration. In 1937, we created the United States Housing Administration. In 1944, Congress passed the so-called GI or Servicemen's Readjustment Act which contained a housing title. In 1946, we created the Office of Housing Expediter. Since 1932, we have committed or expended or incurred liabilities in the field of housing activities of more than $20,000,000,000.

THE HOUSING EXPEDITER

The act which was passed by Congress in 1946 to create a housing expediter or housing czar deserves a little discussion. In January of 1946, a few months after the war ended, the President called Wilson Wyatt, the former mayor of Louisville, to Washington. Mr. Wyatt was to be made a housing czar and get home construction under way. Mr. Wyatt had a grandiose plan for building houses faster. It was enacted into law in May of 1946. The goal was to be about 2,750,000 houses in 2 years. All but 250,000 of those were to be permanent construction. About a million and a quarter were to be completed in 1946. Congress gave Mr. Wyatt broad powers, armed him with subsidies and insurance and let him get to work to expedite the building of houses. Mr. Wyatt forthwith issued rules and regulations galore. But he soon discovered some elementary things about building houses and dwelling units.

WHAT IT TAKES

Mr. Wyatt quickly discovered that to build houses, you must have materials such as lumber, soilpipe, lath, plaster, flooring, and what not. He soon found that there were bottlenecks in getting brick, soilpipe, flooring and other items. You see, there were price ceilings on those items. The producers of these items could not raise wages to induce men to come back to work because they were under a price ceiling. OPA would not change the ceilings, therefore better wages could not be paid, and therefore production lagged. It was a case of one Government agency refusing to cooperate with another with the result that the program bogged down.

The program also bogged down because of the multitude of rules and regulations. Houses and designs had to conform to certain standards. New designs and methods had to be approved in Washington. Detailed plans had to be submitted. Half of all houses must be under $7,500, and half of those had to be rental houses. If OPA permitted an increase in price on certain materials, it became difficult to produce houses in many areas under the ceiling set by the Expediter.

Despite the fact that Congress supplied Mr. Wyatt with $400,000,000 to build more houses faster, the program was a considerable flop. One of the top men dealing with home-loan guaranties in the Veterans' Administration resigned in protest. Another Government official said that "Private builders could do better at less cost."

Now, then, what happened to this Wyatt program? It just died. It just folded up from sheer inertia. The President made no effort to revive it after its expiration date. And there was a reason. It was a pretty sorry record. While the number of starts that were reported seemed rather impressive, the number of completions was pitifully small. After all, no one can live in a "started" house. The lag and stretch-out between the time a house was started and the date of completion became longer and longer. And, of course, it added materially to the expense.

Now, folks, one thing more. That act which created the Office of Housing Expediter declared housing to be an emergency. It gave the Expediter vast powers to impose price ceilings on new houses, issue directives, impose priorities, and what not, and when it was all over it was a rank failure. They found that it took materials and manpower to build houses. It couldn't be done with directives, rules, and regulations, and red tape.

PRESIDENT VERSUS CONGRESS

Now comes the President to ask for additional housing legislation. What he refers to is a bill which has been pending in Congress for a long time. It would commit the country to an ultimate expenditure of about $9,000,000,000. Roughly two-thirds of that would be in the form of public contributions on public housing for a period of 40 years. One House of Congress has refused to go along with this program, and for a reason. That reason is that it believes that private enterprise, private builders can lick this housing problem better, faster, and cheaper than any Government agency if it has a chance. This is a free-enterprise country. In the 7-year period from 1922 to 1929 the builders of the country built a lot more houses than they did in any similar period before or after. Nor did they have mortgage insurance or Federal aid of any kind in those days.

THE RECORD

Now, folks, let's look at the record. Early this year, Congress set up a joint committee of Senators and Congressmen to survey the housing problem. That committee secured estimates of our need for houses from at least 15 different sources including the CIO, the AFL, the Census Bureau, the Department of Labor, the Producers Council, building economists, and others. The highest estimate was 2,000,000 units per year. The lowest was 300,000. Several of the refined estimates were around 900,000 units per year.

Very well, that is the estimated need. Now what has been done to meet that need?

In 1947, 849,000 units were started and completed. There were plenty of problems in securing material and manpower. After all, air castles in Spain can be built from dreams but it takes bricks, lumber, nails, flooring, hardware, and other substantial things to build a house.

Now then, what's the score for this year?

For the first 5 months, starts by private builders were 356,000 units.

That's 28 percent above 1947.

If that rate is maintained, it will mean that for this year of 1948, we will build more houses than in any year in our history. The peak year was 1925, when we built 937,000 houses. We'll beat that in 1948.

Now there's the answer to housing.

The Department of Labor says that for May of this year, 2,064,000 persons were employed in the construction industry.

That's an increase of more than 200,000 over last year.

In proportion as more material and more manpower becomes available, we shall gradually go over the million mark each year and that's so far beyond the dreams of any Government agency that it's not even funny.

THE PRESIDENT'S IDEA

These houses I refer to are going up now in all parts of the land. They're not paper houses. They're not houses made of Federal red tape. These are real houses. People live in them.

Now comes the President with a request to supply additional housing legislation. Now, the bill to which the President refers contains a lot of provisions. It would authorize the use of public funds to build and equip plants to produce prefabricated houses. It has a provision for insurance of blanket or multiple loans for the on-the-site prefabrication of houses. It has a billion-dollar revolving fund for slum clearance. It has a revolving fund and annual contributions for so-called public housing where the Government helps pay the rent of those in the low-income brackets. It contains a provision for rural housing. It contains a number of provisions for expanding and liberalizing home-mortgage credit.

WHAT THIS CAN AND PROBABLY WILL DO

No one denies that we need more houses. I doubt whether there has been any period in the history of the Nation when we did not need more houses. But we're moving toward the million-per-year mark to meet it. And the production of houses will grow as materials and manpower become available in greater supply.

Now, what will happen if the Government is put into the housing business up to its ears.

On top of the demand for houses which is so readily evident now, it will step up and increase the demand. As you increase the demand, you add to the very inflationary pressure which the President says he wants to cure.

Certain it is that this Federal program which the President proposes will not increase the supply. What it will actually do is to intensify the competition for what material and manpower are now available and instead of reducing the cost of a house, it will increase it.

As a matter of fact, to superimpose the kind of a program the President wants on top of what we're now doing in this field, will not mean more housing but more expensive housing.

But it will mean something else. If we expand home mortgage credit on such slender terms that scarcely no owner-equity is needed it will not only aggravate the demand for houses but feed this dangerous inflationary fire as no other force can do—the very inflationary fire which he seeks to curb.

Now folks, that does not happen to be my personal unsupported opinion. About 3 months ago, the Joint Committee on the Economic Report, consisting of 7 Senators and 7 Congressmen, of which Senator TAFT is the chairman, received about 150 pages of testimony from the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. Mr. Marriner Eccles, who has been a member of the Federal Reserve Board since 1934, and who until recently was the Chairman of the Board, testified in behalf of the Board.

Incidentally, the Federal Reserve, as you know, is the system that was set up 25 years ago to supervise banking, and keep our credit and monetary system on an even keel.

Mr. Eccles was sounding a warning on inflation and suggesting that the Reserve Board be provided with additional powers to increase reserves against deposits and thereby keep credit expansion under control.

When all is said and done, the answer to inflation will be found in the monetary field. It means whittling Federal expenditures to the very bone. It means living within our income. It means keeping the budget balanced. It means keeping easy credit under control.

Now, then, here is what Mr. Eccles said to the committee: "Congress is currently considering the continuance of easy mortgage credit for housing. Easy mortage credit is one of the most inflationary factors in the domestic credit picture. * * * The housing shortage cannot be overcome by increasing the competitive pressures on scarce supplies of materials and manpower. They are the limiting factors on the volume of construction."

There's the essence of this problem. With private builders moving toward the construction of nearly a million units in 1948, shall we now project Government into this field to compete for materials and manpower, so that we merely aggravate demand and wind up with not more houses but more expensive houses and a heavy additional burden upon the Public Treasury.

I am not insensible to the need for houses. But there are 145,000,000 people in this country who are going to get hurt, including those who may acquire new houses, unless Congress moves cautiously to make sure that the economic house of the entire Nation does not come tumbling down.

Once more let me say that more manpower is employed in the construction industry and more houses are being built than at any time in the history of the Nation. Shall we now accede to the President's request and again project the Government so far into this field as to jeopardize the very program which is actually producing houses? I am persuaded that at this time we should not. This is a time for Congress to be cautious in order to avoid disaster because economic disaster is the serious concern of all the people.

Sixty Percent Disability for Pension Increase Too High

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDWARD O. McCOWEN
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. McCOWEN. Mr. Speaker, the following resolution passed by the Mathews-Carter Post, No. 325, the American Legion, Manchester, Ohio, was sent to me with the request that it be inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I am in full agreement with the idea that the 60-percent disability requirement works an injustice to many veterans as set forth in the resolution and hereby recommend to the Veterans' Committee of the House that the percentage of disability be lowered.

MATHEWS-CARTER POST, NO. 325,
THE AMERICAN LEGION,
Manchester, Ohio, July 24, 1948.

At the last regular meeting of this post on Tuesday night, July 20, 1948, the following resolution was adopted and unanimously passed by the membership:

"Whereas the recent legislation passed by the regular session of the Eightieth Congress, with respect to dependency allowances for veterans of World War I and World War II with more than 60-percent rated disability, is not adequate to meet the present living costs and support of dependents of disabled veterans who are rated less than 60-percent disability; and

"Whereas there are quite a number of disabled World War I veterans with less than 60 percent rated disability who are physically unable to perform work which will enable them to adequately support their families and dependents due to their age and the present demand on the labor market for younger workers; and

"Whereas there are many World War II disabled veterans with less than 60 percent rated disability, who are also unable to adequately support their families during the present period of high prices, because of their inability to compete on the present labor market because of the preference for nondisabled workers: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That Mathews-Carter Post, No. 325, the American Legion, Department of Ohio, goes on record to urge this special session of the Eightieth Congress, to enact legislation, which is urgently needed, to put World War I veterans on a service pension on the same basis and in the same amount as the veterans of the Spanish-American War (as resolved by the recent encampment of the Veterans of Foreign Wars), and to extend the dependency allowance provisions to disabled veterans of World War I and World War II to those veterans with rated disabilities of 40 percent or more."

WILLIAM R. POWNALL,
Post Commander.

Post Adjutant.

Disability Retirements of Officers in the Armed Service

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, it is apparent that there is considerable public and congressional interest in the question of disability retirements of officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps.

As a result of this, the legal subcommittee of the Committee on Armed Services of the House, clothed with investigatory powers by a resolution of the Congress, and of which the Honorable CHARLES H. ELSTON was chairman, undertook in December 1947 an exhaustive investigation of this entire subject through questionnaires and subsequent hearings. The investigation has been completed and a report was made, including recommendations for corrective legislation.

The above report with its recommendations has been the subject of widespread study by interested parties, both in and out of the services. It has resulted in differing viewpoints.

I submit herewith the views of an officer, now in service, based upon a careful study by him of the committee report. This officer has had a long and distinguished career of service. From my personal acquaintanceship with him I can vouch for his sincerity and the good purpose with which he has expressed his views. I bring them to the attention of the Congress, and, particularly to the attention of the distinguished committee that has jurisdiction of the subject, in the hope that the principles he has outlined may find recognition in legislation relating to the subject matter. They are as follows:

PRINCIPLES THAT SHOULD BE CONSIDERED IN DRAFTING LEGISLATION REGARDING DISABILITY RETIREMENTS OF OFFICERS IN THE ARMY, NAVY, AND MARINE CORPS

The hearings conducted by the Legal Subcommittee of the Committee on Armed Services regarding disability retirements of officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps have been read with much interest. It is clear that the Honorable CHARLES H. ELSTON and his subcommittee members have made a very exhaustive study of the question and pointed out most of the deficiencies, but at least one of the conclusions and most of the recommendations for corrective legislation fail to correct the deficiencies.

The conclusion that income-tax benefits and the desire for retirement in wartime grade were causes for the increased number of physical disability retirements would on its face appear to be a logical one. A little closer study, however, would indicate that these are only two of a number of causes which contributed to the increased number of such retirements. Following are a few of them:

(a) The heavy strain of war service, under which many men, especially the older ones, failed.

(b) The theory of physical disability retirement legislation, from its beginning in August 1861 to the present date, that the Government must have authority to rid the military service of physically unfit officers.

(c) Many officers with a history of physical impairment prefer retirement for physical reasons because it gives them a feeling of greater security if so retired, even though they may be eligible for retirement on three-fourths pay for 30 years' service or may be approaching retirement for age. This feeling exists because of the fear that the Congress may some day decide that the promise of retirement is not a binding contract and that the laws governing it might be changed adversely. They hope that a physical disability retirement might be treated more liberally in the event any changes are made in retirement legislation. This apprehension appears to have been well founded, judging by the recommendations or comments made by the committee on page 6043 of its report: "We do not agree with those who conclude that active duty service creates a contractual relationship between the Government and an officer, which guarantees that existing law governing physical retirement will not be altered. The military retirement system is a noncontributory one and, in our opinion, confers no vested rights upon its prospective beneficiaries. We consider it within the authority of the Congress to alter existing retirement laws in any manner it deems advisable." This notwithstanding the fact that the promise of retirement benefits has been one of the most prominent inducements to attract young men to military service as a career, with the attendant low pay and lack of opportunity to establish a permanent home or financial security. Retirement, including that for physical disability, is one of the most prominent features of recruiting advertisements today. While it might be said that this is true only in recruitment of enlisted men, it is a fact that Army, Navy, and Air Force instructors at educational institutions constantly use the features of retirement benefits to interest men in ROTC activities and finally to induce the top members of graduating classes to seek a commission in one of the branches of the armed forces. It is also true that Congress has repeatedly used retirement benefits as a reason for refusing pay increases when the cost-of-living index has indicated that such increases should be granted and civilian Federal employees who contribute to retirement funds were granted pay increases.

It is believed that the following legislation for dealing with retirements would be more equitable to all concerned:

(a) Retirement privileges to career officers and soldiers only—the term "career" to include personnel of the ORC or National Guard who have had 10 or more years' active Federal service and 20 or more years' inactive service:

1. Retired pay should be 75 percent of all pay and allowances for retirement on account of physical disability or for retirement with 30 years' service or for age with 30 years' service.

2. Retirement for age or voluntary retirement with less than 30 years' service should be proportionately less than the 75 percent. The act should be worded so that the retired pay is based upon the total pay and allowances. It may be noted that the retired pay of a second lieutenant with dependents is only 48 percent of his active-duty pay; namely, $291 active-duty pay; $141.75 retired pay. A second lieutenant with the same length of service, without dependents, would under present laws be entitled to retired pay at 55 percent of his active-duty pay; namely, $255 active pay; $141.75 retired pay. The retired pay of a colonel with 30 years' service, with dependents, would be approximately 75 percent of his active-duty pay; namely, $712 active-duty pay; $412.50 retired pay. A colonel without dependents, with the same length of service, would get approximately 61 percent of his active-duty pay; namely, $676 active-duty pay; $412.50 retired pay. The same disproportion exists through all the grades and length of service. The present law actually gives a retired officer with dependents a smaller percentage of active-duty pay than for one without dependents. It is the common belief that an officer retired for physical disability or for 30 or more years' service draws 75 percent of his pay; this is literally true when the base pay only is considered, but the allowances certainly form a part of active-duty pay and should be included in computing retired pay. The benefits provided in a bill introduced by W. STERLING COLE, Republican from New York, H. R. 6953, should be considered along with this legislation. The Cole bill has merit, and something should be done along those lines, but unless the retired pay is properly computed on both pay and allowances, there will be insufficient money to provide an equity for a widow or children.

3. Retirement for physical disability in line of duty for career officers and soldiers should not be on a graduated scale, for the reason that to persuade a young man to enter on a career in the armed forces, he must have some secure guaranty that he will be provided for in case of being disqualified for his selected career, and if so disqualified while young and with only a few years' service, his retired pay, even at 75 percent of his active-duty pay and allowances, will not be very much because he will be retired in the lower grade and pay brackets.

(b) Require all career personnel to contribute toward their own retirement fund, similar to that now required by law for Federal service civilian employees, thus opening the way for proper increase in pay on a cost-of-living basis for the armed forces.

(c) All retirements—physical, length of service and age—for career members of the armed forces should be uniform for all components.

(d) Pensions for all other personnel of the armed forces should be strictly on the basis of full compensation for the degree of disability due to injury or disease incurred in line of duty while in the military service. Repeal all laws granting so-called retirement status to such disabled personnel of the emergency or temporary armed forces who do not qualify as career personnel.

With the legislation suggested above, the causes of any unfair practice that might have existed in the retirements for physical disability would be removed, in that all career members of the armed forces would be treated alike and granted a lifetime retirement for disabilities or diseases incurred in line of duty and that all of the temporary armed forces of the Nation would be pensioned for their disabilities, depending upon the nature of the same.

Republican Platform as to Improving the Method of Electing the President

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. CLARENCE F. LEA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, the national platform of the Republican Party, recently adopted at Philadelphia, has a plank which declares:

> We favor a revision of the procedure for the election of the President and Vice President which will more exactly reflect the popular vote.

This declaration does not specify the particular method that may be proposed by which the election will "more exactly reflect the popular vote."

It is general in its terms but does do two certain things: In the first place, it recognizes there is an evil, a defect, in our system of electing the President, because it fails to reflect properly the popular vote of the Nation. In the second place, it is a committal in favor of a remedy for this defect.

This declaration does point out the great and fundamental defect in our system of electing a President.

My purpose at this time is to present a record of historical facts which will make plain to a certainty the extent to which the electoral college, as it now exists, utterly fails to reflect with any accuracy the will of the people of the Nation as they attempt to express it at the polls.

REFLECTING THE POPULAR VOTE

Under the present system, the voters of each of the 48 States go to the polls once every 4 years and vote for those electors who are pledged to vote for the candidate for President they individually prefer.

The people of each State divide their votes between the candidates according to their desires. The candidates for Presidential electors who receive the highest popular vote in the State are chosen as electors. They in turn vote to elect the President. Under this indirect system of election, the whole electoral vote of each State goes to the one candidate whose electors received the plurality vote of the State, even though that plurality may be only 40 percent of its popular vote. Regardless of the size of a State, or whether or not the plurality candidate receives 40, 60, or 80 percent of the popular vote of the State, makes no difference as to the credit the plurality candidate receives in the electoral college. He gets 100-percent credit for the whole vote of the State, and the minority candidates get no credit whatever in the electoral college.

This procedure is repeated in the 48 different States. The minority voters in 48 States are disfranchised. Their votes are disregarded in the final count. Votes are credited in the electoral college as though all the voters in each of the 48 States voted for only 1 candidate.

It is as plain as daylight that such a method of counting votes does not, and cannot, accurately reflect the will of the American voters.

In the last 10 Presidential elections, 1908 to 1944, inclusive, 323,712,957 votes were cast by the citizens of our country for President; 139,377,955 of these votes were credited in the electoral college to candidates for whom none of those votes were cast. This shows a grand total in those Presidential elections of over 45 percent of all the votes were credited in the electoral college contrary to the way they were voted.

We are now hearing much about the denial of civil rights and remedies to protect them. The most obvious violation of civil rights by the Federal Government today is when it permits and authorizes the disfranchisement of the votes of 139,000,000 of its citizens in the course of 10 Presidential elections. To permit a qualified citizen to vote, and then deny him the right to have his vote counted as cast is clearly a violation of the rights of a citizen. That is the chief offense of our electoral system.

No system of electing a President can be justified which denies voters the right to have their votes counted as they were cast. No such system is worthy of an intelligent popular government.

I now present table XV, which covers the 10 Presidential elections from 1908 to 1944, inclusive:

TABLE XV.—Popular votes and percentage of total votes cast for the winning Presidential candidates in the States they carried; and votes for other candidates therein, all of which are credited to plurality candidate in the electoral college, contrary to way cast

ELECTION OF 1908

A. In States carried by the winning candidate, William H. Taft:
Number of States carried	30
Total popular votes	12,000,116
Votes for winning candidate	6,568,149
Percentage of winning candidate's votes to total	54.7
Votes for all opposing candidates—credited to plurality candidate in electoral college	5,431,967
Percentage of votes credited to plurality candidate due to votes of his opponents	45.3
B. In States carried by the losing candidate, William Jennings Bryan:
Number of States carried	16
Total popular votes	2,887,017
Votes for Bryan	1,659,312
Percentage of Bryan's votes to total	57.5
Votes for all opposing candidates—credited to plurality candidate in electoral college	1,227,705
Percentage of votes credited to plurality candidate due to votes of his opponents	42.5

ELECTION OF 1912

A. In States carried by the winning candidate, Woodrow Wilson:
Number of States voting	40
Total popular votes	11,640,595
A. In States carried by the winning candidate, Woodrow Wilson—Continued
Votes for winning candidate	5,162,267
Percentage of winning candidate's vote to total	44.3
Votes for all opposing candidates—credited to plurality candidate in electoral college	6,478,328
Percentage of opposing candidates' votes to total	55.7
B. In States carried by losing candidate, William H. Taft:
Number of States voting	2
Total popular votes	175,226
Votes for Taft	65,432
Percentage of Taft's votes to total	37.3
Votes for all opposing candidates—credited to plurality candidate in electoral college	109,794
Percentage of opposing candidates' votes to total	62.7
C. In States carried by losing candidate, Theodore Roosevelt:
Number of States voting	6
Total popular votes	3,215,348
Votes for Roosevelt	1,243,985
Percentage of Roosevelt's votes to total	38.7
Votes for all opposing candidates—credited to plurality candidate in electoral college	1,971,363
Percentage of opposing candidates' votes to total	61.3

ELECTION OF 1916

A. In States carried by winning candidate, Woodrow Wilson:
Number of States voting	30
Total popular votes	8,357,822
Votes for winning candidate	4,656,437
Percentage of winning candidate's vote to total	55.7
Votes for all opposing candidates—credited to plurality candidate in electoral college	3,701,385
Percentage of opposing candidate's votes to total	44.3
B. In States carried by losing candidate, Charles E. Hughes:
Number of States voting	18
Total popular votes	10,170,041
Votes for Hughes	5,243,134
Percentage of Hughes' votes to total	51.6
Votes for all opposing candidates—credited to plurality candidate in electoral college	4,926,907
Percentage of opposing candidates' votes to total	48.4

ELECTION OF 1920

A. In States carried by the winning candidate, Warren G. Harding:
Number of States voting	37
Total popular votes	23,289,249
Votes for winning candidate	14,976,223
Percentage of winning candidate's vote to total	64.3
Votes for all opposing candidates—credited to plurality candidate in electoral college	8,313,026
Percentage of opposing candidates' votes to total	35.7
B. In States carried by the losing candidate, James M. Cox:
Number of States voting	11
Total popular votes	3,079,279
Votes for Cox	1,878,398
Percentage of Cox's votes to total	61.0
B. In States carried by the losing candidate, James M. Cox—Continued
Votes for all opposing candidates—credited to plurality candidate in electoral college	1,200,881
Percentage of opposing candidates' votes to total	39.0

ELECTION OF 1924

A. In States carried by the winning candidate, Calvin Coolidge:
Number of States voting	35
Total popular votes	25,191,953
Votes for winning candidate	14,480,302
Percentage of winning candidate's vote to total	57.5
Votes for all opposing candidates—credited to plurality candidate in electoral college	10,711,651
Percentage of opposing candidates' votes to total	42.5
B. In States carried by losing candidate, John W. Davis:
Number of States voting	12
Total popular votes	3,058,685
Votes for Davis	1,948,752
Percentage of Davis' votes to total	63.7
Votes for all opposing candidates—credited to plurality candidate in electoral college	1,109,933
Percentage of opposing candidates' votes to total	36.3
C. In State carried by losing candidate, Robert M. La Follette:
Number of States voting	Wisconsin
Total popular votes	840,779
Votes for La Follette	453,678
Percentage of La Follette's votes to total	54.0
Votes for all opposing candidates—credited to plurality candidate in electoral college	387,101
Percentage of opposing candidates' votes to total	46.0

ELECTION OF 1928

A. In States carried by the winning candidate, Herbert Hoover:
Number of States voting	40
Total popular votes	33,884,732
Votes for winning candidate	20,155,627
Percentage of winning candidate's votes to total	59.5
Votes for all opposing candidates—credited to plurality candidate in electoral college	13,729,105
Percentage of opposing candidates' votes to total	40.5
B. In States carried by the losing candidate, Alfred E. Smith:
Number of States voting	8
Total popular votes	2,926,985
Votes for Smith	1,640,220
Percentage of Smith's votes to total	56.0
Votes for all opposing candidates—credited to plurality candidate in electoral college	1,286,765
Percentage of opposing candidates' votes to total	44.0

ELECTION OF 1932

A. In States carried by the winning candidate, Franklin D. Roosevelt:
Number of States voting	42
Total popular vote	35,544,384
Votes for winning candidate	20,904,105
Percentage of winning candidate's votes to total	58.8

A. In States carried by the winning candidate, Franklin D. Roosevelt—Continued
Votes for all opposing candidates—credited to plurality candidate in electoral college	14,640,279
Percentage of opposing candidates' votes to total	41.2
B. In States carried by the losing candidate, Herbert Hoover:
Number of States voting	6
Total popular vote	4,207,054
Votes for Hoover	2,148,277
Percentage of Hoover's votes to total	51.1
Votes for all opposing candidates—credited to plurality candidate in electoral college	2,058,777
Percentage of opposing candidates' votes to total	48.9

ELECTION OF 1936

A. In States carried by the winning candidate, Franklin D. Roosevelt:
Number of States voting	46
Total popular votes	45,199,188
Votes for winning candidate	27,283,216
Percentage of winning candidate's votes to total	60.4
Votes for all opposing candidates—credited to plurality candidate in electoral college	17,910,972
Percentage of opposing candidate's votes to total	39.6
B. In States carried by the losing candidate, Alfred M. Landon:
Number of States voting	2
Total popular votes	447,929
Votes for Landon	249,846
Percentage of Landon's votes to total	55.8
Votes for all opposing candidates—credited to plurality candidate in electoral college	198,083
Percentage of opposing candidates' votes to total	44.2

ELECTION OF 1940

A. In States carried by the winning candidate, Franklin D. Roosevelt:
Number of States voting	38
Total popular votes	41,657,923
Votes for winning candidate	23,387,205
Percentage of winning candidate's votes to total	56.1
Votes for all opposing candidates—credited to plurality candidate in electoral college	18,269,718
Percentage of opposing candidates' votes to total	43.8
B. In States carried by the losing candidate, Wendell L. Willkie:
Number of States voting	10
Total popular votes	8,162,389
Votes for Willkie	4,266,676
Percentage of Willkie's votes to total	52.3
Votes for all opposing candidates—credited to plurality candidate in electoral college	3,895,713
Percentage of opposing candidates' votes to total	47.7

ELECTION OF 1944

A. In States carried by the winning candidate, Franklin D. Roosevelt:
Number of States voting	36
Total popular votes	37,982,076
Votes for winning candidate	20,904,289
Percentage of winning candidate's votes to total	55.0
A. In States carried by the winning candidate, Franklin D. Roosevelt—Continued
Votes for all opposing candidates—credited to plurality candidate in electoral college	17,077,787
Percentage of opposing candidates' votes to total	45.2
B. In States carried by the losing candidate, Thomas E. Dewey:
Number of States voting	12
Total popular votes	9,994,187
Votes for Dewey	5,253,472
Percentage of Dewey's votes to total	52.6
Votes for all opposing candidates—credited to plurality candidate in electoral college	4,740,715
Percentage of opposing candidates' votes to total	47.4

The purpose of this table is to illustrate by historical facts how impossible it is for our present system of counting votes for President to reflect accurately the popular votes.

The first lines give the number of States carried by each candidate. The second lines give the total popular vote in the group of States covered by that section of the table. The third lines give the votes for the winning candidate. The fourth lines give the percentage of the winning candidate's votes to the total in the States he carried. The fifth lines show the votes of all opposing candidates and which are, under the unit system, credited to the plurality candidate in the electoral college. The sixth lines show the percentage of votes credited to the plurality candidate due to the votes of his opponents.

In lines 5 and 6 we have the number of votes counted contrary to the way they were cast, the percentage such votes represent, and the whole within that group of States.

Looking at the first table as to the election of 1908, we find that Taft's percentage of the popular votes in the States he carried was 54.7. His opponents received 45.3 percent of the votes of those States. The votes of the opponents, however, according to the usual practice, were all credited in the electoral college to Taft. With less than 55 percent of the popular vote, he received 100 percent of the electoral votes of the 30 States he carried.

Looking at section B of that election, we find that Bryan carried 16 States by a plurality of 57.5 percent, and that the opponents of Bryan in those States received 42.5 percent of the votes, or 1,227,705, which were credited in the electoral college as if cast for Bryan. With less than 58 percent of the popular vote he received 100 percent of their electoral votes.

Table XV illustrates the extent to which candidates for the presidency are dependent upon securing credit in the electoral college for the votes cast for their opponents.

In the 10 elections covered by this table, 67 States were carried by candidates who received less than a majority of their popular votes. In each such instance, of course, the plurality candidate received credit in the electoral college for the whole vote of the State. One of the most enlightening instances of the operation of the unit vote in giving candidates credit for their opponents' votes is in the election of 1912 when there were three candidates running—Wilson, Taft, and Theodore Roosevelt.

Wilson received less than 45 percent of the popular votes of the Nation, but nearly 82 percent of the electoral votes.

Taft carried two States, in which he received 37.3 percent of the popular votes. His opponents received 62.7 percent of the popular votes of the States he carried.

Theodore Roosevelt carried 6 States by receiving 38.7 percent of their votes. His opponents received 61.3 percent of their popular votes.

A unique fact is that each of these three candidates got more credit in the electoral college for the votes cast for his opponents than for the votes cast for himself.

Under the unit system of counting the State electoral votes, the election contest of the candidate is just as definitely for the purpose of securing credit for the votes cast for one's opponent as it is to secure the votes cast for himself. The candidate earns the votes cast for him, but when by a mere plurality he controls the votes of his opponent, possibly by hundreds of thousands or a million, he gets much for little. This injects a vicious phase into our political life. It yields itself to the possible domination of even our greatest States by the small groups that control the balance of power, and thereby deprives all minority candidates of any credit for votes received, even though they may be numbered by the hundreds of thousands, or millions.

Under the present system, the elected candidate for President does not receive credit in the electoral college for votes cast for him in States where he received less than the plurality.

Even a plurality of 1 vote in the smallest or largest State in the Union may control the whole vote of that State in the electoral college. A plurality of 1 vote, or of any number, may control the total vote of Wyoming with its 3 electoral votes or New York with its 47. That plurality, whatever it is, takes all the votes away from minority candidates in the State and transfers them to the plurality candidate.

In 1916 Wilson carried California by a plurality of less than 4,000, and thereby won the 1 electoral vote necessary for his election. The size of the plurality constituted only 5 percent of the number of popular votes for one electoral vote of California at that time. Wilson's election depended upon that small vote, notwithstanding that he had a plurality of over 550,000 votes in the Nation.

It really seems useless to attempt to find a definite relation as between popular votes and electoral votes when the electoral votes are counted in an entirely different manner from the popular votes. When we have a division of electoral votes in each State between the candidates in proportion to their popular votes therein, we will have an exact harmony between popular and electoral votes.

In the 10 elections covered by table XV, the elected candidates received over 179,000,000 popular votes. In the electoral college these candidates were denied credit for over 21,000,000 of their votes because the candidates for whom they were cast did not receive a plurality in the States in which they were voted.

So we have a system of counting votes in which a candidate receives credit for part of his own votes, loses credit for part of his own votes, and on the average may receive credit in the electoral college for 45 percent of his votes on account of the popular votes cast for his opponents.

In the election of 1916, Woodrow Wilson received 9,120,606 popular votes, but in the 30 States he carried he received only 4,656,437 popular votes. Thus, 4,464,169 votes for Woodrow Wilson contributed nothing to his election in 1916. They were credited to his opponent. But credit to him of but 3,701,385 votes of his opponents made his election possible.

In 1932 in the 42 States Roosevelt carried, he received 21,000,000 votes; in addition to that, in the electoral college he received credit for over 14,000,000 votes, which were cast for his opponents. These votes of his opponents constituted 41.2 percent of the popular votes credited to Roosevelt in the electoral college.

On the other hand, Hoover received nearly 16,000,000 popular votes in the election, but of the votes cast for him he received credit in the electoral college for only 2,148,277 plus 2,058,777 cast for his opponents.

About 2,150,000 of Hoover's votes gave him credit in the electoral college for 59 electoral votes; 13,500,000 popular votes gave him no electoral votes.

The figures cited here conclusively show that the popular votes are reflected in the electoral votes with no accuracy whatever. This is so plainly true that statistics to illustrate it could be multiplied indefinitely.

I now present table XVI.

This shows that in these 10 Presidential elections 139,377,955 votes were credited contrary to the way they were cast.

On the average these candidates received a credit of 45 5 percent of their votes in the electoral college on account of the votes that were cast against them. To be elected by the aid of the votes cast for one's opponent is a political luxury.

TABLE XVI.—Number and percentage of popular votes credited in the electoral college contrary to way cast, and candidates who received credit therefor

	Average		45.5

Table XVI gives an account of all popular votes credited in the electoral college to candidates who received electoral votes in the last 10 elections, and which popular votes were in fact cast for opponent candidates who received no credit therefor.

It shows that 139,377,955 votes were credited in the electoral college contrary to the way they were cast. In other words, all the votes for minority candidates in all the States, amounting to over 139,000,000, were denied any credit to the candidates for whom they were cast, and in turn were credited to the plurality candidates for whom they were not cast.

The number of popular votes thus credited to the candidates is shown in column 3 of table XVI. Column 4 shows the percentage these disfranchised votes constituted of the total vote received by the plurality candidate.

Thus, in 1908, of the total popular votes credited to Taft in the electoral college in the States he carried, 6,568,149 were votes cast for him and 5,431,967 votes were cast for his opponents. The votes of his opponents represented 45.3 percent of his total credit in the electoral college.

I present table XVII, which illustrates the variation between the percentage of popular votes and electoral votes received by the winning candidates in the last 10 elections.

It will be noted there is an average variation of over 24 percent.

The nearest approach to a comparable basis in these 10 elections was in 1916 when there was a variation between the two of not quite 3 percent. This occurred, however, in the election where Wilson received credit for 3,700,000 votes of his opponents and failed to receive credit for 4,460,000 of his own votes, which were credited to his opponents.

Popular votes are computed credited according to the way they were cast. Electoral votes represent in part the votes received by the candidate and in part the votes received by his opponents, but credited to the plurality candidate. Thus, there is no logical relation between popular and electoral votes.

Table XVII is simply a verification of the inevitable variation between popular and electoral votes, which shows the inherent failure of the electoral votes, as now counted, to reflect accurately popular votes.

TABLE XIII.—Comparison of percentages as between popular and electoral votes

1932	57.4	88.9
1936	60.2	98.5
1940	53.8	84.6
1944	51.6	81.4
Average	53.91	78.56

THE NEEDED REMEDY

The defect of the constitutional provisions for the election of the President are apparent. The practical question is as to what should be done about it.

The fundamental remedy is simply to remove the causes that now prevent the electoral vote from accurately reflecting the popular votes of the voters within the State.

The simple remedy is to eliminate the unit vote from our system of counting votes and divide the electoral votes of the States among the candidates in exact proportion to their popular votes within each State. When that is done we will have a system for counting the votes for President that will fully represent each and all the people in every State in the country.

In order to do this it is necessary to amend the Constitution so as to authorize the election of the President by direct vote, abolish the electoral college, preserve the voting power of each State as it is at present, and divide the electoral votes of each State in proportion to the votes of the candidates in such State.

The Judiciary Committee of the House of which Hon. EARL MICHENER is chairman, and also the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, of which Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE, JR., is chairman, have each reported identical resolutions which are now pending in Congress and which, if adopted into the Constitution, would accomplish this purpose.

That would fully meet the promises of the plank of the platform above quoted.

I commend the initiative and constructive action which led to the adoption of this plank in the platform. If its indicated purpose is carried into the Constitution, it would be a great contribution to the betterment of our political life. It is a proposal in which citizens of all parties should be equally interested.

Booker T. on Civil Rights

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY D. LARCADE, JR.

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I wish to submit an editorial from the Daily World, Opelousas, La., July 22, 1948, entitled "Booker T. on Civil Rights Agitation," as follows:

BOOKER T. ON CIVIL RIGHTS AGITATION

It might be well, with this "civil rights" political agitation from the North, and the rumblings that are being felt now, and particularly in the South, to look back 53 years, at a talk made by a noted southern Negro leader, Booker T. Washington.

He spoke at the Atlanta Exposition on September 18, 1895, and it was the first important national occasion on which a Negro had been invited to speak from the same platform with white southerners.

"You can be sure in the future, as in the past," he said, "that you and your families will be surrounded by the most patient, faithful, and unresentful people that the world has seen.

"As we have proved our loyalty to you in the past, in nursing your children, watching by the sick-bed of your mothers and fathers, and often following them with tear-dimmed eyes to their graves, so in the future, in our humble way, we shall stand by you with a devotion that no foreigner can approach, ready to lay down our lives, if need be, in defense of yours, interlacing your industrial, commercial, civil, and religious life with ours in a way that shall make the interests of both races one.

"In all things that are purely social we can be as separate as the fingers, yet as the hand in all things essential to mutual progress. * * *

"* * * The wisest among my race understand that the agitation of questions of social equality is the extremest folly, and that progress in the enjoyment of all the privileges that will come to us must be the result of severe and constant struggle rather than of artificial forcing.

"No race that has anything to contribute to the markets of the world is long in any degree ostracized. It is important and right that all privileges of the law be ours, but it is vastly more important that we be prepared for the exercises of these privileges. The opportunity to earn a dollar in a factory just now is worth infinitely more than the opportunity to spend a dollar in an opera house."

That's the advice from one of the wisest Negro leaders to appear on the American scene: "The agitation of questions of social equality is the extremist folly."

Corporation Earnings

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES R. ROBERTSON

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, in this day of political intrigue and dishonesty, there are many public statements released from men who apparently occupy high places, but even the influence of their position seems to have little effect upon their intellectual honesty, especially when they are thinking in terms of politics. Generally speaking, in many of these fields of influence today there is greater dishonesty than in our lowest ranks.

The general disposition of men in this capacity is to make constant reference to the common man and indicate by indirection their devotion to the common man, and his importance is inspired by no other reason in the world than the contemptible dishonesty on the part of the speaker to obtain votes, because in the common man's brackets are the greater number of votes.

This is a tragedy on intelligence, to say nothing about the major question of civilization.

Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent, I include herewith an editorial from the Bismarck Tribune dealing with the question of danger in generalization, and its reference to the ill-considered remarks of Senator O'MAHONEY, of the United States Senate:

DANGER IN GENERALIZATION

Drew Pearson's reference to Senator O'MAHONEY's figures relating to corporation earnings in 1940 and 1947 has alerted us once again to the danger involved in America's seeming eagerness to cherish generalizations.

Senator O'MAHONEY said earnings of 100 corporations jumped from $1,875,000,000 in 1940 to $3,730,000,000 in 1947.

The inference could be drawn by unthinking individuals that all corporations are ogres living off the fat of the land, giving as little as possible in return and in general disregarding the welfare of human beings. This is a generalization which should not be supported by thinking individuals.

We resent reference to corporations in this attitude as if they were not part and parcel of the American system which has done a pretty good job for American citizens for 150 years.

We must remember that corporation stockholders and officers are American citizens, even as you and I. In fact, we have several corporations in Bismarck. Their officers and stockholders are ordinary folk and practically all of us would be reluctant to state or infer otherwise.

Granting that corporations might be as prone to error as human beings, since they are directed by human beings, we wonder if the percentage of error in corporation pholosophy is much different than philosophical error in our other forms of business structure.

Let's take a look behind Senator O'MAHONEY's statement.

First of all, he hasn't identified the 100 corporations, possibly several of them were infant or juvenile firms, just getting started in 1940, which had become adults by 1947. This, naturally, could make a considerable difference in their earnings.

Possibly some of these corporations were started in 1939 or 1940 principally for war production at the urging of our Government, which represents all of us, grew rapidly through the war years, and converted to production of peacetime articles. This could make a considerable difference in their earnings.

Then there is this item of inflation which must be taken into consideration. Why should we suppose that corporations are not affected by inflation in roughly the same degree as the individual is affected?

Since dollars represent only purchasing power, would there be any just reason that officers and stockholders, incidentally being human beings, should be restrained from trying to maintain purchasing power to the same degree as any other form of business or labor?

Then there is that little matter of plant and equipment depreciation which always must be considered, not only by corporations but everybody else. If it costs more to replace equipment now than it did at the turn of the decade, management must keep this in mind or be guilty of gross negligence and lack of wisdom indeed. Even the employees who are not officers or stockholders and the general public as well should be cognizant of this factor because jobs and our very economy depend on this necessity to look forward and remain in business.

And it also is possible that many of the older corporations have expanded into new fields during the last 7 or 8 years, which could make a considerable difference in earnings. If a corporation is operating in a new field which is twice as large, necessitating increased investment and risk, is there any reason why its earnings should not increase? If there is good reason, why should a corporation, or any other type of business, even consider expansion? Are not increased production, new production, and expansion part and parcel of the system that made the United States what it is?

This is not meant as a blanket defense of corporations. It is meant as a reminder that we should analyze all generalizations. Have we more reason to condemn corporations as such than we have to persecute partnerships or a business operated and controlled by an individual?

Address of Speaker Joseph W. Martin, Jr., Before the Republican National Convention of 1948, Philadelphia, Pa.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LEO E. ALLEN

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include in the RECORD the address of Speaker JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr., before the Republican National Convention of 1948 at Philadelphia, Pa.:

Fellow Americans, for the third time you have honored me with this gavel as your permanent chairman. With deepest sincerity, I say to you that few honors can equal this one, which you have three times bestowed upon me. I humbly accept the duties and responsibilities of the permanent chairmanship. A man who serves this great Republican Party serves his country, and serves it well.

We Republicans meet in our twenty-fourth national convention tested, tried, and proved, not only by the great victories of other years, but also by our defeats, from which we always have risen stronger than ever. The bedrock of our strength through all these years has been our unwavering devotion to the principles upon which our Government was founded. Never will they be surpassed so long as free men remain on this earth.

While others have dabbled in the fallacies of the collectivists and fellow travelers of Old World despair, we have held faith with the American people. Throughout all its illustrious history of more than 90 years, the Republican Party has followed but one master plan—the Constitution. We have resisted every attempt to transplant the doctrines of statism to the land of the free. We have kept alive the basic principle of freedom—that, in America, government is the servant, not the master, of the people.

And if anyone thinks that the Republican position today is not the American position, let him look at the election returns next November.

The job which the Republican Party will take over next January is burdened with grave implications. This convention must ponder well its decisions, and pray humbly for Divine guidance in making them. Not only are we going to choose the next President of the United States; we are going to choose an Executive to whom all free peoples of the earth will look for leadership.

Before this convention proceeds further, let us grasp one thing: As never before in history, the American people and the peoples of every land are waiting—wearily and desperately waiting—for a voice that speaks clearly, wisely, honorably. They are waiting for a leadership that can set a course and then, above all else, steer it. This convention must, and will provide the Nation and the world with that leadership.

This is no time for self-interest. The decisions of this convention will be free of outside interference. Its conclusions will be the essence of our wisdom.

Through you delegates, representing the homes and farms, the factories and firesides of every section of our land, and every element of our national life, the American people will express their determination to restore their Government to the constitutional pattern of freedom, order, solvency, and peace.

In a world weakened by war and tormented by the forces of revolution, America's spiritual moorings and moral foundations are challenged on every hand by a godless materialism. For America, intelligent action is of first importance. We are a young, a vigorous people. In less than two centuries we have risen to the eminence of world leadership, a place in the sun we never sought, a position that was never foreseen by our founding fathers. Yet here we are, and we must assume the responsibility that goes with our strength and power. America has reached its maturity.

No longer may we relax in youthful faith in our own invincibility; no longer may we rely on the security which our natural borders once offered. When America acts today it acts as the keeper of the world's peace. When America acts today it acts for the generations to come, not only for our children, but for millions yet unborn in other lands. Never has the need for sound executive leadership and firm policy in Washington been of such far-reaching importance.

As the first nation of the world, we must face today's challenging realities. A fifth of the globe is enslaved under Communist dictatorship, and the rest is threatened with the spread of this cancer. Of those nations not under the domination of the Communist dictatorship, fully half are now sampling the deceptive drugs of socialism, or statism in one form or another. Of the great nations of the world, we, practically alone, remain the convinced disciples of freedom, of liberty, and of the essential dignity of man.

The issue was never plainer; only America stands in the path of a police-state world; only a strong America can hold back the tide; only a strong America can hold aloft the bright beacon of human freedom.

From the bottom of my heart I wish I could report to you that the administration in Washington had grasped this fundamental issue, that it had chosen policies on which the world could depend, policies on which the people of the United States could unite. But the plain, unvarnished truth is that the administration has tried and failed.

I ask you: How can we expect the world to put its faith in America when we have an administration in Washington which can change its mind five times in 2 years on one phase of foreign policy, two times in 3 years on another phase; twice in 2 years on still another; and twice in 3 years on a fourth? I refer to our treatment of the Palestine, Russian, Argentine, and German questions. It is an appalling record.

As Speaker of the House, I can tell you that we Republicans, who have cooperated in a bipartisan effort to carry on our foreign relations, would welcome an administration—any administration—which at least could make up its mind. The American people, and the nations of the world are fed up on an American foreign policy run on a Saturday-night-to-Saturday-night basis.

Our Republican Members of Congress have taken the only possible alternative to such a wavering policy. If, under the Constitution, we could not direct foreign policy, we at least could make sure that America's military defense was strong enough to survive the diplomatic bumbling and fumbling in Washington. It is to the everlasting credit of this Republican Congress that it authorized this year the greatest air force in the world. It built up our Navy, and strengthened our land forces. Make no mistake about it, the cost has been enormous. That is the price of faltering leadership in the White House.

The very basis of thrift in government is cohesive and coordinated policies. It has been the purpose of the Republican Congress to give the American people the kind of government they want, at a price they can afford to pay. The boldest economy stroke the American people can make will be to elect a Republican President next November.

If the fumbling that has weakened our position in the world was limited to our foreign relations, our situation would be difficult enough. Tragically that is not the case. Still in power at the end of the war in 1945, the Democratic Party found itself without a program. The national debt was colossal, the domestic economy suffered from the dislocations of war, taxes were unbearable, the housing situation intolerable, labor was restless, 15,000,000 servicemen and women were returning home, and the American people ached for peace.

I do not need to recall to you the awful confusion in the year following VJ-day. You and the American people know only too well how the Administration first decided to remove controls as fast as it could, then changed its mind and attempted to restore them, and then, on election eve 1946, decided once more to abandon them. In fact, the American people gave the answer to that performance by a landslide vote which swept the Republican Party into control of both Houses of Congress.

Since January 1947, the Republican Congress has been attempting to bring order out of chaos. We have been blocked at every turn. We have had to pass much of our legislation over the presidential veto. Yet we stand before the Nation today on a record of accomplishment of which we are proud.

The Republican program in Congress was not left to chance; it was the product of forethought and vision.

Three things were apparent to us:

First. The New Deal, over a period of 15 years of experimenting with statism, had permitted hundreds of enemies of America to infiltrate into official positions. In the belief that no nation can continue to exist half free and half statist, we decided to go after these disciples of alien philosophies. We knew what any crossroads doctor can tell you—there is no such thing as a slight case of Marxism. Therefore, we set about to drive the Communists and their fellow travelers out of Washington. At first the administration protested there were no Communists in the Government. Can you imagine that? Then, having read the election returns in 1946, the administration finally confessed, and asked for $25,000,000 to run the Communists out of the Government. Ponder that for a moment. How expensive can a confession of the soul be?

Second. It was evident to all that a free economy could not long last with taxes taking more than one-fourth of the national income; that no nation could survive in safety without attacking a national debt which represented at least 60 percent of its total wealth; that no man, and certainly no government, could endure which forever spent more than it took in.

Third. It was clear to all of us who dared face the facts that no country could call itself free when organized labor was being forced to run, hat in hand, to the White House for pay increases; when management and labor alike were being denied, through governmental interference, their fundamental right of bargaining. We knew what every labor leader knew—that if the encroachments of the Federal Government were not abruptly stopped, collective bargaining soon would cease to exist at all.

As one who helped design our legislative program, and as an eyewitness to the events which unfolded, I can say to you that the Eightieth Congress, with patriotic Democrats helping, turned the tide against the march of police-state methods in this country. The American people will never know the battle those gallant men and women fought, of the obstacles that were placed in their path, of the long days and nights and week ends of hard work that were put into this great effort. America should thank God that our founding fathers had the wisdom to create an independent Congress. America should thank God for a party that keeps its promises.

Our efforts to weed out the Communists were met with ridicule and opposition from many quarters, but the overwhelming mass of the American people gave us the inspiration of their wholehearted support. Yet, that job still has not been done to our satisfaction. Of this much, however, I am certain: The job will not be completed until there is a Republican President in the White House. This fight has only begun.

Next, we tackled the problem of tax relief. In all the history of the Republic, the raising of revenue traditionally had been left to the people's elected Representatives in Congress. No President had dared defy the plain intent of the Constitution, that the levying of taxes is a power to be exercised by the people through their chosen Representatives. But the framers of the Constitution could hardly have anticipated the administrations of the last 15 years. Three times Congress passed tax-reduction bills; three times those tax-reduction bills were vetoed—the first tax-reduction vetoes in history. On the third occasion, Congress rose up in righteous wrath against Executive usurpation of its power and overrode the veto. If it had not the American people still would be waiting for tax relief.

More important, this relief has been accorded simultaneously with a start in reduction of the national debt and the enforcement of a balanced budget. Who was it, my fellow Americans, who was going to tax and tax, spend and spend, elect and elect? We have stopped the irresponsible taxing. We have stopped the reckless spending. Next November the American people will stop that kind of electing.

This Congress courageously passed legislation which has brought better relations in the field of labor and management. Labor and management must work in harmony and peace to bring about the increased production necessary for lower prices and better living conditions. Industrial peace will bring greater blessings to all groups in our national life.

Further, Congress has made a strong beginning in the tremendous task of unscrambling the war powers of the President. Nothing can be more oppressive to business and labor than excessive meddling and interference by Government. But in this program, also, we have encountered nothing but obstruction from a confused executive branch.

If it be the secret purpose of the administration to perpetuate or to increase its remaining war powers in the hope that the American people will forget their full rights as free men and free women, this convention accepts that challenge. This convention will not choose a man who creates crises and emergencies. Our nominee will be a man who can keep up out of them.

The accomplishments of the Eightieth Congress have been substantial. We can be justly proud of them. But a Republican Congress opposed by a Chief Executive from another party will never achieve the teamwork of Republican responsibility in both branches of government. When this defect is remedied next November, the American people will complete the job of ousting from Washington the disciples of government by guess. In place of planners who have never had any plans, the American electorate will choose an administration that knows where it is going. In the cold reality of the world today, these hazy-minded, beclouded princes of planning have no place. Time has passed them by. The needs of this great Nation, and of the world, no longer can be met by government from a fog-filled room.

The duty of the Republican Party is clear:

It must evolve policies that can endure.

It must apply its policies with an integrity that will revive faith in tomorrow.

It must restore order, economy, and efficiency in Government.

It must eliminate the bureaucratic privileged class which has entrenched itself in Washington.

It must reduce the crazy pyramid of bureaus, boards, and commissions, and eliminate the overlapping functions which have been the chief product of the New Deal years.

It must, by attracting the best scientific minds to Washington, prepare the way for the atomic era.

It must realize that with the atomic age will come a new civilization, and that only through wisdom in Washington may we turn atomic energy to the peaceful uses to which it should be put.

Finally, and above all else, the Republican Party must restore to the people the economic and human freedoms essential to the world leadership which now is ours.

In a world divided by conflicting ideologies only vision and integrity in Government offer sound hope for peace. The world is crying out for peace of mind. New servants of the people are about to take over. The epoch of modern Caesars has ended. Henceforth in America the robes of leadership must be worn with humility, and with faith in the basic wisdom of free peoples.

A new day must dawn for all that we cherish.

The Republican Party has prepared itself for this leadership.

With our program—with such a mission—with high vision—we shall succeed.

An America united once more in the cause of peace will go forward.

We have come of age. In our maturity, with the help of God, let us greet the future.

Tenth Annual Convention of the Michigan State CIO Council

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN LESINSKI

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a letter dated July 1, 1948, from Barney Hopkins, secretary-treasurer, and copies of resolutions adopted by the tenth annual convention of the Michigan State CIO Council held in Grand Rapids, Mich., on June 21, 22, 23, 1948:

MICHIGAN CIO COUNCIL,
Detroit, July 1, 1948.

DEAR SIR: Enclosed you will find copies of resolutions adopted by the tenth annual convention of the Michigan State CIO Council held in Grand Rapids, Mich., on June 21, 22, 23, 1948.

We believe these resolutions will be of particular interest to you, inasmuch as they express the opinion of organized labor.

Sincerely,

BARNEY HOPKINS,
Secretary-Treasurer.

Resolution 4

Resolution on citizens' right to vote in Washington, D. C.

Whereas Washington residents have all the obligations and responsibilities of citizens, yet they are denied the privilege of citizens' basic rights. The District Government is administered by three Commissioners who are appointed by the President and approved by the Senate. For many years the people of the District of Columbia have been working for self-government and for the right to cast their ballot in national elections.

Whereas a subcommittee of the House and Senate District Committees chaired by Representative JAMES AUCHINCLOSS (Republican, New Jersey), has drafted a bill, the District Home Rule Charter bill (H. R. 4902–S. 19468) to provide a self-government for the District of Columbia. The CIO is urging enactment of the legislation with two amendments. They are a change in the method of voting contained in the District Charter bill to the system of proportional representation, and a provision prohibiting discrimination and segregation in services contracted for or performed by the government of the District of Columbia: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this tenth annual convention of the Michigan State CIO Council wholeheartedly support bill H. R. 4902–S. 19468 with the amendments as recommended by the National CIO; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to all Congressional Representatives from Michigan.

Resolution 12

Resolution on fair employment practices legislation

Whereas discrimination in employment because of race, religion, or national origin violates the fundamental constitutional right of equality of opportunity of all American citizens; and

Whereas during the war on a national basis, in such States as New York, Connecticut and New Jersey on a State basis, and such communities as Minneapolis on a local basis, fair employment practices, either by legislation or by Executive order, have shown that workers of different race, color, and creed and national origin can work together efficiently and harmoniously; and

Whereas discrimination in employment wastes valuable manpower and skills, keeps down the standard of living of the entire Nation and undercuts the possibility of continued full employment: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the tenth annual convention of the Michigan CIO Council support and help initiate legislation for fair employment practices on the National, State, and city levels; and be it further

Resolved, That this convention condemn the Eightieth Congress for failing to act in this matter, particularly the Republican majority and the Southern Bourbon Democrats; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Republican convention, the Democratic National Convention, the National CIO, the A. F. of L., all Michigan Congressmen, and all affiliates of the State council.

Resolution 13

Resolution on the cost of living

Whereas the continued rise in the cost of living is destroying the standard of living of the American people, creating nutritional deficiencies among our children, breeding fear and insecurity and laying the basis through inflation for a lust that will bring on an even worse depression that that of the thirties; and

Whereas the Eightieth Congress has failed to take effective measures to stem the inflation and stop the soaring of prices: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the tenth annual convention of Michigan CIO Council go on record for effective action by Congress to control inflation such as rationing of scarce foods, price control, adequate rent control, the tightening of credit controls especially of installment sales and the expansion of production particularly in steel-making capacity; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution go to the Republican Convention, the Democratic National Committee, the national CIO, the A. F. of L., all Michigan Congressmen, and all affiliates of the State CIO Council.

Resolution 14

Resolution on housing

Whereas millions of veterans and other Americans are homeless or doubled up with relatives; and

Whereas other millions are housed in slums that breed disease and crime; and

Whereas the Eightieth Congress failed to pass the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill, which would at least have made a beginning toward solving our desperate housing situation: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this tenth annual convention of the Michigan CIO Council call upon the Republican and coming Democratic conventions to write an adequate housing plan in their platform and that this convention will hold the next Congress responsible for carrying out that part of the platform; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent the Republican convention, all Michigan Congressmen, the National CIO, and all affiliates of the State CIO Council.

Resolution 16

Resolution on Taft-Hartley Act

Whereas the Taft-Hartley Act was designed to hamstring and eventually destroy trade unionism in the county; and

Whereas because of it, to date, confusion has been created in collective bargaining in this country with old established union-management relationships disturbed or destroyed; and

Whereas management has used the act to attempt to bust the unions as in the case of the packinghouse strike, the printers strike, and countless others, the drive of the manufacturers only being stopped because of the strike of the Chrysler workers and the successful UAW CIO-GM negotiations; and

Whereas in the event of the election of a Republican Congress, the full potentialities of the act to destroy labor would be fully utilized by the employers: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this tenth annual convention of the Michigan CIO Council go on record as unalterably opposed to the Taft-Hartley Act; and be it further

Resolved, That the Council will bend every effort to defeat those Congressmen who voted for it; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of the resolution be sent to the Republican Convention, the Democratic National Committee, the national CIO, the A. F. of L., all Michigan Congressmen, and all affiliates of the Michigan State CIO Council.

Resolution 17

Resolution on anti-poll-tax and antilynch legislation

Whereas the Eightieth Congress, dominated by a coalition of the majority of reactionary Republicans and race-baiting southern Democrats, failed to pass anti-poll-tax and antilynch legislation; and

Whereas the lack of such legislation permits election of reactionary southern Congressmen year after year by a small minority of southern citizens; and

Whereas this situation establishes control of Congress committees by the South when Democrats are in the majority, and support of reactionary Republicans by the reactionary southern Democrats when Republicans are in a majority, resulting in failure to act on any progressive domestic legislation: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this tenth annual convention of the Michigan State CIO council call upon the Republican Convention and the coming Democratic Convention to place Federal antilynch and anti-poll-tax legislation in their platforms for enactment by the Eighty-first Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Republican National Convention, the Democratic National Committee, all Michigan Congressmen, the national CIO, A. F. of L., and all State council affiliates.

Resolution 18

Resolution on just tax program

Whereas the Eightieth Congress passed a tax bill which gave pennies to the poor and thousands to the rich; and

Whereas the tendency throughout the Nation has been to pass reactionary taxes such as pay roll and sales taxes which are paid mainly by the working people; and

Whereas the tax laws in the Nation and in Michigan are chaotic, overlapping, and unjust: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this tenth annual convention of the Michigan State CIO Council go on record as unalterably opposed to pay roll and sales taxes; and be it further

Resolved, That this convention go on record for a constitutional amendment banning the sales tax and adopting a graduated income tax as a basic tax for Michigan with rebates of one-sixth of total to school districts and one-sixth to cities and other local units of government, and for an integrated and fair national tax act based on ability to pay; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to Governor Sigler, the members of the State legislature, all Michigan Congressmen, the national CIO, A. F. of L., and all affiliates of the council, the Republican and Democratic Conventions.

Resolution 20

Resolution on building the peace

Whereas the major problem facing the world today in the era of the atom bomb and bacteriological warfare is building a durable peace; and

Whereas there is grave danger that the increasing militarization of the Nation, the passage of the draft act, the ever-increasing military budgets, will stimulate an arms race that will destroy the possibility of peace; and

Whereas the tremendous sums spent for armaments will lower our standard of living, build a spirit of war-mindedness in the American people, and give ever-increasing power into the hands of an essentially antilabor and reactionary military clique, and lay the basis for depressions leading to war; and

Whereas the emphasis on armaments as a solution to our international problems blinds us to the possibility of peace by amicable negotiation and diplomacy: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this tenth annual CIO convention of the Michigan State CIO council oppose the trend toward increasing militarization of our people and our economy; and be it further

Resolved, That this convention like national CIO, urge universal disarmament and universal abolition of conscription throughout the United Nations; and be it further

Resolved, That this convention urge our Nation to settle international problems peacefully through the United Nations, not by appeasement but by friendly settlement of differences; and be it further

Resolved, That this convention support the European recovery plan to help build the economies of Europe as a bulwark for peace; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to President Truman, the Republican and Democratic Conventions, National CIO, A. F. of L., all Michigan Congressmen, and all council affiliates.

Harry's "Turnip" Session

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES R. ROBERTSON
OF NORTH DAKOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, the problem of being a common man must grow more perplexing each succeeding day. Strangely down through the history of civilization there has never been a time when the common man occupied such an important place in the minds of so many important people. The cheap, contemptible reference to him by the cheap contemptible politicians, both in high and low places, is a disgrace to civilization.

There is one redeeming feature about it. Perchance a considerable number of these so-called common men pay little attention to these expressions, and the line of division as to where one is a common man and where one is an uncommon man is difficult to ascertain, even for the man himself.

Cheap propaganda and innuendoes are the instrumentalities of men who ought to know better. In most cases the sole objective is more votes rather than a service to the Nation. This occurs in most every section of the country. The dishonesty on the part of the President to claim full credit for high wages, while at the same time blaming the Republicans for high prices, is a fair example of the situation at hand. It is time for common decency to come in and take its place on the stage.

Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent, I include herewith an editorial from the Washington Daily News of July 27, 1948, entitled "Harry's 'Turnip' Session":

HARRY'S "TURNIP" SESSION

We would like to think that something constructive might come out of President Truman's "turnip" session of Congress. But the odds are heavily against it.

When Mr. Truman used the announcement of his special session call as the kicker in his acceptance-speech indictment of the Republicans at the Philadelphia convention, he deliberately made the floors of Congress the first battleground of his campaign.

That removed any possibility of a bipartisan approach to the problems which he will submit for consideration.

By demanding that Congress do something about high prices, the President is asking for a legislative miracle. And he expects to saddle the Republicans with responsibility for present living costs if they fail to accomplish it.

We say miracle because we do not see how inflationary trends can be curbed by limited price controls and rationing without the removal of farm price supports and drastic reductions in public spending and wages. The President isn't asking for any of these things.

Indeed, Mr. Truman is happy to claim full credit for high wages while blaming the Republicans for high prices. Yet the two are Siamese twins.

Real reductions in public expenditures are not in sight, unless we are to abandon the Marshall plan and our national defense program. Neither of these things should be done, nor is it likely that anything of the kind will be proposed. On the contrary, increased inflation is in prospect.

By asking for new appropriations for housing, health, and education, as well as price controls and rationing, Mr. Truman may get his appropriations but not controls. In that event the inflationary spiral will continue to climb.

Instead of putting the Republicans in the hole on high prices, the President's "turnip" session may further split his own party if civil rights issues are used to drive a deeper wedge between the Truman administration and the angry southerners. It is even probable that if racial legislation is pushed to the front the rest of the President's program may receive no attention at all.

Mr. Truman's challenge to the Republicans to enact their 1948 platform pledges into law in advance of the election must have appealed to him as smart politics, when he made it. But it may develop that it would have been better to have left "Turnip Day" merely to planting turnips.

Special Session

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ALVIN F. WEICHEL
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. WEICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I want to include an expressive editorial by Spencer Canary, editor of the Daily Sentinel-Tribune, of Bowling Green, Ohio:

TRUMAN POLITICAL BONER

President Truman pulled another political boner Thursday when he called Congress to meet in special session July 26 while he was preparing to make his acceptance speech before the Democratic convention.

Evidently, he made the call not in the spirit of the welfare of the country but as a challenge to the present Congress to do the things the Republican platform says the party will do, if elected this fall.

He wants to keep on quarreling with this Congress instead of arguing the matters with the citizens whose Republican delegates adopted the platform only 3 weeks ago. He knows that, if Congress were to pass legislation just as the platform says, he would promptly veto much of it and that the Democratic minority is too strong to permit the present Republican members to override it. His free use of veto power makes his challenge ridiculous.

What Republicans propose to do is to ask citizens to elect a Congress who can live up to its platform and a President who will not annul it by vetoes.

President Truman's zest for personal power has led him to adopt in principle the policy of dictatorships. Instead of giving citizens an opportunity to vote this fall either Republican or Democratic regarding proposals, he would virtually continue the present Congress and himself as dictators of what shall or shall not be done.

That is the same policy pursued in dictatorial countries where but one party is allowed to exist.

It is altogether probable that some of the present Congressmen and Senators will not be candidates this fall. They themselves or their constituents may have retired them. Some who do run will be defeated.

Mr. Truman would have the same people as at present pass the laws or repeal others. Until a few years ago the Representatives elected in November did not take their seats till March 4. Now they take office in January. Before that a Congressman who had been defeated in November was called a lame duck, and he and others had 4 months in which to pass legislation people did not want.

Mr. Truman is evidently fond of lame ducks. There will be plenty of them this fall and they will be found to be banded "New Deal."

Tax Economy for National Defense

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. J. GLENN BEALL
OF MARYLAND
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. BEALL. Mr. Speaker, the need for drastic economy in Federal expenditures for domestic purposes has long been recognized. The adoption of the Marshall plan makes this economy program not only a vital necessity to the continued stability of our economic system, but vitally necessary to assure the success of the European recovery plan.

ERP has received no opposition from organized taxpayer groups devoted to tax economy, nor has there been any opposition to the huge new outlays for increased military strength. The American public has accepted the proposition that billions must be spent to win a cold war.

As a counterpart of these essentials of a foreign policy to protect our Nation, the public has also accepted the fact that sacrifices at home will be necessary. The accompanying program of meatless and poultryless days was generally approved in spirit, despite considerable confusion and some amusement over official methods.

This readiness for personal sacrifice as an accompaniment of ERP went much further. The people were ready for mass economies at home. They were the more ready to see an end of proposals to spend billions for expanded social programs, such as Federal aid to education, public housing, socialized medicine, and the overinflated executive departments.

The American people are still so disposed, in the majority. But what of the minority?

One of the strangest arguments of the day is that which says, "If we can spend so much to help those abroad, we certainly can afford a few billions to help the needy at home."

This fallacious line is not confined to the group of Russian sympathizers, who seek to weaken the foreign program through extravagance at home. It is receiving far too much acceptance from loyal Americans.

This can only be the result of confused thinking. ERP is not essentially intended as an aid plan for the poor abroad, but rather as a rehabilitation campaign essential to our success in a struggle that threatens our way of life.

To push for additional expenditures at home on the grounds that large expenditures are being made abroad is as thoughtless as it would have been during the late war to contend that a new bridge or highway should be built at home for every battleship sent out for foreign service.

Financial stability is a vital weapon in this cold war. Our foreign commitments are causing a terrific strain on this stability. Rigid economy at home is essential to protect our fighting front.

ERP demands drastic domestic economy—not additional spending.

Address by Herbert Hoover at the Republican National Convention

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROBERT A. TAFT
OF OHIO
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 30 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD the outstanding address delivered by former President Herbert Hoover before the Republican National Convention in Philadelphia.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

This convention meets again in a continuing grave crisis. And this crisis is deeper than some may think. Every important government, including our own, has broken its promises to mankind. Civilization moves forward only on promises that are kept. Faith has been hurt, hope has been diminished, thinking has been corrupted, and fear has been spread—all over the world.

The problems which confront us far transcend partisan action and I do not propose to speak in that sense tonight.

What is done here, what you do here, will affect the destiny of our country beyond any estimation at this moment. For you are more than ever before the trustees of a great cause, the cause for which this party was founded, the cause of human liberty.

Liberty has been defeated in a score of nations. They have revived slavery. They have revived mass guilt. They have revived government by hatred, by torture, by exile. Today the men in the Kremlin hold in their right hands the threat of military aggression against all civilization. With their left hands they work to weaken civilization by boring from within.

These tyrants have created a situation new in all human experience. We saved them from Hitler but they refuse to cooperate with us in good will on peace on earth. A powerful nation, dominated by men without conscience, finds it useful to have neither peace nor war in the world.

Whether some of us, who foresaw that danger and warned of it, were right or wrong, and whatever the errors of American statesmanship that helped bring it about, we are today faced with a world situation in which there is little time for regrets.

DEVASTATED BY WARS

The only obstacle to the annihilation of freedom has been the United States of America. Only as long as the United States is free and strong will human liberty survive in a world frustrated and devastated by these two wars.

It is in our interest and, above all, in the interest of liberty throughout the world, that we aid in giving strength and unity to the nations of western Europe. It is only thus that we can restore a balance of power in the world able to resist the hordes from the Russian steppes who would ruin western civilization.

We have also the burden of increased armament to assure that no hostile force will ever reach this hemisphere.

With all the good will in our hearts, our friends abroad should realize that our economy must not be exhausted or overstrained by these burdens, or the last hope of the world is lost. We should only be playing Stalin's game, for his expressed real hope lies in our economic collapse for which his fifth column are busily planning.

Our friends abroad should realize that we are today certainly straining our American economy to the utmost. Warning signals already clang in our ears. Relief and defense will soon be costing us over $22,000,000,000 a year. Our Federal budget threatens to increase to $50,000,000,000 a year, unless we delay many plans for internal social and economic improvement.

Even our present forty-odd billion taxes and the export of materials so drain the savings of our people that in the year 1947 we did not properly maintain and expand the great tools of production and distribution upon which our standard of living depends.

TAXES AT PEAK

Nor is there any room for more taxes except by a cut in the standard of living of those who do the Nation's work. Some will say that we can increase corporation taxes. That is easy to say. But any student of economics knows that, in the long run, such a tax will be passed on to the consumer, provided we want to maintain our real wages and great tools of production.

Surely any American would seem to have the right to aspire to the income of a United States Senator—less taxes. If the remaining untaxed income above that level were completely confiscated, the take would provide only 2½ percent of the budget.

There are other warning signs. Our reputed prosperity has begun to walk on two stilts: One is the forced draft of exporting more than our surplus through relief; the other is a great armament program. We cannot go higher on these stilts, or we will break a leg getting down.

We should have no illusions. To the devastating four horsemen of the apocalypse, modern civilization has added two more. They are high taxes and inflation. They are close by.

Therefore, with full compassion for those nations in difficulties, certain matters in aid to them must be recognized by both sides of the world.

Our task is solely to aid their reconstruction. We can provide only bare necessities. There is no room for nonessentials, profligacy, or inefficiency.

EUROPE MUST WORK

We must not create a perpetual dependence of Europe and Asia upon us. We must not soften their preparedness to meet their own dangers. Otherwise our sacrifices will only undermine their self-reliance and the contribution they must make themselves toward the saving of western civilization.

We must insist that reconstruction of western Europe be as a whole. That must include the restoration of the productivity of Germany or Europe will die. We need neither forget nor condone Nazi guilt, but a free world must not poison its concepts of life by accepting malice and hatred as a guide. Otherwise, not only will our efforts fail, but the American taxpayer will be bled white supporting an idle and despairing German people.

And if we are to carry these burdens of relief and armament, we must have uninterrupted operation of the major tools of production and distribution among all the participating nations.

We in America must face the fact that no citizen or group of citizens in the Republic can assume the power to endanger not only the health and welfare of our own people, but freedom of the world, by halting or paralyzing the economic life of this Nation.

Such men have not been elected by the people to have such powers. Representative government must be master in its own house, or it will perish. We fought that battle out once with arrogant businessmen. We can no more have economic tyranny, if freedom is to live, than we can have political tyranny. There are other ways for determining economic justice than war on our people.

Nor does the battle for freedom all lie beyond our borders. We also have been infected with the European intermittent fever of creeping totalitarianism. It has been a mingling of germs from Karl Marx and Mussolini, with cheers from the Communists. This collectivism has slowly inserted its tentacles into our labor unions, our universities, our intelligentsia, and our Government.

HITS FUZZY THINKERS

Our difficulty lies not so much with obnoxious Communists in our midst as with the fuzzy-minded people who think we can have totalitarian economics in the hands of bureaucracy, and at the same time have personal liberty for the people and representative government in the Nation. Their confused thinking convinces them that they are liberals—but if they are liberals, they have liberalism without liberty. Nor are they middle-of-the-roaders as they claim to be: They are a halfway house to totalitarianism.

They should note that in every one of the countries of Europe, where 400,000,000 people are now enslaved by the Communists, it has been the totalitarian liberals who provided the ladders upon which the Communist pirates have boarded the ship of state.

The whole world was steadily moving along these collectivist roads until 2 years ago. Then in our congressional elections, by their votes for both the Republican and Democratic candidates, the people showed the first turn from collectivism made by any important nation in recent years.

The 300-year-old roots of freedom in America showed their resistance in the collectivist blight. The influence of our rebirth of liberty has now echoed throughout the world. But the battle is still on.

The deep soil of these 300-year-old roots is the spiritual concept that the rights of man to freedom are personal to him from the Creator, not from the State. That is our point of depature from all others. This spiritual concept, whatever our faults may be, has guided our people to a life, not only of material abundance, but also a life of liberty and human dignity.

A HISTORIC STAGE

Today the American people have reached a historic stage which has come to a few strong nations in their ability to contribute to moral leadership in the world. Few such nations have come upon that task with so few labilities. In these 30 years of wars we alone have taken no people's land; we have oppressed no race of man.

We have faced all the world in friendship, with compassion, with a genuine love and helpfulness for our fellow men. In war, in peace, in disaster, we have aided those whom we believed to be in the right and to require our aid. At the end of wars, we have aided foe as well as ally; and in each instance, even the children of those who would do us hurt. We have hated war; we have loved peace.

What other nation has such a record?

It is these concepts of your country that this party must bear high as the banner of a marching army. From here free men and women can cheer free men and women the world over that the day is not done, that night has not come—that human liberty lives—and lives eternally here upon this continent, here among us.

Therefore, unusual responsibilities devolve upon this convention. There may be some of you who believe that you have come here only to pass upon a platform, and to select candidates for President and Vice President. Your greater task by far is to generate a spirit which will rekindle in every American a love not only for his country but for the American civilization.

You are here to feed the reviving fires of spiritual fervor which once made the word American a stirring description of a man who lived and died for human liberty, who knew no private interest, no personal ambition, no popular acclaim, no advantage of pride or place which overshadows the burning love for the freedom of man.

PROBLEMS ARE GREAT

Great as your problems are, they are no greater than Americans have met before your time. You are no less able or courageous than they were.

Therefore, I repeat, what you say and do here is of transcendent importance.

If you produce nothing but improvised platitudes, you will give no hope.

If you produce no leadership here, no virile fighter for the right, you will have done nothing of historic significance.

If you follow the counsel of those who believe that politics is only a game to be played for personal advantage, you are wasting your time and effort.

If you will calculate what will please this or that little segment of our population, and satisfy this or that pressure group or sectional interest, you will be betraying your opportunity and tragically missing the call of your time.

If you temporize with collectivism, you will stimulate its growth and the defeat of freemen.

If, on the other hand, as a mature and inspired political party you face the truth that we are in a critical battle to safeguard our Nation and civilization which, under God, have brought to us a life of liberty, then you will be guided in every step to restore the foundations of faith, of morals, and of right thinking.

If you choose your leadership with full recognition that only those can lead you who believe in your ideals, who seek not only victory but the opportunity to serve in the fight, then you will issue from this hall a clarion call, in as pure a note, in as full a tone as that call to arms which your political ancestors issued at Ripon, Wis., when this party was born to make all men free.

And so I bespeak to you tonight to make yourselves worthy of the victory.

Address by Hon. Harry P. Cain, of Washington, at the Republican National Convention

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EDWARD V. ROBERTSON

OF WYOMING

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 30 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. ROBERTSON of Wyoming. Mr. President, one of the most outstanding speeches at the Republican National Convention in Philadelphia was that delivered by the distinguished junior Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN]. I ask unanimous consent to have his address printed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Chairman and fellow Americans, the hour is late but the purpose which brought all of us to Philadelphia is shortly to be achieved.

It won't be long before the convention begins to call the roll, and not long after that, we shall, as individuals and collectively, have a long-awaited opportunity to pledge our faith and respect and support to those two men in whose capable and firmly reasonable hands the affairs of our great Nation will be placed during the years immediately ahead.

Perhaps you wonder what constructive contribution can be added to what has already been so well said by so many, and I share your concern.

Perhaps you wonder, as I do, why a freshman Senator should be invited to undertake the task of further stimulating your curiosity, and arousing you to action. I only know that I am priviliged to have the chance to try.

I speak now as one who comes out of the West, a land of promise which is newborn, articulate, explosive, and positive.

I speak as a veteran of the last war who believes that his country owes to all veterans, not indulgence or a handout, but an opportunity to labor at a chosen task, to save, to build, and to be free; and I speak as an American Republican who believes that his party is prepared and has earned the right, by virtue of self-discipline, integrity, vigor, strength, imagination, and courage, to seek answers and solutions for the staggering and even terrifying questions and obstacles which confront us both at home and throughout the world.

Neither time nor inclination will permit me to dwell on many of these problems, for they have been concisely and superbly defined and explored by others, and I must take for granted that if some among you don't understand in terms of problems their awful presence and sinister scope, and the imperative need for finding remedies now, you never will.

I won't bother to lambaste or vitriolize the present-day Democratic Party, for that would only exhaust the energy we need for our own cause, and tend to divert us from the road which leads straight to the White House.

I am completely willing to leave an indictment of recent years and a decision on the future in November up to the American people.

Political parties, like some human beings, can outlive their usefulness. They can become tired, cynical, power crazy, irresponsible, decadent, and senile.

It gives one no pleasure or satisfaction to see either a man or a political party who has lost his balance and poise; his sense of proportion and moral stamina. Without spelling it out the average American knows that the administration presently in authority has forfeited a large measure of its right to the confidence and respect of the people.

Because this is true, and can be so documented, the Republican Party will be victorious in November. I take this prediction to be a fact.

But a mere victory can be hollow and meaningless.

It must have substance and a purpose, determination, and an understanding of the obligations to be assumed by the victor if that victory is to be worth while and deserving of future support and loyalty.

We can win in 1948 and lose 4 years from now without half trying. Any effort short of our very best will bring disaster hurtling down on the heads of everybody, the innocent as well as the guilty. Should we Republicans fail in the next several years to live up to our platform, and to fall far short of our announced goals, it won't be a case of bringing injury to a party, for we shall have brought lasting and great harm to our Nation and the world.

Our failure would so stimulate the world revolution which surrounds us that freedom and free institutions might well disappear forever.

It is no small undertaking which inspires us in this convention. We had better fully appreciate what we seek to accomplish before we get started, for there is no turning back.

The fight we are about to begin will continue for 24 hours in every day until we win it.

When we win, and we shall, we must understand that we won't for a good long time, benefit from the strength and effectiveness of a two-party system. That system is actually dead today.

The disintegration of the present day Democratic Party is complete.

All that remains is a hollow shell.

This only means that we Republicans must go it alone; that for an indefinite period we Republicans will be entirely responsible for the conduct of the affairs of our Nation; that the absence of a strong opposition party will call for a greater strength of responsibility and unity than any American political party has ever had or needed before.

In the absence of a stronger and more effective opposition than we anticipate we shall find it easier, than ought to be the case, to make mistakes, to abuse our newfound and limitless power, to undertake tomorrow what we ought to accomplish today, and to underestimate and oversimplify the seriousness and perils of the day in which we live.

I doubt if any political party, in any country, in any period of the past has ever been confronted by a greater challenge or opportunity than those which are available to our Republican Party today.

There is reason to think we are ready.

Look at the men from whom we begin to choose today. Stassen and Taft; Dewey and Vandenberg; Warren and MacArthur and the Martins, Joe and Ed. Can you mention a greater group? Every one an "All-American." Can you conceive that any of these could lose in November? I think not.

But what about the runner-up, our vice-presidential candidate? Are we going to use the same care in selecting him that we use in securing the one to head our party? I hope and pray so.

It matters not so much that he live in the area far removed from his running mate, nor should he be selected for the usual political considerations. The thing that matters most is his character and knowledge and ability. Whoever he is ought to be ready from the beginning to assume the Presidency if fate and circumstances so dictate. These are hard, tough, and cruel days for any President.

We want no man for Vice President who wouldn't compliment America as her President in case of need.

Need we look back very far to find tragic examples of what happened to America because several Vice Presidents were selected for reasons of political expediency. It was never thought possible that either of them would become our President. But one of them did.

In several days' time this American tradition, a national political convention, will have adjourned, with its work of a platform and selected candidates completed. With a joyous cheer for victory we shall return to our scattered homes across the land. But in reminding myself I remind you that we have just begun to begin our victory campaign when the convention ends.

This convention has been virile, dynamic, and full of life. In a broad sense everybody has talked the same language, seen the same picture, dreamed the same dreams. But a convention isn't America. Thousands upon thousands of those whom we seek to serve will have small comprehension of what we have here attempted and achieved. We must take what we have done and pass it on to every voter everywhere. We must try to convince others that our progress was conceived from an honest desire to continue the progress of a free and progressive state, and not from just a selfish desire to return to power. This will take a deal of doing for the average American has been made sad for he is discouraged and he listens with some agreement to the siren who whispers that politics is a dirty and reprehensible business, and that politicians and parties exist only to take advantage of the average man.

Our job is to tell the truth to the American people, without varnish and promiscuous promises and without any suggestion that we are performers of miracles.

Let us just lay the facts of economic, political, and social life on the line.

Let us simply make those facts available as they have never been given to our people before.

Let us leave here, under the fierce impulse of a conviction, that every man among us must be a salesman; every woman a crusader.

We think we fight to preserve, and reestablish a free society at home and abroad. We can't do this by letting anybody else carry our fair share of the load.

Big disappointments will fill this hall before our convention is concluded. Only two can be chosen from all who aspire.

Some of our finest material will fall by the wayside, but let us shed no tears over this.

Let us be free of bitterness, let us rather rejoice that those candidates we fought for did so well, and then let each and all of us give to those who are chosen what we are so willingly giving to those of our own preference.

The Republican Party is more important than are any of us as individuals. We sometimes forget this.

Let us remember it from now on out.

If we remember, there will be no futility, no mockery in our victory of tomorrow.

If we forget we shall only have ourselves to hold responsible.

I am keenly proud of my membership in, and devotion to, the Republican Party.

It stands for what I think the average American in the ranks of labor, business, the farm and the general public stands for.

It seldom runs wild to either right or left.

It is liberal enough because it isn't so senseless as to give away things for which it is but a trustee for the people.

It moves more slowly than the opposition because it believes we are only entitled to that progress which we are willing to sacrifice and pay for.

Thank God the Republican Party can say "No" once in a while, and stand up to the consequences.

This has been a very simple speech. It was intended to be so, because I make no pretense of being an oracle, and because few others defined a need for party loyalty, cooperation and hard work if our coming campaign is to be won in the right way.

I have simply spoken as one who has his own full measure of faith in the party of his deliberate choice.

And also as one who has so little use for the methods and policies and false gods of the opposition leaders that I prefer to ignore them in favor of working to convince the citizenry of America of the concreteness, worth-whileness, and unlimited promise of the program to be advanced by the Republican Party.

This is it, and all of it a matter of high principle, from which details and action and platforms are fashioned and made to breathe and live and function:

1. The Constitution without mutilation.
2. Freedom without license.
3. Equality without uniformity.
4. Ownership without communism.
5. Government without bureaucracy.
6. Business without regimentation.

Who was it who said, "To think is easy. To act is difficult. To act in accordance with our thoughts is the most difficult thing in all the world"

How right he was.

How much work there remains to be done by each of us.

Let us stop for nothing and run right over those who get in our way.

The reward for our success is the gratitude of those who seek a reasonable and contented nation and world in which to live and work and die.

Our goal can be reached through our own efforts.

I wish you good fortune and happy hunting.

A Premature Call

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. KENNETH S. WHERRY

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 30 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an editorial entitled "A Premature Call," from the Washington Evening Star of last night.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A PREMATURE CALL

In view of all the tub-thumping which has accompanied the President's call for a special session of Congress to deal with high prices, one would think that, at the least, some member of his administration other than Paul Porter, whose real job is that of private lawyer, would have been ready to lay specific proposals before the legislators. But the administration is far from ready.

When Mr. Truman announced the special session call in his political speech to the Democratic Convention he said there was no reason why Congress could not act on his recommendations in 2 weeks. It appears now, however, that at least a week must pass before any administration spokesman will be ready to testify on such important matters as the President's request for restoration of the excess-profits tax and consumer credit controls, regulation of inflationary bank credit, and control of speculation on the commodity exchanges.

This state of affairs came to light yesterday when Chairman TOBEY of the Senate Banking Committee, who is far more in sympathy with the President's requests than are most Republicans, tried to line up some witnesses to appear before his committee.

A call to Thomas B. McCabe, Chairman of the Federal Reserve System's Board of Governors, is said to have elicited the response that he couldn't possibly testify before next week. And Secretary of the Treasury Snyder, who might be expected to lead the procession of administration witnesses on the tax and credit aspects of the President's program, is reported to have said that he would not be prepared to testify until after Mr. McCabe makes his appearance.

The effect of all this is to lend a somewhat farcical touch to the special session call and to discredit the note of urgency which Mr. Truman has sought to inject into his demand for immediate action by the Congress. The President may be sure that the Republicans, who are looking for any opportunity to turn the tables on him, will make the most of his procrastination on the part of his aides.

Civil Rights Program—FEPC in New York—White Americans Betrayed

REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN E. RANKIN
OF MISSISSIPPI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, at the other end of the Capitol we are witnessing a spectacle that forcibly reminds us of the old example of Nero fiddling while Rome burned.

Instead of amending the Federal Reserve Act to check inflation and save the country from the disaster of another deflation, such as we had in 1921 and again in 1929, they take up this communistic civil-rights program, beginning with the anti-poll-tax bill.

I wonder if Members of the House and of the Senate think that the object of this Congress is to persecute the white people of the Southern States in order to save the faces of certain candidates for President on this crazy civil-rights program, which they have endorsed.

Is that the reward our servicemen from the South are to get for their sacrifices in the recent conflict?

Is that the reward the white people of the South are to get for sending a larger proportion of their sons to that war than any other group in America?

The Government based each Southern State's quota on the entire population and then took a preponderance of the white boys to do the fighting.

That was especially true in Mississippi, which furnished the largest proportion of her young white men to the service than probably any other State in the Union.

Remember that this civil-rights program is not only directed at the white people of the South, but it is directed at white Americans everywhere. It is a Communist-inspired movement, fostered by an alien minority that has flooded in here from Russia in recent years.

They are simply using the Negro as a smoke screen to cover up their nefarious designs to wreck this country, and destroy the white man's civilization throughout the world.

Let me warn you that we people of the South do not have to submit to this kind of persecution. In the words of Henry W. Grady:

> We wrested the South from the rule of the Negroes, the carpetbaggers, and the scallawags when Federal drumbeats rolled nearer and Federal bayonets hedged closer about the ballot boxes of the South than they ever will again in this free Republic.

If these attempts to force this communistic program onto the American people succeeds, it may well mean the end of this Republic and of our American way of life. It may mean communistic regimentation of the American people, North and South.

Why all this persecution of the white people of the South?

Why all this persecution of white Americans through this FEPC that has been foisted upon the people of New York by Governor Dewey and his cohorts, that has driven the American businessman in that State underground and forced them to resort to subterfuge in their employment in order to stay in business at all?

No intelligent businessman would go to New York now to start a new enterprise. In fact, many are thinking of closing out or leaving the State.

Why all these attempts to wipe out segregation in the South and force Negroes into our public schools through this so-called civil-rights program?

It is simply carrying out the chief plank in the Communist platform.

It is not doing the Negroes of the South any good. But it is doing them immeasurable harm. It is depriving them of a home. Today we have developed two servants to take their places, electricity and gasoline; and the unfortunate Negroes in the South who are enjoying more peace, more happiness, more prosperity, more protection, and more security than they have ever enjoyed anywhere else on the face of the earth, are finding themselves without homes as a result of this agitation that has been carried on by the communistic left-wing elements of both major political parties.

They are crowding into your large cities of the North where they are killed by the hundreds, or thousands, whenever the Reds are able to stir up a race riot.

It is time to get back to American principles. You are not going to force Negroes into our white schools. They know that, and we know it. You are not going to destroy our election machinery. This attack on the poll tax is a subterfuge. That is the only tax many people pay, white and black, for education in the South.

Are you going to pass an antilynching law without making it apply to mob violence? In your antilynching bill, you propose to insure the life of every Negro rapist for $20,000, to be paid by the taxpayers of the county where a lynching occurs, but you exempt mobs and race riots. It ought to be called a bill to encourage rape.

Are you afraid if you make it apply to mobs and riots that it will break some of your northern counties?

In the race riot in Chicago back in 1920, they killed 2,200 Negroes—to say nothing of the white people who were killed. At $20,000 apiece the cost would have been $44,000,000 for the Negroes alone.

The race riot in Detroit, Mich., on June 1, 1943, would have cost the people of that county $14,000,000—while only one lynching took place in the Southern States last year.

As I said, this whole civil-rights program, including the FEPC, seems to be taken from the Communist platform. Every one knows that the Communists are out to wreck this Government, destroy our American way of life and wipe Christianity from the face of the earth.

These Reds hate me because I have fought them, and exposed them, at every opportunity.

It was my amendment to the Rules of the House at the opening of the last Congress that created the Committee on Un-American Activities, which has done more to expose these Reds, these Communists, these enemies within our gates, than any other agency of this Government.

That is the reason for all these attacks on me. That is the reason for these petitions the Communists have been circulating among the Negroes of the North asking that I be expelled from Congress.

Why do they want me expelled? What crime have I committed?

They want me expelled because of my fight against this communistic program called civil rights, which includes the anti-poll-tax bill, the antilynching bill, the antisegregation bill, and the FEPC bill.

They want me expelled from Congress because of my stand for white supremacy. They even induced a gang of Negro bishops to pass a resolution asking that I be expelled from Congress because of my stand for white supremacy, for segregation in our schools, hotels, trains, and so forth, in the South, and for my fight against the other vicious provisions of their so-called civil-rights program.

The Communists had a Negro man and an alleged white woman picketing the Democratic Convention at Philadelphia with a large placard reading "Oust RANKIN" in capital letters large enough to be seen and read two blocks away.

Our committee exposed these Communists that were indicted in New York more than 2 years ago.

Here is a statement which the head of the Communist Party in this country, William Z. Foster, admitted on oath, in response to my questioning, that he made in a speech accepting the leadership of his party in this country. Here is what he said:

> No Communist, no matter how many votes he should secure in a national election, could, even if he would, become President of the present Government. When a Communist heads the Government of the United States—and that day will come just as surely as the sun rises—the Government will not be a capitalist government but a Soviet government, and behind this government will stand the Red army to enforce the dictatorship of the proletariat.

No wonder he and his gang want me out of Congress. They know that I am one of the worst enemies communism has, in Congress or elsewhere, that I know how to fight them, and that I have the courage to expose them.

This is the gang that is stirring up race trouble in the South. They do not care anything about the Negroes; they just want to stir up trouble preparatory to their planned revolution.

Mr. Speaker, I have never been sectional in discharging my duties as a Member of Congress. In my fight for the servicemen of the Nation I have taken the position that it was a national proposition and that they should be treated alike regardless of what State they came from.

I think every Member of this House will agree that no one has done more for our veterans than I have.

I opposed the vicious provisions of the Economy Act that took the bread from the mouths of many of our disabled veterans and their widows and orphans, while aliens were being placed on relief who had never worked or fought for this country—and some of whom are now plotting the overthrow of this Government.

As chairman of the Veterans' Committee of the House, I worked for years to get those benefits restored to those deserving disabled veterans and their dependents, without regard to where they lived.

Ask the servicemen in your own districts, or their widows and orphans, or ask the Gold Star mothers, and they will tell you that I have done my best for them without regard to locality.

The men in the rank and file during the recent war started in at $21 a month. I led the drive to raise it to $50 and finally forced through my amendment to raise the base pay of the men in the rank and file to $50 a month for the first time in history.

I have a bill pending now to pay them an adjusted compensation, or a bonus, as some are wont to call it, to make up for the difference between the wages they drew while in the service and what others were making at home during that time. It treats them all alike, regardless of what State they hail from. If you will all sign the petition No. 14, now on the Clerk's desk, we can bring this bill up and pass it at this session of Congress. Then we will have done justice to the veterans in every State in the Union.

Take my record on the power question and you will find that I have fought for the development of the water power of this Nation and for its distribution to the people throughout the country at rates based upon the cost of generation, transmission and distribution.

You all know that I was co-author with Senator Norris of the bill creating the Tennessee Valley Authority in 1933, and have fought its battles in this House from that day to this.

It has wrought the greatest development of ancient or modern times, and is doing more for the people of that area than any other agency this Government has ever created.

I took the same position when it came to developing the water power on the Columbia River in the far West, the Santee-Cooper River in South Carolina, the Savannah River in Georgia, the Arkansas and the White Rivers in Arkansas, the Missouri River in the Middle West, and the St. Lawrence in the Northeast. The water power of this Nation is the greatest wealth we possess outside of the soil from which we live, and I want to see it all developed and its benefits extended to the people in every section of the country.

I have taken this same position on rural electrification. If it had not been for my efforts, the farmers of this country, and especially the farmers of my particular section, would not have seen electric lights in their homes probably for the next generation.

While working on this problem from a national standpoint, of course, I have not overlooked the people of my own district. I have managed to get TVA power extended to every precinct in the 10 counties I have the honor to represent. It has done more for the farmers of that area in brightening their homes and lifting the burdens of drudgery from their shoulders and from the shoulders of their wives and children than anything else that has ever occurred in all the history of this country.

Here is a letter I have received from the Honorable CLARENCE CANNON, the ranking Democrat on the Committee on Appropriations, who has gone down the line with me in my fight for rural electrification for the last 15 years. The letter reads as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., April 29, 1948.

Hon. JOHN E. RANKIN,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JOHN: Am taking advantage of the first opportunity to express my appreciation of your good work in organizing and directing the successful fight for the additional $175,000,000 appropriations for rural electrification for the balance of the fiscal year.

No man in the history of the Congress has rendered a greater practical service to the farmers of America than you have rendered as the father of REA. I realize it is merely one of many invaluable contributions you have made to the prosperity and welfare of the American farmer but cannot refrain from again expressing appreciation of the material benefits—the light and power and health, happiness and prosperity you have brought to a million homes in rural America.

With deepest appreciation and warmest regard.

Sincerely,

CLARENCE CANNON.

Today, I have the best electrified district probably in the entire South, and we are building more than 1,000 miles of additional lines in the district at this time.

I am making a drive to reach every farmhouse with a power line that the Government can reach with the draft in times of war, or the tax collector can reach in times of peace. I want to electrify them all.

On this issue I have fought for rural electrification on a national scale, as the farmers in every State in this Union will tell you.

But, of course, when it comes to my own district, I have done just what any Congressman is expected to do; I have fought for the interest of the people who have honored me with their suffrage for so many years.

I have fought for the development of flood control and navigation on our navigable streams in every nook and corner of this country. I am doing my best to eliminate the one bottleneck that is paralyzing our great inland waterway system so far as transportation is concerned. And that is by the construction of the Tennessee-Tombigbee inland waterway which would benefit the entire Nation. I have already got it written into law, and have today introduced a bill for an appropriation of $5,735,000 to begin its construction at once. This is the amount asked for by the Army engineers, and I hope to get it through before we adjourn.

It will benefit the people of the entire Nation, and will contribute greatly to our national defense by supplying a new, short slack-water route from the Gulf of Mexico to our atomic-bomb plant at Oak Ridge.

It will be worth untold millions of dollars to the people along every stream composing our great inland waterway system, including the Ohio, the Mississippi, the Missouri, the Tennessee, the Tombigbee, the Warrior, and all their tributaries—as well as the areas along the Gulf and the Great Lakes.

I am just in receipt of a booklet issued by the Ohio Valley Improvement Association, in which we find the following very positive statement on this question:

No discussion on navigation in the Ohio Valley is complete without a statement of the major projects already under consideration by the Corps of Engineers and which we believe should be placed high upon the list of the Ohio Valley program. We believe that they are sound, needful, and sufficiently advanced in status, and should be promptly constructed.

They are, first, the construction of the New Cumberland locks and dam, Ohio River; the Morgantown, W. Va., lock and dam, Monongahela River; and the deepening of the Cumberland River, Tenn. and Ky., below Nashville, Tenn., to replace obsolete structures.

Second, the development and completion of the following additional links of waterways: The Tennessee-Tombigbee waterway joining the Tennessee River with the Tombigbee and Warrior Rivers system and the Lake Erie-Ohio River Canal joining Lake Erie and the Ohio River.

But, Mr. Speaker, I arose to discuss this so-called civil-rights program, and especially the vicious FEPC law which Governor Dewey has imposed on the people of New York, and which he would undoubtedly impose on the entire Nation if he had his way.

For the information of the House and the country, I am going to insert as a part of these remarks two speeches I made in the House on this subject, in which I set out the regulations adopted under the Dewey law in New York, as well as the set-up under the one established by Mr. Roosevelt's Executive order.

Read them carefully and you will realize the extreme viciousness of any such program.

If the New York law were on the Federal Statute books, with the same regulations in effect that have been imposed on the people of that State, then Communist Russia could pack her spies into every defense plant and every business establishment in this country.

If you doubt that, read those regulations which I have included in the following address.

The address referred to follows:

SPEECH OF HON. JOHN E. RANKIN, OF MISSISSIPPI, IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1947

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I was amused at the address of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] and very much interested in what he said. He talked about the slowness with which the leaders of his party proceed in passing labor legislation. I also noticed in the paper that the Senate leaders were going to wait on the House, and the House leaders were going to wait on the Senate.

It reminded me of what I heard over the radio the other night. Somebody was reading the laws of a certain State on traffic regulations which provided that when two cars approach a crossing at right angles they both must come to a dead stop, and each one of them must remain in that position until the other one has passed on. I am just wondering if that is the kind of stalemate we are running into, and if we are going to come to that kind of a dead standstill, with each House remaining in that position until the other one has acted.

But, Mr. Speaker, I arose to discuss a measure introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] for the recreation of the now defunct FEPC, or the so-called Fair Employment Practice Committee.

I believe Mr. DIRKSEN made a speech for such a measure in the last Congress, which reminded me of the colored preacher who told his congregation that he was "goin' to preach to you an ole 'postolic injunction, 'Take no heed of what you shall say.'"

It would certainly take a genius to reconcile that speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and this FEPC bill he has introduced with his recent speech against communism, especially since that FEPC is the chief plank in the Communist platform.

It is the most dangerous piece of communistic legislation with which this country has ever been threatened in all its history. I am going to show what it would do to the people of Illinois by pointing out what it is doing to the people of New York, where this vicious measure was written into the laws of that State without consulting the people who are suffering under it.

All these bills contain the same old bunk about making it a crime to discriminate in employment because of "race, creed, color, natural origin, or ancestry," and so forth.

Before Mr. DIRKSEN attempts to ram this monstrosity down the throats of the people of Illinois, and all the other States, I suggest he do as they did in California, let the people of Illinois vote on it. That is what they did in California in the last election, and it was defeated by a majority in every single individual county in California.

Now let us see what such a measure is doing to the people of the State of New York.

A man from New York said to me this morning, "You know this measure is being operated in New York simply by failure to operate it." The other night there were two men from New York in a taxicab here in Washington driven by a man who works here on the Hill. They got into an argument. One of them said, "I told you this FEPC would ruin the State of New York if they ever put it on the statute books." The other one said, "I did not think so. I thought it was a humanitarian measure. But I now see my mistake."

Then the other man said, "Here is what it has done to me. I own a good home," I believe he said "out on Riverside Drive, and I also own a house next to it which I bought for my own protection. I had a friend living in the other house, but his business took him to another section of the country and he had to vacate. Like a fool, I put up a sign 'For rent,' thinking that someone in the community whom I could afford to rent it to would apply. Somebody put a colored fellow up to come and apply for it and the court now says I must let him have it."

I bring this to you for what it is worth. I understand the Communists in New York are demanding that the same rule be applied to rooms or apartments for rent.

But I want to read you some of the regulations that are now being imposed upon the people of the State of New York under this vicious law. Businessmen from New York tell me that the way they are getting around this measure is by operating through employment agencies, because no intelligent businessman would go to a State with that kind of law on its statute books and attempt to establish a new business or a new enterprise, especially with the regulations or rulings under it which I am now going to read to you.

Remember they put this measure on the ticket in California and the people voted on it in the last election; and it lost in every single individual county in California. It was beaten in the entire State by about 3 to 1.

You simply destroy business with a measure like this. That is what the FEPC did here. Men have gone out of business all over the country in the last few years because of the persecution that was carried on by this outfit here in Washington, the personnel of which I shall insert later on.

A few people are going around urging us to pass it as a national law, to put everybody else in the same predicament. These people who are carrying on this racial agitation are using the Negro as a smoke screen. They do not give a tinker's dam about the Negro. They are not trying to help the Negro. They are doing them more harm than anybody has in the last 50 years, and the decent, law-abiding Negroes know it.

But let me show you what they have done in New York, and let me give you some of the regulations or rulings, as they are called, and ask you if you would like to have them in your State. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. DIRKSEN, how he would like to have them in Illinois, or how you would like to have them in Ohio, Indiana, Pennsylvania, or in Missouri, or in any other State in the Union.

Here are the regulations, or rulings, issued by the State of New York. They are headed:

"State of New York Executive Department. State commission against discrimination. Rulings."

Here are the rulings.

I want to show you some things you cannot ask in the State of New York when you go to employ a man.

Remember that State has no gas, coal, or oil, and very little water power. The rest of the country does not have to go to New York, or to any other State to get what it needs in the years to come. The American people in every section of this country are in a position now to take care of themselves. You put this measure on in one State after another and you will simply penalize those States beyond reason, and when they ask you to pass it for the whole United States and put it on the entire American people, after the fiasco they have made of it here in Washington in the last few years, it is simply unthinkable to a man who knows what he is doing and has the interest of the people of the country at heart.

Here are some of the things you cannot do under the law of New York:

UNLAWFUL EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES BEFORE HIRING ANYBODY

Those words are written in capitals. Here is the first unlawful practice:

"Inquiry into the original name of the applicant for employment, whose name has been changed by court proceedings or otherwise."

If you inquire as to his name or what his name used to be you violate the law. You commit an unlawful practice. For instance, take this man who writes for PM, who calls himself I. F. Stone. His name was Isadore Feinstein, as Cordell Hull once pointed out. Suppose he comes to you asking for employment and you ask him that question. Then you will have committed an unlawful act.

Here is the next one:

It would be unlawful practice to make "inquiry into the birthplace of the applicant for employment, the birthplace of his parents, spouse, or other close relative."

How would you like that in Iowa, Illinois, Texas, or Nebraska? In California I know you do not like it, because you have just voted on it.

Here is the next "unlawful practice":

"Requirement that the applicant for employment produce a birth certificate or baptismal certificate."

That would be an unlawful practice under this FEPC Act in New York.

I was surprised to see Governor Dewey get his mustache in the wringer on this proposition. I do not see how he is ever going to get loose from it.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. MASON. What about this requirement during the war that every person employed in certain industries had to prove that he was born here before he could get a job?

Mr. RANKIN. Certainly. If we had had this law all over the country then, the Japs would have had a spy at the elbow of every man in a key position; so would the Germans, and so would every other enemy country.

I thank the gentleman from Illinois for his timely suggestion.

It is an unlawful practice in New York, under this law, to make "inquiry into the religious denomination of an applicant for employment, his religious affiliations, his church, parish pastor, or religious holidays observed. Inquiry into whether an applicant for employment is an atheist."

Inquiry into whether an applicant for employment is an atheist is forbidden, although you may be publishing literature for the Methodist Church, the Baptist Church, or any other denomination.

Another thing, an applicant for employment—and I am reading from the rules laid down by this Commission:

"An applicant for employment may not be told that this is a Catholic, Protestant, or Jewish organization."

In other words, if you are in the business of publishing religious literature you cannot even give him that information under this law which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] now proposes for the whole country, including Illinois.

Here is another unlawful practice:

"An applicant for employment may not be told that the following holidays will be observed by the firm and no others, naming the holidays; e. g., Decoration Day and July the Fourth, etc."

You cannot tell them under the laws, rulings, and regulations of the State of New York that they may observe the Fourth of July.

Here is another unlawful practice:

"An applicant for employment may not be told that employees are required to work Rosh Hashana and Yom Kippur."

Frankly, I did not know there were any such days until the last few years.

Another thing, it is an unlawful practice under this New York law to make "inquiry into the complexion of an applicant for employment."

Inquire into his complexion and you are likely to get yourself tangled up with the law of the State of New York.

Here is another unlawful practice:

"Requirement that an applicant for employment annex a photograph."

That would be an unlawful employment practice. You are not supposed to know how he looks.

Remember, this is not in Russia, but in New York.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. MASON. And yet the State Department in order to grant a visa requires a photograph of the person to be presented with his application.

Mr. RANKIN. Certainly, and they ought to do so. Much as I respect the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON], I certainly would not want to employ him unless I knew how he looked. If I had never seen him, I would certainly want to see his picture.

Here is another unlawful practice:

"Inquiry whether an applicant for employment is a naturalized or native-born citizen; the date when the applicant acquired citizenship; whether the applicant's parents or spouse are naturalized or native-born citizens of the United States; the date when such parents or spouse acquired citizenship."

You cannot inquire into these questions under this FEPC law in New York.

Here is another unlawful practice:

"Requirement that an applicant for employment produce his naturalization papers or first papers."

He may lie to you and tell you that he is a naturalized citizen, but you cannot ask to see his papers.

Another unlawful practice in New York is to "inquire into the lineage of an applicant for employment, his ancestry, or national origin."

You remember a few years ago the Dallas News inserted an advertisement for a colored janitor, and this FEPC outfit down the street, ordered them to take it out, said it was an unlawful practice.

One member of this FEPC outfit here in Washington went into the office of Swift & Co. in Chicago. This FEPC man asked them: "How many Negroes do you have on your board of directors?"

The answer was "None."

Then the FEPC man asked him: "Why haven't you?"

That was the FEPC down here in Washington a few years ago before it died because a few radicals could not browbeat Congress into perpetuating it.

But it is now in force in the State of New York.

Here is another unlawful practice under the New York law:

"Inquiry into the location of places of business of relatives of an applicant for employment."

It is an unlawful practice to make "inquiry into the place of residence of the parents, spouse, or other close relatives of an applicant for employment."

I am reading from the records at Albany.

Here is another unlawful practice:

"Inquiry into the maiden name of the wife of a male applicant for employment and/or inquiry into the maiden name of the mother of a male or female applicant for employment."

The other day we had the Eislers down here. One of them has been shown to be representing the Comintern, according to his sister's testimony. He has a brother out in California, who seems to be poisoning the public mind through the moving-picture industry. He tries to defend his brother and refers to this woman as "my former sister." If you wanted to employ any of them and check the name of at least one of them as given here, you could not inquire into those names at all—if you are trying to do business in the State of New York—even though one of them has a half dozen aliases. You could not even ask where they came from or when they got here or when they changed their names.

Here is another unlawful practice, in New York:

"Inquiry into the general military experience of an applicant for employment."

I wish every ex-serviceman could read that, and the next one.

Here it is. It is an unlawful practice to make "inquiry into the whereabouts of an applicant for employment during the First World War; i. e., during the period from 1914 to 1919."

In other words, inquiry as to his whereabouts in the period from 1914 to 1919 is forbidden as an unlawful practice in the State of New York.

Is that what you want in Colorado? Is that what you want in Massachusetts?

Mr. GIFFORD. We have it.

Mr. RANKIN. Get rid of it, and we will help you.

Is that what you want in Kansas, in Ohio, and in other States?

Let your States vote on it. Michigan is going to vote on it right away. If you will tell the people of Michigan the whole truth, let them know the whole truth about this monstrosity, I will guarantee you they will beat it worse than they did in California.

Here is another unlawful practice:

"Inquiry into the organizations of which an applicant for employment is a member, including organizations the name or character of which indicates the religion, race, or national origin of its members."

I presume, if they should ask me if I am a member of the Masonic lodge, I could have them jerked up and brought before this inquisition board or probably prosecuted at various places throughout the country.

Mr. Speaker, I am not criticizing the people of New York. I have long since learned in going from one State to another that real Americans are about the same everywhere. I believe if they had a vote on it the people of New York would beat it, just as they did in California.

They are having a vote on it in Michigan because a little minority group has been attempting to browbeat the Legislature of Michigan into passing it. I dare say when it goes on the ballot in Michigan and the people of Michigan understand what it means they will defeat it more thoroughly than they did in California. The same thing would happen in probably every other State in the Union.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman tell us what the penalties are in New York?

Mr. RANKIN. In addition to being harassed to death with orders and directives to cease, desist, rehire, and so forth, there is a punishment provided of "imprisonment in a penitentiary or county jail for not more than 1 year or by fine of not more than $500, or by both."

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to remind the gentleman that we have that law in Massachusetts.

Mr. RANKIN. I was afraid of that.

Mr. GIFFORD. I was thoroughly amazed when I looked into it; I had not learned what the rules were. But, perhaps we carried it too far. I am so sorry, and I have been, and I am not in favor of this, I can assure the gentleman.

Mr. RANKIN. I know the gentleman is not, and I am sure the people of Massachusetts would not favor it if they had a vote on it.

Mr. GIFFORD. Employers always inquire and must know whether you come from a respectable family or not. They are so careful. Perhaps they overdid it. But I think a man ought to be able to find out whether he came from a respectable family.

Mr. RANKIN. There are a great many questions that should be asked, which are forbidden under this law.

Mr. Speaker, in order to give the new Members an idea of what a mess this FEPC was here in Washington during its existence under Executive order, I insert a speech I made on this subject in 1945.

It reads as follows:

"FEPC A BETRAYAL OF WHITE AMERICANS

"(Speech of Hon. JOHN E. RANKIN, of Mississippi, in the House of Representatives, Thursday, July 12, 1945)

"Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, the passage of a law at this time legalizing this so-called FEPC would be a betrayal of the white people of the country. If every individual in the United States could understand just what it means, there would be such a roar of protest coming from every State in this Union that it would never see the light of day.

"If every Member of Congress would screw his courage to the sticking place and vote his convictions on this so-called FEPC, it would not get 50 votes out of the entire membership of 435.

"It is a most dangerous and brazen attempt to fasten upon the white people of America the worst system of control by alien or minority racial groups that has been known since the crucifixion.

"When I read the names of the personnel of this outfit you will understand what I mean.

"To sanctify this organization by law would give the lie to everything we have told our American boys they were fighting for. Instead of coming back to liberty, freedom, and democracy, they would find themselves sold into this bondage, herded, humiliated, and regimented by alien influences directed by a foreign comintern representing the deadly doctrine of Karl Marx that is based upon hatred for Christianity and for everything that is based on Christian principles.

"It is a manifestation in legislative form of that infidelity that has closed thousands of Christian churches in Europe and has been responsible for the murder of untold millions of Christian human beings.

"This measure is not directed altogether at the white people of the South. If it were, you folks in the North would not have so much ground for alarm. We in the South know how to combat subversive elements. As Henry Grady once said, we wrested the South from such domination 'when Federal drum beats rolled nearer and Federal bayonets hedged closer to the ballot box of the South than it ever will again in this Republic.'

"But you people in the North have not had that training, and this FEPC is likely to bring grief, strife, hatred, race riots, and chaos in your northern cities if this vicious agency is perpetuated and sanctioned by your votes.

"Do not forget that the returning servicemen know what this thing means, and they are going to call you to account next year—beginning with the primary. They are not going to wait until the general election.

"Do not forget that every businessman, every farmer, every professional man, and every other independent individual whose blood glows with the instinct of American liberty, is going to join these men, and those other patriotic forces that are fighting to save American institutions for which these boys have been fighting and dying upon every battlefield in the world.

"If every man and every woman in the United States could just read the list of individuals that compose the personnel of this crazy FEPC, and its subdivisions throughout the country, I dare say there would not be enough of you left who vote for it, even if nominated in the primaries next year, to form a corporal's guard.

"For your information, and for the information of the American people generally, I am going to read you the official personnel as it exists today. Remember, this list is taken from the official record. This is the group that wants to nose into and control every business in the United States. Remember, they can search the files and records of every business establishment in America where some disgruntled individual is willing to trump up a charge of discrimination. They can drag them all over the country and try them, and in that way destroy any ordinary business concern.

"The next thing they are going to try to do is get control of your schools and force their communistic henchmen into the schools and teach your children their subversive doctrines.

"Read these lists carefully, which, as I said, are taken from the official records here in Washington, and you will see that not one out of ten on these rolls is a white gentile American.

"Here is the official list:

"Committee on Fair Employment Practice, Washington, D. C., Office of the Chairman

Incumbent	Title	Race	Salary
Ross, Malcolm	Chairman	White	$8,000
Johnson, George M.	Deputy Chairman.	Colored	8,000
Hubbard, Maceo	Hearings examiner.	do	5,600
Bloch, Emanuel	do	White	5,600
Copper, Evelyn	do	do	5,600
Berking, Max	Assistant to Chairman.	do	3,800
Alexander, Dorothy	Secretary to Chairman.	Colored	2,600
Clifton, J. Jeanne	Secretary to Deputy.	do	2,000
Brooks, Mary	Clerk-stenographer.	do	1,800
Banting, Myra	do	White	1,800

"You will note that in this office of the chairman, consisting of 10 people, there are 5 Negroes and 5 white people, most of whom have foreign names. One of the whites is a stenographer who receives the smallest salary of anyone on the list.

"Remember that the members of this group preside over the destiny of every business enterprise in America, and are using their assumed powers to harass white Americans out of business.

"This is the organization Members of Congress are being asked to perpetuate by the passage of this bill.

"FIELD OPERATIONS

"Here is the Division of Field Operations:

"Field operations

Incumbent	Title	Race	Salary
Maslow, Will	Chief	White	$6,500
Mitchell, Clarence	Principal fair-practice examiner.	Colored	5,600
Davidson, Eugene	do	do	5,600
Beall, W. Hayes	Senior fair-practice examiner.	White	4,600
Mercer, Inez	Fair-practice examiner.	do	3,800
Rogers, Eleanor	Clerk-stenographer.	Colored	1,800
Saito, Otome	do	Japanese-American.	1,800
Thompson, Mildred	do	Colored	1,800
Cornick, Emma	do	do	1,620

"You will note that it consists of nine people—five negroes, one Japanese, and three others—two of whom have records of affiliations with Communist-front organizations, according to the reports of the Dies committee.

"Imagine this group going about over the country riding herd on the white American businessmen of the Nation, telling them whom they shall employ, whom they shall promote, and with whom they may associate.

"It would be interesting, and probably enlightening, to check up on these people and see how many of them are native-born Americans.

"Members of Congress had better do this now, before they get caught in this trap, because this question of un-American activities is going to be an issue in every congressional district next year, beginning with the primaries.

"The people are not going to wait until the general election for someone who holds a commission as a result of the pernicious activities of Sidney Hillman and his gang to wrap the party cloak about him and shout to the people of his district that 'I am a Republican' or 'I am a Democrat.'

"More than 2,000,000 young men have already been discharged in this war, and they are organizing now to try to save America for Americans. They are going to read your records, and they are likely to ask you some very embarrassing questions when you get home.

"REVIEW AND ANALYSIS DIVISION

"Now look at this list and see who reviews all these records of racial discrimination when they come to Washington, and you will understand how the editor of the Dallas News felt and how other white gentiles feel, including Cecil B. DeMille, the great American movie producer, when they are harassed out of business.

"Here is the list:

"Review and Analysis Division

Incumbent	Title	Race	Salary
Davis, John A	Chief	Colored	$5,600
Lawson, Marjorie	Research analyst.	do	3,800
Golightly, Cornelius.	Compliance analyst.	do	3,200
Hemphill, India	do	do	2,600
Coan, Carol	do	White	2,600
Davis, Joy P	do	Colored	2,600
Hoffman, Celia	Clerk-stenographer.	White	1,800
Spaulding, Joan	do	Colored	1,800

"You will note that it consists of six Negroes and two white people, one of whom is named Carol Coan and the other Celia Hoffman, a white stenographer receiving the lowest salary on the list.

"Now, if you sign the petition to bring out this bill or vote for this monstrosity, do not forget that when you get home those white American businessmen who help to sustain this Nation in time of peace and whose sons are fighting its battles in time of war are going to want to ask you some questions that you may not be able to answer.

"LEGAL DIVISION

"But if you want a real laugh, look at this Legal Division.

"Legal Division

Incumbent	Title	Race	Salary
Reeves, Frank D	Attorney	Colored	$4,600
Stickgold, Simon	do	White	4,600
Gordon, Jernevive	Clerk-stenographer.	Colored	1,800

"You will note that this so-called Legal Division consists of two Negroes and a Simon Stickgold.

"INFORMATION DIVISION

"Now we come to the Information Division. If you want information about this outfit, write to this Division:

"Information Division

Incumbent	Title	Race	Salary
Bourne, St. Clair	Information specialist.	Colored	$3,800
Whiting, Margaret	Clerk-stenographer.	do	1,800

"You will note that it consists of two Negroes, one registered as an information specialist and the other as a clerk-stenographer.

"BUDGET AND ADMINISTRATION

"Now we come to the Budget and Administration Division. This Division not only makes up the budget but administers the regulations. Here is the list:

"Budget and Administration

Incumbent	Title	Race	Salary
Jones, Theodore	Chief	Colored	$5,600
Jeter, Sinclair	Assistant administrative officer.	do	3,200
Baker, Vivian D	Clerk-stenographer.	do	2,000
Jackson, Bosales A	Clerk-typist	do	1,620
Paynter, Minnie A	do	do	1,620
Hollomon, Irving	Clerk	do	1,440
Selby, Ralph R	Chief, fiscal	do	2,600
Ross, Sylvia B	Voucher auditor	do	2,000
Nelson, Otelia	Accounting clerk	do	1,620
Carpenter, Elizabeth.	do	do	1,620
Brent, Pearl T	do	do	1,620

"This outfit, which is composed of 11 Negroes, and no whites at all, not only makes up the budget for financing this aggregation, but it seems to have the power of administration. I hope you will read this list to your white businessmen, farmers, and ex-servicemen at home when you get back and ask for renomination in the primaries next year.

"MAIL AND FILES DIVISION

"Now, here are the ones that have control of the mails and filing system:

"Mail and Files

Incumbent	Title	Race	Salary
Douglas, Lela	Chief, Mail and Files.	Colored	$2,000
Welch, Selena	Docket clerk	do	1,800
Gamble, Jessie	File clerk	do	1,620
Phillips, Rose	do	do	1,440
Reed, Charles	Messenger	do	1,380
Mitchell, Regina	File clerk	do	1,440

"You will note that this division is composed entirely of Negroes—six Negroes, and no whites at all. I wonder why they discriminated against the white race in setting up these two powerful branches of this most dangerous agency?

"REGIONAL OFFICE, NEW YORK

"Now, let us turn to the regional offices and see who is going to harass the business people back in the States. Here is the list for the State of New York:

"Regional office, New York

Incumbent	Title	Race	Salary
Lawson, Edward H.	Regional director.	Colored	$5,600
Jones, Madison S.	Fair-practice examiner.	do	3,800
Jones, Robert G.	do	do	3,800
Donovan, Daniel R.	do	White	3,800
Irish, Miriam	Clerk-stenographer.	Colored	2,000
Asepha, Tillie	do	White	1,620
Schwartz, Sonia	do	do	1,620

"This is the list that is going to help Governor Dewey harass the white American businessman of the Empire State. You will note that it is composed of four Negroes and three white people. Please read the names of the three white people and see if you can figure out their antecedents.

"Businessmen of New York are going to have a hard time after this war without having all this communistic conglomeration to deal with, to say nothing of the one which Governor Dewey and his political henchmen have now heaped upon them.

"REGIONAL OFFICE, PHILADELPHIA

"Now, let us turn to Philadelphia, the birthplace of the Constitution—the City of Brotherly Love. At the risk of causing glorious old Benjamin Franklin to turn over in his grave, I read you the list:

"Regional office, Philadelphia

Incumbent	Title	Race	Salary
Fleming, G. James	Regional director.	Colored	$5,600
Greenblatt, Mildred	Fair-practice examiner.	White	3,800
Manly, Milo A.	do	Colored	3,800
Risk, Samuel R.	do	White	3,800
Grinnage, Willard	do	Colored	3,200
Gorgas, Helen	Clerk-stenographer.	do	1,800
Klinger, Karyl	do	White	1,800
Brown, Grayce	do	Colored	1,440

"You will note that it is composed of eight individuals—five Negroes and three whites, Mildred Greenblatt, Samuel R. Risk, and Karyl Klinger.

"Don't you know there will be some brotherly love when that crowd gets going on the businessmen of the Philadelphia area?

"REGIONAL OFFICE, WASHINGTON, D. C.

"Now, here is the regional office in Washington, D. C., the National Capital, where there has been so much persecution of white gentiles in the last few years. Here is the list:

"Regional office, Washington, D. C.

Incumbent	Title	Race	Salary
Evans, Joseph	Regional director.	Colored	$5,600
Houston, Theophilus.	Fair-practice examiner.	do	3,200
Kahn, Alice	do	White	2,600
Chisolm, Ruby	Clerk-stenographer.	Colored	1,800
Urback, Dorothy	do	do	1,620

"You will note it consists of four Negroes and Alice Kahn. Just what chance a white gentile will have with this group is entirely problematical, to say the least of it.

REGIONAL OFFICE, CLEVELAND

"Now, let us move out where the West begins and take a look. Here is the list in the Cleveland regional office:

"Regional office, Cleveland

Incumbent	Title	Race	Salary
McKnight, William.	Regional director.	Colored	$4,600
Abbott, Olcott R.	Fair-practice examiner.	White	3,800
Glore, Lethia	do	Colored	3,200
Kelley, Berniza	Clerk-stenographer.	do	1,620
Wasem, Edna	do	White	1,800

"You will note that this group is composed of three Negroes and two whites, Olcott R. Abbott and Edna Wasem.

"Don't you know the white people of Cleveland will enjoy being dominated by them?

"CINCINNATI REGIONAL OFFICE

"Cincinnati seems to be largely under the jurisdiction of the Cleveland office since it only has two people:

"Cincinnati

Incumbent	Title	Race	Salary
James, Harold	Fair-practice examiner.	White	$4,600
	Clerk-stenographer.		1,800

"DETROIT REGIONAL OFFICE

"Now let us move on to Detroit, Mich. Here is the regional office for Detroit:

"Detroit

Incumbent	Title	Race	Salary
Swan, Edward	Examiner in charge.	Colored	$4,600
Sese, Doris K.	Clerk-stenographer.	Japanese-American.	1,620

"You will note that it is composed of one Negro and one Japanese. I know the businessmen of Detroit are grateful for this consideration.

"I should like to hear some of the comments they will make to you gentlemen from Detroit when you get home next summer, if you support this vicious measure.

"REGIONAL OFFICE, CHICAGO

"Here is a list of the regional office in the Windy City:

"Regional office, Chicago

Incumbent	Title	Race	Salary
Henderson, Elner	Regional director.	Colored	$5,600
Gibson, Harry H. C.	Fair-practice examiner.	do	3,800
Schultz, Joy	do	White	3,800
Williams, Le Roy	do	Colored	3,200
Zeidman, Penny	Clerk-stenographer.	White	1,800
Ingram, Marguerite S.	do	Colored	1,620

"You will note it is composed of four Negroes, Joy Shultz, and Penny Zeidman. I am told that a representative of this group went into the office of Swift & Co. and asked how many Negro members they had on their board of directors. The answer was, 'We have no Negro members on our board of directors.' Then the question came back, 'Why haven't you?' This just shows what this supergovernmental set-up is driving at. They want to communize America and destroy everything which our glorious ancestors have left us and for which our boys are now fighting and dying all over the world.

"REGIONAL OFFICE, ATLANTA

"Here is a list of the Atlanta office:

"Regional office, Atlanta

Incumbent	Title	Race	Salary
Dodge, Witherspoon.	Regional director.	White	$4,600
Hope, John	Fair-practice examiner.	Colored	3,800
McKay, George D.	do	White	3,200
Chubb, Sally	Clerk-stenographer.	do	2,000
Ingram, Thelma	do	Colored	1,800

"You will note that it consists of two Negroes and three whites; the most important post in this office, that of examiner, is held by a Negro. I wonder how the people of Georgia enjoy the domination of this group. I may have more to say about them later.

"REGIONAL OFFICE, KANSAS CITY

"Here is the list of the Kansas City office:

"Regional office, Kansas City

Incumbent	Title	Race	Salary
Hoglund, Roy A.	Regional director.	White	$5,600
Ormabee, Eugene	Fair-practice examiner.	do	3,800
Jones, Mildred	Clerk-stenographer.	Colored	1,620
Schlien, Helene G.	do	White	1,620

"You will note that this office force consists of three whites and one Negro. You can read the list of whites yourself and then judge how many of them really represent the people of that area.

"ST. LOUIS REGIONAL OFFICE

"Here is the list of the regional office at St. Louis:

"St. Louis

Incumbent	Title	Race	Salary
Theodore Brown	Examiner in charge.	Colored	$3,800
Morris Levine	Examiner	White	3,200
Armatha Jackson	Clerk-stenographer.	Colored	1,620

"You will notice that it consists of two Negroes and Morris Levine. Just how they came to select these particular individuals to preside over the destiny of the white businessmen of the great State of Missouri I cannot understand.

"REGIONAL OFFICE, DALLAS, TEX.

"The members of the regional office at Dallas are as follows:

"Regional office, Dallas

Incumbent	Title	Race	Salary
Castenada, Carlos	Regional director.	White	$4,600
(Vacancy)	Fair-practice examiner.		3,200
Gutleben, Willetta	Clerk-stenographer.	White	1,800

"You will note there is one vacancy. Last year that position was held by a Negro, namely, Roy V. Williams. The other two members, Carlos Castenada, the regional director, and Willetta Gutleben seem to be in charge of the office at the present time. This is the regional office that attacked the Dallas News last year for carrying an advertisement for a Negro janitor. This fellow Castenada, the director, held the same position that he holds now. If this set-up is made permanent, then I presume the rest of the white American businessmen in Texas may expect to be harassed just as the Dallas News was.

"REGIONAL OFFICE, NEW ORLEANS

"The regional office at New Orleans consists of the following members:

"Regional office, New Orleans

Incumbent	Title	Race	Salary
Ellinger, W. Don	Regional director.	White	$3,800
Morton, James H	Fair-practice examiner.	Colored	3,200
Ronning, Evelyn	Clerk-stenographer.	White	1,800

"You will note that there are two whites and one Negro in this office. As the Negro is the fair-practice examiner, just what the decent people of Louisiana may expect at the hands of this outfit is something to contemplate.

"REGIONAL OFFICE, SAN FRANCISCO

"The San Francisco office consists of the following individuals:

"Regional office, San Francisco

Incumbent	Title	Race	Salary
Kingman, Harry L	Regional director.	White	$5,600
Rutledge, Edward	Fair-practice examiner.	do	4,600
Ross, Bernard	do	do	3,800
Seymour, Virginia	Administrative assistant.	do	2,000
Marzen, Jewel	Clerk-stenographer.	do	1,800

"This is the only office we have found yet that consists entirely of white (?) people. Just what the background of each one of them is I am unable to say.

"LOS ANGELES REGIONAL OFFICE

"The Los Angeles regional office consists of the following:

"Los Angeles

Incumbent	Title	Race	Salary
Hunt, A. Bruce	Hearings examiner.	White	$5,600
Brown, Robert E	Fair-practice examiner.	Colored	3,600
Lopez, Ignacio	do	White	3,800
Vetter, Vera G	Clerk-stenographer.	do	1,800
Lerna, Marie	do	do	1,620

"You will note that there are four whites and one Negro in this office, the Negro being the fair-practice examiner. I do not know what consideration the white businessmen of the Los Angeles area are receiving at the hands of this group, but from what I can hear there is considerable gnashing of teeth over the situation.

"Mr. Chairman, this FEPC is a supergovernment of commissars, with more power for evil than any other agency that has ever been created in this country. If Congress should ratify it and make it the law of the land, then we will have sacrificed and destroyed that sacred freedom for which our brave men are now fighting and dying on every battle front in the world.

"We have no right to pass such a drastic, revolutionary measure that literally changes our way of life, as well as our form of government, while these boys are away from home in uniform, fighting to sustain American institutions.

"As I said before, we are going to carry this battle against such un-American activities into every congressional district in the United States next year, in the primary, so that no one can crawl behind the party cloak and claim immunity at the hands of any segment of our people.

"This is a battle for the survival of free constitutional government, for the survival of the American way of life, for the survival of free enterprise, for the survival of American liberty itself.

"It is a battle to save America for Americans."

Better Vote Your Ticket Straight

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDWARD V. ROBERTSON
OF WYOMING
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 30 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. ROBERTSON of Wyoming. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD an editorial appearing in the Times-Herald of Washington, on June 27, 1948.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BETTER VOTE YOUR TICKET STRAIGHT

It seems to us that the Truman-Congress battle has gone on long enough. If resumed in the near future, as it may be at Mr. Truman's instance, the fracas promises to become a bore, and a dangerous bore at that.

We aren't so safe from Russian and other threats that we can afford to have Congress and the President at loggerheads, 1949–51 or 1949–53.

Which is to say that in the next Presidential term we shall badly need to have a Congress controlled by the party to which the President belongs. We shall need either a Republican President and Congress or a Democratic President and Congress.

VOTING FOR A UNIFIED NATION

So our tip to all voters, as a matter of plain common sense and national safety insurance, would be: Vote any ticket you please, but vote it straight, at least as regard the candidates for President, Vice President, Senator(s) from your State, and Representative from your district.

By following that course you will do what you can to make it certain that the United States for a while will have a President and a Congress who can work together for the welfare and progress of the Nation. Split your ticket above the Representative line, and you'll be voting for another dangerous dogfight of the kind Mr. Truman and the Eightieth Congress have been staging for so long.

BETTER VOTE REPUBLICAN

Of course, our further advice would be to vote the straight Republican ticket, from Dewey for President and Warren for Vice President on down to the nominee for your local dog catcher.

We base this attitude on the belief that the Democrats have been in power much too long. They have lost the ability to generate new and dynamic ideas. The only thing they can think of to offer the country is the old New Deal philosophy—much of which we thought good in its day; but its day was long ago.

The Republicans, their wits sharpened and prudence stimulated by 16 years of political hard times, can practically be depended on to give us decent government until they, too, go stale and unproductive and have to be thrown out. Judging from the stamina and brilliance of their present leadership, that will be a long, long time.

As for Henry A. Wallace's candidacy, we think anybody who votes for Hysterical Hank will be throwing his or her vote away, and throwing it in Joe Stalin's direction to boot.

Discount the four preceding paragraphs as propaganda for the GOP if you wish. That's just what they are—though they're honest propaganda.

But the rest of this piece is not propaganda. We think it will be only the hardest common sense next November 2 to ballot for a genuinely United States, by voting any ticket you choose, but voting that ticket straight.

Inflation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. KENNETH S. WHERRY
OF NEBRASKA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 30 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an article relative to inflation, by David Lawrence, from the Washington Evening Star of yesterday.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPUBLICANS SHOWED RESTRAINT IN REPLY TO TRUMAN ON INFLATION—AID BEING SENT TO EUROPE BASICALLY RESPONSIBLE FOR RISING LIVING COSTS

(By David Lawrence)

The country owes a vote of thanks to the Republicans for their self-restraint. If the Republicans had chosen to answer in kind President Truman's political maneuvers in blaming the high cost of living on the Republican Congress, the consequences might have been shocking.

For the Republicans have never made full use of the most potent piece of political argument they could use this year—namely, that if the whole truth were revealed about the high cost of living, it would be discovered that money and materials going to aid Europe are basically responsible for today's inflation.

It would not be difficult to imagine the Republican stump speakers going up and down the country telling the American people they could have more autos and more housing if the steel and other building materials and manpower were not being used to supply Europe under the Marshall plan.

DUE TO ABNORMAL DEMAND

Likewise, if America's exports of goods and farm products were not being subsidized by the American taxpayers, the Republicans could point out that the cost of living would not be so high. Even wage levels would not be as high as they are today if manpower were not short due to the abnormal demand created by the European recovery plan.

On a strictly dog-eat-dog basis in modern politics, the Republicans would have a tremendous argument in an appeal to nationalism. It worked in the 1920s and it probably could bring votes today for the party out of power. President Truman may, of course, goad the Republicans into that kind of campaign. He took a big risk in blaming the Republican Congress for the high cost of living when everybody who knows the facts is aware that European demand has prevented a deflation this year and actually increased the inflation.

This doesn't mean that there is no basis for some form of Government controls. On the contrary, the sound arguments for such controls have been obscured by the partisan political atmosphere with which the President has enveloped the whole problem. It is unlikely that the Republicans will take lying down the accusation that they alone have been responsible for the rise in living costs.

BOUND TO CREATE SHORTAGE

When a government spends from $12,000,000,000 to $15,000,000,000 a year for armament, it is bound to create a shortage in steel and other materials. This causes building costs to go up because, when products are in short supply, they usually rise in price. To control prices, moreover, doesn't always keep away black markets or encourage increased production.

The only way to cure inflation is to bring a balance between supply and demand. There would have been such a balance this year but for the inflationary action resulting from the European recovery program and the increase in the rearmament program.

But these things were necessary. Both political parties supported the legislation appropriating money for European recovery and for an enlarged armament program. It doesn't behoove the Truman administration now to seek partisan advantage by charging Republicans with the blame for these economic trends.

Maintenance of the bipartisan policy in foreign affairs is vital to the Nation because only a unified country can ward off a third world war. The Republicans have wisely refrained from telling the whole story about the administration's diplomatic blunders in dealing with Russia. And the Republicans have not answered the Truman charges on inflation, as they could, in partisan vein. The Republican statement of policy about the extra session was dignified and restrained. It is to be hoped that the Republicans, though given ample provocation, will not allow themselves to be dragged into the position of attacking European aid as the true cause of inflation. For that might appeal to selfishness throughout the Nation and, in the end, hurt the whole cause of world peace.

The Blue-Gray Game

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LISTER HILL
OF ALABAMA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 30 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I have in my hand the Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser for Thursday morning, July 29, which contains an article under the headline "Blue-Gray game is lauded as major good-will factor." The article speaks of the Blue-Gray game, played in the city of Montgomery, Ala., each December, as an evidence of good will among our people and as an evidence of a unified country. I wish to commend this article, together with an editorial in the same issue of the paper commenting on the article, and call them to the attention of all the people of our country, the people of the North, the people of the South, the people of the East, and the people of the West. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD the article, as well as the editorial.

There being no objection, the article and editorial were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser of July 29, 1948]

BLUE-GRAY GAME IS LAUDED AS MAJOR GOOD-WILL FACTOR

Montgomery's own Blue-Gray football game is seen by Drew Pearson, Washington columnist, as one of the ways whereby the North and South could arrive at a better understanding of one another.

Pearson wrote about the game in his Wednesday column in commenting about the present civil-rights uproar and the way Russia is using it to propagandize this and other countries.

In his column Pearson cited the progress that has been made in the South and leaders who are helping cement relationship between the two sections and between whites and Negroes.

Meanwhile, in Montgomery, Champ Pickens, Blue-Gray Association leader, said he appreciated the boost Pearson had given the game and idea behind it.

SHRINE TO BOTH

Pickens said he hoped the entire country would become interested and make the event here a shrine to those who fell on both sides in the War Between the States.

Here's what Pearson had to say:

"The other day I met a man who has been doing his part at better understanding between the North and the South—a gentleman named Champ Pickens, of Montgomery, Ala., who has organized the Blue and Gray Association. He is trying to get folks who followed the Confederate Gray during the Civil War, and those who followed the Federal Blue to get together at least once a year at a football game between the all-star team of the North and the all-star team of the South. He stages the game at Montgomery, Cradle of the Confederacy, and as many northern folks as possible are invited down to see the game.

"Perhaps it might be a good idea for us to stage a lot of things like this—and to think a little more about our own internal problems. We have been giving a lot of thought to friendship abroad—which cannot be neglected—but we must also work at friendship at home—which is equally important.

"For instance, most people don't realize that there is no one memorial day to commemorate the veterans who wore the blue and the gray. Memorial days are sprinkled all over the calendar. While the North sets aside May 30, North and South Carolina set aside May 10, Louisiana, Tennessee, and Kentucky June 3, while Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, and Alabama commemorate April 26.

"Therefore, why not pick one day mutually agreeable to the South and pay tribute not only to the fallen heroes of the past but at that time promote more friendship for the future?"

FOR CIVIC CLUBS

"Also, it might be a fine idea for the Rotary Clubs, the Kiwanis and Lions Clubs, and the junior chambers of commerce, which all do such a good job of promoting worth-while community enterprises, to take up the problems of better understanding between the North and South. If some of the southern clubs invited northern clubs down to their cities, and vice versa, a lot of solid friendship might result.

"I might seem foolish to say that we need more understanding right here in our own country, but the fact is that we do."

[From the Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser]

TELL HIM ABOUT IT

Today on page 1 is a news story about what a columnist, a syndicated one, wrote for the Alabama Journal yesterday afternoon. That is unusual procedure.

It is an unusual column.

Drew Pearson, presiding officer of a column which has approximately 20,000,000 daily readers and radio speaker to the most Hooperitized of radio audiences is authority of the column.

Champ Pickens went to Washington some months ago to talk to Mr. Pearson. His mission was the biggerment and betterment of the Blue-Gray celebration which he breech-birthed in 1938. Mr. Pearson listened attentively and later called Champ back for a second visit.

Champ did a fine missionary job as is attested by Mr. Pearson's column. There is more to this than meets the eye, of course, and if the citizens who are pleased with what Mr. Pearson has written will communicate their pleasure to him by telegram, letter, or post card, all will be well.

Young Republicans

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM E. JENNER
OF INDIANA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 30 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an article entitled "Young Republicans," by Raymond Moley, from Newsweek for June 28 last.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

YOUNG REPUBLICANS

(By Raymond Moley)

While the cheers ring out for the great and notable in the Republican Party and while that party is warm in anticipation of victory, let us turn the page to a little-known soldier of the party's long march through the desert.

Back in early 1936 when, as Gov. Dwight Green said in his keynote, the party in disaster after defeat was literally "driven back to the county line," Richard Nowinson, in his twenties, started a little magazine called the Republican. It was a daring venture supported by little except the idealism of its youthful editor. When the initial copy, published in Chicago, came to this desk, it was an eyebrow raiser. Political magazines had long been out of date, and their history had been marked by failure. Moreover, this was a period dedicated to the fortunes of no rising party but to an old and badly battered one.

But there was no wish in Dick Nowinson's mind to glorify the old and reactionary. He believed in two-party government at a moment when the trend seemed to be going toward one-party, one-man governments everywhere, except in the British Commonwealth.

Nowinson says that his project rested on a few simple propositions: that millions of voters still shared the early ideals of the Republican Party; that basic Republican principles needed restatement in the light of new conditions; that there was no unity of principle in the old party; that millions of young men and women were coming of age who could only dimly remember a Republican President.

The polls showed that the GOP failed to interest young people. The pied pipers of the New Deal were playing the tune of a brave new world. The GOP was billed as an old man's party.

The Republican won new interest in the party as it struggled along. It contributed to a better-informed party membership. It told party leaders what the people in the ranks were thinking. It told the rank and file what their leaders were like. It helped crystallize policy in Nation and State.

Later, when strong Republican governors began to appear, the magazine told of their achievements. And as the Republican membership in Congress grew, it offered information about what it was doing.

Nowinson has been doing all this constructive work with little material return. After 12 years, he still labors with undiminished faith in his little offices in Chicago. He has the satisfaction of traveling with the forward-looking members of his party back from the "county line" to the shadow of the White House. He deserves support, for his job is just beginning. The Republican Party not only needs watching in victory, but it needs direction, interpretation and advice.

The present and prospective ascendancy of the party is a tentative sanction. It is based upon a widespread reaction against the administration now in power. The war and only the war spared Roosevelt from that reaction. Truman is getting the full force of accumulated dissatisfaction, plus plenty of additional exasperation which he himself has caused.

Millions of young people are going to enter the Republican Party with reservations. They want to believe the promises of the spokesmen and the platform of this convention. They want the invigorating atmosphere of economic freedom, of a more efficient public service, relief from obtrusive and scolding authority, a smarter, more effective diplomacy and constructive action concerning the cost of living. Their tentative vote of confidence can be reviewed. It can even be withheld if the campaign bogs down.

These young voters want no tribal tub thumping and mystic incantations from those old Republican medicine men who prevailed in the days of normalcy. There were occasional and rather ominous signs in Philadelphia that those relics conceived this to be the year of personal resurrection. Victory, however, will depend upon youth.

More voters have come of age since Nowinson started out than all those who voted for Hoover and Smith 20 years ago. They want a change, but the right kind of change.

Our Irredeemable Paper Money

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FREDERICK C. SMITH

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, it is a genuine privilege to insert in the RECORD an article taken from Human Events and which was written by our colleague Mr. BUFFETT. This deals with the most important subject before the Nation, namely, that of money. It goes straight to the heart of the matter. Only when the principle which he expounds dominates the thinking of our national lawmakers will there be hope of reversing the trend toward tyranny and restoring to the individual citizen the liberty which made America the greatest nation on earth.

OUR IRREDEEMABLE PAPER MONEY

(By HOWARD H. BUFFETT, Representative, Second District of Nebraska)

"Of all the contrivances for cheating the laboring classes of mankind, none has been more effectual than that which deludes them with paper money."—Daniel Webster.

I

When the United States Government deliberately abandoned the gold standard in 1933, and officially repudiated its solemn pledge to redeem its bonds and paper money with gold, little notice was accorded the protests against this arbitrary action. Neither the unprecedented immorality of repudiation nor the resort to printing-press money seemed to disturb the American people.

Public faith in our money system rested on a long heritage of sound money freely redeemable in gold. But no significant immediate effect on the domestic purchasing power of the dollar took place. Clever propaganda, appearing to the patriotic instincts of the public, effectively offset or silenced the voices of those who spoke about the inflationary perils of irredeemable paper money.

Now, 15 years have passed. The evil consequences of that dishonorable action are beginning to make themselves felt, though the cause is still not understood. The ordinary consumer has become painfully aware of a continual and relentless rise in the cost of living. The citizen interested in public affairs is beginning to voice a suspicion that neither party any longer possesses the ability and integrity genuinely to bring Government spending under control. The disciple of human liberty is alarmed at both the steady expansion of bureaucracy and militarism, and the growing public enthusiasm for state intervention in all human activities. We are slowly becoming enmeshed in all the economic, political, and moral consequences that always ultimately follow the resort to irredeemable paper money.

II

Lenin is reported to have said that the surest way to destroy the capitalistic system is to debauch the currency. By expanding the money supply with irredeemable printed paper, government can steadily confiscate, secretly and unobserved, the savings of the people. This process generally known as inflation, amounts to legalized robbery of humble and trusting people by the very agency (government) that supposedly protects them from spoliation.

In the United States, the unrestrained Government issuance of bonds and currency since 1933 has cut in half the purchasing power of every life insurance policy, savings bank deposit, Government bond, or other fixed dollar obligation. Those who have been thrifty; those who have responded to the official appeal to put their earnings into savings bonds; those who have tried to lay away a frugal nest egg for their old age; all have taken a cruel loss. Lenin was certainly prescient.

While Government spending steadily dilutes the value of paper money, the resultant inflation brings a train of other evils. With taxes high and money deteriorating, shrewd people are constrained to spend their energies less on productive activity and more in shifting their capital assets into real property. Speculators who really understand inflation can always roll up immense profits.

When the great eighteenth century fiat money inflation in France collapsed, the crushing loss fell on the shoulders of working people who had neither the foresight nor the means to protect themselves. When the inflationary bubble burst and the outstanding paper money became entirely worthless, it was discovered that the great bulk of it was in the hands of humble folk. A similar consequence resulted during the disastrous mark inflation in Germany in the 1920's.

Governmental fraud undermines both public morale and private morals. When those in control of the destiny of the nation break its solemn pledge and gloat over that repudiation, as was done in 1933, it is a national disgrace. It is more than disgraceful when the President urges the people to "buy savings bonds to fight inflation" and money thus collected is then used to prop up high prices, as in the case of the recent Government million-ton purchase of sugar. Somehow and some day the trusting people who respond with their savings to such official appeals will discover the trickery of which they are the victims.

III

The day-by-day news is giving the American public a continuous and vivid portrayal of the frightful consequences of irredeemable paper currency emissions, now usually disguised under the soothing label of "managed currency" systems.

In one country after another, since VJ-day, we have witnessed a relentless rise in prices as the confidence of the populace in paper money first slowly, then rapidly, evaporated. While the ravages of war are a primary cause of Europe's troubles, yet wherever the governments have met their financial needs with the printing press, their basic ills have deepened and recovery has been retarded.

Despite the warning portrayed by the continuous drama of currency depreciation abroad, and inflationary development at home, American officialdom pursues a policy that might charitably be called "watchful waiting." Instead of vigorous and courageous efforts to restore a sound money redeemable in gold—before public uneasiness over our paper money results in a general flight from currency, bank deposits, and other dollar promises—our supposedly responsible leaders sit with folded hands, or demand economic narcotics like price control.

In their 1948 political platforms, both major parties vigorously denounce inflation and high prices. Each pledges itself to halt the continuing rise in the cost of living. Yet neither party even mentions the only final cure for monetary inflation—a restoration to Americans of the right to own gold and to have paper money redeemed in gold.

It is hard to believe that the men entrusted with the financial welfare of this Nation follow a pattern that runs counter to all the teachings of history. Yet the record shows that all efforts to legislate or decree monetary values by governments have ultimately failed disastrously. Why, then, should anyone believe that the present attempt to defy natural economic law can succeed?

Apologists for the American experiment in irredeemable paper money claim "our system is different." They point to the Government gold stocks at Fort Knox and solemnly assert that this $23,500,000,000 gold hoard gives ample security and backing to our currency. What they neglect to mention is that the Fort Knox gold is not obtainable by Americans in exchange for paper dollars. Only foreign holders of dollars can step up to the American Treasury and secure gold in exchange.

Perhaps these advocates of managed currency should be reminded of the comment of Sir Isaac Newton when he was asked by British Treasury officials why the British money unit, the pound, had to be a fixed quantity of precious metal. Why did it need to be of metal at all, since paper currency was already publicly accepted? Why could not notes be issued without ever being redeemed? Newton, a mathematician, replied: "Gentlemen, in applied mathematics, you must describe your unit."

Today American paper-money units, with the exception of a relatively small quantity redeemable in silver, would be difficult to describe. A $20 Federal Reserve Note carries on its face this inscription: "The United States of America will pay to the bearer on demand $20"; $20 in more paper.

If those who have promoted irredeemable paper money in America believe in a Government-managed economy, then it is easy to understand their attitude. For inconvertible printing-press money is a basic requirement of a totalitarian economy. Automatically the opportunity of the individual to earn or preserve his independence is eliminated.

IV

Despite coolness from Treasury and banking interests, several bills have been introduced in Congress to restore the gold standard. My own proposal, H. R. 5031, would provide a return to the free redemption of paper money in gold at an early date. It proposes the minting of gold coins based on the present price for gold, $35 per ounce, and the elimination of restrictions on the private ownership of gold.

Although the task of restoring honest money in America is not easy, it will never be less difficult than now. Gold is still coming into the Treasury in substantial amounts, and the ratio of our gold stocks to money in circulation is higher now than during many years prior to 1933. As after the Civil War, "The way to resume is to resume."

Admittedly, the hurdles created by the fantastic increase of money in circulation, bank deposits, and Government debt cannot be lightly brushed aside. Neither can the ticklish political aspects of this problem be ignored. The end of the present inflationary boom will most surely cause unpleasant economic repercussions. Both major parties are carefully avoiding any action that might enable the opposite party to pin on them the blame for its termination.

But intelligent political understanding and action is imperative. Perhaps the answer is a bipartisan approach. Nowhere in public affairs would it be more reasonable, for all American citizens, excepting only speculators and profiteers, have a common interest in the reestablishment of sound currency, and the problem must be solved in accordance with economic principles having no allegiance to political parties.

The American heritage of an honest money redeemable in gold was not given to this generation to squander. It was entrusted to our hands as custodians. Unless restored, we shall be recorded by history as faithless, both to our ancestors and our posterity, for the blessing of this land of liberty and its unparalleled achievements are intimately connected with the right of the individual freely to obtain gold in exchange for the fruits of his labors.

"The King's 'Orses"

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROY O. WOODRUFF

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following press release issued by Hon. Samuel B. Pettengill on July 29, 1948:

"THE KING'S 'ORSES"

The impending nationalization of horses in Great Britain has provoked the following letter from Mr. Leonard B. Smith to the New York Herald Tribune:

"The editorial in your issue of May 24 entitled 'The King's 'Orses' is good as far as it goes, but it really amounts only to a feeble start on the road to utopian equality, justice, and happiness. Nationalization of all horses is only a first step. An act of Parliament should be passed declaring that all race horses are equal to each other, and also that all truck horses are equal to race horses, and providing severe punishment for any reactionary bourgeois who should at any time dispute either of these two fundamental principles. Then the antitrust laws, the income-tax laws, and the labor laws should all be made applicable to horses.

"Any horse which wins a race by running faster than the other horses should be severely punished and barred from all future races, and the winnings of the race should be taken from him and distributed among the underprivileged horses which did not run as fast as he did. A law should be passed providing that all races shall be dead heats, and that any horse which runs so fast that the other horses cannot keep up with him shall be taken out of the race and immediately gelded so that he shall never be able to procreate any more horses having such antisocial tendencies."

This is something the man in the street can understand. It takes the whole socialist dogma apart.

The rise and fall of horses is one of the stories of socialism. Beginning a hundred years ago, British horses, cattle, and sheep became prize animals. They were sent as breeding stock to America, Canada, Australia, all around the world.

Until a century ago, they had been runts, stunted and dwarfted. Grown oxen were no larger than a good sized calf today. It took a dozen to pull a wooden plow. The fleece of a single sheep often weighed less than 2 ounces.

Because not enough hay was grown, most of the animals were killed at the beginning of winter. The result: not enough manure to keep up the land. Another result: no fresh meat in winter. The only meat was pickled in salt brine. Result: nearly everybody suffered from scurvy.

The animals ran down; men ran down; England stood still for centuries. Nearly every year there was famine in some parts of the country.

Why? Because Britain had a species of socialism. All pasture land was used in common. All kinds of "diseased scurvie cattel" mingled with the sound animals and infected them. There was no incentive to an individual owner to breed up his animals.

But about the time of the American Revolution, individualism in British agriculture began to gain ground. A series of laws, the "Enclosure Acts," were passed, permitting British farmers to fence in their meadows and pasture lands. They then had an incentive to breed up their herds and English horses, cattle, and sheep became prize animals. That was the end of scurvy and starvation.

Now the Socialists are returning to the socialism their sturdy forebears rescued England from. The dog returns to its vomit.

Counting of Electoral Votes

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY CABOT LODGE, JR.

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, August 2 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that three newspaper articles dealing with the subject matter of Senate Joint Resolution 200 be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times of July 19, 1948]

"ELECTORAL SYSTEM MAY HELP BOLTERS—DEPRIVING TRUMAN OF ELECTORS IN SOUTH AND WINNING 150, THEY HOPE FOR A DEADLOCK"

(By Samuel A. Tower)

WASHINGTON, July 18.—The emergence of a rump movement of southern Democrats giving allegiance to States' rights candidates for President and Vice President focused attention today on the electoral system under which a body of electors from the several States, rather than the popular vote, governs the election to these high offices.

The electors chosen by the States, known collectively as the electoral college, are the intermediates for whom the people vote in Presidential elections. After the election, the State electoral colleges assemble and cast their ballots for the Presidency and the Vice Presidency. These ballots are forwarded to officials in Washington and are opened and counted on January 6 in the presence of both Houses of Congress.

If no one candidate for the Presidency has a majority, or in the case of a tie, the decision rests with the House of Representatives, with each State having one vote, regardless of area or population.

No provision has been found in the Constitution covering failure of the House to elect a President. The States just keep on balloting until one is chosen.

Although there has been a tacit understanding, by prevailing custom accompanied by pledges from electors, that the State electoral colleges chosen by the popular majority would cast their ballots for the candidate carrying the State, there is nothing in the Constitution or in any judicial ruling to compel electors to vote for that candidate or to bar them from voting for any individual of their choice.

The southern Democratic bolters, who in convention at Birmingham yesterday nominated Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina, for President and Gov. Fielding L. Wright, of Mississippi, for Vice President as the ticket of "the true minority party" opposing civil-rights action by the Federal Government, made it plain that they were hoping to obtain about 150 electoral votes.

In the sectional strife in the Democratic Party, the southerners have repeatedly warned that a strong plank in the platform on civil rights would touch off a drive in the Southland that would have as its objective not only the prevention of President Truman's reelection but, in the event of anything but a landslide for the Republicans, the necessity of throwing the election into the House where the southern bloc might be able to be the decisive factor.

The southern opponents of President Truman appear at present to be able to count on only the score of electoral votes from Alabama and Mississippi, whose electors already have been instructed to cast their ballots for a candidate other than President Truman.

They were bidding, however, for the votes from Arkansas, Louisiana, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, South Carolina, North Carolina, Texas, and Virginia, and from such fringe areas as Missouri, Kentucky, Delaware, and Oklahoma.

CHANCE OF ELECTORS SWITCHING

While it was yet too early to estimate the extent of the southern revolt, especially with some of the States from the solid South still to pick their electoral slates, from a legalistic point of view there remained the possibility that President Truman could carry some of these States and still be deprived of their electoral votes.

In 1796, in this country's first contested election, three electors who were chosen to vote for Thomas Jefferson voted instead for John Adams. President Adams was elected by an electoral vote of 71 to 68 so that Jefferson, in effect, had the election snatched from him.

In 1824 an elector ignored the popular mandate of his State and as recently as 1912 there occurred in South Dakota a situation bearing some analogy to the present.

The State's delegation to the Republican National Convention walked out before President Taft had been renominated and its electoral selections announced that if chosen they would cast their ballots for Theodore Roosevelt, that year a rump Republican candidate on the Bull Moose ticket. No Roosevelt electoral slate had been designated.

The South Dakota voters, although forewarned, selected the Republican electoral slate over the Democratic and the State's votes were cast for Theodore Roosevelt without any challenge of impropriety.

In many States the names of the national convention nominees do not appear, only the names of the electors. In view of the autonomy of electors under the present system, even if the regular dominant Democratic organizations were to prevail in some Southern States over the independent ticket, the electors could still feel free to cast their ballots for a Presidential choice whom they regarded as a reflection of State and southern interests.

As a result, if the contest outside the South were to prove close, the southerners hope still to be able to block the election of Mr. Truman and by forcing the Presidential election into the House, obtain a veto on the candidates for President.

POPULAR ELECTION PROPOSAL

The possibility of another election being decided in the House again puts the spotlight on a constitutional amendment providing for the direct election by the people of the President and the Vice President.

This amendment, predominantly sponsored by Senator IENRY CABOT LODGE, JR., Republican, of Massachusetts, and approved by the Judiciary Committees of the Senate and House, would provide for popular voting for the Presidency and Vice Presidency and, while retaining the electoral-vote system, would eliminate its unit rule so that the electoral vote would be divided in exact ratio to the popular vote.

The proposed amendment would eliminate not only elections by the House but also all the archaic defects and evils of the present electoral college system, which have been condemned by students of Government as undemocratic, unsound, and unworkable.

Elections decided by the House of Representatives have been surrounded by charges of fraud and political chicanery and have been fraught with the danger of civil strife.

HISTORICAL CHOICES MADE

The first of these and probably the most important from a constitutional point of view was that of 1800, when Thomas Jefferson and Aaron Burr, both from the same party, each received 73 electoral votes. In those days the candidate with the largest number of electoral votes was elected President and the runner-up Vice President. In the balloting by States Jefferson finally got 10, Burr four, and two were not cast.

As a result of this deadlock, the twelfth amendment was added to the Constitution, providing for separate ballots for the President and Vice President.

In 1824 the Democrats split, with the Southerners dividing their support among three candidates: Jackson of Tennessee, Clay of Kentucky, and Crawford of Georgia.

Then the country had the election of its first minority President, when John Quincy Adams was chosen by the House after Jackson, the leading candidate, had failed to get a majority in the electoral college in what was widely regarded as a defiance of the popular will.

The South also played an important role in the disputed Hayes-Tilden election of 1876, when Hayes received 185 electoral votes to Tilden's 184.

With three electoral slates from Florida, Louisiana, and South Carolina, along with Oregon, contested between the Democrats and Republicans and with Congress divided between a Republican Senate and a Democratic House, the decision was left to an extraconstitutional electoral commission which decided that the Republican electors were the ones legally chosen.

DEFECTS OF SYSTEM IN PRACTICE

The framers of the Constitution rejected the concept of popular election of the Executive through fear of an uniformed electorate and adopted the electoral college as a council of the ablest men of the country, exercising independent judgment.

Contrary to their expectations, political parties developed so that the concept was never an actuality. By the third election, in 1796, electoral votes were scattered among 13 candidates and the original theory was no longer even a pretense.

Under the Constitution State legislatures were permitted to determine the method of choosing electors and started to select them directly until the late 1820's when the people gained popular choice of electors.

Among the other criticism of the electoral system are the disenfranchisement of the minority voters of a State and the distortions between the electoral and the popular vote, which in some cases have resulted in election of candidates who lacked a popular majority.

Further it is contended that the system restricts the field of potential Presidential candidates to residents of States with large electoral blocs.

It is also maintained, that the system invites and encourages building up small, organized minority groups in pivotal States. In 1884, for example, Cleveland got 1,000 more than Blaine in the State of New York and a change of 600 votes in the State would have elected Blaine President.

EFFECT OF UNIT RULE IN SOUTH

It has sometimes been contended that under the unit system of casting electoral votes the South carries more weight than it should and that a substantial number of Republican votes are wasted there.

In the electoral college the 10 States of the Solid South have 115 votes out of a total of 531, broken down as follows: Alabama, 11; Arkansas, 9; Florida, 8; Georgia, 12, Louisiana, 10; Mississippi, 9; North Carolina, 14; South Carolina, 8; Texas, 23; and Virginia, 11. The border States, often allied with the South, have 64.

[From the Hartford (Conn.) Courant of June 30, 1948]

"THE LODGE PLAN"

It could be that the 1948 Presidential election may be the last in which the electoral college will function as it has since the adoption of the twelfth amendment to the Constitution. For, if the Republicans win in November, they will probably start the machinery for an amendment to give effect to this plank in the platform they adopted last Wednesday: "We favor a revision of the procedure for the election of President and Vice President which will more exactly reflect the popular vote."

When Senator HENRY CABOT LODGE, JR., chairman of the committee on resolutions, read that plank to the convention he knew what procedure he favors. For the Senate had before it when it adjourned Mr. LODGE's plan to have the electoral college reflect the popular vote. It would divide the electoral votes of each State proportionately among the Presidential candidates according to the popular vote each candidate received. Take a hypothetical case: A State has 10 electoral votes. In the election candidate A gets 100,000 votes; candidate B 50,000; and candidate C 50,000. Of that State's electoral vote candidate A would get one-half, or 5 votes. Candidates B and C would divide equally the other 5 electoral votes. Thus, in the election of a President those persons who had voted for B or C would not be disfranchised in the electoral college as now. Their minority proportion would be added to the electoral votes for their candidates in other States where they might be in the majority. Actually, in a two-candidate race for the Presidency, it would be impossible for the candidate with a minority of the popular vote to have a majority of the electoral college vote. That has happened on two occasions since the Civil War.

The Lodge plan is an admirable compromise between the prevailing procedure and an out-and-out popular vote taken Nationwide, as some persons advocate. It preserves the identity of the States without doing violence to the popular will. It may seem a bit cumbersome at first glance. And unquestionably the law will have to make allowance for fractional parts of votes or a State could lose one vote in the electoral college.

About the only difficulty it will cause will be to the political dopesters. They will not only have to guess which candidate will carry a State, but by how much, and what the total vote may be. That, however, will only add to the merriment. Guessing election results is their dish, and how they enjoy it. The more complicated the process, the better they will like it.

[From the Washington Daily News of June 29, 1948]

"NATIONAL AFFAIRS"

(By Thomas L. Stokes)

WASHINGTON, June 29.—The Republican convention in Philadelphia opened up the question of a long-overdue reform by one sentence in its platform:

"We favor a revision of the procedure for the election of the President and Vice President which will more exactly reflect the popular vote."

This was timely and appropriate for, during the last Congress, such a proposed reform by constitutional amendment was approved by the Judiciary Committees of both House and Senate and reached the calendar, though failing of final action. It was sponsored jointly by a Republican and a Democrat—in the Senate by Senator HENRY CABOT LODGE (Republican, Massachusetts) and in the House by Representative ED GOSSETT (Democrat, Texas). Consequently endorsement of such a reform in principle in the Republican platform might very properly be followed by endorsement in the Democratic platform at the forthcoming Philadelphia convention. That would put it in a favorable legislative spot in Congress.

Senator LODGE's influence was seen in approval of the reform by the Republicans. He was chairman of the resolutions committee that drafted the platform.

The Lodge-Gossett proposal calls for abolition of the electoral college as such, though retaining the electoral vote, and for substitution of what would amount to popular election of President and Vice President. This would be done by giving to each candidate in each State the proportion of the State's electoral vote represented by his percentage of the vote in the State. For a simple example, if the vote of Ohio were divided 60–40 between the two major parties, then the candidates, of one party would receive 15 electoral votes, the other, 10 electoral votes. As it is now the candidate who gets the majority of votes gets the whole electoral vote of a State—in Ohio, for instance, all of the 25 electoral votes.

While the need for such a reform long has been recognized to avoid what already has happened three times in our history, that is, that the candidate with the smaller popular vote has become President through the existing electoral system, there are other persuasive reasons which are dramatized at this very time.

One is the situation in the South growing out of resentment over President Truman's civil-rights program. That has provoked proposals that a State committee be given authority to order the whole electoral vote of a State cast against the President, no matter what his popular vote may be. That would be impossible under the Lodge-Gossett reform.

Another healthy effect envisaged in the South would be encouragement of a real two-party system in that section. By making it possible for Republicans to get credit in electoral votes for the minority of votes they always poll in the South it would be worth while to vote the Republican ticket there, for Republican votes would count. Senator LODGE says this would probably induce Republican candidates to campaign in the South.

A characteristic generally of our politics this year is tension over issues. This very likely will produce an intense and exaggerated appeal to minority groups, particularly in the large States where they are centered. The campaign will tend to be concentrated in such States. This invites not only arousing of prejudice, but also actual corruption, as has been demonstrated in the past. The change in the electoral system would minimize the importance of the large States in elections.

Also, the proposed reform would give electoral representation to independent and third parties if they are sufficiently strong in certain areas. In 1924, for example, the late Senator Robert M. La Follette, of Wisconsin, who polled just under 5,000,000 votes, would have been credited with far more than the 13 electoral votes which he got for carrying his own State. He ran second to President Coolidge and ahead of the Democratic candidate, John W. Davis, in 10 other States west of the Mississippi. A showing of that strength in electoral votes widely scattered over the West reflecting the discontent in that area, might of itself have had a moderating influence on Republican Party policy thereafter. As it was the GOP old guard capitalized the so-called Coolidge landslide in a course that ended inevitably in economic collapse that had its origin in distress in the farm areas.

Similarly, a real electoral count on the basis of popular votes for the Wallace third party ticket this year might have its effect.

It is at least helpful that the change to a popular-vote system has been projected for thinking and discussion.

It's '76 in Israel

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HELEN GAHAGAN DOUGLAS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, under permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I wish to include an article by Quentin Reynolds entitled "It's '76 in Israel," which appears in the August 1948 issue of the Woman's Home Companion.

This article gives the American reader one of the most significant pictures of day-to-day family life in Israel and is an excellent portrayal of the birth of the newest democracy—Israel:

TEL AVIV, ISRAEL.—Leah had brought an armful of flowers in with her and when she put them in vases the vivid red of the hibiscus and the deep blue of the cornflowers brightened the room and gave it a festive air. Leah Unna had been working in the fields since 6 that morning. Now she had changed into a neat blue dress with white trimming and had tied a blue ribbon around her tumbling dark hair. Her husband Zeev Unna came in and her eyes lit up for a moment; then she took the gun from him and placed it on top of a tall wardrobe.

Zeev laughed and said earnestly, "She is always afraid the children will get hold of the gun. But I always take the bullets out before I come home."

Zeev Unna ordinarily works in the fields here at the agricultural settlement known as Givat Brenner (Brenner Hill), but times are difficult and he is now one of those picked to guard the community. Palestine is now the nation Israel, and it has a formal army and police force of its own. But things are not tranquil as yet, so Zeev has to spend 2 days as guard. He farms the rest of the week.

Today was a special occasion. His 7-year-old daughter Tamar was to come out of the hospital and that was why Leah had brought the flowers in from the fields. "Tamar only had a cold," Leah explained in precise English, "but they kept her there 4 days and we couldn't see her. We might have caught it and passed it on to Gad."

There was a squealing outside and then the room was full of Tamar and Gad and they were hurling themselves at their mother and dark-eyed Tamar was telling of the chocolate they'd given her in the hospital and Gad, like any 4-year-old boy the world over, was climbing all over his father. The Unna family was at home and reunited. They would stay reunited until it was time for Tamar and Gad to go to the children's dormitory where they sleep each night.

Life in an agricultural settlement in Israel seems hard to an outsider but Leah and Zeev only look puzzled when you mention it. To them life is full and exciting and the work in the fields is work they have chosen for themselves because both have a great love for the land. Leah came from Germany as a child. Zeev left his native Hamburg when he was 16 to find his destiny in Palestine. And he found it here at Givat Brenner, which is only 30 miles from Tel Aviv.

Leah sent the children out to play and we sat down over coffee to talk of life as lived by a typical farming family. Givat Brenner is the largest communal settlement in Israel. It is a community of a thousand people and all but the children work, either on the land or in the factory which cans the tomatoes and the fruit which is grown by the settlement. In every sense the settlement is communal—but it is not at all communistic.

"But we are not much interested in politics," Zees Unna laughed. "We have our work and our children and sometimes we go on a holiday. These are our main interests."

The day begins early for the Unna family, as it does for everyone in the settlement. They are up at 5:30 and after breakfast in the huge community-operated dining hall they go to the fields. Once these hundreds of acres were desert, but the land wasn't dead; it was merely asleep. It needed only irrigation and fertilization and when these were supplied the land became fertile. Today there are trees heavy with oranges and lemons and endless rows of tomato plants, carrots, beans, and acres of wheat. Zeev and Leah have grown up with this land and have watched it change and their pride in it is intense.

At 11:30 each morning, work stops for an hour. Lunch is brought to those who are working in the more distant fields and the others again meet in the dining hall. All morning Tamar and Gad are at school. Gad is still in kindergarten. Tamar, with the older children, is learning reading, writing, and arithmetic and also English, which is taught in all the schools of Israel. When a child is 13 he starts to learn a trade. At Givat Brenner he usually learns farming, but some children are taught blacksmithing and others are taught to be mechanics. Nearly all remain to work at Givat Brenner, although some occasionally leave to find industrial work in Tel Aviv or Haifa.

"But we are farmers at heart," Zeev said earnestly. "We never could have survived and made Israel a nation had it not been for the land. Leah and I hope that our two children will stay here and work on the land as we are doing. We feel we are contributing something to the country when we look at our crop each season."

It is only when the day's work is done that Zeev and Leah see their children. Children of the settlement all sleep and have their meals in a separate house. But this separation seems to increase rather than diminish the affection between children and parents. And there is always Saturday to look forward to. On Saturday Zeev and Leah have the two children to themselves. Sometimes they pack a picnic lunch and take them to the orange groves for the day. And occasionally Zeev takes his family to the beach in Tel Aviv for an outing.

"We have everything anyone could ask for," Leah said earnestly. "We even have a radio."

"Yes," Zeev said with a laugh, "during the war I joined the British Army. For the first time in many years I had money in my pocket. So after I was demobilized I bought a radio. However, I was glad to come back here where I belong."

The people of the community-run settlements do not draw wages. Each year Zeev and Leah are allowed 2 weeks' vacation and they are given $64. Usually they take the children to the seashore. They always stop at the homes of friends so the $64 is ample to cover their expenses. During the rest of the year they have no need for money.

"What would we do with money?" Zeev asked. "If Leah or I need new clothes, we go to our group-owned store and get them. If we want some chocolate for the children, we have only to ask for it. All of our food is given to us. No, we don't work for money."

At Givat Brenner and at the other group settlements the output of fruit and vegetables is higher than it is on the farms owned by individuals. Every economic report has shown that to be a fact. People like Zeev and Leah have an intense love for their country and a fervent sense of gratitude to it. Had it not been Palestine, it would undoubtedly have been the gas chamber or the crematorium. When they work 9 hours a day 6 days a week, they feel that in a small measure they are paying a debt to the country which gave them asylum.

"I have an uncle in America," Zeev said, smiling. "He writes me quite often. He told me he had read in an American paper that our settlements were communistic. This is really foolish. Here we have complete political freedom. We think as we wish and talk as we wish. Each year our settlement makes a profit. We elect a director and a council each year and they decide what to do with the money we have earned. Last year we built a moving-picture theater, and we have pictures every week. Each year we improve our hospital and our children's house, and build additional barracks for those who come from abroad."

"There is another thing." Leah brushed the dark hair back from her forehead. "We can leave whenever we wish. If we wanted, Zeev and I could move to Tel Aviv and get work in factories or offices. We have complete freedom to do as we wish. But this is the life we have chosen, and we are content."

The two children tumbled into the room again, each carrying a piece of chocolate. Could they have it now or would they have to wait until after supper? Leah tried for a moment to be stern but she ended by laughing and saying, "You may have it now." And when 4-year-old Gad gravely asked his father to share his piece of candy you knew by the smile on Zeev's face that he was indeed very very content.

Zeev and Leah are typical citizens of the community-operated settlements. There are 150 such settlements and about 25,000 men, women, and children living and working in them. I have been to a dozen settlements and every family seemed activated by the spirit shown by Zeev and Leah. They have dedicated their lives to the land and their compensation is complete happiness and an inner satisfaction in knowing that they are helping to build a nation. Patriotism is not an idle word in Israel; it is a living force in the hearts of the people. The citizens of the world's newest nation have shown that they are willing to die for their country; they are also willing to work for their country and to prepare it for the tens of thousands of immigrants who are expected within the next year.

The family of a typical white-collar worker in Tel Aviv or Haifa or Jerusalem lives an entirely different life from that of Zeev and Leah Unna. The one thing the city dweller has in common with the farmer is his love for his new country and his desire to see thousands and thousands of others come to enjoy its benefits.

Come along and meet such a family in Tel Aviv, which is a white gleaming city on the sea. For the last several months Tel Aviv has been in a sense a beleaguered city. Hundreds of its citizens have been killed by Arab snipers shooting from mosques and other vantage points in adjacent Jaffa. From the day Israel became a nation Egyptian dive bombers began periodic visits but the citizens of Tel Aviv, much like the citizens of London in 1940, refused to allow war to disturb either their calm serenity or the routine of their daily lives.

Dr. and Mrs. Wolf Cegla and their 13-year-old son, Michael, are a typical Tel Aviv family. Wolf Cegla came from Germany in 1936. He was a lawyer in Berlin, but there were plenty of lawyers in Tel Aviv, so he went to work for an importing firm. Like most businessmen in Tel Aviv, Wolf Cegla and his family speak English. I first met him at the regular luncheon of the Tel Aviv Rotary Club.

The conversation after luncheon was about what you would hear at a Rotary Club luncheon in Glens Falls, N. Y., or Sioux City, Iowa. There was one slight difference. Attorney Saul B. Sasoon, president, expressed his regrets that the Arab members of the club were unable to attend. At the moment the Haganah was attacking Jaffa and most Arabs had fled the city. Sasoon was not being ironic in his expression of regret; a quarter of the Tel Aviv Rotary Club members are Arab businessmen and on excellent terms with their Jewish colleagues. Incidentally, next year's president will be an Arab textile merchant, Assad Effendi.

Wolf Cegla chatted about finance to Herman Ellern, president of the bank; listened to Solomon Tolkowsky of the city's control board discuss the export of oranges; laughed at the quips of Ralph Kaplan, school principal and secretary of the club. Jacob Ben Sira, city engineer, talked of plans for enlarging the port and Alex Rygens talked wittily and intelligently of the problems of a businessman in a city under fire. Brilliant Issac Chizik, government expert on Arab affairs, discussed the difference between the Arab of Palestine and the Arab of Iraq or Transjordan. It was good conversation among the substantial citizens of a healthy thriving community.

I met Wolf Cegla a few days later entirely by chance. Cegla is a big smiling man who looks older than his 39 years, but some of them have been hard years. His apartment is on Hayarkon Street, which overlooks the Mediterranean. Cegla was on his way home for lunch when I met him and he asked me to join him. I did so and became acquainted with the Cegla family.

His blond wife, Elsa, blinked a bit when she saw that her husband had an unexpected luncheon guest with him, but beyond that she displayed neither dismay nor reproach. "It will take me only a minute to put an extra plate on the table," she said, smiling.

Young Michael, blond like his mother, bounced in to throw his arms around his father. I was introduced and Michael said gravely, "I am very pleased to meet you," and then looked at his father questioningly.

"That's right," his father said approvingly. "They're teaching you excellent English at school."

The Cegla family lives in a four-room apartment and each room has a balcony. It is a sun-drenched cheerful apartment and Cegla is proud of two paintings on the wall of his living room. They were done by Kahn and Reisser, two well-known Palestinian artists.

In Tel Aviv, the main meal is usually at noon. We had noodle soup with bits of chicken floating in it; broiled chicken with potatoes and peas and a dessert of applesauce embellished with cut-up bananas. During lunch we discussed the differences in the way the Cegla family lives and the way the Jones family in America lives. The similarities were more striking than the differences.

Wolf Cegla, for example, makes $7,000 a year. His rent is $66 a month and his electric light bill about $20 a month. In the kitchen a gleaming electric refrigerator and an electric stove for cooking explained the relatively high electric bill. Like most American families of his income bracket, Wolf Cegla owns a car. His is an American car and he is very proud of it.

"The British did their best to make us buy British cars," he explained, "but the British cars weren't powerful enough to use on the steep hills around Jerusalem. I was lucky enough to get an American car. It cost $2,400 but it was worth it. I don't use it much now because gasoline is so expensive. We pay 75 cents a gallon. I have never been able to understand why gasoline is so much higher here than in the United States. It comes from the refineries at Haifa, only a few miles from here. But that is one of those mysteries of taxation an ordinary businessman cannot understand."

Elsa Cegla has no servants but twice a week she has a woman who come in for 3 hours to clean house. And every morning, like Mrs. Jones of America, Elsa Cegla shops.

"I've been going to shop around on Ben Yehuda Street," she said. "Prices are rather high. Fish, even though it comes right out of the Mediterranean, is a dollar a pound. Like any housewife, I make a budget. I allow myself $48 a week for food. That is high, but my husband and Michael have all their meals at home and they are two healthy hungry men, both of them."

Michael laughed with pride at being bracketed with his father as a man. Michael attends a private high school called the Shalva Gymnasium. He is studying algebra and elementary geography, which he likes, and Hebrew and English, which he finds more difficult.

"We parents aren't much good helping our children with home work," Wolf Cegla said ruefully. "Neither my wife nor I know Hebrew. When the children want to have secrets from their parents they talk Hebrew among themselves. Few of us who came from Germany knew the language well."

"I'm a Sea Scout," Michael interrupted shyly.

He explained that a Sea Scout was really a branch of the Boy Scouts, except that instead of going on hikes the Sea Scouts went on boat rides. They learn how to handle rowboats on the Yarkon River and sail boats out in the Mediterranean and they learn to swim.

Michael was also on his class soccer football team, he said gravely.

"We don't know what Michael will be when he grows up," his father remarked, grinning. "Last month he had decided to be a children's doctor. The month before that he wanted to be a dog doctor. Now he wants to be a soldier."

At this point our conversation was stopped by the rat-tat-tat of antiaircraft fire, followed a moment later by the dull sound of bombs exploding. This was the third time during the day that Egyptian Spitfires fitted with bombs had come over. Their objective was only about half a mile from the Cegla apartment. Michael rushed to the balcony.

"They are coming again," he cried excitedly, pointing above. The Spitfires high above wheeled almost lazily and then dived. There was very little effective defense in Tel Aviv against enemy aircraft.

They dived, and the roar of their motors hurt your ears, and puffs of white from the exploding antiaircraft shells blossomed around them, but at 400 feet they released their bombs. Neither Wolf nor Elsa nor I liked it. We knew that those bombs were killing men only a quarter of a mile away. Michael rushed out to join his pals who had, he said, found a fine place to watch the bombing.

"Kids have no sense of fear," Wolf Cegla said gravely. "Perhaps it's just as well."

"I think all of us in Tel Aviv are proud of the fact that not one Jew tried to leave the city. We have been driven out of many countries, we Jews. This is our last stand and perhaps that is why our boys fight so well. There is no place else for us to go from here except the sea."

The four planes, having discharged their obscene duty, turned south, and we came in from the balcony and tried to make believe that it had never happened and that it would not happen again in a few hours. We talked of things that Mrs. Jones might talk of to a visiting Palestinian correspondent.

"I suppose by American standards we lead a very quiet life," Wolf Cegla said smiling. "I work pretty hard. We begin at the office at 8, and I seldom get home until 7. Except on Friday, when we quit before sundown."

"And then you bring me flowers," Elsa said softly.

Wolf looked embarrassed. "It's a sort of custom to bring flowers home on Friday."

"We go out sometimes," Elsa said. "About once in 2 weeks we go out to dinner at the Park Hotel, and usually I manage to persuade him to take me to the Kaete Dan for tea on Saturday afternoon."

The Kaete Dan Hotel has a terrace overlooking the Mediterranean and it is always crowded on Saturday afternoons. People come to have tea or coffee and to watch one of nature's best performances: sunset over the Mediterranean.

"And we do go to the movies," Elsa said. "Especially when there is an Ingrid Bergman picture in town. My husband is in love with Ingrid Bergman."

They smiled with easy companionship and with the understanding that comes with a happy marriage. So Mr. and Mrs. Jones of America might have smiled. And Elsa talked of the hairdresser on Allenby Road she went to every other week and how it cost her $3 for a hairdo and a manicure.

She told of a new dressmaker she had found. She had just had a lovely linen dress made. Expensive? Of course, she laughed. The dress cost $60 but it was worth it. She looked at her husband.

"Yes, my dear," he said gravely. "It was well worth it."

It was time now for the 2 o'clock news, so Wolf turned on the radio. It was a radio made in Holland and it cost $120. None of the news was good so Wolf turned the radio off.

"Things are going to be difficult for a long time," he said. "But we will survive. We seem to have some pretty level-headed men in our government."

"What party do you belong to?" I asked.

"No party at all," he answered. "I suppose I am what you in America would call a middle-of-the-roader. In fact, I am a little to the right of the middle. But I am not interested in politics."

"Nor am I," said Elsa firmly. "And there's a concert of the Philharmonic next Wednesday. Dont' forget we have tickets."

"I won't," Wolf said, "and now it is time I got back to the office."

Thus Mr. and Mrs. Wolf Cegla of Tel Aviv. I thought you might like to meet them.

President Truman's Anti-Inflation Program Was Groggy and on the Ropes

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HUBERT S. ELLIS
OF WEST VIRGINIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, today I direct your attention to a statement in the Washington News by Peter Edson. Mr. Edson in no sense can be classified as a New Deal critic which adds weight to his comment on the President's program.

The statement follows:

President Truman's anti-inflation program was groggy and on the ropes after a first-round encounter with Representative JESSE WOLCOTT, of Michigan, House Banking and Currency Committee chairman. Ex-OPA Administrator Paul Porter presented the case for the President's proposed new Anti-Inflation Act, and took a terrible beating.

WOLCOTT subjected Porter to a merciless cross examination. Without raising his voice, WOLCOTT took up Porter's statement and the President's bill and ripped into them, point by point. Porter frankly wasn't prepared to give the answer to many of WOLCOTT's questions, and it will take a tremendous amount of skillful presentation by later witnesses to undo initial damage.

One of the key points in the President's program is new authority to control consumer credit—meaning installment buying and charge accounts. During the war the Federal Reserve Board had this power under regulation W. Congress rescinded it last year. The President now wants it reinstated.

WOLCOTT asked Porter if he thought the present inflationary situation constituted a national emergency. Porter said it did—and thereby fell into a trap. WOLCOTT read from the rescinding law. It specified that the President might reinstate regulation W if he declared that a national emergency existed.

Porter apparently didn't know this power was already in the law. Five hours later, at his press conference, President Truman revealed he didn't know this power was in the law, either.

The President alibied by saying that maybe Representative WOLCOTT and the Attorney General didn't interpret the law the same way. The President said he had to abide by the Attorney General's opinions, but that if it were now found that he had the power to reinstate credit controls, he would use it.

It cannot be expected that the President know and remember every provision of every law. But it is his staff's business to know and to advise him on the use of such powers as he has. This bad preparation of the President's case against inflation weakens it terribly.

In questioning Porter, who is supposed to be coordinating the anti-inflation program, Representative WOLCOTT said he was trying to find out why the President had called Congress back. "Would you freeze all prices where they are now? What are you going to do?"

Porter tried to explain that only temporary price regulations might be issued at first, subject to 30-day protest from the industries concerned, before being put into effect. Under WOLCOTT's probing, though, he admitted the power to fix all prices would be there.

WOLCOTT demanded to know just what would be controlled. Porter tried to put this off on later witnesses—Agriculture Secretary Brannan, Commerce Secretary Sawyer. He finally said control of meats, dairy products, clothing, building materials, steel, and nonferrous metals needed study. Allocations on meat and steel might be necessary, he said.

"You've had since last November to work out the details," said WOLCOTT coldly, and added, "Do you think the Congress is going to give the President carte blanche?"

Platform for Americans

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROY O. WOODRUFF
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following press release by Hon. Samuel B. Pettengill, former Representative from Indiana:

PLATFORM FOR AMERICANS

In all parts of the world, today, socialism is driving forward. It has engulfed nearly all of Europe. It is sweeping ahead in Asia. In its most tyrannical form, the Russian socialism, known as communism, has crushed out freedom in nation after nation.

It is not the economic strength of socialism that is responsible. Nor is it the weakness of freedom. Time has proved that "only the free can be strong." It is the will to defend freedom that is weak.

The battle is being lost not by conquest but by default—by the failure of freedom's friends to defend it, to make its virtues known to the last citizen.

Such is the great issue of our time.

If courageous men and women, regardless of party, will now uphold private enterprise against collectivism in Federal, State, and local governments, their influence will turn up the flickering lights of liberty all around the world.

Let them adopt a platform for Americans, something like the following:

Restore the American incentives to work, to have and to hold—the old rewards for producing more and better goods.

Stop confiscating the property or income of any class.

Deport aliens having un-American ideals. Keep out undesirable immigration. Raise the standards for naturalized citizenship.

Stop the Government's use of the money of taxpayers to compete against them.

Stop politicians buying votes with Federal aid (resulting eventually in Federal control) for education, socialized medicine, and public housing.

Apply antitrust laws fearlessly and equally to all monopolies, whether in business or labor.

Abolish the assumed "right" of mass rioting, terrorism, and the false sanctity attached to the picket line.

Protect every man's right to work where he will; his right to bargain as he wishes; his right to quit when he will if not under contract; and his right to go to and from his home and place of business or employment without interference by anybody.

Limit by constitutional amendment the peacetime taxing power of the Federal Government. Abolish or reduce immediately taxes which especially hinder saving and capital investment essential to promoting new inventions, providing new and better tools, creating job-making enterprises, and thus increasing production and higher income for wage workers and all others.

Stop the waste of public funds. Reduce the Federal pay roll by 1,000,000 needless pay rollers. Balance the budget. Stop inflation, the process by which Government cheapens our dollars and so defrauds every thrifty American who has an insurance policy, social-security card, bank deposit, or investment.

Keep America solvent, honest, and free.

SAMUEL B. PETTENGILL.

Farcical Touch to the Special Session

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HUBERT S. ELLIS
OF WEST VIRGINIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully direct the attention of the House to an editorial in the Evening Star of Thursday, July 29.

The Star is generally very considerate of the administration viewpoint which lends added interest to its discussion of the special session.

The editorial follows:

A PREMATURE CALL

In view of all the tub-thumping which has accompanied the President's call for a special session of Congress to deal with high prices, one would think that, at the least, same member of his administration other than Paul Porter, whose real job is that of private lawyer, would have been ready to lay specific proposals before the legislators. But the administration is far from ready.

When Mr. Truman announced the special session call in his political speech to the Democratic convention he said there was no reason why Congress could not act on his recommendations in 2 weeks. It appears now, however, that at least a week must pass before any administation spokesman will be ready to testify on such important matters as the President's request for restoration of the excess-profits tax and consumer credit control, regulation of inflationary bank credit, and controls of speculation on the commodity exchanges.

This state of affairs came to light yesterday when Chairman TOBEY, of the Senate Banking Committee. who is far more in sympathy with the President's requests than are most Republicans, tried to line some witnesses to appear before his committee.

A call to Thomas B. McCabe, Chairman of the Federal Reserve System's Board of Governors, is said to have elicited the response that he "couldn't possibly" testify before next week. And Secretary of the Treasury Snyder, who might be expected to lead the procession of administration witnesses on the tax and credit aspects of the President's program, is reported to have said that he would not be prepared to testify until after Mr. McCabe makes his appearance.

The affect of all this is to lend a somewhat farcical touch to the special session call and to discredit the note of urgency which Mr. Truman has sought to inject into his demand for immediate action by the Congress. The President may be sure that the Republicans who are looking for any opportunity to turn the tables on him, will make the most of this procrastination on the part of his aides.

An American Labor Union

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROY O. WOODRUFF
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following press release by Hon. Samuel B. Pettengill, former Representative from Indiana:

AN AMERICAN LABOR UNION

While patriotic Americans are being kicked out of Communist-dominated unions there is one big union that has refused membership to Kremlinites, and has done so for years.

I refer to the carpenters—the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America—headed by "Big Bill" Hutcheson. Long before the politicians in Washington saw their mistake in cuddling up to the Reds and pinks, the carpenters took steps to keep these gentry out of their union.

As a part of their ritual the candidate for membership is required to declare that "he is not now, and never will become, a member of any revolutionary organization, or give aid, comfort, or support to any such organization." If he does, he forfeits his membership.

This is no sudden conversion to the American faith. Twenty years ago they revoked the charter of one of their locals in New York City because it had fallen under Communist control.

When the carpenters advocate Americanism they command respect. For theirs is the fourth largest union in the United States with 737,000 members in 2,700 locals.

At a time when the public is sore at labor stoppages, violence, and Communist saboteurs in union ranks, don't forget the carpenters. There is a lot of be said in their favor.

As recently advised from their Indianapolis headquarters, there was not a single carpenter on strike between the two oceans. They were hitting the nail on the head—building homes, putting up factories, apartment houses, stores, hotels, and places in which to live and work. Long before Governor Stassen, in Minnesota, or any other politician anywhere, had come out for a "cooling off" period in industrial disputes, this had been standard practice in this union for 40 years.

Nor can a handful of officers or members proclaim a strike. The union's bylaws require the following procedure: If any demand is contemplated as to wages, hours, etc., each member of the local is notified by mail of a special meeting and the purpose of the meeting is stated. All members must attend the meeting. Members who do not attend are fined unless illness or some other valid reason is given. Except for the fine for nonattendance, this is like the New England town meeting which we have always thought of as democracy at its best—government at the grass roots.

On any question which may result in a strike the vote is by secret ballot and 55 percent must vote "yes." Then conferences between the local and the employer take place. If these do not result in an agreement, a representative from general headquarters is called in. If the parties still fail to agree, no strike can be called for 60 days, and then only if it is authorized by national headquarters.

As far back as 1916 the national headquarters suspended 61 locals in New York City, with 17,000 members, for going out on an unauthorized strike.

The carpenters raised no hue and cry against the Mundt-Nixon bill that was designed to bring the followers of the "Communist line" into the open.

They would never raise any objection to a committee of Congress asking one of their members if he is a Communist. If he is, and has been lying about it, the carpenters are as anxious as any Congressman to find out, and fire him from the union.

The American flag is always on display in their meetings. No other flag is seen there.

Enormous Wheat Yields in France

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. KARL STEFAN
OF NEBRASKA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, when I stated a few days ago on the floor of the House and elsewhere that during my trip to Europe recently, I saw fields of wheat which would yield 90 bushels or 100 bushels per acre, my statement was questioned in various places, and in order to give some official credence to my statement, I include herewith a letter signed by Mr. Ben H. Thibodeaux, chief of the Food and Agriculture Branch of the Economic Cooperation Administration, with headquarters in Paris, France.

With Mr. Thibodeaux, Ambassador Harriman, Mr. Paul Hoffman, Administrator of ECA, and others, I visited numerous grain fields in France where heavy yields were expected. In most of the countries visited, prospects for heavy farm crop yields are excellent. Potatoes and grain are being harvested and show unusually heavy yields.

The text of the letter follows:

ECONOMIC COOPERATION ADMINISTRATION,
Paris, July 26, 1948.

The Honorable KARL STEFAN,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. STEFAN: In supplementation of our conversation, the average yield of wheat in France during the 10-year period 1930–39 amounted to 23 bushels per acre, with a range from 17 bushels in 1930 to 29 bushels per acre in 1938.

There is tremendous variation, however, in the average yields per acre in the various regions in which wheat is produced in France. In general, the highest wheat yields are obtained in the vast region extending from the Loire River in the south to the Belgian border on the north, and from the Champagne region on the east to Normandy-Brittany on the west. In the better farming areas within these boundaries, such as the Beauce, the Brie, the Soissonnais, the Bethune area, and others, it is not uncommon in favorable years for the average yields of wheat on individual farms to reach 60 bushels per acre and, on selected fields, 90 bushels or even more per acre. These high yields in selected areas are pulled down to the smaller national average, of course, by the much lower yields obtained in other parts of France.

Sincerely yours,

BEN H. THIBODEAUX,
Chief, Food and Agriculture Branch,
Office of the United States Special Representative in Europe.

Mr. Speaker, I also include with my remarks on French farming a table on farm distribution and types of farms:

[1] Is believed to be approximately the same as in 1947.

[2] Is believed to be slightly less than in 1947 by reason of the smaller number of garden plots cultivated by nonfarmers.

[3] The upward trend noted in recent years continues, but no figures are available as yet regarding total area.

[4] Total area estimated as being the same as in 1947, but with a slight increase of new plantations.

Address by H. Graham Morrison to the Bar Association of Tennessee

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. WILLIAM LANGER

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, August 2 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, all of us are interested in the matter of labor-management. In connection with that, I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in the Northwest we are paying more for farm help than ever before in the history of the country. In reference to the question of farm labor-management, the United Mine Workers, the AFL, and the CIO, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an address delivered by Hon. H. Graham Morrison, Assistant Attorney General of the United States, to the sixty-seventh annual session of the Bar Association of Tennessee, on Thursday evening, June 17, 1948.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I claim that I am a man who is badly in need of a vacation.

I claim that I have been laboring and managing long and hard.

Consequently, I can think of nothing more pleasant than the opportunity to come back to my native State to visit with fellow Tennesseans and brother lawyers.

As you may be aware, I have been engaged within the last several months, and anticipate I will be engaged for some time to come, in labor-management problems which give rise to national emergencies.

These problems come to the Department of Justice by reason of the national emergency provisions of the Labor-Management Act, 1947, sections 206 to 210, commonly called the Taft-Hartley Act.

I think it is particularly fitting that I discuss with you these problems in Tennessee and in east Tennessee—which, as all Tennessee mountaineers know, is the gem in the jewel of the State of Tennessee—because the first action taken by the Government under the national emergency provisions of the Taft-Hartley law was taken in the eastern district of Tennessee at Knoxville, before Judge George W. Taylor, United States district judge, in the injunction sought and obtained by the Government in connection with the threatened work stoppage at the Oak Ridge plant of the Atomic Energy Commission in March of this year.

You may recall that in that case the Government made parties defendant both the group of 16 unions of the AFL representing the disputing employees at this facility of the Atomic Energy Commission, and also the employer, Carbide & Chemical Corp.

At the time this national emergency hit my desk, we had before us a duty and responsibility, by direction of the President, to proceed to enjoin for a period of 80 days any strike or lock-out as a result of that labor dispute.

We carefully examined the national emergency provisions of the Taft-Hartley law and the legislative history of the act first to see what it directed us to do and then to see what we might do within the general framework of that act to accomplish the intention of Congress to first suspend and then to ameliorate by assisting the parties to find a basis for agreement.

In constructing our legal approach to this new problem, we drew upon those great resources available to all lawyers found in the historic principles of common law and equity jurisprudence which, in the decision of our courts from the earliest days to the present, have contributed so much to the economic and social development of our Nation.

No specifications were found in the provisions of the national emergencies section of the act as to how we, as lawyers, might best invoke the aid of the court to create the type of atmosphere in this situation which would make possible a solution of the dispute in the public interest. Remembering, however, the broad powers of the chancellor in equity to effect the fullest supervision over disputants and finding in the phrase in section 208 (a) (ii), that the court was authorized to "enjoin any such strike or lock-out, or the continuing thereof, and to make such other orders as may be appropriate," we framed our petition to make parties defendant both the employer and the employee, and by the order of the court both were required to bargain in good faith during the 80-day injunction period under the watchful eye of the court and subject to the court's further orders.

It is regrettable that the parties to that labor dispute were unable to find a basis for agreement in the public interest before it became necessary for the Government to intervene, but certainly it can be said that the machinery provided by the Court during the period of that injunction afforded the parties the most satisfactory atmosphere possible for an equitable and fair solution of their dispute. It afforded them the opportunity, in the light of the great public responsibility imposed upon them, of bargaining in good faith and arriving at a solution in an atmosphere free of the tension of last-ditch contentions which characterize the beginnings of such labor-management differences. The final settlement, as you know, came the days after the end of the 80-day injunction.

Of course, in a democracy which jealously guards the freedom of the individual, we as lawyers must recognize that the devices of law which construct and make available for the settlements of disputes of all kinds do not, in all cases succeed.

In the labor-management field, arbitration and conciliation often fail and it is important to remember that the law does not now, never has and never will guarantee a final solution in this field. The eventual solution of human differences in a free society depends upon the hearts and minds of the men who are parties to disputes.

However, as lawyers, we can take pride in the resourcefulness exhibited by our profession over the years in creating fair, just, and democratic procedures and devices for the settlement of such differences.

It is not my purpose here to make any comment upon the merits of the subsequent national emergency cases prosecuted under my direction since those cases are still pending on appeals. I can however, recite to you how we, as lawyers, attempted to develop and further refine the beginnings made in the atomic energy case in the handling of those subsequent labor controversies, which I think will be of interest to you.

Shortly after the atomic energy case, a walk-out occurred in the bituminous coal fields of the Nation making it necessary for the President, after a fact-finding board had reported to him upon the issues, to direct the Attorney General to obtain an injunction and to prevent, in the public interest the continuance of this strike.

In the atomic energy case the parties agreed to the issuance of the temporary injunction and immediately began bargaining. In the United Mine Workers case, however, there was no agreement of any kind possible.

Faced with this fact, we enlarged upon the beginnings made in the atomic energy case and in the injunction requested by the Government and issued by the Court, both the operators and the union and all persons acting in concert with them were ordered to proceed forthwith to engage in free collective bargaining as contemplated by the act. In addition, the individuals or interests or their successors who had bargained on behalf of parties in effecting past agreements and in settling past disputes were directed to take part in such bargaining and act in good faith with a view of bringing to an end the present dispute at the earliest possible time. Keeping in mind that the dispute in this case was an unusual one concerning disagreements between trustees of a welfare fund, the order further required the defendants to carry out a provision of the trust agreement which provides:

"It is the intent and purpose of the contracting parties hereto that full cooperation shall by each of them be given to each other, the trustees named under this section and to all affected mine workers, to the eventual coordination and development of policies and working agreements necessary or advisable for the effective operation of this fund."

As a result of this order, the operators quickly established the machinery for bargaining and indicated by their answers that they would fully comply with the order of the court.

It is true that the United Mine Workers did not abide by certain provisions of the order, as a result of which the equity powers of the court had to be exercised in contempt proceedings to compel obedience. In the end, however, obedience was obtained and production in the bituminous coal mines was restored thereby removing the threat to the national welfare.

No one can truly say what eventually brought about a termination of this strike, but it is suggested that these provisions of the court's order which brought the parties together and put upon their deliberations the bright light of public scrutiny, plus the power of the chancellor to compel obedience to his orders, greatly assisted the final termination of this strike which so imperiled the whole Nation.

Just this week the Department has again been directed and has obtained an injunction to prevent a work stoppage in the maritime shipping industry of the Nation on the east coast, the west coast, and the Great Lakes. The experience gained from the other two cases has been translated and amplified in the orders issued in this new case and the efficacy of that approach to this very dangerous type of problem is evidenced by the obedience to these orders on the part of both labor and management in the maritime industry.

I think it is appropriate to say that both labor and management in these national emergency cases have now begun to recognize the Government's impartiality and their duty, notwithstanding their individual position in bargaining, to obey the orders of the court in the public interest.

As time goes on, it is the hope of all that both labor and management will, during the period of such 80-day injunctions, come to honestly and seriously seek a final solution of their differences, not on the basis of uncompromising positions taken when they were bargaining with only their individual interests in mind, but in the light of the new public interest which is asserted by the invocation of the national emergency provisions of the act. Both labor and management must recognize that bargaining at this stage is no longer between labor and management alone but that a third party has joined the bargaining conference representing 145,000,000 American citizens who take no sides in the dispute, but who patiently insist that a speedy solution be found to the differences between labor and management to the end that no irreparable damage be done to the Nation and its citizens.

In all of these cases which we have handled, the Government has, in truth and in fact, been impartial. We have never gone into the merits of the controversy giving rise to the work stoppage except where it was necessary to consider the facts and take them into account in realistically framing the complaint and order.

In this connection I wish to point out that no one should assume that these injunctions, with all of the machinery we have so carefully constructed, are touchstones for the final and lasting settlement of national labor-management disputes. All that can be said is that the injunction period provides an additional 80 days for the parties to discuss their differences and seek an agreement. However, if their differences are wide and deep-set and if either or both parties are adamant in their positions, all that the injunction can do is to postpone the work stoppage for 80 days. The problem returns to us then and Congress has not yet suggested any final resolution of the problem.

I think I need not talk any further about the Labor-Management Act and its application. My memory of this experience is deeply etched on my mind and my physical being. Beginning in early March with the atomic-energy dispute, my job has truly been an around-the-clock one.

The swift pace of litigation of this type involving such danger to the public interest as has been involved in the disputes in atomic energy, the meat-packing industry, bituminous coal, the telephone industry, and the maritime industry, and the railroads, has given me, whether I wanted it or not, a 24-hour day law practice. I assure you, and my wife will bear witness to this with some bitterness, that this practice has been accompanied by much lost sleep, a telephone that never ceases to ring, and a coffee pot that has all but disintegrated from overwork.

While it may seem to you that 2 weeks in Justice Goldsborough's court in Washington, across the table from Mr. Lewis, might be a fascinating and interesting experience, it has taken its toll on my nervous system and has occasioned in me a depression of the spirit which is constantly dreaming of, but never finding, that millennium which will bring peace between labor and management and an opportunity for me to wet a line in the lakes and fast-moving streams of east Tennessee.

As you can well understand, this experience has made me a participant in the most devastating and perilous aspects of Nation-wide labor-management warfare, and from this experience I have come to certain conclusions which I wish to pass on to you, my brother lawyers.

This Nation of ours was conceived in an age when individual freedom was a philosophic concept given little or no recognition anywhere in the world. We established a form of government almost unique in the history of the world, which provided with specific guaranties an almost unlimited area for man to exercise individual freedom. By law and by common acceptance in the growth and development of our Government, we extended to the ultimate these broad concepts of individual freedom. This protection of individual freedom unquestionably made possible the quick development of our vast geographic territory and encouraged to the fullest the development of our industry and agriculture.

Maintaining this principle, we have over the years tolerated and accommodated the most uncompromising disputes and controversies within our Nation. In fact, from 1861 to 1865, this Nation endured and survived a bitter internal war and was able to rise from that devastation to become the greatest Nation in the world. We have, in the past, survived these conflicts without national destruction because we had sufficient social, economic and geographic elbow room to tolerate them.

What is our situation today?

I think I can bring to your minds what fundamental changes have occurred in our country by suggesting that you look at your own communities.

It is a startling proposition for a man to even build a house these days, and to build a two-story house would be pretentious. The order of our living has made necessary the apartment house, the small bungalow, the house built on one floor—small and compact, not requiring servants. We have become a Nation of small homes and apartments. Our cities are jammed to the breaking point by people who have had to accustom themselves to living with neighbors who are as near as the thin walls separating apartments. We are compelled to live together too close for comfort and our interdependence is as sensitive as the mechanism of a fine watch.

I detest this way of life and feel that man was made to enjoy plenty of elbow room.

What I may desire, however, is unimportant. I speak of the realities of our national life, and as to those realities, may I suggest that as members of a national society we have, in this year of our Lord 1948, arrived at a point where uncompromising individualism can no longer be tolerated in its absolute forms, however much we might personally like to permit it.

One hundred years ago a shut-down by a strike or lock-out of our infant railroad system might have occasioned some inconvenience to the Nation but it would not have brought the Nation to its knees economically and socially as such a strike would if permitted to occur today. Just last month in the case of United States of America v. Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, et al., involving the threatened railroad strike, Justice Goldsborough said:

"Unions can strike under the Norris-LaGuardia Act, even when it would cause great inconvenience and great loss of production and distribution, but they can't go to the point, in order to carry a point, however much right they have on their side, they can't go to the point of adopting a process which will disintegrate society itself, and that is the situation here."

One hundred years ago we did not have the highly organized and interdependent way of life that exists today. We lived within relatively independent areas of self-sufficiency, supported by contiguous agrarian areas, and that society was supported by a relatively independent local economic system.

This transition from local society, with its economic independence, to the modern age of big cities and Nation-wide interdependence has unfortunately occurred without the necessary mental acceptance of the new responsibilities imposed on each of us by this change. As Peter Marshall, the Chaplain of the Senate, said:

"We have improved means, but not improved ends. We have better ways of getting there, but we have no better places to go. We can save more time, but are not making any better use of the time we save."

This is America's most important problem and regardless of the difficulties of its solution, it is clear we must solve it. The survival of the freedom we hold so dear, and treat so lightly, depends upon it.

In this connection, may I remind you that the United States of America, without having sought it, now has a responsibility of world leadership to a degree never known by any other nation in the history of the world. Our own future security is dependent upon the success of our leadership and with it the well-being of mankind generally in a tortured and troubled world.

One of the first requirements of leadership is that the leader possess qualities of self-discipline that he may inspire the discipline and following of those whom he would seek to lead.

These are qualities which were urged upon man as a way of life by Christ almost 2,000 years ago as a part of the lessons He taught us which we have never quite forgotten but somehow have never quite been able to accept and practice. They cannot be achieved by laws, by courts, or the instruments of force. They are products of the heart and mind.

With considerable misgivings as to my qualification to do so, I thus conclude: that the problems of labor and management or any group of other people which go beyond the local area and which threaten with disaster the community of the Nation, can no longer be permitted as they might have been in another day but that the necessities of our national life impel a narrowing of that area of conflict; that laws, decrees of court, and the devices of force and compulsion cannot truly solve such conflicts, but only serve to deepen them and at the same time do the gravest injury to our heritage of freedom and liberty. Forcing compliance to majority opinion often suggests itself but as lawyers we know that the very essence of the ideals of individual freedom that inspired our form of government may well be jeopardized by such a course.

The only lasting solutions for these problems, and the broader problems of the Nation's responsibility in the world community, are to be found in the hearts and minds of our citizens, who must be made to recognize that their duty to themselves, their community, and to the Nation requires them to exercise self-restraint, self-discipline, and a fuller recognition of the changing needs and requirements of others in all conflicts within our society—in short, it requires use to make our spiritual progress equal to our material progress. In this field which is so lacking in leadership, the lawyers of our Nation have the greatest opportunity for service to the Nation because of their peculiar training, understanding, and experience in practical human relationships.

Our local and national history records that in every crisis there has arisen from the ranks of our free people, great leaders who gave purpose and direction where there was doubt and indecision. In the short space of 200 years, we have conquered our distances, the challenge of our resources, and all threats to our security from our enemies. Now we face our gravest challenge—the need to live together without "elbow room," in such a way as to preserve our free way of life with all its endless blessings. Such a crisis pleads for leadership—and I believe such leadership is to be found in the ranks of our profession.

You, above all others, have the opportunity, and indeed the obligation, to preach the message of self-discipline, self-restraint and an honest understanding, recognition, and full acceptance of the other fellow's point of view.

Let me conclude by assuring you with all the sincerity of my heart and mind that I know we can and will accomplish this great conversion. I say this because I love America and its eternal ideals, and my faith in America has never been disappointed. In truth, we are the only people on earth who can retain maximum individual freedom in an atomic age.

If we fail, our Nation fails.

If our Nation fails, the world fails.

But we shall succeed. My faith tells me so.

Address by Ralph E. Becker at the Republican National Convention in Philadelphia

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDWARD MARTIN
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, August 2 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD the speech delivered by Ralph E. Becker, chairman of the Young Republican National Federation, before the Republican National Convention in Philadelphia, June 23, 1948.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Chairman and fellow Republicans, the entire world awaits the decision of this convention. In the words of Longfellow:

"Humanity with all its fears,
With all its hopes for future years,
Hangs breathless on thy fate."

I speak for the millions of young Americans who look to the Republican Party to realize their hopes for an efficient, imaginative, vigorous administration of our Federal Government. They are revolted by the ineptitude of the Democratic Party.

Voters between the ages of 21 and 36 have spent all their adult years under Democratic maladministrations. These are the voters who will elect our Republican candidate by a landslide.

Of this country's entire population, one-third are between the ages of 21 and 40. In this age group are more than one-half of all our eligible voters.

Fifteen million are World War II veterans, many of them fresh from the battlefields on which they defended the American concept life resolved to make this country a better of civilization. We have returned to civilian place in which to live and to protect, no matter what the cost, our traditional freedoms.

Two and one-half millions are college students, among them many of the leaders of National, State, and community affairs in the years ahead.

These people want to serve America.

America must be served by them if it is to prosper and endure.

The youth of this country realize that a better way of life depends on government and that government, in turn, depends on the integrity and ability of those engaged in political activity.

More young people than ever before in the history of our country are interested and actively working in politics. These young people have turned by the thousands to the Republican Party.

In 1946, we saw a host of young men and young women achieve high recognition in our party. Several young men in their thirties were elected to the United States Senate. Many more in their thirties were elected to the House of Representatives.

A large number of young men and young women were elected to key executive and legislative offices in their States.

The Republican leadership has been assiduous in recognizing young people by appointing them to administrative positions and by giving them responsibility within the party framework.

More than 150 active members of the Young Republican organization have been chosen delegates or alternates to this crucial convention. Eleven Young Republicans are members of the resolutions committee.

Youth is on the march in the Republican Party.

Our State organizations have increased in numbers, ability, and standing. Carroll Reece, our friend and national chairman, has given the Young Republicans the fullest opportunity to develop their own program among young people interested in politics.

Today, there are well over 2,500 Young Republican Clubs in the United States, and more than 300 Young Republican Clubs in our colleges.

Why have the young people turned to the Republican Party?

One reason is that under our two-party system, parties wax and wane in power. A party's vitality is measured by the force, vision, and ability of its leaders, and by the strength of its organization. When the party is out of power the young, strong, vigorous people have a better opportunity to move ahead rapidly within the organization and to run as candidates.

The ablest young men and women therefore tend to join that party.

During the past 8 years the Republican Party has become the young people's party.

This influx of young leadership has changed the fundamental philosophy and ideological approach of the Republican Party.

The Republican Party is not, as many of its traducers allege, rooted in the 1920's.

Today its leaders unanimously recognize the world responsibilities of the United States.

Today its leaders recognize that our domestic problems cannot be mastered without hard work and imaginative thinking.

Our party was founded in 1854 on the slogan of free men and free soil.

That slogan, is as fundamentally sound today as it was in 1854.

"Free men and free soil," originated over a purely local dispute concerning the Kansas-Nebraska territory. But over the years this principle of free men and free soil has become an American creed, and it has world-wide application.

Free men and free soil.

These words carry far-reaching, powerful implications—concentration camps—slave labor—the police state—tyranny and oppression in any form—subjugation of one nation by another—and all forms of discrimination based on race, creed, or color are anthema to free men.

This principle has expanded into industrial relations, through the Republican Party, and this time in order to make labor free.

By the Taft-Hartley Act, the Republican Party has emancipated the American worker from coercion and interference by union leaders and by employers.

In the economic field we know this freedom by the phrase "free enterprise."

Throughout the entire world the Communists have made their heaviest assault on free enterprise and in this country the Democrats have aided and abetted them. But we Republicans have always remained firm in support of it.

Today, with a strong basic relief in freedom for the individual, the Republican Party stands as it has always stood, openly and unashamed, for free men—free soil—free labor—and free enterprise.

Let us make this the 1948 battle cry.

These are not only principles of the Republican Party. They are the principles under which the United States has prospered and become great.

Under the Republican principle of individual freedom, we can as always, find peace and prosperity and happiness. Upon these tenets we have erected our Constitution, our temples of religion, our Nation, our homes, and our hopes.

All of these are under attack.

Living as we are in an age when time and space mean nothing, there is a critical urgency for nations to find a way of living in peace with one another. The rest of the world looks to us for economic assistance, but we know that primarily it seeks and needs us for spiritual and intellectual leadership.

The entire world is locked in a battle of freedom, and we can be humbly thankful that our party has the necessary leadership to continue to champion these principles to fulfill this world hope and need.

In the past 2 years as National Chairman of the Young Republicans, I have traveled over 100,000 miles in the 48 States.

I have talked to young people in every State in this country. I have tried to find an answer to the question: "What do young people want?"

Each of us, I think, wants a chance to make a decent life for himself—each of us wants the freedom to make the most of opportunity through work and individual effort. Each of us wants a chance to develop his own talents through the exercise of choice and the use of his own energy.

Our great fraternity of Young Republicans provides the only real place today where a young person can work concretely for these principles, where he can counterattack totalitarian ideologies which attempt to control the individual by the State.

In this very year, when the Democrat Party has ground to a stop on the brink of disintegration, we Young Republicans are constantly increasing our enthusiasm and activity.

We have built the foundations of this present strength working for the party out of power.

We have grown so strong that the Young Republican movement today is producing more future political leaders than has ever been produced by any other political organization at any time in history.

This is the country where a youth may still dream and make his dreams come true—where youth may aspire and with courage and fortitude surmount all obstacles and rise to the highest position this country offers. No matter what origin, background, religion or color, he has an open road ahead of him; his achievements depend largely upon his own endeavor.

This is the country of hope and inspiration, where the future is ever brighter, where there is incentive to strive and improve and hope—where there is freedom to perform in response to the drive of imagination.

We have such a country only because its cornerstone, pillars, and foundation consist of our great Republican principles of free men, free soil, free labor and free enterprise.

Col. James P. S. Devereux, United States Marine Corps

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HERBERT R. O'CONOR
OF MARYLAND
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, August 2 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix a statement prepared by me on the distinguished record and service of Col. James P. S. Devereux, United States Marine Corps, who retired yesterday with the rank of brigadier general.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A distinguished Maryland soldier, Marine Col. James P. S. Devereux, retired yesterday after more than 25 years of faithful service in the armed forces of our country. The brevet rank of brigadier general which has been conferred upon him is but a token of the extraordinary regard in which he is held by the people of our country, due particularly to his heroic leadership of the Wake detachment of Marines during the defense of Wake Island in December 1941.

His is a record of service and of gallantry which has been duly memorialized but which deserves further to be recorded officially wherever opportunity offers. I ask unanimous consent that these remarks in his honor be recorded in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Colonel Devereux has served his fellow citizens in many areas of the world since his enlistment in the Marine Corps in July 1923. Commissioned second lieutenant in 1925 he served at Norfolk, Quantico, and New York before being transferred to the forces of the Marines on occupation duty in Nicaragua.

Following a brief return to the United States in 1929 he was detailed to Shanghai, China, for duty with the Fourth Marines. In China he served likewise as commanding officer of the mounted detachment of the Legation Guard at Peking.

Back to Quantico in 1933 for a year's tour of duty he was assigned to the Coast Artillery School at Fort Monroe, Va. Promoted to captain in December 1935 he returned again to Quantico, where, providentially it seemed, he served both as instructor in the Weapons School and aided in the preparation of a Marine Corps manual on base defense weapons, one subject which he was destined to show himself master when the Japanese hurricane struck Wake Island.

In 1937 Colonel Devereux served a tour of duty with a Marine detachment aboard the U. S. S. Utah, following which he was transferred to the Marine Corps base at San Diego in 1938. There he remained until January 1941 when he was ordered to Pearl Harbor, shortly thereafter assuming command of the 449 marines who later were to resist so valiantly the overwhelming odds of the Japanese attack at Wake on December 7 to 22, 1941.

So much has been written of that heroic epic in Marine Corps history that it is needless to attempt to review the accomplishments of Colonel Devereux and his heroic band here.

Suffice it to say that in the 15 days during which Colonel Devereux and his detachment bore the assault of the Japanese forces they gave an account of themselves which astonished the world. Although sustaining almost 20 percent casualties they inflicted losses on the enemy in excess of 1,000 fatalities; caused the loss to the enemy of at least four enemy warships, with eight more damaged; shot down 21 enemy aircraft and damaged 11 others. In the face of sustained fire from the sea and the air, without fighter aircraft and with only one antiaircraft battery operating, without opportunity for rest for their men, without radar or personnel to man the defenses fully they finally capitulated, but not until they had given again to the world a brilliant instance of how American citizen-soldiers, when called upon to defend their liberty, could outshine in brilliance any forces that could be thrown against them.

Colonel Devereux's close contacts with the enemy continued long after Wake Island fell. First he and his group were sent to Yokohama, then to Woosung, China, where they remained from January 24, 1942 to December 9 of that same year. Transferred then to Kiangwan, near Shanghai, they remained there 29 months, later going to Fungtai, near Peiping, for some weeks, before being sent to camps in central Hokkaido.

During his internment by the Japanese, Colonel Devereux was selected for promotion from major to lieutenant colonel, but it was not until after his release from the Japanese prison camp in September 1945 that his promotion to colonel became effective.

This distinguished exponent of the marine fighting tradition was awarded the Navy Cross for his outstanding leadership in the defense of Wake.

In adidtion he holds the Presidential Unit Citation with one star, Wake Island 1941; Second Nicaraguan Campaign Medal, Nicaragua 1927–29; Yangtze Service Medal, China 1930; Marine Corps Expeditionary Medal, China 1930, and Wake Island with Wake Island clasp and silver "W"; American Defense Service Medal with base clasp and one bronze star, and the World War II Victory Medal.

Maryland and all America is proud of Colonel Devereux, while men of his calibre and capabilities lead the armed forces of our Nation, we can be sure that America will fight to the bitter end against any assault on the democratic principles our people love so well.

The Poll Tax and Prohibition

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. E. H. MOORE
OF OKLAHOMA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, August 2 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, Oklahoma does not have a poll tax, but it is one of three States that has State-wide prohibition. On the 31st day of July 1948, the Daily Oklahoman published an editorial entitled "Poll Tax and Prohibition." I ask unanimous consent that the editorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Daily Oklahoman of July 31, 1948]

POLL TAX AND PROHIBITION

Most people will criticize the logic of Senator STEWART of Tennessee and some will question his sincerity when he says that although he would like to see the poll-tax law of his State repealed, he doesn't want it to be repealed by Congress. Many will think that if the law is so undesirable and if it ought to be repealed, what difference does it make who repeals it?

But suppose that this pending bill instead of repealing the poll-tax laws of seven States was attempting to repeal the State-wide prohibition laws of three States. Suppose that the pending bill provided that "the State-wide prohibition laws of Oklahoma, Kansas, and Mississippi are hereby repealed." Or suppose that the pending bill declared with reference to prohibition exactly what it declares with reference to the poll tax, "No State-wide prohibition law ever shall be enacted by any of the 48 States."

It would be begging the question to say that Congress never will attempt to repeal State-wide prohibition and that Congress lacks the constitutional power to repeal State-wide prohibition. Congress is attempting to repeal the poll tax in seven States and, according to former court decisions, Congress has no constitutional authority to repeal the election laws of any State. Moreover, if Congress has the power to repeal the poll tax, it has the power to repeal State registration laws and to repeal the Georgia law which permits 18-year-old citizens to vote. Or conversely it would have the power to decree that 18-year-olds shall be permitted to vote in all the States. It could, if it so willed, deal with State-wide prohibition.

So Senator STEWART is not so illogical after all. He dislikes the poll tax and he would like to see Tennessee repeal it. But he hates to see Congress exercise a power whose constitutionality is extremely doubtful lest Congress begin at once to deal with State laws that are far more popular than the poll tax. And if Congress has the power to say what election law a State shall not have, it has the power to say what kind of election law a State shall have. A Federal election board to direct all elections from Washington becomes at least a possibility when Congress assumes the power to repeal any election law of any State.

In the mind of the majority of Americans State-wide prohibition is just as objectionable as the poll-tax laws of Mississippi and Tennessee. But Oklahoma has adopted prohibition, and so long as her people want it they should be permitted to retain it. Whether Oklahoma retains prohibition or discards it is nobody's business but her own. And if she wants a law requiring the registration of voters, that too is her own business. By the same token if seven States want to retain the archaic and outmoded poll tax, who is Oklahoma and Ohio and Oregon to say that they shall not have the poll tax?

Communistic Activities in University of Washington

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WARREN G. MAGNUSON
OF WASHINGTON
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, August 2 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, the Legislature in the State of Washington ordered an inquiry to determine whether there were communistic activities in the University of Washington. In the Pacific Northwest, the inquiry created a great deal of interest. I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD a very fine editorial on the subject from the Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE UNIVERSITY AND THE CANWELL INQUIRY

Out of the hysteria—much of it synthetic—that accompanied the legislative hearings into suspected subversive activity at the University of Washington, two outstanding facts emerge:

The extreme minuteness of the faculty group substantially accused of Communist affiliations—

The final realization that for many years this noisy little group has been giving the university a black eye far out of proportion to its numbers.

Less than a dozen members of the university faculty, which numbers some 1,500 instructors of all ranks, were named before the Canwell committee as suspected or former members of the Communist Party.

Far from discrediting the university in the eyes of the people of the State, the hearings have established how the vast majority of the faculty members have consistently refused to be swept into a movement which at best reflects no credit on the good sense and patriotism of its participants.

And the people of the State who support the university with their taxes know at last, as they have every right to know, the affiliations and sympathies of this handful of teachers who have been loudly berating their reactionary fellow citizens through the various phony fronts of communism.

With a great deal of fanfare the issues of civil rights and academic freedom have been raised in the proceedings just concluded and with a persuasivenes that has indeed disturbed a good many honest and liberal citizens.

The Post-Intelligencer yields to no one in its steadfast defense of and faith in the equal protection of rights of the lowliest member of our community under American law.

But the loud outcry regarding civil rights in the present instance has more than a faint aroma of dead herring.

It has all the earmarks of a typical and professional maneuver to divert attention from the real point of the inquiry.

There is no real evidence that anyone's civil rights have been jeopardized in the slightest.

But, typically, the people who have noisily inflicted their opinions on others for years now loudly yell "Copper!" when they are asked to explain the source of those opinions to their employer, the State of Washington.

It is an old legal axiom that accusers at the bar of justice must come into court with clean hands.

Did the university cell of Communists make any public outcry when antiwar minorities were being officially hounded in this country after Hitler and Stalin broke up their beautiful friendship; or when human and civil rights were being brutally suppressed, not only in Soviet Russia but in all her conquered and vassal nations?

Was there any protest from the university Communists and their fellow travelers when a bunch of hoodlums of like political convictions invaded a peaceful meeting in a Seattle church and by shouting and typical Communist strong-arm methods broke up the meeting?

There is no record of any such protest.

Apparently it all depends on whose civil rights ox is being gored.

Some of the professors who have been accused of Communist affiliations and sympathies maintain in effect that it is none of the business of the people of the State who employ them whether or not they are or have been members of the Communist Party.

The Post-Intelligencer believes it is the business of the people of the State to have this information.

The argument that membership in the Communist Party is on the same level as membership in one of the ordinary American political parties has no standing in good sense.

The Communist Party is conspiratorial in nature—so much so, that one of the university instructors admitted at last week's hearings that he attended party meetings under an alias.

It is intolerant of the rights and opinions of those who disagree with its tenets.

It is violent in word and intemperate in deed.

Above all, it was spawned in Moscow and willy-nilly is part of a worldwide revolutionary conspiracy whose chieftains sit in the Kremlin.

It is legal in the United States only in the negative sense that it has not been outlawed by statute.

It was long ago outlawed in public opinion.

It would be naive indeed to believe that any person subscribing to the intolerant and violent doctrines of communism could or would shed his opinions like an overcoat when he enters the classroom.

Human beings aren't built that way.

Perhaps the hearings, whose procedure admittedly was clumsy at times, have been unfairly pictured in the public mind through some of the inept questioning of witnesses by the chief examiner.

But each person who had been mentioned by witnesses as assertedly having had Communist affiliations was given the opportunity of stating whether or not he was or had been a member of the party. If he admitted he had been a member but was no longer one, he was given the opportunity of stating why he left the party.

And with one or two exceptions, none of the few faculty members who defied the committee in this respect made any public repudiation of the tenets and doctrines of communism.

Nor did they do so in their statements to this newspaper.

The Post-Intelligencer repeats that the people of the State who pay their salaries and whose children they teach have the right to know where they stand on this one issue.

This is not an issue of academic freedom, which has never been threatened in these proceedings.

It is an issue involving the very preservation of that freedom.

The Question of Inflation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALEXANDER WILEY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, August 2 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a very thought-provoking and stimulating article written by Walter Lippmann under the title "How Serious and How Sincere?" which appeared recently in newspapers throughout America. The article is also informative because it goes to the subject of what is inflation and what is the cure for inflation.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TODAY AND TOMORROW—HOW SERIOUS AND HOW SINCERE?

(By Walter Lippmann)

There is a simple test by which the public can find out who is trying to deal sincerely and intelligently with the inflation. Does the candidate begin or end his oration with a clear explanation and a stern warning that if his program is effective it must be painful to farmers, wage earners, businessmen, and bankers? Does he say that to stop the inflation is to stop the boom, that in order to bring down prices it will be necessary to reduce prosperity, profits, business expansion, public works, sales and the market for labor? Does he put the people on notice that they cannot continue to enjoy the benefits of inflation—that is to say full employment, high wages, booming markets, high profits—and at the same time be able to buy at lower prices everything they are trying to buy?

If the public man says none of this, if he believes or pretends to believe that he can reduce the prevailing prices without reducing the current incomes of farmers, workers, and businessmen, if, in other words, he talks as if the people could have their cake and eat it too, he is deceiving them or he is deceiving himself.

The inflation is due to the fact that while American production is just about at maximum capacity, the purchasing power at the disposal of consumers and investors is being increased. It is impossible to increase the production of goods. Steel, mining, textile, oil, paper, durable goods plants, the construction industry, are operating at about their capacity. Production could be increased only if there were more labor, if there were more steel, more raw material, and more transportation. There is no more available, and in the short run, more cannot be made available.

Therefore, the high-price level cannot now be reduced by increased production. It can be reduced only by decreasing the demand. But measures to decrease the demand will be painful to those whose spending power is reduced, and they will, no matter what the sentiment against the high cost of living, be extremely unpopular. To reduce spending power it would be necessary to raise taxes, to reduce consumer credit, that is to say installment buying, to reduce bank loans which finance business expansion and inventories, to arrest public works by the cities, the States, and the Federal Government, to make money dearer, to lower the support of farm prices, to raise the ceiling on hours of work and lower the floor under wages.

Because a policy of disinflation is inherently painful, unpopular, and dangerous—in that it may get out of hand and bring on a deflation—no free government is able to disinflate except with the united support of its leading political parties. A disinflation can be carried out only if both parties share the responsibility, only if neither party can exploit the consequences against the other. No one, therefore, who is serious and sincere about it, would make it a partisan issue on the eve of an election.

The very fact that he made it a partisan issue is almost conclusive evidence that he does not expect to deal with the realities of the problem, and that he merely wants a talking point. Thus if Mr. Truman expected to act at once and if he knew what the effects of action would be, his first concern would be to make sure that he had an agreed program to which the Republicans were committed.

For no one would want to break the boom on his own responsibility alone. But a candidate would be only too glad to create the illusion that he could have reduced the cost of living without breaking the boom.

To create that illusion he must ask for powers which he will not have to use. The way to ask for them without getting them is to ask for them in such a way that the other party is almost certain not to grant them—that is to say by making it a personal triumph for himself and a public humiliation for them if they do grant them.

If Mr. Truman wanted the powers because his first concern was the public interest, he would recognize that to get them he must conciliate, not antagonize, the Congress. He would make it plain that to use those powers when he got them, he would need the full cooperation of both parties and the whole people.

In dealing with foreign affairs that is what he has done. There the intention is sincere and public spirited, but as respects inflation he is pursuing an exactly opposite course, making demands on Congress which are formulated and posed in a way which makes agreement improbable, which makes national unity impossible.

That is because on inflation his intentions are partisan, are directed not to a remedy for inflation but to the making of a campaign issue.

The Paper Dollar

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ZALES N. ECTON
OF MONTANA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, August 2 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. ECTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "The Paper Dollar," written by Felix Morley, and published in the July 14, 1948, issue of the Pathfinder.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WORLD AND US—THE PAPER DOLLAR

(By Felix Morley)

Not one person in a thousand ever reads the wording on the paper money in his possession. All that most of us ever think about is the denomination, whether the bill is a one, a five, a ten—or what have you.

Yet this matter of wording is important. For paper money is legally a contract between the owner and the United States Government. The paper of itself is worth nothing. Only the guaranties which are made enforceable by that paper give it value, as in the case of any other contract.

If you have a few bills in your pocket, and will read them carefully, you will perhaps be surprised to find that some of this paper money is irredeemable. It is a promise to pay on which the Government does not propose to make good. That cannot be called a healthy currency.

The bills in your possession are likely to be one or other of three kinds. They are described, at the top of the face side of the note, either as a silver certificate, a United States note, or a Federal Reserve note. We have other kinds of legal paper currency, but far the greater part of that in circulation is either silver certificates or notes.

All the $1 bills and many of the fives and tens, are silver certificates. These certify that there is on deposit in the Treasury an amount of silver coin equal to the face value of the certificate. The silver certificate is a contract to pay the appropriate amount of silver to the bearer on demand. That contract will be honored at any time, at the United States Treasury or any substation. For a dollar certificate you will not get a dollar's worth of commercial silver. But you will get something with much more actual value than paper.

The Federal Reserve notes are different. They are not redeemable in silver or in any other form of specie, but merely in lawful money. However, these Federal Reserve notes are themselves lawful money. So if you turn a Federal Reserve note in at the Treasury for redemption, the clerk may merely return the same note.

Technically, your paper money will then have been redeemed. But the experiment will show that actually we now have an inconvertible paper currency, which cannot be redeemed in anything more valuable than paper. And most of our large-denomination money is inconvertible.

What makes this serious is that issuance by governments of irredeemable paper money has throughout history been the signal for uncurbed spending, for currency inflation and for eventual currency collapse. The greatest obstacle to European recovery today is that the governments there have all put their money on an irredeemable basis.

If the United States is to succeed in its effort to help others, it must preserve financial stability at home. But there can be no real financial stability in a country in which money is backed by nothing more substantial than the government's promise. There should be tangible security back of the contract to pay. When our paper money was redeemable in gold, which has real value, the dollar was worth far more in food and clothing than is the case today.

During the session of Congress recently closed there were frequent indications that the representatives of the people realize the danger of irredeemable and therefore steadily depreciating paper dollars. Legislation to make our currency again redeemable in gold was introduced. Such a move is wholly practical, and if there is a change of administration this step is likely to be put through.

It must be done, if rising costs are to be checked and if the American dollar is to regain the reliability it once had. The fighting men whom we sent overseas during the war were reliable. The dollars we are now sending must be made so, if we expect them to be effective for recovery.

Danger for United States in Middle East—Soviet Is Wooing New State of Israel Which Calls for New Policy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LAWRENCE H. SMITH
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, trouble is brewing for the United States in the Middle East, notwithstanding statements made in this House that the new state of Israel would always be our friend.

Mr. C. L. Sulzberger writing from Athens, under date of July 26 and published in the New York Times of July 27, says that the creation of the new state may cause United States to shift Middle East policy. Russia has actively supported partition and its popularity has grown among the Zionists everywhere. He further states:

The Russians furthermore have supplied arms, especially from Czechoslovakia, to Israel by an underground railway.

Further, that they have encouraged and abetted immigration. He charges that the Russians have placed difficulties before the Marshall plan by blocking off important petroleum resources. According to Mr. Sulzberger there is also the possibility that the Soviet Union might gain eventually some form of a military toehold in the Middle East through the United Nations. All these matters constitute a threat to our national security. I have pointed to that fact many times, Mr. Speaker, and here we find corroboration for it in this article by Mr. Sulzberger.

Mr. Speaker, I offer it as part of my remarks:

ISRAEL'S BIRTH MAY CAUSE UNITED STATES TO SHIFT MIDDLE EAST POLICY—THIRD FORCE IN PALESTINE IS ASKED TO COUNTER RISING SUPPORT FOR COMMUNIST DOCTRINES

(By C. L. Sulzberger)

ATHENS, July 26.—United States foreign policy in the Middle East, which is still in an infantile state, faces the necessity of careful reconsideration and recasting as a result of the Palestine war and the de facto establishment of the independent state of Israel.

Establishment of Israel by the Zionist movement can now be considered a permanent factor in the Middle Eastern political situation. There appears hardly any doubt that despite the present lack of agreement on its geographic frontiers, the second United Nations truce in Palestine completes effectively the process whereby the new nation has been born.

Prior to the birth of Israel, United States policy had been crystallizing slowly into one of promoting friendly relationships with the Moslem states of the region. This had been done in order to protect and expand the United States petroleum development under private aegis and to prepare the way for obtaining air base rights and other strategic advantages.

Middle Eastern oil was calculated as a vital raw-material necessity in the maturing of the European recovery program as well as an immediate supply for United States naval and air force requirements, permitting the husbanding of the shrinking resources of western wells.

The gradual unfolding of a parallel pro-Zionist policy in Washington for idealistic, sentimental, and political reasons has worked against this original and basically strategical trend.

At this particular historical moment, Washington has lost considerable influence in the Arab world, where the United States is regarded as a pro-Zionist whipping boy. Simultaneously, it has not gained sufficient compensatory influence in the fledgling state of Israel.

On the contrary, United States Army planes are now stationed in Nicosia, Cyprus, for the possible necessity of evacuating United States citizens from Arab countries should angry mobs menace them. The petroleum pipe lines to Haifa are not only not pumping oil to the huge refineries there owned by the British, but they have been taken over and are being operated by Israel. Instead, crude oil is being secretly transported from western lands by tanker, to be processed at this terminus of a Middle Eastern overland supply source.

For years the Soviet Union's attitude was plainly anti-Zionist, and the small, illegal Palestine Communist Party made up of both Arabs and Jews, worked against that movement. Since the termination of World War II, Moscow's plain shift in policy has been consistent and has worked logically. The Soviet attitude toward partition has been outspoken, and it has furthered four Muscovite objectives as a result.

It unquestionably has popularized the Soviet Union among Zionists everywhere. The Russians furthermore have supplied arms—especially from Czechoslovakia—to Israel by an underground railway. They have encouraged and abetted immigration.

The Russians have placed difficulties before the Marshall plan—whose obstruction has been a primary objective of the Communist information bureau—by blocking off important petroleum resources.

The Russians have opened the possibility that the Soviet Union might gain eventually some form of a military toehold in the Middle East through the United Nations.

The Russians have fairly well insured that chaos and unrest would exist for some years in the Middle East because of the permanent hostility of the Arab states to an independent Israel. This weakens the United States strategic position.

AGAINST GRANTING BASES

Israel is against granting bases to any outside nation, Israel Foreign Minister Moshe Shertok has revealed, and the Arabs are far less acquiescent than they were. Ahmed Mahmoud Khachaba Pasha, the Egyptian Foreign Minister, has stated that Egypt had intended to abstain from any western grouping in case of another war. This is also the policy of Israel. At the moment, therefore, Moscow has managed to some degree to neutralize the Middle East, an area formerly extremely hostile to her.

The backwardness of the Arabs of the Middle East, with extreme poverty of huge masses contrasted to the extreme wealth of a tiny minority in control, leaves a dangerously revolutionary situation. Mob action occasioned by anti-Jewish demonstrations can easily be turned into broader social protests—as the Cairo Government knows and fears.

Neither Britain nor the United States has ever done much to insure that economic benefits accruing to the Middle East from trade and leases were ever distributed for broad popular benefits.

The necessity of a positive and carefully calculated United States policy to meet the new situation occasioned by Israel's existence is therefore evident. This applies both in Israel and in the Arab states.

ARAB-ISRAELI COOPERATION

The first cardinal point is the need to work slowly but surely for Arab-Israeli cooperation on economic and eventually political lines so that Israel does not become an isolated island but can employ its vigor for regional benefits.

Some diplomats have talked unofficially of the wisdom of sponsoring eventually a Middle Eastern Marshall plan to foster this. Such a plan, they say, would insure furthermore that the discontented masses of the Arab world were gradually removed from potentially revolutionary instincts, and that feudalism was buried.

The second point is to encourage forward-looking democratic elements in both the Arab states and in Israel, just as a third force has been encouraged in France. That has never been done in the Arab world. It is equally necessary that such support be given in Israel, where extremist elements—some of them potentially friendly to the Soviet Union—are a danger whose full force is still untested.

Some Middle Eastern experts predict an effort by extremists led by the Irgun-Leumi Zvai and the Fighters for Freedom of Israel (the Stern group) to overthrow the government of Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion, whose philosophy is basically a combination of democracy and western socialism.

The exact strength in arms and men of these groups is unknown. They are exhibiting a gradually developing anti-western bias—spearheaded by their traditional hatred for Britain—and Soviet propaganda actively encourages this.

The Communist Party in Israel is itself very small, with only one member on the 37-man state council. But since it shifted, on orders from Moscow, from fighting Zionism to supporting it strongly, it has gained popularity. The party is believed to have made scant headway in penetrating the trade unions of the Kibbutzim (the communal farms).

But the Communist doctrine is being mirrored increasingly by "front" groups of persons previously prowestern. The new United Workers Party, made up of the Hashomer Hatzair (left-wing unionist) and the left-wing schismatic group from Premier Ben Gurion's socialist "mapai" are increasingly antiwestern. The Stern group uses Communist phraseology, and even Menachem Be Gin, head of the Irgun, has indicated that certain reforms similar to those of the Soviet Union would be advisable in Israel.

All fellow-traveler groups are strongly working for the sound and inevitable line of eventual Arab-Israeli cooperation.

At present Soviet policy can afford to be crystal clear and on the offensive in Israel while concurrently vague and for general social reform in the Arab world.

The Displaced Persons Act

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. C. WAYLAND BROOKS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, August 2 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, one of the greatest tragedies of modern war is the aftermath of that war. Nothing exemplifies this to a greater degree than the plight of the displaced people across the face of the earth. America, made up of all the races, creeds, and colors of mankind, has always been sympathetic to distressed people everywhere. The thing we need most to guard against is statements that would cause class, race, or creed dissensions or differences in America.

It was unfortunate indeed that the President of the United States in his acceptance speech took that political forum opportunity to call the special session of the Eightieth Congress. He stated:

I shall ask for an adequate and decent law for displaced persons in place of this anti-Semitic, anti-Catholic new law which this Eightieth Congress passed.

The bill as passed by the Congress was neither anti-Semitic nor anti-Catholic, and I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an article which appeared in the New World, Chicago's official Catholic newspaper, published in Chicago, Ill., on July 23, 1948, in which Monsignor Swanstrom disclaims the charge that this bill was in any way anti-Catholic.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FIFTY-FIVE PERCENT CATHOLICS—PRIEST DENIES CHARGES DP BILL IS ANTI-CATHOLIC

BUFFALO.—Statements carried in the public press asserting that Catholics have denounced congressional legislation permitting the entrance of 205,000 European displaced persons in this country were criticized as untrue here by Msgr. Edward E. Swanstrom, of New York, chairman of the National Catholic Resettlement council.

Monsignor Swanstrom declared: "The displaced persons legislation is not discriminatory as far as Catholics are concerned." He added that "no leading Catholic authority or any official representative of the NCRC ever has spoken of the measure as being anti-Catholic despite reports in the public press."

MAP PLANS

Monsignor Swanstrom presided at a conference here of 60 delegates of the council who mapped plans for receiving thousands of displaced persons in this country.

Monsignor Swanstrom pointed out that more than 90 percent of the Lithuanians and 40 percent of the Latvians eligible for entry under the law are Catholics and that most of the Poles who will come from the territory east of the Curzon Line are Catholics.

"Thus there is a very substantial number of Catholics in this group to which a priority has been given," he added. "At least 55 percent of the displaced persons to be brought to this country under the legislation are Catholics."

Reporting on the council's conference, Monsignor Swanstrom said the delegates agreed to appeal to the next Congress requesting that displaced persons who entered European camps as late as April, 1947, be eligible for admission. Under the congressional law, only persons in the camps prior to December 22, 1945, are eligible for admission.

CANVASS NATION

The Monsignor said the meeting developed the necessity of again canvassing the Nation to determine how many homes and jobs will be available for Catholics brought to this country. "We'll start receiving the first group of 3,000 in August" Monsignor Swanstrom said. "The State Department figures we'll get 5,000 in September, 7,000 in October, and 10,000 monthly thereafter."

He estimates that the council already has found places for 50,000 DP's, but emphasized that another survey is needed as the last one was taken before congressional passage of the DP bill.

Bishop John F. O'Hara, C. S. C., of Buffalo, addressed the group at a luncheon and declared: "Our Lord, Himself, is a prototype of the displaced person, when He came seeking a birthplace in Bethlehem and there was no room for Him."

Family Income and Home Ownership

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HOMER D. ANGELL

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, the housing problem is one of the critical issues facing us today. I hope before we adjourn we will be able to pass legislation which will assist veterans and other low-income groups to procure a home within the means they have available. I am today in receipt of a letter and a factual report on family income and home ownership from the United States Savings and Loan League which is worthy of study. I include the letter and report as a part of these remarks:

UNITED STATES SAVINGS AND LOAN LEAGUE,
Chicago, July 29, 1948.

Mr. HOMER D. ANGELL,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN ANGELL: Ownership of their homes by 46 percent of all nonrural families with incomes under $2,000 a year was recently revealed in a report of the United States Bureau of the Census.

This fact challenges the oft-repeated statement that families with less than $2,000 a year income do not or cannot own their homes without Government assistance.

Widespread purchases of homes in the past 2 years by low-income families was reported by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System in the June 1948 issue of the Federal Reserve Bulletin.

These and other data by these two Government departments relative to family income and home ownership are summarized in the attached four-page bulletin. Of particular significance is the table on page 2 which clearly shows that home ownership in this country is not limited to the well-to-do.

I thought you would be interested in these home ownership figures at this time when the housing problem is being so widely discussed.

Sincerely,

MORTON BODFISH,
Chairman of the Executive Committee.

FAMILY INCOME AND HOME OWNERSHIP

The theory that home ownership in this country is limited to the well-to-do and that only a fraction of American families can afford to buy a home received a shattering blow by statistical studies recently released by two Government departments—the United States Bureau of the Census and the Federal Reserve Board. The tables presented in these four pages tell the story. They are taken from these studies and are pretty much self-explanatory. The high points are brought out in the accompanying comments.

The most significant data are presented on page 2. They merit careful study. The data, for example, show that in 1947 over half of American families owned their own homes; 46.3 percent of all families with incomes under $3,000 and 46 percent of all families with incomes under $2,000 a year owned their own homes. How home ownership has increased with all income groups since 1940 is shown in the following summary:

Percentage of all families in various income groups owning own homes

Annual family income	1947	1940
	Percent	Percent
Under $500	54.5	45.0
$500 to $999	48.2	30.6

$2,500 to $2,999	47.0	46.4
$3,000 to $4,999	52.3	51.6

Source: U. S. Bureau of the Census, 1940 Population and Housing, Families, Tenure and Rent, p. 96; 1948, Current Population Reports, Consumer Income, series P-60, No. 3, p. 96.

These, of course, are national data, and the high percentage of home ownership in the low-income brackets is influenced by the inclusion of families from smaller cities and rural, nonfarm areas in which the price of homes is relatively low, but where family incomes are also lower. Additional census data show, however, that about 43 percent of all urban families with less than $1,000 annual incomes are home owners. It is erroneous to assume that all or even the majority of the low-income families are welfare families needing public assistance in housing, or otherwise. Many of these families are retired couples living on savings or family support in addition to their current income, or couples having partial subsistence from part-time farming. This is confirmed by the census findings that almost 40 percent of the nonfarm families with less than $1,000 income had no civilian earners and 62 percent had no children under 18 years of age.

That there is much less difference in the economic status of home owners and tenants than is often assumed is evidenced by the fact that the median (average) income of nonfarm tenant families was $2,769, or only 13.4 percent lower than the $3,197 median income of nonfarm home owning families. Thus, if the experience and ability of families now owning homes is any guide, and certainly it should be, many of the present tenant families are able to afford home ownership.

NOTE.—The above figures are based upon a sample survey made in April 1947 by the Bureau of the Census. The income data are those of 1946 and comprise total money income of families exclusive of income in kind. The above table is comparable with that prepared by the Bureau in 1940: U. S. Bureau of the Census, 1940, Population and Housing, Families, Tenure and Rent, p. 96.

That many low-income families can buy homes and do not need public housing assistance is shown by the fact that many such families are actually buying homes. This is brought out in the following table, which also explodes the idea that lower priced homes are not available.

Purchases of homes in 1947 by American families

In 1947 approximately 2,200,000 houses were purchased by American families—700,000 new houses and 1,500,000 used houses. Of the total, 858,000, or 39 percent, were purchased by families with annual incomes under $3,000. Only 396,000, or 18 percent of the homes purchased last year, were purchased by families with incomes over $5,000. Eighty percent of all homes purchased last year had a price under $10,000. Forty percent of all homes purchased last year had a price under $5,000. Certainly these facts do not indicate that suitable private homes are not available in the lower price ranges as the advocates of Government housing indicate, nor that all families making less than $2,500 or $3,000 need public assistance to obtain adequate housing. Incidentally, it is interesting to note that 38 percent of the 7,200,000 automobiles, new and used, bought by American families in 1947 were purchased by families with annual incomes under $3,000, with about 10 percent of all under-$3,000-a-year families buying automobiles last year.

Additional data show purchases of homes in 1946 and intended purchases in 1948 which shed further light on the ability of low-income families to purchase homes. These data are given below:

Actual and intended purchases of homes by American families

Annual family income	Percentage of all families buying homes
	Actual purchases—		Intended purchases, 1948	Total purchases, 1946–48
	In 1946	In 1947
$1,000 to $1,999	6	3	2	11
$2,000 to $2,999	7	4	6	17
$3,000 to $4,999	8	7	8	23
$5,000 and over	13	6	10	29
All families	7	5	5	17

Source: Federal Reserve Board, 1948 Survey of Consumer Finances, pt. I, Expenditures for Durable Goods, table 4.

If the intended purchases for this year are made, 17 percent of all families with incomes from $2,000 to $3,000 a year will have become owners in the 3-year period of 1946 through 1948. The proportion is not significantly less than the percentage of $3,000-to-$5,000-a-year families who will have become home owners, and further bears out the ability of many of the lower-income families to take care of their own housing needs.

Of the 15,250,000 home-owning families in this country, 23.2 percent have incomes less than $2,000 a year, and 45.5 percent have incomes less than $3,000 a year. Thus almost half of America's home owners are in the income group that advocates of public housing say need some governmental assistance in acquiring and maintaining suitable living accommodations. Detailed data on the incomes of home-owning and tenant families are in the following table:

Income of all nonfarm families, home owners, and tenants, as of April 1947

Annual family income	All families	Home owners	Tenants
	Percent of total	Percent of total	Percent of total
Under $2,000	25.8	23.2	28.8
$2,000 to $2,999	24.6	22.3	27.1
$3,000 to $3,999	20.3	20.2	20.4
$4,000 to $4,999	11.7	12.3	11.0
$5,000 and over	17.5	22.0	12.7
Total	[1] 100.0	[2] 100.0	[3] 100.0

[1] Or 29,679,000 families.
[2] Or 15,250,000 families.
[3] Or 14,401,000 families.

NOTE.—The total of all families includes a small number not reporting on tenure.

Source: U. S. Bureau of the Census, Current Population Reports, series P-60, No. 3, table 6.

With the facts showing the large percentage of home ownership by families of low income, the large purchases of homes in recent years by families of low income and the fact that home-owning families have about the same average income as do tenant families, the conclusion is inescapable that home ownership is possible for practically every American family and that the majority of low-income families do not need public assistance in their housing problem. The taxes on the homes of American families, almost half of which are owned by families with incomes less than $3,000 a year, should not have to be used to subsidize homes for other and possibly less thrifty families with incomes under $3,000 a year.

The constant rise of home ownership plus production of new housing at the current record rate of about 1,000,000 units a year mean a steady if not rapid improvement in the quality of housing, since those who own their homes are careful about maintaining property values and anxious to improve them. Recent Census Bureau data, in fact, show that the physical condition of American housing in 1947 was at an all-time high with only 6.8 percent of all dwelling units in need of major repair compared to 11.4 percent in 1940.

It is obvious that the past 8 years have seen the greatest progress toward home ownership and high standards of housing ever made in this country. Endangering continued progress in home ownership is the tendency of cities to throw the entire cost of local government, schools, and other public services on home and property owners. Another threat to home-ownership progress is the program of public officials to build houses and apartments for a portion of the voters, such houses and most of their share of the cost of government, schools, and services to be paid for by the taxes of the others.

Why Is Meat Scarce?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. A. L. MILLER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, nearly every day someone points his finger at the farmer and blames him for the high cost of meat. Let us examine the record. If you do you will discover that this administration and the Department of Agriculture are the arch villain in the scene.

Let us look at the record and place the blame where it belongs. I claim it is the Department of Agriculture who either through ignorance—downright stupidity—or actual design has brought about a shortage of meat.

I have before me the record of the Department of Agriculture for the past 10 years and their recommendations. It shows that with the start of the OPA the number of cattle, hogs, and sheep have declined on our farms and this with the recommendations of the Department of Agriculture. The figures I give you are from the Department's own news releases.

WHY LESS CATTLE?

Mr. Speaker, the cattle population in 1944 was 85,573,000. Two years later it was 81,207,000. Mr. Truman and the Agriculture Department recommended they be reduced 2,707,000 in 1947 and it was done. Today, according to their report, we have 78,564,000 head of all kinds of cattle in this country. Now listen to this, you consumers and meat eaters. Mr. Truman's Department of Agriculture recommends that the farmer reduce his breeding herds by 517,000 head for this next year. It is unbelievable but here it is in the Department's release.

WHAT IS THE RECORD ON HOGS?

In 1943 the spring pig crop was 74,223,000. The fall crop 47,584,000. Now what was the Agricultural Department's goal for 1946? Well here it is, 51,651,000 spring pigs, a reduction of nearly 23,000,000 head.

The Department out of one side of their mouth was telling the people there would be a shortage of pork and at the same time the other side of the mouth asked the farmer in 1948 to produce 2,780,000 less head of pigs than in 1947. This year the goals are raised, but, Mr. Speaker, it takes at least a year to produce pork and from 2 to 3 years to produce beef.

WHAT ABOUT SHEEP?

The records show that in 1942 we had 55,120,000 head of sheep and lambs in this country and then, Mr. Speaker, came OPA with regulations and careful planning with recommendations until today the sheep and lamb population is about 35,332,000, a reduction of nearly 20,000,000 head. The same story from the Department's own records could be told about poultry and eggs. Yes; Mr. Speaker, professional planners of the Wallace days must believe you can have prosperity through scarcity. Oh, the orders the farmers have had. Do you remember Luckman's order to reduce poultry to save grain? Marketing livestock at light weights? And a deluge of advice from Washington to the farmers?

Mr. Speaker, our population increases about one and one-half million each year—it means more mouths to feed—why should the Department of Agriculture ask for fewer breeding cows? Do they actually want a shortage so they can get more power through a rationing and price-control program? I have tried to seek the answer from the Department but to no avail. Mr. Speaker, we need more production, not less. I believe it will take a new administration with a brand new philosophy before the present evils can be eliminated. Certainly the law of supply and demand cannot be repealed. You colleagues who clamor for the return of the OPA should remember it meant less meat, black markets and oppressive snoopers everywhere. It just cannot work in peacetime.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat we need more production of meat, not less. The reduction of a half million head of cows means less, not more. The blame for less meat is on the doorstep of Mr. Truman's Department of Agriculture.

Postscript Apropos

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES H. MORRISON

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, in many of the letters that I have sent to Louisiana I have added the following postscript which I think is apropos:

P. S.—Due to the fact that I was called to Washington for the special session, I had to leave Louisiana in the midst of my campaign. I, therefore, am leaving my campaign in your hands and you may rest assured that I will deeply and sincerely appreciate your support and vote in my behalf, which will bring victory to us on Tuesday, August 31.

Sincerely,

JIMMY MORRISON.

Displaced Persons Admitted to United States Must Be Carefully Screened

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ARTHUR G. KLEIN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, under leave, I am introducing into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a most interesting article by Mr. Abraham C. Duker, the distinguished English-language editor of the Jewish Day, a daily newspaper published in New York.

The thesis of Mr. Duker's argument is that among the thousands of displaced persons who are bona fide refugees from terror and annihilation are many hidden Nazi sympathizers, especially among the DP's from the Baltic areas and from the Ukraine, who collaborated with the Hitler horror regime and have the blood of thousands of innocent persons on their hands—the blood of people whose only crime was their religious belief or their loyalty to their own countries.

His remarks are given point by the tragically discriminatory Displaced Persons Act passed before adjournment. This law deliberately gives preference to some of the quislings and traitors from the Slavic and Baltic areas.

In justice to the Department of the Army, the Department of State, and the Department of Justice, I want to point out that the screening process proposed by Mr. Duker already is being carried out, chiefly by the use of Counter Intelligence Corps reports, and care is being used to avoid the immigration to the United States of known Nazis.

The article follows:

ON THE NEED FOR SCREENING DISPLACED PERSONS APPLYING FOR ENTRY INTO THE UNITED STATES

(By Abraham G. Duker)

Much has been said and written about the problem of the displaced persons in Europe, and America's meager role in solving it. The hesitancy which the United States has been displaying in meeting this problem by opening our doors to the tired people now entering their fourth year of life in the camps, can be atoned for only by liberalizing our immigration laws, a solution devoutedly to be hoped for. However, in the righteous concern expressed for aiding DP's, and the resultant appeals to public opinion on their behalf, no mention has been made of the presence among the DP's of Nazi collaborationists of many nations, so that the United States now faces the danger of admitting among the many worth-while victims of totalitarianism from all groups and faiths, also elements unworthy of our hospitality and incapable of becoming good citizens of this great democracy. Unfortunately, public opinion, as well as Government authorities, in this country, to judge by editorial expression and utterances of spokesmen for many groups, is not aware of this danger. This may be due to several factors. One is the sanctity attached to the term political refugee; another is distrust of Russia; a third is the understandable clamorings of the spokesmen for certain national and religious groups in our population; a fourth factor, and not the least one, is the lack of genuine information on the composition of DP's, most of whom are erroneously thought of as former slave laborers. Behind this is the American faith in the individual, a basic and permanent structure of our civilization. This attitude is best illustrated by the DP bill of 1948, which gives preference in admission to the United States to the Volksdeutsche, Hitler's fifth column, who were evicted from Czechoslovakia, Poland, and other countries.

It is the purpose of this paper to call attention to the doubtful elements among the DP's, other than the Volksdeutsche, so that measures may be immediately considered to rigidly screen the applicants for entry to the United States.

VOLUNTEER NAZI HELPERS

There is ample and indisputable evidence available in proof of the contention that the DP camps harbor large numbers of Lithuanians, Latvians, Estonians, White Ruthenians, Ukrainians, Poles, Hungarians, Croats, and Slovaks, who voluntarily joined the Nazis and loyally and devotedly served them during the period of occupation. Their cooperation was indispensable to the Nazis in the extermination of the Jews, the hunting down of partisans, recruitment of forced labor and the elimination of "unreliable" (meaning anti-Nazi) elements.

This is proven from a host of documents found in Nazi archives, as well as from depositions by survivors. Without them none of these tasks could have been accomplished. For instance, SS Obergruppenfuehrer Erich von dem Bach-Zalewski, who was in charge of annihilating partisans on the Soviet front and of subduing the Warsaw Revolt of 1944, has repeatedly declared in memoranda and interrogations that the Einsatzgruppen (Special Extermination Commandos), which massacred Jews and partisans were so small in numbers and knew so little about the areas of operation, that without the active aid of the local collaborationists, their effectiveness would have been greatly reduced. The weekly intelligence reports of the SS and SD which were found in Baldur von Schirach's archives in Vienna, now located in Nuremberg, present in detail the operations carried out against the partisans with the aid of the Eastern callaborationists. Survivors of partisan bands uniformly declare that both they and the villagers dreaded far more the collaborationist militias and local informers than the Nazis, who were few in number and rarely, if at all, conversant with the dialects and localities. For instance, because of their ignorance of the peasant dialects Nazis could not enter villages in groups in the guise of partisans. The dirty work was done by the local quislings. Hans Frank noted time and again in his diary, in reports and in his testimony at the trials, the numerical inferiority of the Germans in Poland and referred to the reliance that had to be placed mostly on Ukrainians and to some extent also on "loyal" Poles.

THE BALTS' UGLY RECORD

In view of the favorable judgment about the Balts expressed in the report of the General Counsel of the Kilgore committee of November 1946, and even more so in the report of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary of March 1948, it should be noted that many members of these national groups, the Estonians, Latvians, and Lithuanians, in conjunction with the Ukrainians and Croats, were especially egregious collaborationists. Nazi myth had it that the Balts had blood kinship with the Germans. They were accordingly given preferential treatment. The task of the Ukrainians was to help in the extermination of Jews, Poles, and Russians, while the Balts, in addition to aiding the extermination of Jews and partisans in their own countries, would also be used in other areas. Although the attitude toward the Ukrainian population at large—but not to the collaborationist element—changed, for diverse reasons, about 1943, the Balts continued to be Nazi favorites to the end. The Nazi scheme called for the immediate annihilation of Jews, for the extermination of Poles and Russians by degrees; the Balts and Ukrainians were to be preserved.

The Nazi documents submitted by Justice Jackson at the Nuremberg Trial disclose much about the Balts' collaboration with the Nazis. Few documents can necessarily be cited here, but they should suffice both to show the extent of the collaboration, as well as to dissipate the fiction that the Balts and Ukrainians have fled merely because of their love of freedom.

NAZIS CHOOSE THEIR ALLIES

Early in their war against the Soviet Union, the Germans singled out a number of nationalities for favorable treatment when it came to the repatriation of war prisoners. Thus document 1519–PS, 8 September, 1941, "Subject: Treatment of Soviet Prisoners of War", states:

"Members of the following racial groups must be speedily sent home: Racial Germans, Ukrainians, White Ruthenians, Latvians, Estonians, Rumanians, Finns, Lithuanians."

The enemy Balts, Ukrainians, and White Russians were thus placed in the same category with racial Germans, Rumanians, and Finns, all Axis members. They were not to undergo execution, forced labor or starvation. Moreover, these collaborationists were freely accepted in the German Army, not merely in the native police.

The Germans were satisfied with their "allies". Document 294–PS, 25 October 1942, a report by Dr. Breutigam, the leading specialist in the Eastern Ministry, states:

"Wherever Ukrainians, Russians, White Russians and members of the Baltic people were in the Wehrmacht or in the police, they have proved themselves and have fought excellently almost without exception."

Document 1520–PS, 13 May 1942, is a record of a conversation between Hitler and Minister for Eastern Affairs Alfred Rosenberg, held on May 8, regarding Nazi policies in the East. Among the matters discussed was the question of awarding the iron cross—Germany's traditional award for extraordinary bravery—to Estonians, Lithuanians, and Latvians. Rosenberg observed that the "armed forces are in favor of such awards."

Document 437–PS, 19 June, 1943, which is a memorandum addressed to Hitler by Hans Frank, the butcher of Poland, reads:

"The Ukrainians, Goralen (then Carpathian mountaineers), White Russians, Caucasians, and Tartars remained very much safe from actions against the security of their persons or their property. To a great extent they also had the possibility, although under German supervision, to be active according to their national characteristics in the cultural field and the educational system. * * * As a consequence of this considerably better treatment of non-Polish national groups of the General Government, these showed from the beginning a general open-mindedness toward German goals and especially toward the necessities of war. * * * The silently recognized representative organization of these national groups together with their religious congregation have always employed themselves actively and propagandistically for the German demands * * * above that, these national groups have expressed again and again their desire to be allowed to stand up with weapons in their hands against the Soviets, and have emphasized this readiness for active commitment by reporting as volunteers."

Elsewhere in the report, Frank emphasized the "voluntary performances of the favored national groups."

NATIVE VOLUNTEER DETACHMENTS

Even more instructive are the following quotations from Document L–180, 15 October, 1941, the SS and SD report on the extermination in Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia, of 135,567 Jews and partisans (mainly Jews), from 23 June to 15 October, 1941:

"Immediately after the capture, the security police formed volunteer detachments from reliable natives in all three Baltic provinces; they carried out their duties successfully under our command. During the first pogrom on the night of 25–26 June, the Lithuanian partisans did away with 1,500 Jews, set fire to several synagogues or destroyed them by other means and burned down a Jewish dwelling district consisting of about 60 houses. During the following nights about 2,300 Jews were made harmless in a similar way. In other parts of Lithuania, similar actions followed the example of Kowno (Kaunas), though smaller and extending to the Communists who had been left behind. * * * It was possible through similar influences on the Latvian auxiliary to set in motion a pogrom against Jews in Riga. During this pogrom all synagogues were destroyed and about 400 Jews were killed. * * * The arrest of all male Jews of over 16 years of age has been nearly finished. With the exception of doctors and the Jewish Elders who were appointed by the Special Commandos, they were executed by the Self-Protection Units under the control of the Special Detachment." (Self-Protection Unit was the designation of the Estonian collaborationists.)

SPECIALISTS IN POGROMS

S. S. Gruppenfuhrer Dr. Stahlecker, the author of the report, gives ungrudging credit to his Lithuanian coworkers in adding:

"This is so much easier because the action detachments in Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia have at their disposal native police units, as described in enclosure No. 1." (Lithuanians are voluntarily and untiringly at our disposal for all measures against Jews, sometimes they even execute such measures on thir own.) (Editor's parentheses.) The same document also mentions the shipment of 150 Latvian reinforcements to White Russia (p. 983).

Document 2273–PS, end of December 1941, being a further report by the SS and SD, states:

"As a result of the pogroms carried out by the Lithuanians, who were nevertheless substantially assisted by Sipo and SD, 3,800 Jews in Kowno and 1,200 in the smaller towns were eliminated."

The same report adds that in Latvia the executions were carried out "with the help of forces picked from the Latvian auxiliary police."

LIQUIDATE WHITE RUSSIANS AND JEWS

Document 1104-PS, October 30, 1941, being a report by a German officer on massacres in the White Russian town of Slutzk, states:

"With indescribable brutality on the part of the German police officers and particularly the Lithuanian partisans, the Jewish people, but also among them the White Russians, were taken out of their dwellings and herded together."

OPERATIONS AGAINST PARTISANS

During the war, Americans read with admiration about the achievements of the Red partisans (not the Baltic collaborationists named in the documents cited above). The Balts, White Russians, and Ukrainians, who knew the locale, the people, and the dialects engaged in hunting down partisans from the earliest stages of the war to the collapse of the eastern front. Document L-180, cited above, reads:

"For example, it may be understood the armed forces suffered not inconsiderable losses through guerrillas in Riga, on the left of the Dvina River; on the right bank of the river. However, after these volunteer detachments had been organized in Riga, not a single soldier was injured, although these Latvian detachments suffered some killed and wounded in fighting Russian stragglers. * * * In Lithuania, activist and nationalist persons formed themselves into so-called partisan units at the beginning of the eastern campaign, in order to take active part in the fight against bolshevism. According to their own report they suffered 4,000 casualties."

Four thousand casualties would indicate a large number of participants. Local informers (whose identity was known to the villagers) kept the Nazi informed about the movements of the partisans and more especially about those peasants who extended them aid. The same report relates:

"The network of information thus built up yielded much information for the Action Group, thus enabling them to surround more narrowly the quarters of the partisans. * * * Those captured were either shot off-hand or if further interrogation produced useful information, taken to headquarters. After the interrogation they were shot. * * * Houses where partisans obtained food or shelter were burnt down. When a large number of villagers helped the partisans, the whole village was burnt down as a punishment and in order to create terror."

Document 1113-PS, 6 November, 1942, is a brief report on operation Marsh fever against partisans in White Russia. During the operation 389 bandits were shot in combat, 1,274 suspicious persons sentenced and shot, 8,350 Jews executed, 1,217 persons evacuated. The report also states that the "Fifteenth Latvian Police Battalion" participated in the operation. It would not be impossible to find out whether former members of these battalions are still in the DP camps. It is not unlikely that some of them have already been admitted to the United States.

As the war continued and the Nazis grew progressively short of personnel, they recruited Balts in increasing numbers. Later documents show them participating in massacres in Poland, while at the same time, Ukranians were brought to Lithuania to effect resettlement and carry out executions.

UKRAINIANS MOST ACTIVE

The Ukrainians, by reason of their larger numbers and historic hatred of Poles and Jews, proved themselves particularly pernicious collaborationists. The decision to employ them was reached by the Germans long before the War.

Rosenberg, the Nazi Minister for Eastern Affairs, himself a German Balt, was also a philo-Ukrainian. Document 1039-PS, April 1941, entitled "Report on the Preparatory Work in Eastern European Questions" cites special studies on "German law in the Ukraine, German Art in the Ukraine, influence of the German language on the Ukrainian language, the Ukrainians from the viewpoint of Germans."

On November 22, 1941, Rosenberg issued a declaration stating according to Koch, that "the Ukrainians were strongly permeated with German blood, which fact accounts for their remarkable cultural and scientific achievements." A decree dated July 1942, ordered Germans not only to behave correctly toward the Ukrainians but also to exhibit amiable manners in dealing with them (Document 192-PS, 15 March 1942, pp. 14-15).

Even Rosenberg's antagonist Erich Koch, Commissioner of the Ukraine, who was criticized by Rosenberg for his lack of sympathy with the Germanic mental endowments of the Ukrainians, stated that he planned his "political activity among others, to the end that the contrasts between Ukrainian and Muscovite nationals were closely brought out in order to separate the Ukrainians from the great Slavonic bloc under Russian leadership" (Document 192-PS, p. 14).

Leaders of the Ukrainian "nationalist" movement, Bandera and Melnyk, readily joined the Nazis in the expectation that Hitler would create a totalitarian Ukraine under their leadership, free of Poles and Jews. At a conference held in Hitler's train on August 12, 1939, it was decided that "a revolt can be incited through the organization Melnyk, which would aim at the destruction of Poles and Jews."

It also was decided that the German radio was to announce upon the outbreak of the war:

"The German armed forces do not have any hostile intentions against the Ukrainian population in Poland."

Document 053-PS, October 1941, cites the following from a directive by the Melnyk gang:

"It is to be pointed out that Germany is at war with Moscow and therefore is our ally which one must support in battle."

UKRAINIANS CULTIVATED IN POLAND

The following entries in the dairy of Hans Frank, the butcher of Poland, are significant:

"The fuehrer lays stress upon the recognition of the Ukrainian element in the government general as an element which must be regarded as anti-Polish and pro-German * * *. In the village confidential agents were recruited and a guard unit formed from military-trained Ukrainians for the protection of factories. It was difficult to judge, however how trustworthy this Ukrainian unit would be in case of emergency. But today we can reply on them, as the Ukrainian defense unit is the deadly enemy of the Poles * * *. S. S. Major General Streckenbach states that a number of Ukrainians were admitted into the self-protection units, to be trained and later to be assigned to police offices as auxiliary policemen or as agents, where they can render highly valuable service as experts on the country and the people, and as enemies of the Poles" (March 1940).

S. S. Capt. Dr. Hans Koch reported in October 1941 (document 053-PS):

"A permanent security police force is in every town in Ukraine. It draws its replacements from newly captured Ukrainians, is entirely under German command and wears the blue-yellow brassard."

Address of James A. Farley at Democratic National Convention, Seconding the Nomination of Hon. Alben W. Barkley, of Kentucky

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HERBERT R. O'CONOR

OF MARYLAND

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, August 2 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, because of his long years of loyal service to his country and his party, and of the esteem in which he is held by Members on both sides of the aisle, I believe it is entirely in order that any honor or praise bestowed upon Minority Leader ALBEN W. BARKLEY be given deserved publicity. I, therefore, ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD the address of the Honorable James A. Farley of New York, seconding the nomination of Senator BARKLEY for the Vice Presidency of the United States, during the Democratic National Convention in Philadelphia.

Mr. Farley's eulogy will be echoed, I feel sure, in the hearts of every Member of the Senate, regardless of party affiliation.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It is, as always, an honor and a pleasure to stand before you. I appreciate the warmth of your welcome. I can only say thank you, and may I repeat what I have said so many times, it's great to be a Democrat.

I come before you to second the nomination for the Vice Presidency of one of the party's ablest leaders and most faithful servants. For almost half a century he has served his party, his State, and his country. For 35 of those years he served in the Halls of Congress. From 1937 through 1946 he was the Senate leader, in a period of economic and military crises, and in this role he was a maker of history and a servant of the world.

Throughout these years he has at all times been a great Democrat and a great American. He has fought to advance freedom at home and abroad, ever steering his course by the principles of the party, which was born with the country and will ever be a beacon light of liberty.

Never did he falter in devotion to the party or the country, and his love for both was equaled only by his service. Few men in history have made a greater contribution to the party or to the country.

The time has come for this convention to offer him belated honor by naming him for the second highest office at the hands of the American people, the Vice-Presidency of the United States. Surely no one is more qualified by experience and temperament to preside over the Senate and add his voice to administration councils.

His choice will be welcomed throughout the ranks of our party. His great talents have long been at the party's service. Many times in the past has he fired you to greater efforts and he will again give freely of his great heart in the months ahead.

Ladies and gentlemen of the convention, I am deeply honored and I honor you by seconding the nomination of that stalwart son of democracy and my great and good friend, ALBEN W. BARKLEY, of Kentucky, for the Vice Presidency of the United States.

Truth About Inflation Is Revealed in Eccles' Warning to Truman

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HUBERT S. ELLIS
OF WEST VIRGINIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, in referring to the President's proposals now being considered by the Congress, I direct your attention to a statement made in the press a few days ago by David Lawrence, able commentator on economic matters.

The statement follows:

TRUTH ABOUT INFLATION IS REVEALED IN ECCLES' WARNING TO TRUMAN—PRESIDENT'S POWER HELD AMPLE TO BEGIN MOVES TOWARD DEFLATION

(By David Lawrence)

The truth about the inflationary situation is slowly emerging, and it isn't a pleasant story.

The Federal Reserve Board last January warned the President—Marriner Eccles, former chairman, has now testified—that the boom could be and should be controlled and credit curbs applied but Mr. Truman deleted the recommendation from his message to Congress and demoted Mr. Eccles.

Many people in Washington suspected this at the time. Basically there was a substantial amount of agreement with Mr. Eccles' ideas but every one knew also that a curb on credit would start a depression and perhaps a severe one.

This being a Presidential year, naturally the President and his administration didn't want to start deflation and bring on a depression.

POWERS CALLED AMPLE

Mr. Truman has ample powers now to set deflationary moves into operation. But he doesn't want to accept the responsibility for unemployment and bankruptcies that may ensue. He presumably wants the boom to continue during the campaign while he seeks political benefit at the polls for high wages and high farm income but places responsibility on the Republicans for the high cost of living.

The Republicans are going to use their opportunities at the present session to bring out in public hearings the failure of Mr. Truman to use the control powers he already has. What is the use, they ask, of passing more legislation when the President refuses to use what powers he already possesses?

Mr. Eccles put a damper on housing legislation—one of Mr. Truman's pet projects. He pointed out that easy credit for housing was inflationary. It was causing a shortage of building materials, the prices for which were being bid up by the artificial demand arising from easy credit.

The Republicans are pointing to the export controls already granted by Congress to the President. Mr. Truman hasn't used those controls for the simple reason that he doesn't want to start a depression before election anyway. Yet, apart from the Marshall plan subsidy, exports are booming.

Mr. Truman's anti-inflation proposals are going to be thoroughly riddled before Congress gets through with its 15-day session. The talk of credit controls is already making the financial markets somewhat uneasy. But the fact is that the bankers are strenuously opposed to any increase in the reserve requirements and favor instead a raising of the rediscount rate. This, in turn, might force commercial interest rates up somewhat.

ARGUMENT OF RATES

The argument for increasing the rediscount rate at which banks may borrow from the Federal Reserve System is that this power doesn't require any legislation and that the trouble with the credit structure is that it is artificially sustained by the Government itself. To the suggestion that a rise in rediscount rates may result in a falling of rates on Government bonds because these may be sold to get the funds to meet a tighter credit situation, the answer is made that the Government itself can stabilize the bond market and will do so.

The bankers feel that to increase reserves may operate unevenly in impairing the Nation's lending system at a time when high inventories and pay rolls require most businesses to use more working capital than ever before. Certainly the whole credit situation is fraught with the greatest delicacy and it can be understood why, just before a national election. Mr. Truman doesn't want to exercise any drastic powers he already has and yet would like to blame the Republicans for failing to give him more power.

The debate in Congress will bring out a good many things that have hitherto been more or less soft-pedalled about the credit situation. Also it will focus attention on the manner in which wage rises have forced prices upward. It is significant that Mr. Truman's recommendations on wage control are limited to a few items that would be placed under price ceilings. Obviously, unless there is comprehensive wage control, there cannot be much influence in keeping prices down. But again Mr. Truman doesn't want to appear as favoring wage controls because he is anxious to hold the labor-union vote. So it's just politics that is being played now as the economic problems of the Nation grow more and more complex.

Let the 29 Latvians Stay

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EMANUEL CELLER
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I have today offered a bill to enable the 29 Latvian refugees who crossed the Atlantic Ocean seeking refuge in the United States to remain permanently in the United States.

They had no passports or visas and are thus barred under our immigration laws from entry into the country. They cannot qualify as displaced persons under the definition adopted by the present Displaced Persons Act.

But they do possess unmistakable courage and their unwritten credential which is the eagerness and determination to live as free men should enable them to enter this country as immigrants.

This is a case where there must be congressional intervention. These 29 pilgrims have proven themselves worthy of the freedom they seek.

An Inequity in German Justice

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ARTHUR G. KLEIN
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, every American is eager to have the benefits of a truly democratic way of life extended, by democratic methods, to all of the world. We are frequently amused by the faltering steps of the people of the totalitarian states vanquished in the Second World War to achieve what they believe to be democratic processes.

There is nothing amusing, however, in an illustration of German temperament brought to my attention by Mr. Robert H. Reiter, a young lawyer associated with Le Roy & Denslow here in Washington, in which the characteristic German attitude of placing crimes against property far above crimes against persons is strikingly illustrated.

To avoid spoiling Mr. Reiter's graphic description of the incident, I insert his letter, under leave, in the RECORD so that you may read for yourself of a serious maladjustment in German concepts of equal justice:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 30, 1948.

Hon. ARTHUR G. KLEIN,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. KLEIN: I have rather recently returned from a 4-month trip to Continental Europe, taking me to most of the principal countries which are not behind the iron curtain. I was very much interested in the processes of justice in the various countries, and particularly in our occupation zones of Austria and Germany, where our military government authorities have an opportunity to influence beneficially the reconstitution of a proper system for the administration of justice.

It seems to me that one of the elements which should be stressed in our attempts to enlighten the populations of the occupied areas, which have so long been exposed to bigotry and despotism, is an appreciation of the meaning of humanitarianism and a consideration of the underlying motives entering into human behavior. One aspect of this problem is sentencing, that is, uniformity and consideration of the background and motives involved in each case. For example, one case which struck me as indicative was told to me by an important Austrian attorney in Salzburg. The facts in that case were fairly typical, I believe. That was the case of Walter Gefall.

Walter Gefall is an Austrian engineer, partly of Jewish descent. During the Nazi regime in Austria, when the Jews were being forced to sacrifice their belongings to party members at nominal prices, he was approached by a number of Jews having an interest in stocks of textiles in Salzburg. Instead of purchasing the goods at the nominal rate at which Jewish goods were offered Gefall paid the Jews the full price for the textiles. He then placed the goods in a secret place and walled them up for safe keeping.

Several years later, Walter Gefall, now a member of the German armed forces, was detailed to conduct a group of Jewish prisoners to a certain concentration camp. At a certain moment when the Russian armies were dangerously close, an order came through to kill all the prisoners. Similar orders were given to numerous other detachments, and thousands of Jews perished in this last act of Nazi bestiality. Gefall, instead of obeying the order to wipe out the prisoners, freed them and helped them to escape. He commandeered food and transportation from the local populace and assisted them in going into hiding.

Shortly after Walter Gefall returned to Salzburg the goods which he had hidden were discovered and Gefall was arrested for failing to disclose their existence. He was convicted and sentenced to 4½ years imprisonment. It is this sentence which drew my attention. This case should be compared to other cases of a more serious nature. There was a case, for example, of a number of Nazis who were convicted of killing 130 Jews at Donnerskirchen. Upon conviction these men were given sentences ranging as low as 4 months.

It seems to me that this problem is one of education. The military government authorities in charge of education and law in the occupied areas should attempt to give education in democratic political processes, but also in democratic judicial processes. Uniformity of sentence is one of the hallmarks of the democratic judicial system, and in this, as well as the other areas of justice and law, there is much to be done in the reintroduction of basic concepts of right and humanity.

Yours very truly,

ROBERT H. REITER.

Let's Have the Facts

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROBERT F. RICH
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Bristol (Pa.) Courier of July 28, 1948:

LET'S HAVE THE FACTS

What looks suspiciously like a New Deal scheme to keep the lid down on the workings of the Marshall plan and the new free trade agreements for the duration of the campaign is revealed by an official Government publication from Washington, the Foreign Trade Statistics Notes, issued by the United States Department of Commerce (June edition).

The idea seems to be that, on the pretext of not having money enough to do the work, detailed figures and other information about these two Truman programs are to be suppressed by the Federal Government until sometime in the distant future.

Here is a matter for the attention of Congress. If, as some commentators are saying, there is really nothing that the special session can do about the proposals of the President, it can at least justify itself by seeing that the American people are given the facts, fully and promptly, about these two highly important matters.

On the face of it, all that is involved is another case where a New Deal bureau, sulky because Congress didn't give it every last cent it asked for, plans to go on a sit-down strike in rendering the public service for which it was created.

The publication, which says it was "prepared under the supervision of J. Edward Ely, chief, Foreign Trade Division, Bureau of the Census," declares that the slow-down in information is "a result of reduction in resources available."

For this reason, eight proposed "retrenchments in the statistical program" are announced, with the ominous note that "other necessary retrenchments" will be announced later.

From the general public point of view, it might seem that some of these retrenchments make little difference. The man in the street, for example, isn't waiting with bated breath for the appearance of Foreign Commerce and Navigation, year 1945.

For that reason, it doesn't disturb him to be informed that this report, already 3 years overdue, will not be worked on at all for the present year; and that volume 1, although now being printed, will be impounded and not released "at best until a number of months after the beginning of fiscal 1950."

But the information in that report is of great importance to three large groups of Americans: first, those engaged in foreign trade; second, analysts and economists trying to determine where the Nation is headed; and third, the political interpreters seeking to lay the issues of the coming election fairly before the public.

The fact of the matter is that the year 1945, the report on which is to be suppressed till long after the election although now actually being printed, was a strange and distorted year, in which our highly debatable post-war foreign policy first made itself known.

Can it be that there is information in this report which would be embarrassing to the Truman administration, and that it is the reason why it is being suppressed?

There were many astounding measures taken that year. Lend-lease itself was in full flower for a space—and then abruptly cancelled. After it was officially cancelled, however, millions of dollars in American goods continued to be given away free to foreign countries—goods given to "win the war" already over, and embracing vast quantities of commodities which never had the remotest connection with winning the war.

For example, the bulk of the big French lend-lease gift wasn't shipped until after the war, and a huge proportion of this consisted of peacetime articles which, at that period, were desperately short on the American home front.

Vast amounts of consumer goods, as well as unquestionably a lot of military equipment some of which is now threatening us in Berlin, was shipped to Russia or to Russian satellites in that year.

Moreover, it is possible that this impounded volume contains the first adequate figures on that strangest of all the economic monstrosities of the New Deal era—"reverse lend-lease," the cock-eyed scheme by which Uncle Sam bribed, with gold belonging to the American people, various foreign nations to accept the gifts of lend-lease itself!

This whole field of information has been garbled and suppressed, much as were the scandals of the Pearl Harbor episode. And it is an unhappy fact that Congress, burdened with other matters and partly hypnotized with the "bipartisan" complex on foreign policy, has largely failed to ask any embarrassing questions about these transactions.

But the people are entitled to know the facts.

They are also entitled to know just as much as can be compiled about how the Marshall plan, or ERP, or ECA—whichever name you prefer—is working out.

The debate over this controversial program hasn't been finished yet. The charge that at least a quarter, and probably a third, of these expenditures are waste, nonsense and pure "water" has never been answered. The House objections to certain details in the program were silenced, not by facts, but by the broad Senate position that Congress was "committed" to take the program in the full amount, as is—without going into the question of whether $2,000,000,000 of the American people's money was or was not being wasted.

The one way by which it can ever be learned whether the program makes sense is to get the figures that show what commodities are being given away (bills paid by the American people) to which countries.

But the announcement of the Bureau of the Census raises great question whether such information will be revealed during the current campaign. Congress certainly should make it its business to be sure that it is released, just as fast as it can be compiled.

Since the report's statement is written in the familiar "gobble-de-gook" of the bureaucrats, full of references to such items as "Tables IM 145," "commodity and country identification shown in code only," "the machine tabulation EM 544," etc., etc., the exact intention of the Bureau with reference to these programs is far from clear.

But it is obvious that certain previous statistics are to be withheld, that certain digests and compilations are to be discontinued, that all reports hereafter will be released "several days later than at present," and that, as noted above, still further unspecified "retrenchments" are in mind.

This can only mean that it will be much harder, if not impossible, hereafter to turn to the one official report of what the Government is doing with American money in foreign aid, and get the essential facts.

Equally annoying to American producers who want to deal in foreign trade, or who need to know where they stand with reference to foreign competition, is the Bureau's announcement that its long delayed schedule A, already many months overdue, will not be issued until after the end of the fiscal year—which, incidentally, means that this text book on trade agreements matters will not be issued until after the expiration of the present Trade Agreements Act next summer.

Schedule A, little known to the public, is the bible of those engaged in production of goods intended to be sold abroad, or who compete with imports from other nations. It contains the masterlist, of commodity classifications with their tariff rates.

We have here one of the most astonishing instances of suppression of vital information by a government in the history of this or any other nation.

Secrecy has shrouded this matter from the start. The present rates were largely worked out at Geneva a year ago. Neither manufacturers nor newspapers were allowed to learn at that time even the nature of the commodities being negotiated upon, let alone the new tariff rates being discussed.

When the announcement was finally made, it was fragmentary and confusing. Further discussion on the topic took place at Habana last spring, between the United States and a score of foreign competitors. No one yet knows precisely what the outcome of this agreement was.

The result is that thousands of industrial plants and manufacturers have been waiting impatiently for schedule A as the only source in sight to tell them officially what their tariff rates are. And now they can wait another year.

It's certainly time for Congress to step in.

What Influenced Beef Prices?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. REID F. MURRAY
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the following official table shows that the United States was on a beef-importing basis from 1924 to 1945, a period of 21 years:

United States: Exports and imports of beef and veal[1] by quantity and value, product weight basis, annual, 1910–46, and January–February 1947

Source: Office of Foreign Agricultural Relations. Compiled from records and reports of the Department of Commerce.

You will note that in 1946 we exported more than 20 times as much beef as we imported.

In addition the foot-and-mouth disease in Mexico stopped the importation of over 500,000 head, and Canada put an embargo on shipments to United States so it could funnel its beef to England.

Between January 1944 and January 1948, the cattle numbers in the United States were reduced by over 6,000,000 head.

Sheep numbers were reduced by 37 percent during the past 5 years. Who reduced the hog numbers that in January were 83,000,000, but were reduced to 55,000,000 by January 1, 1948?

Then on July 24, 1948, the Department of Agriculture asked for a further reduction of a half million beef cattle numbers. You remember Mr. Luckman? Well, if the poultrymen had followed his proposals, eggs would have been few these days and the prices still higher.

Please note from the above table that while there were from 20,000,000 to 145,000,000 pounds of beef imported each year before and during the war there were only 1,500,000 pounds of beef imported in 1947. While in 1940–44 there was a net import of from 70,000,000 pounds to 117,000,000 pounds, there was a net export up to 407,000,000 pounds in 1946, and a net export of beef of 135,000,000 pounds even in 1947. Is it surprising that beef is scarce in the market place?

Anti-Inflation Program

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. KENNETH S. WHERRY
OF NEBRASKA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Monday, August 2 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an editorial entitled "Mr. Eccles Hits Back," published in the Washington Evening Star of Sunday, August 1, 1948. I am not primarily interested in the fact that Mr. Eccles hits back, but he does make a very forceful statement about housing, and the inflationary program advocated by the President. I believe that the editorial is worth reading, and I hope Senators will read it in the Appendix of the RECORD, if they have not already given it their attention.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MR. ECCLES HITS BACK

The testimony which Marriner S. Eccles, member and former Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, has given to the Senate Banking Committee very probably sounds the death knell of the anti-inflation program which President Truman put before the special session of Congress. There was, at best, only the remotest chance that Congress would approve the program. But now that a prominent member of the Truman administration, even though not in very high favor at the moment, has said that the program as a whole does not make economic sense, it is as good as dead.

Mr. Eccles believes that a "bust" is inevitable and he thinks that the sooner it comes the better, or the theory, presumably, that the longer it is delayed the more severe the crash will be.

This is a point of view which no politician can afford to adopt and which is not accepted by many economists. But whether Mr. Eccles is right or wrong in this particular respect, he is certainly correct in his contention that the Truman program, taken as a whole, is unsound.

Mr. Eccles takes a vigorous stand against the long-range housing program advocated by the President, contending that it would be inflationary to adopt it at this time. On this point he is certainly right. The midyear report of the President's economic advisers concedes that, counting conversions, more than a million new residential housing units will be built in 1948. This volume of housing is already straining the capacities of the construction industry, with respect both to materials and manpower. In this situation, enactment of the proposed housing legislation would not produce any more homes. But it would produce more inflation.

The President's program is also deficient—although Mr. Eccles did not go into these aspects—in that it proposes to curb inflation without invoking any real restraints on either farm prices or wages. These are potent sources of the inflationary movement, and as long as it is deemed inadvisable to deal with them, whether for political or other reasons, the measures which Mr. Truman does advocate would not prove very effective, even if adopted.

Tolerance in Solution of Racial Problem

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. RICHARD B. RUSSELL
OF GEORGIA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Monday, August 2 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a very interesting article written by Dorothy Thompson, which appeared in the Washington Star on Friday, July 30. It is entitled "Gradual and Expanding Tolerance Seen as Only Way To Solve Racial Problems."

I would that more of the eminent columnists of the Nation would display the fine spirit of understanding and tolerance and the same brand of courage shown by Miss Thompson in this article.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ON THE RECORD—GRADUAL AND EXPANDING TOLERANCE SEEN AS ONLY WAY TO SOLVE RACIAL PROBLEMS

(By Dorothy Thompson)

Reporting to UNESCO last week, eight social scientists representing six countries told of the results of their study on "the causes of tensions that make for war." They said: "The problem of peace is the problem of keeping group and national tensions within manageable proportions."

At the Wallace convention I began to doubt whether racial tensions would be kept within manageable proportions in the United States. The Communists, who furnish the guidance of the Progressive Party, do not want peace within the United States. They want civil war to break our external power and force our withdrawal from Europe and Asia. But it is highly significant that the appeal of the convention was far less to the class struggle than to a racial struggle, with identification established between minority racial groups and social classes.

Thus, among the banners displayed at Shibe Park, "end Jim Crow" occupied equal space with "peace, security, and freedom," as did "full friendship with Israel." The relative preponderance of Negroes in prestige positions in the convention either indicates that it "discriminated" against whites in choosing persons for prestige positions, or that the Progressive Party's membership is largely colored.

REFERENCES TO 1860

Leo Krzycki appeared not chiefly as a labor leader, but from the Communist-sympathizing American Slav congress. Leo Isacson, the Progressive Party's first Congressman, made a speech in which there was such identification between the United States and Israel as to make the latter appear to be the forty-ninth State of the Union. There were, during the convention, numerous ominous references to 1860. And at Mr. Wallace's press conference, where he said that he would, if President, end segregation in the United States Army, a Negro asked twice whether he would send Federal troops into the South to end segregation and Jim Crow.

This question Mr. Wallace dodged as he dodged all questions of substance, but the Negro journalist had asked the critical question. For segregation will not be ended in the South by Federal edict. If either armed force or other fanatical pressure is applied to enforce antisegregation, the South will revolt with consequences to the colored population which I shudder to contemplate. Also, tensions between the States and racial groups within the States will reach "unmanageable proportions."

I am not here saying what "should" happen. I am analyzing and predicting the results of a possible policy. The ideaologists who fanatically commit themselves to what they believe ought to be, disregarding all reality, do not ask themselves which is worse: Segregation or civil war?

KLAN IS RISING AGAIN

The great campaigns against social discrimination in the United States and the tendency of minority racial groups to identify the national interest with their own, are not mitigating but exacerbating tensions. The Klan is rising again with the ugliest visage in years. There is more anti-Negro feeling in the North and more suppressed anti-Semitism in the Nation than I ever have known in my lifetime.

For where racial or religious sympathies or antipathies are concerned, the forces engaged are emotional and irrational, with roots twisted all through the unconscious mind and capable, therefore, of producing the most explosive reactions.

Discrimination is a phase of human nature not confined to any group. If gentiles discriminate against Jews, so do Jews against gentiles; and so do Negroes—when the opportunity is given—as in the reconstruction era, against whites. Jewish Zionists vilify non-Zionist Jews, and anti-Semitism flourishes among the colored.

The racial problems of such a heterogeneous nation as ours cannot be "solved" except by gradually expanding tolerance over great periods of time. We have to live with them, as we have to live with all our real problems—each of us, of whatever race, bearing his share of the burden, with as much justice, mercy, and humor of which he is capable. Unroll the whole issue of race and religious prejudice in an attempt at a radical solution and, instead of brotherly love, you will promote hate; instead of social peace, civil war; instead of mercy, persecution; and instead of justice, revenge.

Pork Prices

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. REID F. MURRAY
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, just exactly who was responsible for reducing hog numbers from 83,000,000 head on January 1, 1944, to 56,000,000 on January 1, 1948? Just exactly who but the Department of Agriculture has been carrying on this antilivestock approach? Just exactly who but the administration is responsible for purchasing vegetable oil concoctions for export when twice as many calories could be purchased for the dollar in the form of animal fats like lard?

The following table, computed from statistics received from the Office of Foreign Agricultural Relations, United States Department of Agriculture, shows the large exports of pork and pork products. These exports were obtained by reducing hog numbers and were obtained by killing off the seed stock. The imports of lard and pork were very small.

The table of exports is as follows:

Pork and pork products: United States exports

[Quantity, 1,000 pounds]

	Total
1935	185,035
1940	295,148
1941	660,999
1942	1,302,728
1943	1,828,356
1944	1,989,033
1945	1,044,101
1946	714,785
1947	440,192

Who told whom that little or no meat was exported in 1947?

Russian Policy in Berlin

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ABRAHAM J. MULTER
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include an article by William H. Newton that appeared in the New York World-Telegram on Friday, July 30, 1948:

LITTLE RED LIES PLUS FAKE CHARGES ARE BASIS OF RUSSIAN POLICY IN BERLIN

(By William H. Newton)

BERLIN, July 30.—If you want to understand why the Russians act the way they do here in Berlin, you must first forget all the morality you've ever been taught.

Both the Soviets and their Communist followers frequently make statements which are contrary to facts and even are premeditated lies. They take actions which flout the rights of others, which violate existing laws and which make a travesty of justice and fair dealing.

But to the Soviets and Communist followers, there is nothing wrong in this.

To them the justification for any statement or act hinges on one question—"will it help or hurt the Soviet Union?"

If a certain charge against the Americans here will serve Soviet propaganda purposes either in Germany or in the United States, the charge is made. Whether it is true or not is irrelevant.

If you confront a Soviet official, for example, with refutation of the charge, he will smile at you. But it will not be a smile of chagrin—it will be a smile of triumph.

Whether you've proved the charge to be false is of no importance to him. What counts is that the lie served the purpose—it helped Russia.

Perhaps some simple-minded dupe in America, Henry Wallace for example, read the Russian charge and believed it, and repeated it. Thus a seed of doubt was planted.

Communists here trample on human rights and democracy. If the Soviets don't like an act of an elected city council, they reject it. If some German gets in their way, they kidnap him.

If the Communist minority in the Berlin City Council is overruled on an important vote, the Communists walk out, as they did yesterday. Then they charge the council is undemocratic.

An explosion wrecked the I. G. Farben factory in the French zone, killing several hundred persons. Before the first news bulletin cleared the wires everyone here in Berlin knew Communists in the plant would charge the Western Powers secretly had been making munitions there.

They did, immediately. Actually the factory makes paint, varnish, and lacquer. There had been similar explosions, not as disastrous, several times before in Germany.

But many will believe the Communist propaganda. And so in the Communist mind even though the charge is a lie, it helps Russia—and is justified.

This Communist conception of morality explains why war could come at any moment. It will not come because of some sudden aggressive act by America or because some great wrong is committed against the Soviet Union.

It will come when members of the Politburo decide a war will benefit Russia. That is any Communist's one and only concern.

Worse Than Inflation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. BARTEL J. JONKMAN
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. JONKMAN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Grand Haven (Mich.) Daily Tribune of July 30, 1948:

WORSE THAN INFLATION

Inflation is bad enough, but isn't the alternative offered by President Truman much worse?

The President has asked Congress to give him authority to exert control over almost every branch of the national economy. This has been characterized by one editorial writer "as steps leading to the police state." Hitler demanded little more than this. Stalin possesses such powers today.

It is estimated that the Truman proposals would keep a regular session of Congress in session for a year, and even then its work would not be done.

The President wants to roll back cost-of-living items to the November 1947 level. This he regards as a period of moderate inflationary advance. But moderate or not, many prices still would be out of line. Moreover, we are no longer living in 1947. Neither rationing nor price-fixing would stem the black markets on scarce items.

It has been pointed out repeatedly that after the end of the war, President Truman could not get rid of controls fast enough. Obviously there was popular pressure to do away with restrictions, and he was as eager as the politicians of both parties to oblige. His program has come much, much too late.

The President seeks to ration a few products in short supply and to have some authority over wages in the manufacture of items put under price control. What do "a few" and "some" mean? What items should we classify in the cost-of-living category? Just bread, milk, and meat? If one basic commodity is rolled back in price, that means more money to buy other items, which in turn may suddenly be found in short supply. It means virtual rationing of everything, price controls over everything, complete authority over wages, profits, purchases.

Those who disagree with Mr. Truman will be called proponents of boom and bust. No one wants a bust. The biggest business leaders in the country are just as fearful of a bust as the rank and file. A depression hurts everybody.

There is another answer to the inflation problem which the President has seldom if ever mentioned. It is to reduce our foreign shipments to the point that the American economy can catch up. It is to reduce Government pay rolls so more people can be released to work in private industry. It is to encourage, through intelligent taxation, greater incentives to increase production. It is to curtail artificial price supports for goods in abundance. It is to sell every American on the idea that by working harder, more goods can be produced. Here is a program that would not defeat our objectives either at home or abroad.

The American people can have total economic regimentation if they like. But the majority of them, we believe, will risk many of the admitted perils of current inflation before letting Mr. Truman or anyone else open the way for complete regulation of their pocketbooks and purchases.

Laws to exert greater control over certain types of credit and installment buying might still be helpful in slowing the inflation down, but even here this is not the essential difficulty. Money will only buy as much as people make, which is the real assignment for Americans in times like this. More bosses in Washington won't produce another pork chop or roll another auto from the line.

Dedication of New Quarters, French Naturalization Club in Chelsea, Mass.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. THOMAS J. LANE
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I wish to include remarks I made during the ceremonies celebrating the return of GI's of French descent in the city of Chelsea, Mass., and dedication of new quarters at the French Naturalization Club, 242 Spencer Avenue, Chelsea, Sunday, August 1, 1948:

My fellow Americans of French descent, there are thousands of your compatriots in my home city of Lawrence. In the course of my work I have come to know many of them, and from that experience I have gained a deep and fond appreciation of the sturdy qualities which they bring to the life of any community.

From my observation it appears that your people are among the leaders, not only in bringing their friends and relatives to this country, but in preparing them to participate fully, as citizens, in the life we share as Americans.

The French people are known for their devotion to religion, and to family life. There are no firmer foundations than these upon which to build peace, and happiness. And the world today needs these virtues, as never before.

We in the United States are one big family, and the success of our experiment is an example for the world to follow so that, in time, all the peoples of this earth will be considered as members of one family. Only in this way can we eliminate poverty and war.

One hundred and seventy-five years ago, when a few men with the courage of their convictions won freedom for our Nation, they set forth their plans for the building of a new society in a remarkable document called the Constitution of the United States. It was a charter of Christian tolerance and understanding that made all men equal before the law. It held forth to every man the right to shape his life according to his character and ability, limited only by a due respect for the rights of others.

At that time we were such a small Nation in a world of giants. And the great nations smiled at our youthful folly, certain that we could never succeed. For how was it possible to ignore the distinctions of race, color, creed, and the privileges of nobility, which formed the only pattern for human society up to that time?

The idea will never work, the rulers and the ruling classes of Europe said. Only the vast expanse of ocean between Europe and America is giving them the chance to conduct this wild experiment. It will surely fail because it has never succeeded before. And so they sat back and scoffed at the barbarous Americans, sure that we would come to no good.

That is, all except one nation, and that was France.

For the United States and France shared a common vision, and their objective was to free men from the shackles of the past. Our forefathers in this new country had to build roads through the forests, to build cities and clear land for farming and construct factories. In France, an older country, the emphasis was in another direction, to enlarge the life of the mind and the spirit.

Basically, however, both France and the United States believed that freedom was the essential of progress. Without it men would not have the stimulus to live their lives completely.

That understanding between the two nations has grown stronger with the years. France helped us when we were struggling to win freedom, and in two world wars our armies have gone to France to repel the invaders who threatened the civilization of that country which is closely related to our own.

Through the Marshall plan, we are helping France and other freedom-loving nations of today repair the damage done by war. This material reconstruction will promote production and trade. It will assist in eliminating the causes of war. It may open the eyes of Communist nations to the need for sharing peace with progress. It will certainly strengthen those who believe that freedom under God is the best hope of salvation for mankind—both here and in the life to come.

The veterans of World War II understand this much better than the people who remained at home. They have seen how the people in other countries live, which is below the standard which we enjoy. They have observed the prejudices abroad which still divide the nations. And with this knowledge they have come home with a deeper regard for our way of life. They know that it is dangerous to take it for granted. It can be lost if we do not bestir ourselves to protect it in every way.

And that is why the presence of veterans in your organization will give it richer life and meaning. Speaking from experience, the veterans will be able to help those who are about to become citizens to a greater appreciation of, and devotion to, the responsibilities of American citizenship.

It is nearly 3 years since VJ-day. We have peace in name, but not in fact. The interests of the two most powerful nations—the United States and Russia—meet in frictional contact at many points around the globe. Though I am convinced that neither nation wants war, both realizing the terrible suffering and poverty that would follow such a conflict, yet I am aware that an unfortunate incident could set off the trigger leading to world tragedy.

To avoid this, we must keep prepared for many years to come so that we shall not invite an attack by our weakness. In the meantime we must work to establish a world order to outlaw war.

What do we mean by the term "preparedness"?

It means a strong military establishment, which costs billions of dollars, and means going without some of the things we might otherwise enjoy.

The problem is how to avoid military weakness on the one hand without becoming a military state on the other hand.

The answer lies somewhere in between.

The Eightieth Congress appropriated large sums of money in order to strengthen our Army, Navy, and Air Force. It enacted a draft law but rejected universal military training.

This is part of the job—providing the weapons and men for defense.

The rest depends on us, the citizens of the United States.

It is our duty, as individuals, to be wide awake and informed on the questions of the day. This is imperative because without an enlightened public opinion there can be no government by the people.

First, it is advisable for us to join in the campaign to improve the health of our people.

Secondly, it is the responsibility of each one of us to improve his job skill for his own benefit and that of the Nation.

Thirdly, in a spirit of genuine cooperation we should work for full employment, full production, and a higher level of economic security for all Americans.

I think of no better place to start such a program than in an organization like yours, whose purpose is not only to make citizens, but to make better citizens.

The veterans of French descent in the city of Chelsea realize that the highest honor we can accord them is to work just as hard to improve our way of life as they did to protect it.

They know the obligations of citizenship.

The lesson they can teach us is the example they have set before us.

By fighting ignorance, intolerance, and selfishness we shall become warriors for peace, building a unity that will be our strongest defense.

This is the foundation of good citizenship.

It is the reason that we assemble today, in dedication of the new quarters of the French Naturalization Club of Chelsea.

It is a place where people will meet to share their faith in the United States and to join in that good fellowship which binds our country together, for progress.

Through the years to come, veterans and new citizens will go forth from this hall to help one another in that fraternal teamwork which is the greatest hope of this Nation, and the world.

With such a purpose, this enterprise is bound to succeed.

The Duty of the Congress in Special Session as Seen by the Federal Council of Churches in America

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ARTHUR G. KLEIN
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, in the sound and fury of political debate dear to our hearts, it is salutary to run across a cool and temperate statement of practicality coming from an organization whose principal concern is not the bodies but the souls of men, and through the instrumentality of a man who has proved his faith by good works beyond all rational criticism.

There has come to my desk the prepared statement of the Honorable Charles P. Taft, of Cincinnati, a son of a former President and a brother of a leader of the Republican Party in another House, in his capacity as president of the Federal Council of Churches in America.

Regardless of our political allegiance and our spiritual acknowledgment, here is a concise document which merits study. Charles Taft, by virtue of his office in the Federal Council, approximates the lay voice of the organized Protestant community of America. While there are Protestant denominations which disagree with the Christian leadership of the council, I know of none who regard it lightly. If the voice of the people is the voice of God, surely we can believe that the voice of Christian people as here heard should be harkened to.

Under leave, I insert the statement of Charles P. Taft made for the Federal Council, omitting only the brief letter of transmittal dated July 23, 1948, and noting that the letterhead lists the following imposing names as officers of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America: Charles P. Taft, president; Bishop John S. Stamm, vice president; Harper Sibley, treasurer; the Reverend Samuel McCrae Cavert, general secretary; the Reverend Roswell P. Barnes and the Reverend J. Quinter Miller, associate general secretaries.

STATEMENT OF CHARLES P. TAFT, PRESIDENT, FEDERAL COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES OF CHRIST IN AMERICA

Rivalries among political parties are usually a wholesome feature of our democratic form of government. However, they occasionally confuse basic ethical and social issues, especially in the midst of election campaigns. In the coming special session of Congress considerations of party strategy and political expediency are likely to color unduly judgments on highly important questions of national policy.

It is expected that our legislators will be asked to deal with such matters as civil rights, housing, minimum wages, the spiralling of living costs, fair employment practices, mob violence and Federal aid to education. All such problems have a bearing on the moral, physical and social welfare of human beings, on the soundness of our national life and on America's position and influence in the world. Therefore our church people have a deep concern with them as Christians and as citizens.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has taken action on many of these issues. It has commended the report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights to our people "as a document worthy of study" and "as a notable contribution to our progress toward a working democracy," while noting that there may be honest differences of opinion upon several of the recommendations concerning specific procedures. In the interest of human welfare and justice the Council has called for action on housing, the minimum wage, inflation, nondiscrimination in employment and aid to public education.

While the council seldom takes a position with regard to technical details of legislation and certainly does not consider lobbying as one of its principal activities, I consider it my duty as president of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America to urge our church members and the members of Congress to study and act promptly upon these basic issues of social policy on the basis of human welfare and the moral health of the Nation and hope that they will not be exploited for partisan purposes. The times are too grave to permit us to treat any of these issues narrowly.

The detailed statement of actions of the Federal Council of Churches is attached. Any question about them may be addressed to its offices at 297 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

SOME ACTIONS OF THE FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

FEDERAL AID TO PUBLIC EDUCATION

1947: The executive committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America feels deep concern over the emergency in public education in the United States. Depletion in the ranks of teachers incident upon their turning to more remunerative occupations and controlled lack of resources for the equalization of educational opportunity throughout the Nation place our public schools in urgent need. To allow educational standards to deteriorate is to invite social disaster.

We therefore urge the appropriation of sufficient Federal funds in subsidy to prevent a lowering of standards in the teaching profession and to remove, at least in substantial measure, the educational handicap under which many children and youth suffer because of the relatively low economic level of the communities in which they reside. We urge such appropriations on condition (a) that no Federal funds shall be made available to States to be used in such a way as to discriminate against any minority racial group; (b) that the administration of Federal funds made available to States shall be safeguarded against the imposition of Federal control in matters of educational policy; and (c) that Federal funds shall be used only for such schools as the constitutions or statutes of the several States make eligible for State support.

We affirm our continued adherence to the Amsterdam principle of the separation of church and state, and to the principle that public funds should not be used for sectarian purposes.

HOUSING

1945: Noting that "Both in the social ideals of the churches and in many other similar statements, the churches of the Federal Council are committed to the protection of childhood and of family life," and also that "accumulated evidence of many social surveys and studies shows that bad housing is conducive to juvenile delinquency, crime, and disease," the executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches resolved to appeal "to the church members generally to support all sound and effective measures for a thorough housing program, urban and rural, including community planning for all groups and races, slum clearance and rehousing when necessary; and without passing judgment on any particular legislative proposals, approves the general principle of assistance by Federal, State, and local governments."

FAIR EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES

1944: The executive committee passed the following resolution, definitely urging their Government to establish some permanent procedure for securing fair employment practice and against discrimination, as follows:

Discrimination in employment because of race, creed, or national origin is one of the great moral issues before our Nation today. The right of a worker to be employed and paid solely on the basis of his character and ability is so clear, just, and Christian that it should be protected by law. This right should be safeguarded by appropriate legislative and administrative provisions: Be it therefore

Resolved, That the Federal Council of Churches urge our Government to establish permanent procedures for securing the objectives which have been sought by the Committee on Fair Employment Practice.

MINIMUM WAGE

1945: The executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches took the following action: "Inasmuch as for over 30 years the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has stood for 'a living wage as a minimum in every industry, and for the highest wage that industry can afford,' and

"Inasmuch as the current provision of 40 cents an hour or $16 for a 40-hour week in the Fair Labor Standards Act is wholly inadequate under present costs of living, be it

"Resolved, That the executive committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America favors an increase of the minimum wage to 65 cents an hour with 75 cents an hour after 2 years, in order to provide for our lowest paid workers, under present conditions, an adequate American standard of living."

1946: At a special meeting the Federal Council of Churches declared that the action taken in 1945 in regard to a minimum wage was "even more significant now than when (it was) originally adopted."

1948: In the Labor Sunday Message for 1948 adopted by the executive committee on June 8, it is declared that "there should be a minimum standard of living to which every person has access. Such a minimum should be sufficient for health, cultural growth, and protection against hardships beyond one's control. It must be recognized that such a minimum standard will be conditioned by the relation of production to population."

COST OF LIVING

1947: A statement on the food crisis in Europe adopted by the executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches contained a section directed "to the United States Government." In this it was declared

"That the American people should be clearly informed of the peril of imminent bankruptcy in many nations and that plans be made to ship sufficient quantities of food, fuel, and clothing, even if this would involve the reestablishment of public controls on particular items."

CIVIL RIGHTS

1947: On December 5, 1946, the President created, by Executive order, a committee to be known as "The President's Committee on Civil Rights." After nearly a year's study this committee made its report to the President on Wednesday, October 29, 1947.

The executive committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America views the report on civil rights, made by the President's committee, as a notable contribution to our progress toward a working democracy. It commends the statement to all church people, as a document worthy of study.

The Christian concern of the churches for every individual in society is central in the committee's report. In several respects the report lifts into prominence certain positions taken by the Federal Council at a special meeting in Columbus, Ohio, in March 1946. It is now the especial responsibility and opportunity of the churches to promote discussion of the committee's report within the framework of the Christian understanding of our faith in God as revealed through Jesus Christ, as it is related to our social living.

We note with approval that the committee was sensitive not only to the rights of our largest minority group, the Negro, but also to other racial and religious minority groups within our society.

Recognizing the legitimate concern of our Government with the loyalty of those who serve it in the interest of national security, we share the anxiety of the committee for proper safeguards for the rights of the individual. It should be possible to accomplish all that is needed in the way of security without jeopardizing rights that in our Constitution are held to be inviolable.

We recognize that several of the recommendations concern specific procedures upon which there may be honest differences of opinion. The Federal Council having already laid down what it regards as basic Christian principles, is especially interested in what may now be done to work out the implications of these principles in practical procedures. Among the objectives in the report of the President's committee which seem to call for special attention from the churches in view of the Christian principles involved are the protection of human life against mob violence; equal opportunity for employment, regardless of race, religion or national origin; the elimination of segregation in all its aspects, including the outlawing of restrictive covenants in real estate contracts; and the right of every adult citizen to a vote.

The concern for civil rights in our own country is particularly important from the standpoint of our leadership in the world. Our national struggle toward true democracy cannot be isolated from the world scene. We cannot hope to influence other people to accept the Christian way of life, or other nations to accept the democratic principles we proclaim unless we can demonstrate in our own community living that we take them seriously and are striving to translate them into effective practice.

We earnestly hope that the membership of our churches will take seriously the challenge issued by the President's Committee on Civil Rights.

MANY WRITE ON SAME SUBJECTS

I do not wish to give the impression that the Federal council is the only correspondent dwelling on the urgent needs for enlightened legislation during this special session.

On the other hand, my office is swamped with indignant letters, and from them I am choosing a few which are characteristic for insertion in the RECORD.

The first is from another religious group, this time the Inter-Diocesan Committee on Legislation of New York. The letter signed by the Reverend Leland B. Henry follows:

INTER-DIOCESAN COMMITTEE ON LEGISLATION,
New York, July 30, 1948.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The Inter-Diocesan Committee on Legislation represents the six Episcopal dioceses in the State of New York. As chairman of the committee I am writing you concerning the legislative program of the special session. I am keenly aware of the difficulty of your task in the combined heat of a Washington summer and of a political campaign, but there are three items before the Congress in which we have a definite interest, and which we hope may receive favorable action.

1. Housing.— The Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill is a carefully drawn, constructive measure, dealing with one of the great social problems of America. It is the result of detailed study over a period of more than 2 years. It has strong bipartisan support, as indicated by the names of its sponsors. We hope that you will use your influence to bring the bill out of the Rules Committee, and that you will support it when it reaches the floor.

2. The United Nations loan.—The success of the United Nations in achieving a truce in Palestine gives new hope to its supporters. The tension in Berlin is a fresh demonstration of the need for a strong international organization to maintain the peace. There would seem to be every reason for passing the bill authorizing a loan of $65,000,000 for the construction of the United Nations headquarters in New York City. Here again is a measure with the strongest possible bipartisan support, which is merely awaiting favorable action by the House.

3. Displaced persons.—After 3 years of study and debate a displaced-persons law was finally passed, which, while a step in the right direction, is discriminatory in its provisions. I hope that it may be possible to amend the law to make it more equitable. Incidentally, State Industrial Commissioner Edward Corsi was quoted in the New York Times, July 29, 1948, as saying that "about 50,000 DP's properly selected by occupation, could be absorbed by industry and agriculture in this State."

Respectfully yours,
LELAND B. HENRY, Chairman.

CONSTITUENT WANTS TO EAT

J. T. Petrie, of 14 Monroe Street, New York, says, "I want to eat."

His brief communication says:

Your record in Congress is excellent. I am a New Dealer and know you vote the way I think is right on almost all legislation. But now is a trying period. You must fight to get other Democrats to vote the way you do. Inflation must stop. The Republicans are far more to blame than the Democrats, but the administration has not done all it could. Some price support for farm products is necessary but the support prices are far too high. Support prices should be reduced now. I want to eat.

My belief that this country must resort to controls on prices of short-supply commodities and of allocation of materials is supported by Joseph J. Kinslow, of 150 Clinton Street, who says:

NEW YORK, N. Y., July 24, 1948.

Hon. A. G. KLEIN,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I believe that the special session of Congress called by President Truman comes at an opportune moment. The domestic problems of the housing shortage and the rising cost of living call for emergency measures.

President Truman has indicated that his message to the special session would call for action on these measures. I urge you to give them your deepest consideration and wholehearted support.

I especially believe that nothing short of the restoration of price control of essential foods can prevent hardship on the average family. Rising prices simply means that our children must do with less milk, eggs, and other foods they need for sturdy body development. The promises of American businessmen to hold the price line when the OPA controls were lifted soon went up in smoke. Yes, we still have price control, only this time big business fixes the prices. The law of supply and demand doesn't operate when the supply is controlled to keep prices high. I believe the Government did a far better job on price control than private enterprise is doing now.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH J. KINSLOW.

CONSTITUENTS ALSO WANT HOUSING

But my constituents also want a roof over their heads without facing bankruptcy. They agree with me on the imperative need of housing in the lower price ranges and for rent, and in my plea for passage of the T-E-W bill I insert here letters on housing from Luis Camacho Hernandez and Naomi R. Smith and an absolutely scorching indictment of the do-nothing record of this Congress from Mrs. Gela Chiodo, the wife of a veteran, who writes with acid vehemence and asks me to "pass a miracle":

NEW YORK, N. Y., July 28, 1948.

Hon. ARTHUR KLEIN,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am a veteran, working in the post office here in New York City. My wife, two children, and myself are living in an old run-down cold-water flat. The service is outside. Also there are many large rats; they get into the baby's crib.

I applied for apartment through the New York City Housing Authority, and was turned down. Now, will you please help me get some place to live. Any favorable consideration will be appreciated.

Respectfully yours,
LUIS CAMACHO HERNANDEZ.

NEW YORK, N. Y., July 26, 1948.

Representative ARTHUR B. KLEIN,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: As a member of your constituency and a veteran who was promised a decent home to come back to (among many other things) please allow me to lend my weight in support of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill, which I am sure you will favor when it is brought up on the floor of the House of Representatives.

Very truly yours,
NAOMI R. SMITH.

NEW YORK CITY, July 6, 1948.

UNITED STATES CONGRESS,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: If we were not desperate I would not write to you.

My husband, John Chiodo, is a disabled veteran of World War II. He spent nearly 4½ years out of his 5 years' service with the United States Army overseas in the South Pacific. He is in his last year of law school, under Public Law 16.

We are expecting a second child the first week of September. We have a 2½-year-old daughter.

My husband has sought high and low for a four-room apartment—nothing available. We made applications at the Jacob Riis housing project. No reply received.

Look, gentlemen, since you are allowing over 200,000 displaced persons into the country, which means that you are assured of adequate housing and food supplies, how about the veterans and their families?

Billions of dollars are sent to countries in need. How about us? We are American citizens.

The veterans are embittered. They, too, want to live like human beings, with wives and children to fulfill their lives. We can pay $32 a month for a four-room project apartment, but we cannot obtain an apartment as there are thousands of applications, applications of those in the same plight we are in.

It is a disgrace that in this richest country in the world where it is well afforded to sink battleships like the New Yorker instead of scrapping her, we cannot avail more cheaper housing for the veterans.

Our daughter is staying at my mother-in-law's tiny apartment, but my husband and I had to take a job, and without pay, as caretakers and part-time butler, maid, cook, in exchange for a room on the fifth-floor walk-up in this 5-story 20-room servantless mansion—and for the use of the kitchen in the basement. Let me define our duties:

We heat the water by using coal. We prepare breakfast for the owners. We make their beds, clean, dust, mop their bedroom, wash out their chamber pot (urinal) as they do not use the toilets at night. We wash out the bathrooms, toilets, stairs, hallways, rooms, answer door and telephone calls, wash dishes, wash and iron by hand (no machines) the household linens, clean the sidewalks, water the ivy, polish the brass, wash and polish the silver, and perform countless other menial and unrewarded tasks—all in order to maintain a roof over our heads.

Since I am in my seventh month of pregnancy, all the above work, plus running up and down the stairs (five flights of narrow, tortuous stairs) is detrimental to my health, but I want my husband to conclude his law studies. He is to graduate by January.

We cannot obtain anything better with or without pay. As soon as it is known we have a child and that we expect another, no one will rent us anything nor give us rooms in exchange for our labor.

We speak Russian, French, Italian, and Chinese. My husband attended St. John's University in Brooklyn and is now at Brooklyn Law School. I attended New York University, University of Wisconsin, and the University of California. We are both of the white race, if that is important. Yet, because of the fact that we have a child and an expected one, we cannot find a four-room apartment within our means. Even though we have been imposed upon, we have to take it, as we have only two alternatives: (1) Go to the municipal lodging house, which is horrible; or (2) sleep in Central Park.

Since my husband's disability prevented him from going to law school the past semester, our Government checks were stopped. We ate up our meager savings. We have no money now; however, we expect his Government check to come soon. We want to obtain a four-room apartment within our means at a New York City public Federal housing project. We are not asking for charity, but we are desperate. It is impossible for us to live at my mother-in-law's. She has a three and one-half room apartment. In it live her daughter, herself, my father-in-law, and my daughter. She was good enough to take the baby in, but with the second baby due the first week of September, and the fact that we have to leave these premises by the middle of August, what can we do?

Since the United States can afford to aid all the needy nations and peoples, how about us?

My husband was wounded and made disabled in the defense of this our country, and now that the war is over, how about housing?

We are so despondent that we are beginning to feel bitter and angry.

Please obtain a four-room apartment for us in the Jacob Riis housing project here in New York City, or in any housing project.

Respectfully,

GELA CHIODO.

P. S.—Or make my husband Housing Administrator. He'll solve the housing situation for the veterans. He has an excellent plan.

NEW YORK CITY HOUSING AUTHORITY,
New York, N. Y., July 27, 1948.

Hon. ARTHUR G. KLEIN,
New York, N. Y.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN KLEIN: This is in reply to your letter of July 14, 1948, concerning Mrs. Gela Chiodo, of 80 East First Street, Manhattan.

As Mrs. Chiodo is interested in an apartment at Jacob Riis Houses, the manager of that project has communicated directly with her, and an interview has been scheduled for her at Riis Houses.

Although our five new projects now ready for occupancy contain only 7,000 apartments, approximately 125,000 applications have been filed at these projects. Eligible applicants are admitted in the order of their relative need for housing. Under the circumstances, we cannot let you know at this time whether the Chiodo family will be reached. Please be assured, however, that Mrs. Chiodo's application will be given every possible consideration consistent with housing-authority regulations.

In compliance with your request, we are returning Mrs. Chiodo's letter to you herewith.

Thank you for your interest in the Chiodo family.

Very truly yours,

T. F. FARRELL, Chairman.

Finally, I submit the brief message of a quasi-religious group noted for its liberal leadership:

NATIONAL RELIGION AND LABOR FOUNDATION,
New Haven, Conn., July 29, 1948.

DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: We believe we speak for our membership and for multitudes of little people when we plead, "Stay in Washington and give us some badly needed laws." The President is right. We need action at once on prices and houses. It would be better to stay in Washington to make good on old promises than to campaign and repeat promises that have never been kept. Why not quit putting the blame on the other fellow and legislate for the people's needs? They need relief from unconscionable prices and profits, and from the housing shortage.

Sincerely yours,

WILLARD UPHAUS,
Executive Secretary.

Berlin Show-Down

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. JACOB K. JAVITS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, in the New York Herald Tribune today, August 2, 1948, Mr. Walter Lippmann, has summarized the essentials of the problem we face in American-Soviet relations. He emphasizes that America's great responsibility and power carry a commensurate obligation to think through the consequences of every action. Our position on a separate government for western Germany is shown to have a critical impact on the whole world. The show-down could well have been deferred until we were over the elections, with a new administration expressing the will of the United States. Bipartisanship in our Berlin policy is now very essential to keep the Soviets from being misled as to the united determination of our people to stay in Berlin in accordance with our international responsibilities:

TODAY AND TOMORROW—PREMATURE SHOW-DOWN

(By Walter Lippmann)

As we wait for the response to the representations which we are making in Moscow, the most favorable omen is that the Russian commanders in the Berlin area have thus far refrained from interfering with the air lift. Thus far, therefore, there have been no collisions, crashes, or casualties. This reflects at least a tacit understanding that for the time being the Russians are not to blockade Berlin completely by closing the air corridors, and that we are not to push convoys through the ground blockade.

Both sides have stopped just short of the actions which would surely precipitate violence—the Russians from bringing on a battle in the air, we from bringing on a battle on the ground.

This leaves the struggle still within the realm of diplomacy.

But, nontheless, the diplomatic situation is very serious. Our position in Berlin is deteriorating rapidly. For while we are not being driven out of Berlin, the air lift, though spectacular and efficient, is quite incapable of sustaining the economic life of our sectors of Berlin. On the other hand, we are not prepared for the general negotiations which we have been compelled to offer in order to extricate ourselves from the Berlin predicament.

The crux of our problem is that because of a miscalculated risk taken by Mr. Marshall and Mr. Bevin we have been brought prematurely to the great, the ultimately unavoidable, and the necessary showdown with the Soviet Union about the future of Germany and of Europe. We were not able to deliver an ultimatum about Berlin because western Europe is in no condition to face a war. On the other hand, we are not ready for serious negotiations because the great constructive projects of the western powers, which were designed to prepare a general European settlement, are nowhere near achievement. It was, therefore, a miscalculation to precipitate a European crisis this summer by insisting on the London agreements to establish a western German state.

That decision not only led directly to the Berlin crisis, as Mr. Marshall and Mr. Bevin were repeatedly warned that it would, but it has also impaired the plans and the prospects for a successful European settlement.

The European recovery program, if it is to be anything more than another American dole, required a restoration of European trade between the agricultural east and the industrial west. It required also a restoration of trade with southeast Asia, one of the important dollar-earning regions of the western European powers. But the Dutch position in Indonesia, the French position in Indochina, the British position in Burma and Malaya are most unpromising. It was all the more important that trade with eastern Europe should be promoted, that in return for exports of food and raw materials, the eastern countries should receive machinery which enables them to increase their production.

The idea that a western German state could be set up this summer and made prosperous, with a frontier in the middle of Germany, was certainly no contribution to the economic revival of Europe. It is difficult to understand the reasoning of governments which could decide on the political partition of Germany at the very moment when their economic plans were based upon the economic reunion of Germany and Europe.

The idea of western union, which was the political complement of the recovery program, called for the formation of a European union in which Germans, and eventually the nations of eastern Europe and of the Danube Valley, could participate. But this great constructive project required time to develop. It was impossible to unite even the five Brussels powers quickly. It was certainly impossible to imagine them uniting with a rump and puppet government in Frankfurt. Even on the lowest terms, that of a military alliance against Soviet expansion, the fact was that the western union could not become a military power in less than 2 or 3 years, and that American strategical doctrine and the character of American armament were quite unsuited to the defense of western Europe against an invasion.

The project, therefore, of Western Union as the nuclear alliance of a European union demanded a diplomatic policy designed to postpone, not precipitate, the great showdown with the Russians. Until substantial progress had been made under the recovery program in tying together Europe by trade agreements, and on the political side in making political unity in the west more than a meager blueprint, the Russians had much to gain and we had much to lose by a showdown. When we consider that besides all this, we are in the midst of an election which will almost certainly bring about a change of administration, the only sensible course for this summer was to temporize.

It is the fashion to say that the situation in Germany was so bad that something had to be done about it. Something did indeed have to be done about it, though under military occupation and with Germany divided, not very much that will last can be done. It was certainly not necessary to jump out of the frying pan of German prostration into the fire of a European crisis. The alleged remedy—a western German state—will not cure the disease of western Germany. Our Germans will still have to be subsidized in order to maintain even a low standard of life, and German productivity will not be enhanced by holding a series of German elections in which the Communists, the Nazis, and the well meaning but feeble Christian Democrats and Social Democrats are plunged into a furious struggle.

Whatever the results of all that unnecessary and premature political excitement, they will not be profitable or pleasant. The revival of German political agitation could well have been postponed, therefore, until Europe is sufficiently organized to readmit the Germans into the councils of Europe. To turn on the tap of German politics under present conditions, to excite the Germans before they can have real responsibility, while they are occupied, while they are subsidized, while they are divided, while they are the stakes of a world-wide struggle of the great power, is—let us say—naive.

It will not be easy to repair the mistake. But somehow, that is what we shall have to do.

The Price of Beef and Why

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. REID F. MURRAY
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the New Deal political agriculturists add insult unto injury. The New Deal agricultural program has two characteristics. It is antilivestock in its approach. It follows a program of subsidizing soil-depleting crops.

Who, I ask, killed off 37 percent of the sheep during the past 5 years, and now tries to blame someone else for the price of mutton?

Who, I ask, reduced the cattle numbers by 6,000,000 head and then call attention to the price of beef?

Who, I ask, reduced hog numbers by 40 to 50 percent the past 5 years?

Who supported the purchases of vegetable oil concoctions for export when twice as many calories can be purchased for a dollar in the form of animal fat? Who, but Mr. Luckman was projected into the chicken picture, and tried to be the champion chicken killer of all time?

Who was it, Mr. Truman, that proposed and gave away one-half billion dollars' worth of cotton, $300,000,000 worth of tobacco, and then blame someone else for food prices when the land, fertilizer, and manpower should have been diverted to producing domestically needed foods especially animal proteins?

Who, Mr. President, proposed the giving away of $957,000,000 worth of grain; $460,000,000 worth of machinery, $379,000,000 worth of petroleum, $145,000,000 worth of coal, $131,000,000 worth of food fats, mostly vegetable oils?

Who, Mr. President, but your administration gave away or is giving away $142,000,000 worth of lumber, though you claim great distress over the domestic house-building program?

Remember, too, that while there were from 20,000,000 to 145,000,000 pounds of beef imported each year, before and during the war there were only 1,500,000 pounds imported in 1947. In 1941 there was a net import of 118,000,000 pounds and in 1947 there was a net export of 131,000,000 pounds of beef. This makes a total of 249,000,000-pound difference for domestic consumption.

LET US GET THESE FACTS HOME

The United States has been on a beef-importing basis ever since 1913 except during World Wars I and II, and immediately following. Twenty times as much beef was exported after World War II as before the war and then someone else was blamed for its scarcity.

The foot-and-mouth disease in Mexico stopped an import of between 500,000 and a million head. Canada put an embargo on meat exports to the United States so that she could furnish Britain with it. Then on top of this the United States Department of Agriculture on July 24, 1948, issued a request that beef cattle numbers be further reduced. In other words the present administration does not want the American beef producer to furnish the beef needs of the Nation, nor does it want the American beef producer to have the American market.

Such balmy approaches are detrimental to a desirable public health and nutritional program. Such silly approaches cause the American consumer to compete with meats subsidized for foreign consumers. Such crazy economics, if it were followed, is a disservice to the public and contrary to the public's welfare.

The authentic press release from the Office of the Secretary, United States Department of Agriculture, under date of July 24, 1948, is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, July 23, 1948.

FIRST 1949 PRODUCTION GOALS RECOMMENDED BY USDA

National goals for 1949 production of several important farm commodities, including a wheat acreage goal which, while somewhat below this year's planted acreage, would at recent yields produce another crop of more than a billion bushels, are being recommended to States by the United States Department of Agriculture.

Other national goals suggested at this time are for rye, winter cover crop seeds, winter vegetables, dry edible peas, and beef cattle. The beef goal calls for careful culling of cattle numbers by January 1 in order to maintain healthy, well-balanced herds while increasing meat supplies in the months ahead.

These recommendations are being submitted to State USDA Councils for local consideration and possible adjustment within the national pattern. State goals and final national goals will be announced later, following State review and recommendations.

Wheat: The suggested goal for wheat is 71,500,000 planted acres, about 8 percent less than estimates of this year's seeded acreage. With an average yield of approximately 15 bushels per acre, the 1938–47 average, production in 1949 would total 1,100,000,000 bushels. This would be in line with estimated domestic, export, and carry-over needs.

The goal seeks to bring about adjustments in areas of relatively low productivity without materially affecting total production. United States wheat acreage has increased markedly during recent years in response to war and relief needs. If farmers are to make the best use of the country's soil resources, however, a somewhat smaller acreage should be planted. Moreover, a better balance between soil-conserving and soil-depleting crops will actually assure higher productivity over a long period of years. Farmers are urged to provide for sufficient summer fallow and, in marginal areas, to begin reseeding to grass land which is not suited for sustained production of crops. The recommended wheat acreage goal for 1949 would provide the opportunity for farmers to start the shift back to these better conservation practices.

Other considerations in arriving at the wheat goal were this year's increased carryover, prospects that the 1948 crop will be the second largest in history, and the possibility of smaller foreign demands because of improved crops in many importing countries. It is also pointed out that the wheat carryover next year may be even larger. Failure of Congress to ratify the proposed International Wheat Agreement, which would have guaranteed a substantial export market for United States wheat for 5 years, has cast doubt on our ability to maintain high-level production and exports.

Rye: The suggested goal for rye is 2,500,000 acres for harvest in 1949. This would be about 313,000 acres more than the indicated acreage this year. With average yields, production next year would be about 30,000,000 bushels. Competition from other crops for available land has caused a downward trend in the harvest acreage of rye for a number of years, but indications are that more rye would be used if larger supplies were available.

Beef cattle: The Department recommends a beef cattle breeding herd goal which would maintain not less than 15,500,000 head of beef cows on farms and ranches on next January 1. Achieving this goal would result in a further moderate decrease of about one-half million head below the number on farms last January 1. Better management, improved feeding practices, and thorough culling are urged to put the cattle industry in better position to supply the meat requirements of an increasing population.

A slaughter goal of 32,000,000 head of all cattle and calves, for the year July 1948–June 1949, is recommended—in line with the beef cattle breeding goal and the expected volume of cattle feeding. While this recommended slaughter would mean a further small decrease in breeding herd numbers, it would provide a larger quantity of beef and veal than would be available if cattle numbers were held at present high levels or increased.

These beef and veal supplies will be needed in the months ahead, with pork production expected to be less than in the previous year and with meat demand expected to continue abnormally strong. The recommended slaughter would be about 7 percent less than the number of animals slaughtered in each of the last two similar 12-month periods, with feeding to heavier weights probably offsetting this to some extent. The goal is regarded as the most practical one in view of the various factors which must be considered.

Winter cover crops: Harvested acreage and production goals for winter cover crop seeds are: Austrian winter peas, 74,000 acres, 80,000,000 pounds; crimson clover, 108,000 acres, 25,000,000 pounds; hairy vetch, 129,000 acres, 30,000,000 pounds; common and willamette vetch, 103,000 acres, 50,000,000 pounds; common ryegrass, 98,000 acres, 43,000,000 pounds; blue lupine, 57,000 acres, 50,000,000 pounds.

Goals represent substantial increases in production of all the seeds except ryegrass. Stocks of all the others are at very low levels, and the 1948 crops are not expected to provide adequately for domestic requirements and exports. Increased production of the seeds is badly needed to restore the fertility of heavily cropped soil and to meet export demands, only partially filled in recent years.

Winter vegetables: Acreage guides for 1949 production of 15 winter vegetable crops total 281,750 acres. With average yields, this acreage would result in a production about equal to that of 1948, although it would be 3 percent less than the acreage available for harvest in 1948. Recommendations include harvested acreage increases of 5 percent for carrots and 20 percent for peppers. Suggested acreage reductions are: 10 percent for snap beans and celery; 15 percent for escarole; 5 percent for cabbage and lettuce; 3 percent for shallots. No changes are recommended for lima beans, beets, cauliflower, kale, green peas, spinach, and tomatoes.

Dry edible beans: The recommended goal is 225,000 acres of dry edible smooth peas, which, with normal plantings of wrinkled peas, would total 350,000 acres. With average yields, this acreage would produce about 2,500,000 100-pound bags of smooth peas. Foreign demand has slowed noticeably during the past year. Production areas are primarily in Idaho, Colorado, and Washington, with smaller areas in California, Michigan, Wisconsin, Wyoming, Minnesota, North Dakota, Montana, and Oregon.

Note that if meat prices are high, kill off more cattle and everything will be just O. K., according to the dreamers and schemers. The typical New Deal formula of producing less to have more is evidently still in vogue.

The Decline and Fall of the United States of America

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ARTHUR G. KLEIN
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, in a world hesitating at the threshold of the age of atomic energy, torn by fears and doubts, numbed by war and death, starvation, cruelty, and suffering, and staggered by the discovery that totalitarianism did not die with Hitler, it will be appallingly easy for the United States to go down that road to dictatorship from which there is no return.

Two young newspapermen, brothers, their war experiences horrifyingly fresh in their minds, have projected these fears and doubts into a hair-raising fiction article of the future which every American should read.

This is The Decline and Fall of the United States of America, by Joseph and Stewart Alsop, published in the May issue of Coronet.

Before the war, Joseph Alsop and Robert Kintner turned out a widely read Washington column, The Capital Parade. During the war, the combination was broken up when Alsop joined the Navy, Kintner the Army. After the war, Joe returned to the Washington scene and promptly found a new partner, his younger brother, Stewart, who had served with the British Army and later as a parachuter in our own OSS. Together they turn out a syndicated column of news and comment, which appears in the New York Herald Tribune and the Washington Post, among other papers, as well as special articles of contemporary interest.

Under leave, I am inserting their Coronet article, together with the editorial introduction, in the RECORD—

We are living in times when, more than ever in America's history, the future is hidden and unknowable. Yet the following glimpse into the world of tomorrow may quite conceivably be written within the next decade by some professor of history at Harvard, California, or another university, who is too timid to protest and yet too respectful of the truth not to record it in secret—and alone.

The events described in The Decline and Fall of the U. S. A. are far from fantastic. In fact, if this sequence of events is ever permitted to commence at all, the outcome is almost mathematically predictable. The moral of this challenging article, which must unconventionally come at the beginning, is very simple: the future of free men everywhere in the world depends upon the perpetuation of freedom in the United States of America.

THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE U. S. A.
(By Joseph and Stewart Alsop)

The nomination of former Senator Homer T. Winsome to the Presidency of the United States was a political accident, like many another in American political history. Winsome's nomination, which led in time to the downfall of the United States and the death of freedom throughout the world, stemmed from the deadlock which developed at the Republican National Convention in Philadelphia in June 1948.

The convention had been deadlocked for eight hot, angry days. Two leading candidates, Senator ROBERT A. TAFT, of Ohio, and Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, of New York, had fought each other to a standstill, neither being able to garner the necessary majority of delegate votes.[1] Such other potential nominees as Harold E. Stassen, Douglas MacArthur, Arthur Vandenberg, Earl Warren, and Joseph Martin[2] had, for one reason or another, made numerous enemies among the voters or in powerful circles within the Republican Party.

Thus, it was that, in all-night session in a traditionally smoke-filled room of Philadelphia's Drake Hotel, a number of Republican leaders finally settled on Winsome as the only possible compromise candidate. In previous ballots, Winsome had never received more than 60 votes. By noon of the ninth day, he found himself the unanimous choice of the convention.

The selection of Winsome came as a surprise to many party leaders, to those who considered themselves political insiders, and to the general public. It also came as a surprise to Winsome himself. Interviewed immediately after the nomination, he was widely quoted as having remarked: "Why, I feel just like that time back on the farm when a load of ensilage fell on me."

Winsome was frequently referred to as "Handsome Homer" in the reports of friendly journalists who covered his campaign. However, the evidence available in still-extant photographs of him seems hardly to justify this description. He had wavy hair, heavy jowls, small eyes, a rubicund complexion, and a wide, toothy smile.

His radio delivery, as the country soon discovered, was impressively sonorous, in sharp contrast to that of his chief opponent, President Harry S. Truman.[3] Winsome had a large, photogenic family, vigorous and uninhibited. His oldest son, Homer, Jr., campaigned effectively for "Pop," while "Mom" Winsome's recipes for apple pie and other traditional American dishes were widely publicized.

At the time of his nomination, Winsome's political views were somewhat obscure. He had served both as a governor of his State and as a Senator, but he had taken a strong stand only on God, the American way of life, and the sanctity of the American home. His virtues were his reputation for being thoroughly regular and solidly conservative, and the fact that he had failed at any time to commit himself on any major domestic or international issues.

The Republican reasoning that brought about his nomination was simple. Some months before, a former Vice President, Henry A. Wallace,[4] had consented to head a so-called third party. This movement, strongly supported by the American Communist Party, was widely expected to drain a sufficient number of votes from the Democratic ticket, headed by Truman, to insure the election of almost any candidate the Republicans might choose.

The Winsome political strategy which resulted from this state of affairs was summed up by Melvin H. String, Midwest advertising man, oil promoter, and former Congressman, one of Winsome's chief backers and braintrusters. "We don't have to worry," String remarked. "Henry will beat Harry for Homer."

Indeed, it was commonly said at that time that "the Republicans can win with a dog, if they can train him not to bark too loud." Accordingly, immediately after Winsome's nomination, the work of preparing him for a series of carefully modulated barks got under way. Most of this task devolved upon the advertising firm of String, Biggers & Meaney, of which Melvin String was president.

One of the younger copywriters in the agency was generally credited with the idea for what became known as the Green Light Program, hallmark of the Winsome campaign. After some weeks passed in recovering from his initial surprise, Winsome delivered his first campaign speech, over a national network, from the front porch of his boyhood home in Ohio. The keynote was simple:

[1] Both TAFT and Dewey were tried before the People's Court on November 7, 1954. They were convicted of conspiracy against the New America and sentenced to Corrective and Educational Camp No. 82, Alaska Territory. Date of decease unknown.

[2] None of these men is known to have survived the rigors of Alaskan imprisonment.

"Give business the green light," Winsome boomed, "and you will see a permanent high plateau of prosperity in this great country which will make us more than ever the envy of the world."

As his campaign progressed, Winsome elaborated on each of the 10 points in the Green Light Program. Point one was production. ("Production is the magic wand which will exorcise the devil of inflation and point the way to peace and prosperity in our time.") Point two was confidence. ("Stop tinkering with the system which made America great. Give our businessmen, our farmers, and our workingmen confidence—and watch America's dust.") Point three was cooperation. ("Arms linked in cooperation, Americans all, we shall advance to the happy future which beckons so near.") And so on.

With point eight, however (Confiscatory taxation is un-American) and point nine (It's our money), Winsome got down to business. Point eight called for an immediate 40-percent "across the board" reduction in private income, corporation, and capital-gains taxes. Point nine called for an equivalent saving in Government expenditures.

Point 10 (The answer's right here) was widely heralded before the event as Winsome's stand on foreign policy. In the spring of 1948, Congress had committed the United States to a policy known as the European recovery program (ERP). It was designed to help the western European nations, sorely threatened by Soviet ambitions to control all Europe, find the road back to political and economic health.

Henry Wallace attacked this program as American imperialism, and Truman devoted much of his campaign to defending it. Therefore Winsome's point 10 speech was eagerly awaited, both in this country and abroad.

The first paragraphs of the speech, which was delivered in Des Moines, Iowa, seemed to be cut from the usual Winsome cloth. Recalling his own boyhood on the farm, Winsome pointed to the prosperity of the Iowa citizenry, the sleekness of their cattle, and the excellent condition of their crops. "All this," he shouted, "these chubby youngsters, these rippling fields of grain, these contented cows, all this is the American way of life."

"But," Winsome roared on, "this American way of life, which we know and love so well, is threatened. You and I are crushed beneath an unreasonable load of taxes. We are paying intolerable prices, watching the hard-earned savings of our years of thrift melt away. And why? Because of this administration's insane program of international leaf raking. Because our good American wheat, our good American coal, yes, and our good American dollars, are being shipped abroad to help foreigners with their crazy socialistic experiments."

Then Winsome's tone changed. He hated, he said, "the foul communistic totalitarian philosophy." Moreover, "We Americans are a generous people, and we have always been first to respond to the call of freedom against tyranny, to the plea of starvation and suffering." He was entirely in favor of "a sensible program of foreign aid, sensibly administered by sensible men." But, he said, he wished to leave one last thought with his listeners:

"The best answer to totalitarianism abroad is to make the free-enterprise system work at home—and that, my friends, means just one thing. It means the green-light program."

The reaction was sharp. Some Winsome supporters were obviously perturbed. "Just what does Winsome mean by 'sensible'?" asked the Washington Post. On the other hand, the Chicago Tribune and the Hearst chain of newspapers published front-page editorials headlined, respectively, "At last a real American" and "Homer hits a homer."

When the American voters finally went to the polls in November, Henry Wallace received less than 6 percent of the total. But this was sufficient to defeat the Democrats. Thus, by less than a majority of the national vote, Homer T. Winsome was elected President of the United States.

Gloom descended on the capitals of the non-Soviet world. In Paris and Rome, cabinets were nervously reshuffled. A conference of all European Communist Parties was called in Belgrade, and there were reports that a general political offensive had been ordered for the winter by Andrei Zdhanov, the Politburo's emissary. Winsome's election was widely interpreted abroad as a return to isolationism in the United States, and erudite Europeans compared the event to the election of Warren G. Harding in 1920. Yet both in America and abroad there were dissenting voices.

For example, the London Economist published a lead editorial, much quoted on both sides of the Atlantic, headed "Winsome is as Winsome does." It pointed out that campaign speeches were rarely safe guides to American policy; and a large section of the American press adopted a similar attitude of watchful waiting.

This attitude seemed vindicated when President-elect Winsome, on a fishing trip in the Northwest, announced that he had asked Senator VANDENBERG to serve as Secretary of State, and that VANDENBERG had accepted, after making it clear that his acceptance of the post in no way changed his oft-expressed views on foreign affairs. The appointment was not pleasing to certain Winsome backers. However, it was generally agreed that VANDENBERG's great reputation as the top Republican foreign-policy expert would greatly strengthen President-elect Winsome's prestige.

When Governor Dewey refused to serve as Secretary of Commerce and Senator TAFT rejected the post of Secretary of the Treasury, the remaining Cabinet posts were filled with men, mostly cronies of Winsome, of distinctly lower caliber than VANDENBERG. Chief among these, and generally accounted closest to the new President, was Melvin String, who became Secretary of Commerce.

String's appearance belied his name. He was a large-boned, fleshy man, with a long nose, cold eyes, and a reputation for political astuteness and loud geniality. He was generally identified as an isolationist and extreme conservative, and his selection was publicly interpreted as a gesture of appeasement towards this group, to balance the VANDENBERG appointment.

Inauguration Day in January was cold and slushy, yet crowds lined Pennsylvania Avenue to see the new President. The parade was colorful despite the weather, and it was noted that the retiring President, Truman, seemed as jaunty as ever. Indeed, it appeared that Truman was not entirely loath to be rid of the grave responsibilities which the White House had thrust upon him.

Winsome spoke with his usual impressive solemnity. But his words were a disappointment to the listening Nation and the waiting world, for everywhere the same question was paramount: What was the new American foreign policy? What had Winsome's famous Point Ten speech really meant?

The day before Winsome's inaugural address, the Paris Soir had expressed the anxieties of the whole non-Soviet world in an editorial entitled "The American Cat, Which Way Will He Jump?" The day after, the Soir headed another editorial, "The American Cat, He Refuses To Budge." For Winsome devoted his entire address to a solemn résumé of the green-light program. His only reference to foreign policy repeated his previous statement: "The best answer to totalitarianism abroad is to make the free-enterprise system work at home."

Winsome didn't state just where the 40-percent saving envisaged in his green-light program was to be made. Friends of the European recovery program noted anxiously, and enemies (like the Cominform and the New York Daily Worker) noted jubilantly that ERP offered the most obvious opportunity for decisive economies.

Still President Winsome took no definite stand against ERP, and even while the green-light program was being formulated, the chief of the European recovery agency, in consultation with Secretary of State VANDENBERG, was studying European requirements for the second year of ERP.

The fact was that Winsome himself was in an agony of indecision. In a somewhat indiscreet book, Mom and Pop, which Homer Junior published in 1950, something of this painful indecision is reflected.[5]

"Often Pop asked Mom for advice, just like he'd always done. I remember in April, Pop came in looking tired. 'Mom,' he said, 'sometimes I wish I hadn't got this job. They've been after me all day, VANDENBERG and the State Department people and the Pentagon people, arguing we can't back out of this ERP now, it would be terrible if we did and it might lead to war.

"'And then there's Melvin and most of the boys, they say it's just Operation Rathole, and that we can't have the green-light program unless we cut out all this foreign spending. I just don't know what to do.'"

This and other passages in young Winsome's book reflect the internal split which rent the new administration in the first months of Winsome's term. Since the Secretary of State was regarded as leader of one faction, and the Secretary of Commerce as leader of the other, the contest was generally referred to as the "String-VANDENBERG row." On March 22, it suddenly became obvious who had won.

At VANDENBERG's request, Winsome had called a special Cabinet meeting for that day, for VANDENBERG had become convinced that the indecision which clouded American foreign policy deeply endangered the interests of the United States. When he received a series of secret intelligence cables announcing that a new, Soviet-sponsored offensive was about to start in Greece, and that this was to be accompanied by Communist-led general strikes in Italy and France, VANDENBERG decided that the time for a final decision had arrived.

The memoirs of Secretary of Agriculture Ephraim A. Bennett, who in 1950 resigned his Cabinet post to go into private business, provide an accurate description of that crucial meeting. From the moment the Cabinet assembled, it seemed clear that this was to be the final round in the contest between VANDENBERG and String. Indeed, the manner in which String greeted VANDENBERG made the fact obvious to all.

"Well, Van," String remarked, clapping the Secretary of State on the back, "I hear you're going to sell us on being Uncle Sap a few more years. When do you get around to the milk for the Hottentots?"

Winsome looked worried and tired. Although since the first day of his administration it had been evident that he would have to resolve the contest on foreign policy within his own Cabinet, he had been nervously postponing the evil day. The Presidential indecision had already been criticized in the press. The New York Herald Tribune, in a spasm of classicism, had headed an editorial Homerus Cunctator. The New York Daily News, in more colloquial fashion, had advised the President: "Come on, Homer, get off that fence."

[5] Ostensibly because of this indiscretion, though in fact for other reasons, young Winsome was later liquidated in a Montana youth concentration camp.

Winsome's hesitations were understandable. Not only was he sincerely harassed by the heavy responsibilities for which he was in no way prepared, but VANDENBERG was his administration's biggest asset with a considerable portion of the electorate and with leaders in his own party. The burden of much press comment had been, "Thank God for VANDENBERG." Yet the two men were far from intimate.

String, on the other hand, long a close friend of the President, had become a White House fixture. It was he who arranged the penny-ante games, who distributed eagerly sought invitations to these shirt-sleeved functions, and who evoked the loudest laughter over the bourbon which flowed so copiously. But quite apart from the personal relationship between the three men, Winsome's real supporters, the political satraps who had made him what he was, were unanimously in String's corner.

Thus, VANDENBERG had in reality lost the battle before he had begun to fight. No doubt he sensed as much himself. Yet with all the force and eloquence at his command, he argued that the United States could not now lay down the great burden which it had taken up since World War II.

For 20 minutes, according to Bennett's account, he talked without interruption, emphasizing his belief that the goal of an economically and politically stable Europe was already in sight; that an American withdrawal from Europe could only mean establishment of Communist power in most of the world outside the Western Hemisphere; and that this must mean, in the end, either war or an American surrender to Soviet world domination.

When VANDENBERG finished there was a short, uncomfortable silence. Then the President spoke. "Well, Van, that was very interesting," Bennett quotes Winsome, "and maybe you're right. What do you think, Melvin?"

"I'd like to ask the Secretary a few questions," String said. "First, if we do what his striped-pants boys over there in the State Department want, what happens to the green light program? Second, when is all this going to end? Third, how are you going to deal with prices, except by socialistic methods? Fourth, how is President Winsome going to look, after what he said in the campaign, if he begins asking Congress for a lot more money to give foreigners?"

String then turned to Winsome. "I'll answer those questions myself," he said loudly. "First, you can throw the green light program out the window. Second, this foreign spending will never end, as long as Uncle Sap goes on making an international sucker out of himself. Third, prices are going right straight up, as long as we keep shipping stuff abroad. And fourth, President Winsome will look like a damn fool.

"Besides, I'm sick of this rubbish about the security of the United States being tied up in Italy or France or the Middle East—or Patagonia maybe. We're a pretty big country, aren't we? And we've got the atom bomb, haven't we? And we can use it if we have to, can't we?"

Thus the battle lines were drawn. The struggle lasted some hours. VANDENBERG was the first to emerge from the White House, looking drawn, his thinning hair rumpled.

"Any news, Mr. Secretary?" he was asked.

VANDENBERG hesitated. Then he said: "You might as well know now as later. I have resigned as Secretary of State."

Price Control

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. ROBERT J. TWYMAN

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. TWYMAN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I wish to include an editorial which appeared in the Chicago Daily News on Wednesday, July 28, 1948. We all know that this administration has done everything in its power to keep prices up. We all know that President Truman has the power to do something about high prices. We all know there is a lack of sincerity in the proposals being made to this special session of the Eightieth Congress. There is a frantic effort on the part of the President to shift the blame from himself to Congress.

The editorial follows:

TRUMAN ON PRICES—HE ASKS THE LIMITED CONTROL HE CALLED FAILURE IN 1946

"WASHINGTON, July 26.—Secretary of Agriculture Brannan today asked farmers to store on their farms a 'substantial portion' of the big grain crops they are producing this year. He said this would help maintain prices."

As President Truman's Secretary of Agriculture asked farmers to hold grain off the market to maintain prices, Mr. Truman sent to Congress his message in which the control of prices was the principal topic.

During the war, we had rationing and price control. We had them because military demands of this country and its allies distorted completely the normal pattern of production and distribution. At the same time, we had a sort of wage control, never as firm as was instituted in Canada and Great Britain.

They froze wages simultaneously with prices in the beginning and held them both relatively tight.

Since President Truman abandoned the vestiges of price control by Executive order in the fall of 1946, two new, great distortions have been introduced into our economic life.

One is the European aid program. The other is the new military program adopted as a safeguard against the risk of war with Russia.

It is a measure of Truman's abject intellectual dishonesty that in his message to Congress he does not refer to either of these programs in his discussion of the recent rise of prices.

A decently candid man would certainly have acknowledged the effect of these factors in appealing for new price controls.

In the summer of 1946, a good many people did believe that the removal of price controls would so increase production that prices would stabilize within a reasonable time. In November 1946, Truman shared their views.

In his acceptance speech and in his message to Congress, Truman treats those people contemptuously as if they were no better than knaves and fools. Yet when he ended controls (except on rent, rice, and sugar) November 10, 1946, Truman said:

"In short, the law of supply and demand operating in the market place, will from now on, serve the people better than would continued regulation of prices by the Government."

At that time, neither the European recovery plan nor the new military program were in prospect—either in Truman's view or that of the manufacturers association. If these had not been deemed necessary, by a good many Republicans as well as the Democratic administration, the predictions made 2 years ago of stable prices might well have come true.

If the European-aid program is increased, as by the lend-lease of military equipment; if the military program is stepped up to full scale preparation for war; if Truman promptly blunders us into war by the same fatuous diplomacy that blundered us into the risk of it, we shall and must have price control, wage control, allocation of materials, the rationing of consumer goods, and all the rest of what Truman described less than a year ago as the machinery of a police state.

There is a fair chance that we can escape them if the spending is not stepped up. The price of grain may indeed lead other prices downward. It probably would if the administration and Congress would permit it.

Neither will permit it, if they can avoid it. Truman and all the orators at the Democratic convention boasted that the party's policies had multiplied farm income by several times. This "farm income," of course, is simply another phrase meaning food prices. But the downward drag of grain prices as Europe restores its agriculture may work despite all the efforts of politicians to prevent it.

If we are going to drift into war or into full-scale preparation for war, price and wage controls will finally become necessary. And if they are to be finally necessary, the time to apply them would be now.

What Congress most needs to know, therefore, is the administration's views on the two vital topics that Truman ignored completely—the future of European aid and military expenditures.

The program Truman asks is not one that would accomplish the result Truman seeks.

He does not propose to freeze everything. Yet the experience of those countries which controlled inflation relatively well, as well as our own relatively unsuccessful experience, proves that a quick and comprehensive freeze is the only method that works.

When we say it "works" we mean simply that it does control prices. It also "works" by restricting production, by restricting initiative, by diverting hundreds of thousands of hands from production into policing. In other words, it works even in a dire emergency by creating many evils while possibly curing one.

When Truman ended controls on November 10, 1946, he said:

"The Price Administrator has advised me that, with so much of the economy freed from price control, clinging to the rest would, in his judgment, lead to distortions in production and diversion of goods to an extent far outweighing any benefit that could be achieved."

Yet, instead of complete control, Truman proposes merely to return to the very situation that he ended as unworkable—namely, control over only a few items.

How is it possible for him to ignore so completley what he said he had learned from experience?

What Truman says about wages in his new message is further evidence of his dishonest approach to the subject.

He does not call for a halt to the whole economic spiral. On the contrary, he says:

"Non-inflationary-wage increases can and should continue to be made by free collective bargaining. Where the Government imposes a price ceiling, wage adjustments which can be absorbed within the price ceiling should not be interfered with by the Government. The Government should have the authority, however, to limit wage adjustments which would force a break in a price ceiling, except to correct inequities, or to prevent an actual lowering of living standards.

We do not dispute the fact that prices have often been raised more than was necessary to compensate for a given wage increase. But sometimes even such a price increase is a hedge against the effect of the wage "round" on the materials and services the employer has to buy, or against the anticipation of the next "round" of his own employees' wages.

Note that even where prices would go up immediately, Truman still has an escape for wages—to prevent inequities, and to prevent an actual lowering of living standards.

If the pressure of Government spending continues, wages and prices would continue to climb under this formula.

On a bankrupt transportation line, where every cent of wages must be reflected in higher fares, increases would nevertheless be granted to prevent inequities, or to prevent a lowering of the standard of living while other wages, costs, and prices continue to march.

His remedy, therefore, is no remedy at all for a desperate situation.

The essence of the matter is: how desperate is the situation? And on this point, the President communicates nothing.

If he means to add military lend-lease to European relief, he should tell the Congress now.

If he means to call for still higher and higher military budgets, he should tell the Congress now.

The real keys to inflation are Government spending and the diversion of production away from the American consumer.

What does the President propose to do about those controls—the controls that are really controlling?

If he proposes to spend more and more, now is the time to confront the issue, and the people can count the cost in liberty as well as money and decide whether it is worth while.

October 14, 1946: Mr. Truman in radio address directs decontrol of meat and orders lifting of controls be accelerated.

October 15, 1946: President asks for and gets decontrol of livestock, meat, food, and feed products, as Nation approaches congressional elections.

October 16, 1946: Fats and oils are decontrolled, including margarine, shortening, salad dressing, cotton seed, peanut, and soybean oil.

October 24, 1946: All food products except sugar, sirups, and rice are decontrolled; also cosmetics.

October 30–31, 1946: Radios, lamps, small electrical appliances, kitchenware, glassware, and hides, skins, leather, and shoes are decontrolled.

November 5, 1946: Election of the Republican Eightieth Congress.

November 9, 1946: Mr. Truman orders end of price control on everything but sugar, rice, and rent. Wage and salary control abolished by Executive order.

January 8, 1947: Mr. Truman presents his economic report to the Eightieth Congress, says: "Farmers must realize that last year's exceptional farm prices will fall somewhat as food supplies increase and as consumers find a more ample supply of durable goods to purchase. Existing price supports afford protection against a severe price decline."

June 11, 1947: Eightieth Congress asks for termination of sugar rationing.

June 12–30, 1947: Agriculture Secretary Anderson calls off sugar rationing and price control on rice.

October 16, 1947: Mr. Truman calls price and wage controls "police state methods."

November 17, 1947: Mr. Truman suggests to special session of Congress his 10-point plan to combat inflation; calls for controls on certain items; explains, "Price ceilings would not be necessary for staple food and clothing items not in short supply or for any delicacies or luxuries."

January 7, 1948: Mr. Truman, in state of Union message, again asks for police state powers.

May 14, 1948: Mr. Truman publicly reiterates demand for 10-point control program.

The proposed legislation includes the whole hodge-podge of recommendations contained in that part of the President's message dealing with rising prices and living costs. But that is not all. A pleasant surprise has been added by way of giving this legislation the authentic OPA touch. For it includes, as it were, an invitation to revisit that Alice in Wonderland of economics in which the country lived during the reign of OPA. That is the land of Let's Pretend, whose chief industries are statistics and regulations, in which high taxes and black market prices don't count, and where the basic philosophy is that inflation that you can't see can't hurt you.

Those who may have wondered precisely what Mr. Porter's contribution to the anti-inflation campaign was going to be do not have to wonder any longer. The secret is out. Incredible as it may seem, the surprise is price roll-backs. Roll-backs would be applied to any cost-of-living item which has risen, or which threatens to rise, 20 percent or more since June 1946 (when price controls were scrapped). Prices picked for the roll-back would remain under ceilings until June 30, 1950.

There is no magic, of course, by which the administration or any other human power can roll prices back, by word of command, to some appointed level. The term "roll-back" is simply a euphemism to describe a process whereby a producer is induced to sell his product at an agreed price, with the difference between that price and the market price made up to him by Government subsidies. And the cost of the subsidies? That, of course, is footed by the taxpayer.

Subsidies are to be distrusted under any conditions, and distrusted particularly when they come, as they come in the case of price roll-backs, in disguise. But the proposal to reintroduce them into the American economy at the present time represents a new high in economic futility. Britain has been chided by her critics for spending almost two billions a year since the war to hold food prices down. We can be charged with the even greater folly of having spent similar amounts to keep farm prices up. But, never until now has it been seriously proposed, here or anywhere else, that a nation's taxpayers shoulder the burden of subsidizing price inflation in one political area and price deflation in another at one and the same time.

Lest We Forget

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE B. SCHWABE

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, lest we forget, I think it would be well to refer to the record with reference to OPA price controls, rationing, and the New Deal program of planned economy as to prices.

The following record is most illuminating:

July 24, 1946: Democratic Congress passes resolution decontrolling meat, poultry, dairy products, grain, petroleum, tobacco, and setting up Decontrol Board.

July 25, 1946: Mr. Truman signs bill providing for Decontrol Board.

August 20, 1946: Decontrol Board restores controls on meat, cottonseed and soybeans, but leaves free from control grains, dairy products, and poultry.

September 10, 1946: Decontrol Board applies meat controls to wholesale sales; restores meat controls at higher prices estimated to add $600,000,000 to Nation's food bill.

The Roll-Back Bill

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ELLSWORTH B. BUCK

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the New York Times of July 30, 1948:

THE ROLL-BACK BILL

Commenting yesterday on the President's appointment of Paul Porter, former OPA head, as his adviser on anti-inflation legislation, we suggested that the move seemed almost deliberately calculated to destroy at the outset any hope of cooperation on legislation in this field. If the naming of Mr. Porter did not accomplish this result, then the bill introduced yesterday by Senator BARKLEY, presumably reflecting the ideas of this adviser, should certainly do so. If any measure ever was put forward by an Administration with its tongue in its cheek, this is such a measure. No intelligent Congress, Republican or Democratic, could possibly stomach this bill, and the Administration must know it.

To His Fingertips

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROBERT F. RICH

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from a recent issue of Iron Age:

TO HIS FINGERTIPS

DEAR SON: "My, he is a capitalist to his fingertips." This is the sentence that stood out in your letter to me. I can understand how Martin, a Norwegian, raised in a country that borders the paradise of the Communist, influenced possibly by the socialism which has such vogue in Europe today, might regard my editorial, Let's Nationalize, as a somewhat unregenerate apostrophe to capitalism.

In all parts of the world today there are millions of young men and women who would give their eye teeth to come to this country.

A recent survey in England showed that 40 percent of the young men between the ages of 21 and 30 would emigrate if they could, and many of these would like to come to the United States.

During the past 2 years I have met a number of young Frenchmen of fine families over on temporary visas who have sought to remain here. At a single American consulate in Rotterdam the number of visa applicants would exhaust the total quota for the next 5 years. By contrast, we find no long lines in this country waiting for passage to the socialist states of Europe or to those perfect societies behind the iron curtain.

Yet it is in precisely these areas where exploitation for private profit is no longer possible that it is necessary to ring the country with police guards to prevent the escape of its citizens. If you were a student in one of the technical schools in Moscow instead of at MIT you would not have to worry about a job after graduation. A commissar would tell you where to go.

On the other hand, when you have finished at Cambridge you will be free to go where you wish and offer your services to any employer interested in your talents. It is possible that you may not agree with him on your proper compensation. You are at liberty in this country to question his judgment, to discuss the matter candidly with him without fear of a midnight visit from the secret police. In fact, if you disagree with him you can always take your hat and explore another market.

Consider the meaning of this. It means that you can offer your services in a free, open market to the highest bidder. Both of you are free agents and exercise a free choice. To a youngster with ambition who wants to get ahead, the only limit to his progress is the limit imposed by his own ability, courage, and perseverance. By contrast with the stifling limitations of a rigidly controlled society, this country offers the exhilarating atmosphere of freedom and unlimited hope. Is there any wonder that millions of youngsters are eager to leave the carefully regulated stockades of Socialist and Communist Europe in favor of America's freer pastures?

This is one of the reasons why I am a "capitalist to my fingertips." It is hard to see how any energetic, ambitious, intelligent youngster can be anything else.

Communists Invade the Churches

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. KARL E. MUNDT

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the Congress and the country, I am placing in the RECORD at this point a most interesting and informative article by Rev. Delos O'Brian, the past president of the Association of Unitarian Ministers of the United States and Canada. The subject of his article is Communists Invade the Churches.

Mr. Speaker, the Reverend O'Brian is a member of the Kiwanis Club, of Berkeley, Calif. His article appeared in the June issue of the Kiwanis magazine. It sheds important light on a subject upon which altogether is either known or suspected by the general public. Its careful reading should help church members throughout America in their efforts to make positive and certain that their own churches are kept free from the poisonous doctrines of Communists and their fellow wanderers.

Many witnesses before the House Committee on Un-American Activities have told us again and again that one of the paramount ambitions of Communists in this country is to get control of the youth of the country by operating either through our churches or our schools. Unfortunately they are having some success in both cases. It is up to an awakened and alert America to protect its youth and itself against the sly practices by which Communists plant their operatives or their misguided tools in these key positions of influence.

COMMUNISTS INVADE THE CHURCHES

(By Delos O'Brian, past president, Association of Unitarian Ministers of the United States and Canada, member Kiwanis Club of Berkeley, Calif.)

Kiwanians believe in the church, and Kiwanians believe in America. We Kiwanians also believe that the church has contributed impressively to the greatness, strength, and success of America.

Fortunately the vast majority of clergymen and churches continue to perform their patriotic and religious role in our American life, but today there also is a small and powerful minority of apostates who are either members of the American Communist Party or fellow travelers. It doesn't matter which, for they are all doing the work of Moscow. They are inside the churches as clergymen or laymen, and they are using their positions to preach the Communist Party line and to lay the basis for an expected Red control of America.

No one fears and abhors this situation more than do the loyal American clergymen and churchmen. It is a continual embarrassment and barrier to the influence and growth of genuine religious institutions, for this subversive element within the churches constantly casts shadows of doubt and suspicion across the whole religious scene in the United States. For this reason the great majority of the clergy and the laity welcome every honest attempt to expose the apostate Communists who daily misuse, and often do their best to ruin the churches.

In my own case, I withdrew from the ministry of the Unitarian Church September 1, 1947, largely because of the Communist infiltration into this church.

The former dean of a theological school, writing about the "disease of secularism" of which he believes communism is one of the results, said only a short time ago, "It is a simple fact of human psychology that when one's devotion is not given to God, it will attach itself to the most powerful putative savior on earth. The circumstances of the hour make Joseph Stalin the most powerful leader now living. Obviously, therefore, our secularistic-minded spokesmen within the church, spurning the Lord God of Jesus Christ, will gravitate toward Mr. Stalin." This distinguished churchman goes on to state something else that is of even greater importance to Kiwanians. He said, "We clergymen are timid. We are incapable of cleaning house alone."

It is up to Kiwanians to answer that call for help. We have put ourselves on record as opposed to communism "under whatever name it may be called and under whatever guise it may be presented." Therefore, we must awaken, and we must awaken others, to the Red infiltration of the liberal wings of the churches of America, and in so doing we will not only be exposing one spot where the Communists have felt that they were fairly safe, but we will also be helping the majority of America's churchmen "clean their houses" of subversive elements.

The Red religionists, although a minority, exercise a widespread and growing influence. They are limited to no one denomination. They are strongest among religious liberals, but they are Catholic and Protestant, Jew, and Gentile. They have not only their pulpits but also their religious press, and their Moscow message is heard in every part of the land. One of their favorite tactics is to smear America and everything American, while at the same time they laud Soviet Russia and everything Red. The object of this is clear. If the United States is always smeared and Russia always praised, we learn to distrust our own country while we learn to trust Russia. The Reds lay the groundwork for their rise to power by first destroying the American people's faith in America and its leadership.

Here is a typical quotation from a Miami church bulletin that consistently follows the Communist Party line: "We look about us (in America) and we see guile in our economy, corruption in our statesmanship, false values in our culture. * * * We are social hypochondriacs. We seek escape in witch hunts, in hysterical oppression of minorities and dissidents. We fear that the slight scratch in our body politic may be the wound which brings our death."

Now that might have been just honest opinion, but on the next page of this church bulletin, as a follow-up, appears this apology for Russia: "All the fanfare about the secret treaty for spheres of influence between Hitler and Stalin before the invasion of Russia, gives us a yawn. It has been common knowledge for years. Its pretended novelty at this time when the Marshall plan and compulsory military training are coming before Congress evokes from us a wry snort. European power politics have bred such deals for centuries. * * * Pretending to be scandalized by such methods of expediency is amusing."

Clergymen serve as officers of the notorious Red-front organization, the Civil Rights Congress. In October 1947, this group issued a pamphlet, America's Thought Police, which was an attack upon the Congressional Un-American Committee and by direct implication a slur at America. The clergymen's names appear on the inside of the front cover, while on the inside of the back cover a solicitation is made for funds for the legal defense of known Communists who have defied the right of the United States to question them.

A California church bulletin reports that on January 9 a Communist apologist spoke at a church in the State Capital. The Red speaker began with a condemnation of America and capitalism. She then "explained" communism and praised the Red way of life, and concluded by denying that "the Communist Party takes orders from Russia," according to the report of the church bulletin. The clergyman adds this editorial comment to this news story, "Mrs. Crane was well received and is a very charming person."

A Boston clergyman tells us in a recently printed and widely distributed sermon, "There are many things about communism that we should learn to appreciate." Regarding the Red revolution of 1917 he says: "It was ideally motivated, in many respects, as was our own Revolution * * * but it was broader in scope, for it included a social revolution, which also was idealistic in character."

In a religious journal published in Chicago another clergyman writes, "The spiritual disability of America is not that of an old person who has wisdom but no strength, but that of a young person who has strength but no wisdom." Then on down the page he informs us that "the menace of communism in the country is a hoax," and he declares that the President of the United States is purposely acting as "a front for this hysteria."

The Christian Register, national publication of the Unitarian Church, followed the Communist Party line for many months under the editorship of Rev. Stephen H. Fritchman. All protests against the use of a religious magazine for communistic purposes and its use as a medium for spreading Red propaganda were regularly ignored by the responsible officials of the church. It was not until May of last year, when a distinguished Detroit lawyer, Larry Davidow, personally and publicly pressed the charge that Rev. Stephen H. Fritchman was a member of the Communist Party that action finally was taken. Then Fritchman was relieved of his editorship by a five-to-four vote of the executive committee of the board of directors of the American Unitarian Association, but not on the grounds of his communism—only because, it was said, he had failed to cooperate with his administrative colleagues.

At the same time this action was being taken, Mr. Davidow was publicly calling the Reverend Mr. Fritchman a Communist Party member and was challenging him to sue for libel, a challenge which Fritchman felt it best not to accept. In spite of all this, the alleged Red clergyman did not go jobless long. He was called to the pastorate of the First Unitarian Church of Los Angeles early this year.

During Fritchman's editorship of the Christian Register, its pages carried such choice bits of information as this: "The war was won by Russian manpower working with Anglo-American science and wealth. * * * It was Russia and Russia alone, under a Communist regime that saved the British empire and the American Commonwealth from the domination of Germany, Italy, and Japan. * * * They have no right to deny or hinder or slander Russia's pursuit of her own way of life and her economic set-up.

"The Christian Register will not lend its pages to Mr. Hearst's and Mr. Howard's campaign of hate against a great and honorable people [the Russians].

"The Soviet order and way of life is no longer in a tentatively precarious stage. It needs no slurring over, no covering up of certain almost inevitable mistakes which have beset it in order to commend it to the intelligent hope and interest of the rest of the world.

"From my own point of view, I consider the only maturity in the world we inhabit these days to consist of a relationship to that world which is based on a scientific world outlook. I conceive of that world outlook as being Marxist."

Opposition to communism was described by this religious magazine as a series of canards and distortions, a poisonous flow of disunity, and slander. But America and our American businessmen were constantly described this way: "Like the Nuremberg defendants, the German millionaire-assassins have ardent friends and admirers in the United States. * * * It is perhaps unnecessary to state that business in Germany prospered on mass murder. A certain large American corporation's very profitable investment doubtless derived big dividends from the slaughter of Warsaw Jews. The common language spoken by the Fascist German and the Fascist American industrialists is not limited to business matters. They share the same ideological vernacular. * * * There are American Fascists who would hear our land resound, as did Nazi-enslaved Europe, with the death cries of children."

But the Christian Register was not through with communism even after the Reverend Mr. Fritchman had been removed as editor. In a symposium in its pages, October 1947, this question was asked, "Can a real Unitarian be a real Communist?" Only one clergyman answered this question with a definite "No." Two clergymen answered it emphatically "Yes," and a fourth thought the answer quite possibly ought to be affirmative. The fifth contributor to this symposium was Earl Browder, former national chairman of the Communist Party, U. S. A. Mr. Browder agreed with the three clergymen and disagreed with the one. Under his picture appeared this statement, The answer is "Yes."

Mr. Browder's advice to the churches as printed in this religious magazine is very enlightening: "There is nothing incompatible with Unitarian (or Roman Catholic or Moslem or Buddhist or Confucian) religious beliefs in the political program of communism. Where the church has fully renounced its ancient claims to secular authority there is, further, no necessary conflict between the church organization and the Communist program * * * we may expect that not only religion, but organized religion, the church, will in our day learn to accept communism as surely as it learned to accept republicanism. * * * It would indeed be a short-sighted religion which today committed its fate into the keeping of the current capitalist system."

Earl Browder is not merely indulging in wishful thinking. He knows. He is the man who boasted, at the time he was the No. 1 Communist in America, "It is significant that the Communist Party, more than any other group, has been able to achieve successful united fronts with church groups on some of the most important issues of the day * * * in going among the religious masses we are for the first time able to bring our antireligious ideas to them."

Mr. Browder also knows that, while the Communists within the churches are a small minority, the success of the Red program depends upon no more than a minority. Thousands of trustworthy and loyal American clergymen and church people are aware of these facts. They are sickened at the sight of the Red brethren who daily betray not only their country but also their God, but, as the former theological school dean has suggested, they are not always capable of cleaning house alone. Therefore this is a struggle that concerns all Americans. It especially concerns Kiwanians.

Curran's Sharp Victory Marks Commie Decline

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ABRAHAM J. MULTER
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include an editorial that appeared in the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Eagle on Friday, July 30, 1948:

CURRAN'S SHARP VICTORY MARKS COMMIE DECLINE

The remarkable victory of Joe Curran, hard-hitting, two-fisted president of the Maritime Union, over his Communist rivals is another sign of how fast the Commie ship is sinking in the CIO. A year ago the best that Curran's chances could have been anticipated was a 50–50 hope. The sweep was 3 to 1 for the presidency and 2 to 1 on the slate.

The Greater New York CIO Industrial Council, under the pro-Communist guidance of Saul Mills, is falling apart. The withdrawal of the Maritime Union from the council, which is due any day, will pull out another strong pillar from beneath the structure. The demolition will be complete when Phil Murray takes the charter away from the pro-Wallaceites and establishes a new right-wing group in control.

This is the way the trend has been running for some months. The decline of the Communists in the CIO gives the alert observer a better insight into the significance of the newest Communist movement which is that of the Progressive Party headed by Henry Wallace and GLEN TAYLOR.

The political maneuver reveals in an unusual way the resiliency of the party and the uncanny ability of the Stalinists to bound back.

The Communist Party at the present time is at one of the lowest ebbs in all its 25-year history in this country. So much in disrepute is the present leadership that reports have it that they are scrapping among themselves and expecting word from Moscow any day of another purge. Their twelve top officials are under indictment, dozens of their alien agitators have been deported or are on the way out, the customary united fronts are finding the sledding much tougher. Hollywood adherents are still shy about giving themselves too much publicity, both political parties have pledged opposition to them, the public is becoming more and more aware of the threat they hold to America.

But what happens? Do they, like the Arabs, "fold up their tents and silently steal away?" Just the opposite. They come up with the most brazen and blustering offensive yet attempted. They inaugurate a third political party, get a couple of non-Communist "Kerenskys" to march in the vanguard and take complete control of a new movement to do battle with the older parties. It is an attempt to so plant themselves in the foreground of the liberal elements of the Nation that eventually their position will compel the non-Communist liberals to join up with them. Whether or not they can succeed in the aim is something for the future to decide. But the aim itself is clear.

As hidden and secret as is the Communist maneuvering, there are always indicators to guide the keener observers. Mr. Lee Pressman is such an indicator. Pressman stayed with the CIO and kept the rudder in the right direction until it was clear that the anti-Communist sentiment was reaching dangerous proportions and that the third party project could get under way. Then he jumped and hundreds of Commies and fellow-travelers followed. Pressman would never have left CIO otherwise. Keep your eye on key people like Pressman and you can tell in advance where the next major interest of the Communist Party lies.

The Eightieth Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM J. CROW
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. CROW. Mr. Speaker, I have been very much amused at the remarks of President Truman in his criticisms of the Eightieth Congress. These blasts started while on his now famous nonpolitical western trip which was paid for by the taxpayers of this country. It developed into one of the worst political trips ever made by a President of the United States and all of his remarks were against the Eightieth Congress. He seems to have forgotten that about 70 percent of his fellow Democrats joined us in overriding his many vetoes.

I am justly proud to have been a Member of the Eightieth Congress. There have been some favorable articles written about the record of the Congress and I hope that some of you have read the article appearing in Fortune, volume XXXVII, No. 6, entitled "Congress Comes Through." In this article it states:

Although divided from the White House by the gulf of party politics, the Eightieth Congress has set a record hard to beat.

The President seems also to have forgotten that the people of the country rose up against his New Deal misrule in 1946 and said "We have had enough," by electing a Republican Congress for the first time since 1930. I assure you that we were not elected to carry on the principles of the New Deal and the President could hardly expect us to pass all of the measures requested by him, especially the ones that would continue the regimentation of our people, bringing us closer and closer to a Socialist form of Government. Some of these measures were socialized medicine, Federal aid to education, public housing, and so forth.

Our main duty to the people of this country is to keep our country financially strong so that we can continue to maintain our position in the world. Following the leadership of President Truman will soon place us in the same position as Socialist England, "bankrupt." And if we allow our country to become bankrupt and we need aid, who could we look to for help? Absolutely no one. We are now trying to aid almost all of the non-Communist countries of the world and the main question is, "How long can we continue this aid and remain strong?" Apparently, President Truman is not worried about it but wants to continue to tax and tax, spend and spend, elect and elect. That has been the policy of the New Deal as expressed so clearly by one of the original New Dealers, Harry Hopkins.

Let us look at the record of the Eightieth Congress. Remember first that the New Deal had been in control since 1932. Some people seem to think that the Eightieth Congress should have corrected all of the errors in one session when it took 14 years to make them. We never promised that and we admit that there is much to be done in getting the Government down to its proper size and in restoring the Government to the people. When we met in January 1947, President Truman promised us his cooperation, but that cooperation turned out to be veto, veto, veto of every important measure passed.

First, the Eightieth Congress abolished 76,000 rules, regulations, directives, and orders, thereby releasing free enterprise with resulting high employment, production, profits, and wages, and a record two hundred billion annual income. The President is now trying to take credit for this accomplishment, but the people will not be fooled. He would have continued the controls that would have stifled production and prosperity.

Next, the Treasury closed the 1948 fiscal year with the largest surplus in the history of the country, a total of $8,419,000,000. The President and his advisers estimated a surplus of only about $3,000,000,000 for the year.

We cut the President's padded budget for 1947 and 1948 by many billions of dollars in spite of the strong opposition of all of the New Deal Democrats in Congress. Every appropriation bill was reduced by the Republicans after a battle on the floor of the House carried on by the President's supporters, in an effort to restore the full amount as requested by the President. They were not successful in keeping the Republicans from making necessary reductions. There can still be reductions made and it will be easier when we have Tom Dewey in the White House.

We reduced taxes by about $4,800,000,000 despite three Presidential vetoes and in doing so we removed 7,400,000 taxpayers from the tax roll completely. In spite of this fact the President says that our tax bill favors only the rich. I am sure that the 7,400,000 persons who were removed from the tax roll will not believe that lie. He is trying to persuade the people in this way so that they will return him to the White House. I am sure that not even the poor would have benefited from his asinine plan to allow each taxpayer a $40 reduction of his tax with a tax to be added to the already overtaxed corporations to make up the money lost to the Treasury. Even the Democrats in Congress wondered where he had dreamed up such an idea as a tax-relief program.

The President charges the Eightieth Congress with high prices because we did not give him war powers to control the prices. From experience we all know what happens under controls. Production is curtailed and you are not able to find the products on the market to buy. The people have suffered long enough under controls and regimentation. The President fails to tell you that his Department of Agriculture is still buying all surplus wheat, corn, potatoes, butter, and other farm products in order to keep the prices up. That shows they are not interested in having the price of foodstuffs brought down to a reasonable price. I am sure we will never forget the pictures of the thousands of bushels of potatoes that were used as fertilizer and burned to keep the prices up while there were many people in the world starving. Just recently the Department of Agriculture announced that we were going to have the largest crop of corn and wheat in our history this year. Immediately the market went down and prices would have gone down if the same Department of Agriculture had not gone into the market and bought up all surplus corn and wheat. Do not let them fool you, they want the prices to remain high so that the farmers will give the New Deal credit for their high prices. In his speech of acceptance in Philadelphia President Truman even went so far as to call any farmer who would vote against him and his New Deal "an ingrate." Do not forget your money is being used to buy votes in that way. I do not think the farmers will be pleased with his name calling. Yes, he is entitled to the credit for the high prices, even by his own words.

Next, the Eightieth Congress passed the Labor-Management Act of 1947, providing fair and just procedures and methods for peaceful settlement of labor-management disputes. President Truman, wanting the labor leaders' support, says that this terrible law should be repealed, but he forgets that 70 percent of the Democrats in the House and Senate voted to override his veto. The plank in the Democratic platform calling for its repeal is President Truman's plank and I assure you not the plank of the 70 percent who voted to override the veto. There may be some amendments necessary to make the law work smoother and I assure you that I will support any corrective amendment but I will not support any repeal of the law, to return to the conditions we found the country in under the old Wagner Act. I am sure that the laboring men, if they understood the provisions of the bill, would not want to return to the old conditions, and I know that their wives and children are happy to see the checks come in more regularly because of the fewer strikes. In Philadelphia, the President also said that any laboring man who voted against the New Deal would be an ingrate. He seems to have forgotten that he at one time recommended that the railroad men be drafted into the Army because of a strike. The Republicans in Congress at the time prohibited such a move. This law has been called a slave-labor bill, but in my understanding of the bill, it is a save-labor bill.

The Eightieth Congress cooperated with President Truman on the foreign-aid program and appropriated $9,579,000,000 for the purpose of relief to impoverished humanity and to help reestablish national economics. We also tried to strengthen the countries to stop the spread of communism.

When we opened the Eightieth Congress we stated that the Government was overrun with Communists but the President denied this condition existed. We had very little cooperation but finally we did learn that the State Department had fired about 600 employees because of their communistic tendencies. There are still many Communists in Government jobs and I assure you that when Dewey moves into the White House they will be on their way out.

We strengthened our national defense by unifying the armed services and appropriated $20,500,000,000 to build up the armed forces.

As a member of the Veterans' Affairs Committee of the House I helped in passing many measures for the benefit of the veteran. We passed 188 measures to meet the veterans' needs, by increasing compensation for disabled veterans, widows, children, students under the GI bill, and on-the-job training veterans. This was done in spite of the President's statement in his message to Congress on January 6, 1947, when he stated, "except for minor changes the obligation to the veteran has been met."

The Eightieth Congress eliminated stifling rules, regulations, and directives and in this way stimulated home building through Government guaranties of loans, had the Government assume a large part of veterans' loans and gave veterans priorities in home building and rental of new houses. During the past year over 900,000 new homes were constructed under the free enterprise system and in spite of this the President wants us to pass a public housing bill that will place the Federal Government in the low-cost housing business for 45 years. The Government will subsidize each dwelling unit by paying $5 per month toward the rent. Some estimates are that about 2,000,000 families in time might use the housing and that would mean a payment of $10,000,000 per month of the taxpayers' money. Wages are high at the present time and I am afraid all of the units would be like the housing units in Fayette County, 131 families now occupy these areas with incomes of more than the law allows for occupancy of low-cost housing areas. If this bill were passed it would be practically impossible to build a private home because the Government would have priorities on all material for the Government housing. I am opposed to the Government entering any business that will interfere with free enterprise. Some people believe that the T-E-W bill will authorize the construction of individual homes for veterans. That is wrong. The only houses built will be apartment houses to be rented by low-income families. I hope that our veterans of this country will not be in the low-income bracket who are authorized to occupy the low-cost rental areas.

One of the most controversial measures is the aid-to-education bill. I do not believe that our Federal Government should aid our educational systems, except as a last resort, because of the supervision by Federal Government that follows Federal aid. I am for the States handling their own educational systems, and I believe it to be one of the most important responsibilities of the States. If we look at the financial condition of the States, I am sure you will find them to be in excellent condition and better able to aid their educational systems than the Federal Government with its huge indebtedness. The State of Pennsylvania pays only 1.9 percent of its income for education, and I feel that we in Pennsylvania could apply 2.3 percent or more to education and that should care for all school districts needing aid. With the Government indebted to about $263,000,000,000, it sounds like the rich cousin coming to poor Uncle Sam for aid to carry out one of its most important functions and responsibilities.

During the campaign of 1946 we made certain promises in our platform. If you will check them against our accomplishments, you will find that we carried out every one of the main planks in the platform, in spite of the many vetoes. What other Congress has been able to make that statement?

We are now being called back to Washington by the President so that he can state once more that he wants us to pass his New Deal measures. I want to say that in my opinion this is merely a political move; but it will not work, for we are not a New Deal Congress. I was elected by the people of Fayette and Somerset Counties in spite of President Truman, and I assure you that he will not tell me what measures I should support. I have tried to represent you of the Twenty-third Congressional District well, and I have studied all measures to see how they will affect or benefit you, so that my vote represents a thoughtful study of the bills. I shall continue to represent you as long as the voters of the district desire my services. I will go to Washington, if officially called, and I am sure that I will return as much an anti-New Dealer as I have always been.

I am proud of the record of the Eightieth Congress, and no matter how hard the President knocks us, I am sure that Thomas E. Dewey will be in the White House, enjoying the new balcony, in January 1949.

Old-Age Pension

JOINT EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GERALD W. LANDIS
OF INDIANA
AND
HON. TOBY MORRIS
OF OKLAHOMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. Speaker, we desire to call the attention of the House to the subject of an American uniform old-age pension of $60 per month to be paid directly by the Federal Government, to take the place of old-age assistance, or title I of the Social Security Act.

It has been our privilege to circulate a friendly request for the enactment of such a pension during the preceding sessions of the Eightieth Congress. This friendly request is now addressed to the honorable Committee on Ways and Means. It now contains or includes the names of 222 of the Members of the House of Representatives. These Members come from both sides of the aisle and almost all sections of the country.

This program is supported by pension organizations, including the American Pension Committee, Inc., and the General Welfare Federation of America, with active clubs in a majority of the States. The clubs include members of all ages, as well as citizens from almost every walk of life. The clubs are scattered from the north to the south, and from the east to the west. They are unanimously calling upon the Congress for action now on this friendly and united program. We are glad to say further in behalf of these sponsoring organizations that they are nonpartisan and friendly. They do not criticize, condemn, or attack the Congress, its leaders or its Members. They are not involved in controversial issues not germain to the cause for which they are working. They present through us their petitions, in a friendly and respectful manner, and in the highest American tradition. They assure us that they find very little opposition to their program. They solicit support from all citizens and are receiving an overwhelmingly favorable response in all sections of the country.

Both major political parties, and in fact the new party as well, have declared for more adequate old-age pensions. It is our confirmed opinion that there is a very great need for such a pension. In fact if it is not provided by this session of Congress we fear that many of our very deserving elder citizens will suffer great hardship during the coming winter. Such a condition, Mr. Speaker, should not exist in this great land of ours. In view of the appropriations we have made for other things, many of which are perhaps for less important, certainly this matter of a reasonable pension for the aged should not be delayed longer.

With such widespread and favorable interest among the people, with a majority of the members of the House already committed to this program, and in view of this very acute and dire need of our own fathers and mothers, it is our sincere desire and most earnest request that the leadership of the House will give this program early, thorough, and favorable consideration.

Let us enact a decent old-age pension. Let us do it now.

Editorials of the Nation's Leading Newspapers Continue To Urge Congress To Act Favorably on the Mundt-Nixon Bill—Recent Testimony by Miss Elizabeth Bentley Provides Additional Reasons Why Congress Should Act Now To Bar Communists From the Federal Pay Roll

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. KARL E. MUNDT
OF SOUTH DAKOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, the leading newspapers of the country are continuing to print editorials in support of the so-called Mundt-Nixon bill. Organizations and individuals are also pressing for action by Congress.

The startling testimony of Miss Elizabeth Bentley before the Ferguson committee of the Senate and the House Committee on Un-American Activities offers additional reason why it is imperative that legislation be passed which will deal realistically with the Communist problem in America.

Under leave granted me by the House, I am herewith inserting in the RECORD two highly significant editorials; the first is from the San Francisco Examiner, and the second is from the highly admired Kansas City Star:

[From the San Francisco Examiner of June 2, 1948]

THE MULBERRY BUSH

It is in the category of good news that the Senate Judiciary Committee has given immediate consideration to the Mundt-Nixon Communist Control Act, for it had been openly predicted that the Senate would pigeonhole this important measure although the House of Representatives had passed it by an overwhelming majority.

The basis for this expectation was that many critics of the measure, including the President of the United States, had argued that there was already ample law to deal with Communist subversion and that, anyway, the Mundt-Nixon bill would not really control communism but simply drive it underground.

This fiction about driving communism underground as the effect of any law recognizing and penalizing and preventing the criminal and treasonable purposes of communism is the familiar mulberry bush around which the apologists and dupes of communism have long been in the habit of running.

The real fact is that the Communist movement in the United States is already an underground movement, and has always been of that character and would always be so even if it should achieve the total and dictatorial power in the United States it seeks—for it would only be through the secret implements of tyranny and oppression that such a power could be sustained.

Even in Soviet Russia the real Communist power is a secret and hidden instrument, for only a small fraction of the people are Communists, and few, if any, of their most highly placed Communist rulers are immune from the mysterious disappearances and liquidations which have wrapped so many of them in oblivion.

In the United States, our existing laws which President Truman calls adequate for our protection against communism have never exposed and most certainly have never punished the real rulers of the Communist movement which admittedly and avowedly has the overthrow of the American Government as its objective.

Although the most responsible agencies of American Government, including the Department of Justice and the Army and the Navy, did a most competent and alert job of Communist investigation during the recent war, they only succeeded in flushing out a few figureheads who were only fronts for the real leadership and probably nothing more important than its errand boys.

The Browders, the Eislers, the Fosters, and all the others known to the American people as Communist leaders are at the most mere cogs in the Communist organization of the country and obviously very minor cogs at that, for they are peremptorily and callously discarded when their usefulness is at an end, without noticeable impairment or diminution of the continuing Communist enterprise.

The blunt truth is that under existing law neither the American Government nor the American people know how many Communists there are in the country or who they are.

Completely unknown, they turn up in our most vital and loyal industries and organizations and especially in labor unions and schools, and when they are occasionally exposed it is usually found that they have assumed false names in addition to having professed false purposes, and even then they complain loudly and bitterly about violation of their American civil rights when their real and grim purpose has been the destruction of the American democratic institutions which give meaning to civil rights.

Virtually all opponents of the Mundt-Nixon bill, knowing the bad odor of communism in the United States, acknowledge that the objectives of the bill are sound and reasonable but profess dismay over the manner in which it would attain its objectives.

As a matter of fact, the only real fault of the Mundt-Nixon bill is that it does not outlaw communism in the United States as the vast majority of the American people are convinced it should do, but only seeks to register and thus identify all Communists and their real leaders and the organizations in which they pursue their evil purposes.

[From the Kansas City (Mo.) Star of May 17, 1948]

PROTECTING THE AMERICAN SYSTEM

An evident minority in the House is objecting to a Communist control bill on the ground that it is too sweeping, too broad, and general. Yet it would not sweep the Communists out of this country or even outlaw their party. The latter action is favored by many organizations and individuals. But the House bill, according to its author, Representative MUNDT of South Dakota, merely would say to the Communists stand up and be counted and let people know who you are.

In short, the basic purpose of this legislation is to keep the Reds in the open. Outlawing the party would simply drive it underground where its members could work the more effectively, whereas the bill would force them to identify themselves and leave them subject to apprehension at any time an offense might be committed.

The methods would include registration with the Justice Department, which has been favored by the Attorney General and the FBI. Also required would be a regular accounting of party funds and activities, while the link with the Communist base in Russia would be severed by the denial of passports. It would be made a crime to work for the establishment of a Communist dictatorship in the United States.

It is apparent that such measures would confine the party to the activities of a political organization instead of an agency directed from abroad and engaged in a conspiracy against the American Government and the democratic system. These measures seek to protect that system without adopting a totalitarian principle and outlawing the party. They would permit freedom to the extent it was not used to destroy freedom itself.

Here is neither a sweeping nor a dangerous restriction. While the House bill awaits passage a majority of that body is committed to its objectives, and the President has stated that he was opposed to outlawing the Communist party. His attitude in this respect is consistent with that of the Justice Department. The one extreme can be avoided while effective methods are employed for defense of the principles on which this Nation is built. Either the House bill or a similar measure ought to be adopted.

Increasing Veterans' Compensation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I wish to present the following excerpt from the August issue of the monthly legislative newsletter of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, together with a bill which I am introducing in Congress at the request of that organization:

[Excerpt from August issue VFW monthly legislative news letter]

Both Democratic and GOP platforms indicated favorable response to VFW plea for more realistic approach to disability compensation due to cost of living. Cost of living is 71.5 percent above 1939 level and dollar today is worth only 58.3 cents for the average person in terms of 1939 dollars. One hundred percent disability compensation is $138.50 in present 1948 dollars. In terms of 1939 dollars the present monthly rate is only $80.75, yet in 1939, 100 percent disabled service-connected received $100 per month. In order to put the present disabled on par with 1939 disabled in purchasing power, present rate for 100 percent disabled should be $158.30 or an increase of approximately 15 percent over the present rates.

[In the House of Representatives, Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts (by request) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs]

A bill to provide certain equitable adjustments in disability compensation and pension to meet the rise in the cost of living

Be it enacted, etc., That all monthly rates of compensation and pension payable to veterans of World War I and World War II and dependents of such veterans which are payable under any laws or regulations administered by the Veterans' Administration are hereby increased by 15 percent: Provided, That such increase shall not apply to the increased rates provided under Public Law No. 868, Eightieth Congress. The increases provided by this section shall be effective from the first day of the first month following the passage of this act.

Selective Service Act

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES C. DAVIS

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the members of the American Legion in the State of Georgia throughout the years have given solid support to all measures which our national defense and safety and security of our country have required.

The recently enacted Selective Service Act is a measure which existing conditions make necessary in the preservation of our national security.

The need for this measure and the need for aggressive administration and execution of its provisions is recognized by the members and officers of the American Legion, Department of Georgia.

At its recent State convention, which was held in Atlanta, the Legion adopted strong resolutions condemning all individuals and groups who seek to arouse a spirit of defiance against this bill. These resolutions also commended the Members of the House and Senate and President of the United States for the passage of this bill, and pledged their support to aggressive administration and execution of the provisions of the bill. I include a copy of these resolutions and the letter of Hon. Herbert W. Moon, department adjutant, transmitting them to me:

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
DEPARTMENT OF GEORGIA,
Atlanta, Ga.

Hon. JAMES C. DAVIS,
Member of Congress,
Stone Mountain, Ga.

DEAR MR. DAVIS: Enclosed you will find copies of resolutions adopted by the recent department convention of the American Legion in Georgia.

These are being forwarded to you under instructions of this department convention, and it will be appreciated if you will take time to read these resolutions and give this headquarters the benefit of any comments that you might feel justified in making.

Respectfully,

HERBERT W. MOON,
Department Adjutant.

Whereas the President of the United States of American has now placed his signature upon the Selective Service Act;

Whereas it has come to the attention of the members of the American Legion, Department of Georgia, through the press and otherwise, that certain individuals are attempting to instill into the minds of the youth of the Nation an animosity and a spirit of defiance and open violence against this bill which is a vital means of retaining our democratic way of life for which our deceased buddies have given their all;

Whereas this conduct on the part of individuals and groups is directly contrary to the high ideals of the American Legion, Department of Georgia, we hereby go on record as condemning all individuals and groups who use any means to instill defiance in the minds of our citizens against the laws of our Nation; and

Whereas the members of the American Legion, Department of Georgia, were wholeheartedly in favor of the Selective Service Act, before its passage, and will be equally aggressive in the administration and execution of this bill: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the members of the American Legion, Department of Georgia, take this opportunity to commend the Members of both Houses of our Congress and our President of the United States of America for their splendid work in the passage of the Selective Service Act.

President's Program Impossible in Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LAWRENCE H. SMITH
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, as part of my remarks I am inserting an editorial which appeared in the Janesville (Wis.) Daily Gazette for July 29 on the subject of the special session. This editorial points out that the session was called for political purposes and will serve no real good at this time.

PRESIDENT'S PROGRAM IMPOSSIBLE IN CONGRESS

No one doubts that President Truman's call for a special session of Congress was for political purposes. He found a dull Democratic Convention needing a "shot in the arm." The special session was an adroit answer to that problem. Harry Truman is a candidate for reelection and faced a very dull election. Here was something explosive on which he could depend for continuing publicity and a means to make the Republican Congress a scapegoat.

This is an emergency session supposedly called for emergency purposes, but the only proposal Mr. Truman made which can be called an emergency is the housing problem. The rest of the eight points involve such a broad field that Congress cannot possibly be expected to pass upon them in this session.

His presentation of the inflation problem is so obviously weak and shallow that it is likely to get little consideration. It is unlikely that Congress will replace the excess profits tax to provide a treasury surplus, nor controls over credits. Nor is it likely that Congress will trust Mr. Truman with controls over scarce commodities, nor controls rationing products in short supply, nor controls over prices of scarce commodities or power to limit wage adjustments which might break through the price ceiling.

Mr. Truman endorsed the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill that passed the Senate last spring. He wants it passed now.

The eight additional points in the President's program of musts are not exactly musts, except that Congress should approve the $65,000,000 loan for construction of a permanent United Nations headquarters in New York City. Congress also should follow his suggestion of more equitable and realistic pay for Federal employees.

Why did Mr. Truman omit mention of the Government price supports for agricultural commodities, the base under our high cost of food? That high cost of food is what the people of the Nation are complaining about.

President Truman knows that Congress cannot possibly consider and pass the legislation he recommends for this session. He is using that program as the basis of his political campaign, distorting his call for a special session of Congress and lowering its purpose to that of mere politics.

Anniversary of First Atomic Bombing in Japan

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. THOMAS J. LANE
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I wish to include herein an article by Bill Collins, Jr., which appeared in the Lawrence Sunday Sun, Lawrence, Mass., Sunday, August 1, 1948, on the anniversary of the first atomic bombing in Japan on August 6, 1945:

ANNIVERSARY OF FIRST ATOMIC BOMBING IN JAPAN TIME FOR PEOPLE TO THINK SERIOUSLY—FIRST A-BOMB STRUCK HIROSHIMA AUGUST 6, 1945—RECALLING TERRIBLE EFFECTS OF BOMBS AT HIROSHIMA AND NAGASAKI IN TODAY'S TIME OF TENSION, SUNDAY SUN WRITER GIVES SITUATION HUMAN ONCE-OVER

(By Bill Collins, Jr.)

It happened for the first time, on a Monday.

It is said that between 70,000 and 80,000 people were killed.

It is said 120,000 people were wounded.

It is said 290,000 people were made homeless.

It is said 60 percent of a city was obliterated.

That was Hiroshima on August 6, 1945.

That was the day the first atomic bomb was dropped and people began spelling the word with capital letters: DEATH.

THE SECOND TIME

It happened for the second time 2 days later.

In a city of 253,000 population, between 35,000 and 40,000 people were reported killed and missing.

That was Nagasaki on August 8, 1945.

YESTERDAY

That, in the minds of many today, was yesterday. In those same minds, yesterday is a thing of the past, to be shunted aside in one's thoughts, to be remembered only when pleasant memories; if unpleasant, to be locked up in a dark closet, like the figurative skeletons.

But the skeletons of Hiroshima and Nagasaki are real skeletons. Once they were people.

SHOULD REMEMBER

And whether it is pleasant or not, today, more than ever before, we should remember.

Because, now, even the most blindly thinking person must reluctantly admit that it might happen here.

LIKE STORM THREAT

And knowing that—realizing the facts of the matter, understanding the tension that now exists in Berlin, watching, with some apprehension, the so-called "cold war," which is now being fought in diplomatic moves on a gigantic world checkerboard—is like expecting a storm. It is as though heavy, ponderous clouds, menacing, mean-looking, have rolled up over the horizon, threatening a storm—but leaving the people uncertain as to whether it will actually materialize or not. People look at the clouds warily, hoping that the storm might pass over, but remain constantly aware that there might, at any moment, be a reverberating roar of thunder, a blinding javelin of lightning—and then a raging, roaring storm. It would be a storm called war.

It would cease to have such fancy names as "cold war." It would become a burning, blasting, bombing, killing, crying, real war.

SUBTLETY WOULD CEASE

And the subtlety would cease. The hidden moves, the shufflings would be done with. The tension of expectancy, of waiting, would be relieved. The cards would be lying face up on the table, with Mars, the warrior, as the banker.

PEOPLE HATE WAR

Most people, truly human people who recognize the value of all things, do not want war. They hate war.

Yet war is like having a tooth pulled, in one respect. A person does not want to have a tooth pulled, but if he knows having the tooth pulled is necessary to the well-being of his livelihood, he will take the step.

PEOPLE WONDER

Today people are beginning to get impatient. The unknown is baffling, puzzling, and perplexing. People want to know what is going on, what is going to happen. Each move by Russia and by the United States and its allies serves to increase the tension, until the question is like a neon sign, flashing on and off. Russia throws up a blockade. The western powers block export lines. Russia puts planes in the vital air corridors, harassing blockade-busting shuttle transports. The allies say they will perhaps have to tear down an important Russian radio station. Each move is like a checker game, with each player seeking to effect a stalemate. And the fate of the world hangs in the balance.

Yet the people are told there is not likely to be any war. Statesmen and diplomats voice optimism as to the outlook for peace.

And the people wonder.

PROMISES

Then another politician tells the people that if he were President there would be no crisis in Berlin. If there were no crisis in Berlin there would not be such a threat that—and said politician knows the people know it. And the people have heard political promises before.

APPEASEMENT

The people, too, have heard of appeasement before. Giving in is not the American way when the American thinks—and often knows—he is right. They know, the people, that if you give some men an inch they will want a mile. It worked that way with Hitler. The formulas do not change very much.

SIT TIGHT

So the people sit tight and leave things in the hands of the men who know more about the situation than they do. They trust in their Government. They believe in their country.

The reports of massing of troops, the showing off of air might—by both sides of the question—come to them. They hear of the new reports of flying saucers, and few laugh at such reports. Because there are many who think there is more to the flying saucers than just imagination. The people know that more and more secret weapons are being perfected. They have been told that America still leads in the race for atomic power. Such knowledge is comforting, in a measure, but the comfort is not too cozy when the people ask themselves the question: Has any other country got an atom bomb?

TIME OF TENSION

This week marks the anniversary—not to be celebrated—of the dropping of the first atom bomb in wartime.

It is a time of turmoil in the world.

The world seems to be blindfolded.

It is a time of tension.

It is a time to pray—for peace.

Federal Spending Is Greatest Single Cause of Inflation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE B. SCHWABE

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the following article is well written, and deserving of serious study and consideration. It is by Alvin A. Burger, research director of the National Association of State Chambers of Commerce:

FEDERAL SPENDING IS GREATEST SINGLE CAUSE OF INFLATION—PRESIDENT OFFERS EIGHT-POINT PROGRAM TO CHECK INFLATION BUT OVERLOOKS MOST IMPORTANT RECOMMENDATION: CURB GOVERNMENT SPENDING

President Truman has ordered Congress back to Washington to deal with two national problems: inflation and housing. His message to the Congress, delivered on Tuesday, outlined the things he wants done. The message contained 3,000 words, 1,100 of which were devoted to the problem of inflation and to his eight proposals for solving that problem. There was not a single word of reference, however, to the most important of all the causes of inflation—the extravagant and unsound spending policies of the Federal Government itself.

None of the President's eight recommendations even hinted of the one remedy which, above all others, could effectively check the disturbing trend toward ever-rising prices, reduction of the cost of Government.

On the contrary, the President's message contained no less than 10 recommendations for new Federal outlays, which, if approved by Congress, would at the outset add almost $2,000,000,000 more to the present budget, and eventually at least $9,000,000,000 more.

These proposed new expenditures would entail large increases in Federal employment, in Government purchases of basic materials, and in building space needed for the new offices created by the proposed legislation. These increases would come in the face of desperate Nation-wide shortages of manpower, materials and building space, shortages which contribute largely to current inflationary conditions.

COST OF LIVING VERSUS THE COST OF GOVERNMENT

The President's message dwelt at length on rising prices and the high cost of living.

The cost of living in the United States has risen 73 percent since 1939, according to the latest report of the Bureau of Labor Statistics. This is a very disturbing increase indeed.

But in the same period of time the cost of Federal Government (as measured by its expenditures) has soared from $8,765,338,000 in the fiscal year 1939 to $39,326,000,000 in the fiscal year 1948.[1] This is an increase of 337 percent.

In other words, the cost of Federal Government has increased at a rate four and a half times as fast as the cost of living has increased since 1939.

That is important for this reason: Taxes for all government in the United States today—Federal, State, and local—constitute the largest single item in the budget of the whole American people. It is larger than the Nation's bill for food. It amounts to more than 25 cents of every dollar of the Nation's income. Of the $55,000,000,000 levied and collected in taxes for all government in the United States this year, more than four-fifths goes to Washington.

It can readily be seen that if Congress were to approve new expenditures advocated by the President, taxes needed to meet these new spending burdens would take an even larger slice of the American income dollar than is taken now.

TAXES ARE INTENDED FOR SPENDING

The President's message did, indeed, propose the levying of a new tax—an excess-profits tax. The message stated that the new revenues are intended "to provide a Treasury surplus and provide a brake on inflation."

Students of public finance know that taxes are imposed by government—any government—for one purpose, and one purpose only: To provide money to spend.

Surely this is confirmed by the new spending recommendations made in the President's message. The excess-profits tax revenues are intended to finance additional Federal expenditures and nothing else.

INFLATION CAN BE CURBED—IF

The most important contribution toward breaking the inflationary trend can be made by the Federal Government itself, simply by putting its own house in order.

Let us give a few examples of what we mean:

Manpower shortages threaten to retard the Nation's production. Yet the Federal Government is surfeited with manpower. It now has 2,100,000 civilians on its pay rolls and has been hiring additional employees at the rate of almost 500 a day. Chairman HARRY F. BYRD of the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures, has recommended that Federal personnel be reduced by 30 percent. He has declared that this can be done without impairing essential Government service. Adoption of this recommendation would make available 630,000 workers to help relieve manpower shortages in many parts of the country.

There is a shortage of basic materials—steel, lumber, etc. The President's Economic Advisory Council in January urged a substantial cut in public-works construction in order to conserve on materials in short supply. Yet the Government is now embarked on public-works projects which will cost the taxpayers more than $2,500,000,000 in the fiscal year 1949—the largest public-construction program ever undertaken in a peacetime year. A judicious rescission of a substantial part of the funds appropriated for public works in 1949 would help to solve the problem of essential materials shortages.

Finally, inflation is aggravated by the scarcity of building space and of housing. The United States Government is by far the largest single user of building space in the Nation. Its agencies are constantly competing with private firms and among themselves for office space in every sizable city in the country. Newly created Federal agencies are now said to require 9,000,000 square feet of space in Washington alone. A determination to halt the creation of new Federal agencies and the expansion of old ones, and to weed out and eliminate unessential and overlapping services, would do much to relieve building space shortages and make more materials and manpower available for housing construction.

A Legacy of Spies and Communists

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. DANIEL A. REED

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1948

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, the time is past overdue for a Government housecleaning of the spies and Communists who have long infested the Government departments under the New Deal administration.

Under leave heretofore granted by unanimous consent, I am inserting as a part of my remarks an article which appeared in the Washington Post July 31, 1948:

COMMERCE AIDE GAVE HER SECRETS DURING WAR, FORMER RED SPY SAYS—ANOTHER OF THOSE IN RING WAS ON WHITE HOUSE OFFICE STAFF IN 1944, SHE TESTIFIES; LISTS GOVERNMENT SOURCES

(By Mary Spargo)

The furtive operations of a Communist spy ring stretching from Washington to Moscow were described to a Senate committee yesterday by a self-confessed former key figure in the espionage net.

Miss Elizabeth Terrill Bentley, a dark-haired Vassar graduate, class of 1930, told the Senate investigating committee she had about 20 direct and 30 more indirect contacts among Government employees in Washington during the war.

One, she said, worked in the executive office of the President in 1944.

The Russians to whom she reported, she testified, became much excited when she passed on information from the White House contact that this Nation was on the verge of breaking one of Russia's codes.

NAMES ONE EMPLOYEE

Only Government employee the committee permitted her to name was William Remington, Director of the Export Programs Staff of the Commerce Department.

Remington, she said, was in the War Production Board during the war and passed along secret figures on American aircraft production, and also a secret formula on the making of synthetic rubber.

He and his wife, she testified, were members of the Communist Party. She said she collected Communist Party dues from them and delivered Communist literature to them.

Before Miss Bentley took the stand the committee called Thomas C. Blaisdell, Jr., Acting Assistant Secretary of Commerce, to explain how it was that Remington was given an important Commerce job in March 1948, despite the fact that the FBI and the Justice Department had known of his affiliations for a year.

IS NOW ON VACATION

Blaisdell said Remington had been doing highly secret work for his department, although there was some question about his affiliation with Communist-front organizations. Blaisdell said he liked Remington, who is now, he declared, on vacation.

Last night Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer said he had placed Remington on indefinite leave in the latter part of June after reading a report, in the hands of the Civil Service Commission, on the investigation into Remington's background.

Remington, it was disclosed, is now chairman of the "adhoc" committee of the Commerce Department, which deals in confidential information concerning this country's requirements for atomic energy, military and naval materials.

Commerce Department officials said he has also been working recently with an interagency committee that determines what goods may be exported to Russia.

Chairman HOMER FERGUSON, Republican, of Michigan, of the investigating subcommittee said Remington would be given his day in court today and summoned a committee hearing for 10 a. m.

The committee, FERGUSON said, was not trying to pass on Remington's loyalty but rather to determine the degree of efficiency of loyalty tests when despite the information available to FBI and Justice he was given a confidential post at Commerce.

Miss Bentley told the committee that toward the end of her association with Remington he was very unhappy, uneasy, and reluctant to give her information.

As for obtaining information from Government departments, she said, it was easier to say from which departments she could not obtain information than to list those from which she could.

It was impossible to get anything out of the Federal Bureau of Investigation or the Navy, she said. The Army and, particularly, the Air Forces, she said were a different matter.

Military information from the Air Forces and the Army went right to Russian agents in New York.

She named specifically the Treasury as an excellent source of information—the one place from which a few crumbs of Navy information occasionally leaked. She also named the State Department, the OSS, the Office of the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, the War Production Board, and the War Manpower Commission as furnishing contacts for her Russian bosses.

For herself, Miss Bentley said, she was drawn into the espionage net through her love for Jacob Golos, late chairman of the central control committee of the Communist Party, who died in 1943.

Golos was indicted and convicted, she said, of being an unregistered agent of a foreign power but he was given a suspended sentence.

He was her original boss in the spy ring, she said. Then after he died, a mysterious Russian whom she knew only as Bill and later one she knew as Jack took his place. She reported to them on New York street corners, in restaurants, etc.

SOVIET FIRST SECRETARY

Sometimes, she said, she reported the information she gathered on Washington street corners—once at Fourteenth and E NW.—and in various hideouts to a man named "Al" who she later learned was the first secretary of the Soviet Embassy in the United States.

After the death of Golos, she declared, she gradually became more and more uneasy and worried about what she was doing.

Finally, she said, she went to the office of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in New Haven, Conn., and told all that she knew.

POLITICAL AND MILITARY

Miss Bentley testified the information she gathered was of two different classifications—political and military.

The political information, she said, went straight to Earl Browder, then head of the Communist party, while the military information was turned over directly to the Russians for transmission to Moscow.

Usually, she said, the information from her direct contacts was so voluminous it had to be carried in a knitting bag or shopping bag.

That from the indirect contacts, she declared, frequently had to be microfilmed before she took it to New York.

When she got down to naming people, Miss Bentley identified a former secretary to Columnist Walter Lippmann as a Communist agent who stole information from his office.

She gave the woman's name as Mary Watkins Price.

Senator HOEY, Democrat, North Carolina, said Mary Watkins Price is now head of Henry A. Wallace's progressive party in North Carolina.

"Oh, my," exclaimed Miss Bentley, "she certainly has gone up in the world."

Under questioning by HOEY, Miss Bentley said she met Miss Price at a restaurant in New York City, on Fifth Avenue, in February 1941.

"Was she a Communist?" asked HOEY.

"She was introduced as such," Miss Bentley said.

She said Miss Price left Lippmann's employ in May 1943.

FERGUSON said: "There is no intimation that Mr. Lippmann was connected in any way with the Communists?"

"Oh, no," said Miss Bentley.

"She was keeping it secret from him and delivering it (information) to you?"

"Yes. He had a great deal of information on the United States relations with the British and what we planned to do in the future. It was very interesting."

WENT THROUGH FILES

Miss Bentley said she and Miss Price went through Lippmann's files while he was out of the city and "we spent a week-end copying" information.

"Then she was up to date," Miss Bentley said, "so she could keep up with the files herself."

Walter Lippmann said of the testimony last night:

"It is news to me, if it s true."

His office confirmed that a Mary Watkins Price had been employed by him.

Miss Bentley is the woman who is reported to have helped the Government work up the evidence which led to indictment of 12 Communist leaders in New York last week on charges of advocating overthrow of the Government by violence.

It was a tale resembling in many respects the accounts of the Canadian spy trials that Miss Bentley unfolded before the committee.

The gently reared Vassar graduate said she became interested in socialism in college. She taught briefly, she said, at Foxcroft School in Virginia.

LEARNED TO HATE FASCISM

She studied in Florence, Italy, she said, and there learned to hate fascism and the Fascists. She said she took her master's degree at Columbia University.

There she first joined the American League against War and Fascism, a Communist front which became the American League for Peace and Democracy, then the Emergency Peace Mobilization, and then the American Peace Mobilization. The last organization, after Russia was attacked by Hitler, became the American People's Mobilization. Its latest disguise is the Win the Peace movement, which has been quiescent since the starting of the Progressive Party.

At Columbia, she said, she joined Unit One, of the Harlem Section, Communist Party.

Then, she said, in 1938 at the request of the party she went underground and became a Communist Party member at large which meant she no longer carried a card or attended meetings. She was then to report to only one man—her then boss, and the man she loved, Jacob Golos. He was Russian-born, she said, but an American citizen.

She was then working in the Italian Library of Information, part of the Italian propaganda effort in this country.

TURNED OVER TO GOLOS

Out of the files and contacts with that agency she said she gained as much information as she could of the plans of the Fascists and turned it over to Golos.

He wanted information on the nationalists in Spain, on anti-Semitic movements sparked by the Nazis and so forth. She said she also received mail at her home for Golos. It was from Canada and Mexico, she said. She added that Mexican mail stopped after Leon Trotsky's chauffeur was shot in Mexico.

Subcommittee Chairman FERGUSON asked if she knew why the mail from Mexico stopped.

"Why the person who was writing letters to Golos from Mexico was one of the men who shot Trotsky's chauffeur," she declared.

JUST FOLLOW ORDERS

She didn't make any inquiries about her work, she said, because the Communist Party is run like an army—you follow orders and you don't ask questions.

Then she had to do research at libraries for Golos, she declared. She reported on the Finnish Relief Committee.

She also investigated, as far as she was able, she said, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, President Roosevelt, and various Cabinet members. Golos, she declared, wanted every scrap of information which would indicate how a man in public life felt toward Russia.

Golos, she said, was president of World Tourists, Inc., a profitable travel agency encouraged by Soviet Russia. After Golos was convicted in 1940 of failure to register as a foreign agent he got an outwardly "impeccable" businessman to act as front for a new outfit, the United States Service and Shipping Corp., and made her vice president and secretary.

WENT TO $800 A MONTH

She actually ran the show, she said, and went up in salary from $200 a month in 1945 to $800 a month in 1946.

Gradually Golos began to turn over to her, she said, confidential errands, including the eliciting of information from Communist Party members and sympathizers.

Most of these, she said, worked for this Government.

All of the meetings she held with these people, she declared, were very, very secret. They were held either on street corners or in restaurants, never in Government departments.

Golos told her, she said, of the contact in the White House. He asked her to see what could be done to have Communists in inactive agencies transferred to places where they could obtain confidential information.

The contact in the White House helped, she declared.

Later she dropped her bombshell about obtaining the highly secret information that this Nation has broken the Russian code.

COULDN'T FIGURE MOTIVES

FERGUSON demanded to know what would make a man in the White House itself give such highly secret information. Was he a Communist Party member, she was asked.

"I don't think so," she said. "We never were able to figure out just what his motives were." She added that she understands he's no longer with the Government.

These people weren't being paid for information, she told the committee. "They were just a bunch of misguided idealists."

What sickened her after the death of Golos, she declared, was the attitude of the Russian agents who succeeded him and tried to pay her for work she was doing out of idealism. She also, she said, became frightened when they suggested she should go to Russia for training in 1945.

OFFERED FUR COATS, EXTRAS

The Russian agents, she said, offered her a fur coat, air-conditioning equipment for her apartment and a regular monthly stipend. First it was $50 and then they raised the ante, she said.

She would collect Communist Party dues and deliver Communist literature when she came to Washington to get her reports from Government workers, she said. Generally she made the rounds here twice a week, she told the committee.

She had to deliver the literature, she said, because the only other place they could get it was the Washington Bookshop and they were afraid to go there because by this time it had been recognized as a Communist front.

It was in December 1944, she said, that A1, the first secretary of the Russian Embassy, "put me on ice." In Communist Party terms this means, she said, to stop all activities because the "heat" is on and there might be leaks. Golos had died a year before in November 1943 but the Russians told her they still feared she might be watched because of him.

She knew, she said, there were at least two other agents besides herself running espionage rings; how many more there might be, she declared, she did not know.

The Government employees who were active in the Communist Party, she said, were loyal only to the international Communist movement. They were loyal to Russia as the leader of that movement, she said.

They looked upon this Government as "very bad—something like the Nazi government—a repressive government they wanted to get rid of."

Remington she met at corners like Fourteenth and E, Fourth and Pennsylvania, and Fourth in a little park, and at the Mellon Art Gallery.

She denied that she had ever made collections from Remington for the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee or that he could ever have considered her a reporter

Unique Requirements Put Up To Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE B. SCHWABE

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I note the following editorial from the Tulsa Daily World, of Tulsa, Okla., of July 28, 1948, which I think my colleagues will find most interesting reading:

UNIQUE REQUIREMENTS PUT UP TO CONGRESS

President Truman's message to Congress yesterday was very largely political. He put his recommendations upon the ground of "urgent requi›ments." There is a general conclusion that the political urgency was the real one.

This special session of Congress convened under clouds—politics, spite, distrust, recrimination. The national campaign is opening, and naturally, both sides are playing for position. It had seemed to Mr. Truman that it would be a smart idea to call a Republican Congress into session to build up a record for the November election. The Republican Congress can see the politics but not the urgency.

The President justifies his call upon the ground of economic threat—and insists that high prices are ruinous and must be cured now, not 6 or 8 months from now. He further urges that there are numerous pending bills which reach the evils in view, and he says they should be enacted now and not be allowed to die on the calendar. This latter course would, he insists, mean hearings, discussions, etc., and consequent delays until well into next year on matters claimed to be most urgent right now.

To all of this the Republican majorities in both Houses reply with wrath and derision. They resent the attempt to put them on record on everything and to anticipate the proper work of the next Congress—which they hope will be largely Republican and under a Republican President.

That is just about the political situation. The Republican majorities are rather small. As of January 10, 1948, the Republicans had a majority of 6 in the Senate and 54 in the House. In the reverses, backsets, overriding of vetoes, and other procedures against him, Mr. Truman neglects to mention that a considerable number of all adverse actions were supported by Democrats. If the last session was sinful as alleged the Democrats did a lot of sinning, too.

Evidently Mr. Truman intends to blame any possible depression or break-down upon the Republican majority. The theory seems to be that inflation is moving on fast and that a smash may occur at any time. Therefore, the Truman logic runs, if Congress doesn't step in right now and beat inflation the party will have to shoulder responsibility for anything and everything—and that might be very bad for the GOP in November. This appears to be clever reasoning, but most people doubt its validity. It is risky and improper, to say the least. It is certainly a dangerous brand of politics.

It is not surprising to hear the Congress is in a sullen mood. This is a very hot season in Washington. The majority has been called back by a minority President apparently for the purpose of breaking the majority's neck. This is the basis for the common assertion that nothing much will be done and that no great political advantage will accrue either way.

The session may end in utter futility, but we think Mr. Truman is taking measures against one certainty. It was noticed yesterday that he did not say much about his civil-rights program, which is only political urgency. If that should be put up first the southern filibuster would be in operation before the reading clerk could finish. That would stop everything and ruin the cute little design to put the Republicans on record on many bills. Democrats would thus be enabled to blow up a Democratic President good and plenty.

High prices, meaning inflation and ultimate depression, actually formed the President's text. He demands that Congress stop inflation right now, and probably every Member of Congress knows it ought to be done but dessents from the idea that Congress can do it single-handed. To hear the President tell it, a citizen would conclude that all that is needed is a law. In this connection it is noticed that the President did not assign his constant call for wage increases as one of the major causes of high prices. He stood out in this message for forced price reductions and enforced wage increases. The connection between wages and prices was loftily ignored.

Housing was second on the list. That, too, can be remedied by a very simple matter, just another law, it seems. Well, nobody else believes that. The President has a good talking point there, because Congress—Republicans and Democrats, too—did refuse to pass a housing law; that is, one House did. He can probably establish that Congress backed off from housing and oleomargarine because of highly organized lobbies. However, he did not stress that point, one of the most potent he has in his limited arsenal.

Recommendations by the President were just about as expected: excess-profits tax, commercial-credit controls, enlarged powers for Federal Reserve Board, limits on speculation, allocation of materials, curbs on rent increase, stand-by authority to regulate commodity prices, price control upon occasion. Most of these subjects are covered by pending bills. On the long-range side, Mr. Truman included civil rights, repeal of the Taft-Hartley law, increased social-security benefits, more electric power, better support for the United Nations.

This lengthy list—both immediate and long range—was denounced by Republicans as nonemergency. They could say that there is no emergency except a political one and that the President was just mixing medicine. The old doubt of the efficacy of more statutes against economic threats persists all over the country. Discounting of the President's political move and his message is strong outside of Washington.

President Stassen, of Pennsylvania University

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WALTER H. JUDD

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, it is gratifying to Minnesotans to have the rest of our country give deserved recognition to the high caliber and character of Minnesota's greatest son and citizen, Harold E. Stassen. We are proud to share him with Pennsylvania and predict a distinguished career for him at her great university, until the whole Nation calls him to an even higher Presidency, the highest in the land.

Under leave to extend my remarks, I include editorials from the Washington Star and the Washington Post:

[From the Washington Star of July 31, 1948]

MR. STASSEN'S NEW ROLE

Harold E. Stassen is well qualified for the presidency of the University of Pennsylvania. At the age of 41, he will be the youngest man ever to have risen to that post, just as in 1938 he was the youngest ever to have been elected Governor of Minnesota—an office in which he distinguished himself for three terms. His executive ability, his vigor and his forward-looking views on national and world problems have been demonstrated many times over, not least of all by his contribution to the founding of the United Nations and by his recent unsuccessful but impressive campaign for the Republican Presidential nomination.

Like other outstanding educational institutions, the 208-year-old University of Pennsylvania faces major problems requiring top direction by a man who combines sound administrative judgment with great personal drive. Its selection of Mr. Stassen—who is endowed with those qualities in an exceptional measure—could hardly have been better. The academic world will be a fresh experience for him, but there can be little doubt that he will make a fine success of it. His large following of Americans will hope that he will return some day to active politics. Whether he does or not, however, he will be able, in his new role, to exercise a continuing and highly useful influence on the affairs of the Nation.

[From the Washington Post of July 31, 1948]

PRESIDENT STASSEN

It is a reflection of the magnitude of mass production character of present day American universities that so many of them are seeking for their presidents men whose talents and experience lie not so much in scholarship as in public affairs and administration. New York's Columbia University has just installed General Eisenhower as its chief executive, a post he declined to relinquish even for the sake of nomination to the Presidency of the United States. And now Harold Stassen, also much mentioned but lately as a Presidential possibility, has been chosen to manage the affairs of the University of Pennsylvania. Both men are likely to bring to their respective institutions imagination, energy, and executive skill calculated to compensate for their want of academic background.

The trustees of the University of Pennsylvania say that they selected Governor Stassen above all for his inspirational appeal to the youth of America. That appeal is essentially an appeal for participation in the public affairs of the time; and indeed in accepting the designation the former Minnesota Governor declared that he will continue a vigorous interest in such affairs. The presidency of a university is an appropriate post from which to do so—provided, of course, that personal political ambition is not permitted to interfere with devotion to academic interests. For a university can no longer be a cloister. It must be consecrated not alone to abstract learning but equally to leadership in the promotion of an enlightened public opinion.

Seen in this light, the presidency of a great university is a public post of the utmost importance. The story is told in Cleveland Amory's The Proper Bostonians that once, when a caller came to see President Lowell, of Harvard, he was gravely informed by a secretary, "The president is in Washington talking with Mr. Taft." Governor Stassen has been accorded a great honor and a magnificent opportunity. It should abundantly solace him for a political defeat which may in time prove no more than a set-back.

The Call of the Farm

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HAMILTON C. JONES

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the following copy of an essay written by a constituent of mine, Miss Anita Bolinger, of Vale, N. C., which was awarded the first prize in an essay contest sponsored by the Southern Agriculturist. This essay is entitled, "The Call of the Farm":

From my home I can see a white house placed on a hill, surrounded by fields planted with good crops. Once that farm was run down, and the house was weather-beaten.

What happened? Did the owner's rich uncle leave him a fortune? Did he open a liquor still, or find some buried treasure? No. When he was young and just out of agricultural college, he felt a challenge in the farm, accepted and conquered it.

This challenge faces the youth of the South today. Many, too many, haven't answered this call in years gone by. They felt a greater one was offered in the cities, in the North, or perhaps they took Greeley's advice and went West. The cities offer work 8 hours a day. When these hours have passed the work is done for the day. On the farm you never know how many hours you'll have to work. Does it not seem to you that life would be easier and better in the city? Easier? Perhaps. Better? Never.

Opportunity has become another name for the American way of life, but when we think of a chance for advancement we think of the turning wheels of industry and the bright lights of a city. We seem to have forgotten that on that 40-acre farm there is more opportunity to be found than there is in 40,000,000 acres of city blocks. There is a greater challenge in that two-story farmhouse than there is in the 102 stories of the Empire State Building.

Your diamond—opportunity—lies in your own back yard. Don't make the mistake of looking for it elsewhere. Get that college education, take that short course, or if you must, take that trip around the world, but come back home when you have completed them.

Certainly that farm is run down, but wouldn't you be too if you had been made to work day in and day out and fed bread and water? Just as there is a challenge for a doctor to bring an undernourished patient back to health, there is a challenge to you to restore the productiveness of the farm.

Undeniable is the fact that the farm will make big demands. Yet, it will not be a dull job. Adventure doesn't limit itself strictly to the wilds of Brazil, the frozen North, or to Sunset and Vine. On that farm that you might operate adventure awaits.

The empty house is begging you to come live in it and make its life gay again, the maple trees in the front yard offer their shade and comfort, those barren fields need plants and fertilizer. The ole swimmin' hole can be a profitable fishpond with a few improvements, that field that seems hopelessly eroded could be a thriving woodland. With work, that farm could be a profitable and satisfying business.

Of course this will not happen overnight and maybe not in 10 or 20 years, but that famous actor didn't get his reputation by asking for it, nor did that renowned editor walk into an office and say, "I'm your man," and get the job. It took steady plugging all the day, and after their goal was reached, they worked to stay on top. Work must be done to reach the top in farming, but after the top has been reached you'll have something the actor and the editor will never know—peace and security.

See and hear the invitation to opportunity and adventure beckoning, not with the glitter of light and the roar of a factory, but with the reflection of the sunbeams on the green fields, and a herd of cattle mooing for its supper. Answer it, young southerner. The southern farm needs you and you need the southern farm.

Support Prices and Inflation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. DAVID M. POTTS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. POTTS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial appearing in the New York Herald Tribune of August 2, 1948:

SUPPORT PRICES AND INFLATION

This newspaper believes that the authority to control the prices of some foods may have to be granted to the President as a stopgap measure in the present inflationary crisis. We have advocated this not because of any love for such controls but because it has become so obvious that other, probably more effective, measures are politically doomed. There is, in reality, a much simpler way of bringing food prices more nearly into line with other prices. Only one important objection has been raised against that method, namely, that it would be unpopular with the farmers, and is therefore politically explosive. We refer, of course, to a revision of the parity support program for farm prices.

The Department of Agriculture recently estimated that there would be wheat surplus by 1949, and therefore recommended an 8 percent reduction in wheat acreage next year. Here, at least, it would seem that supply is overtaking demand. Meat prospects are not so favorable, but if grains go down meat will eventually go down, too. The simple method of reducing food prices would be to lower support levels from, say, 90 to 60 percent of parity. In the event of the expected bumper crops, prices would then automatically come down. The consumer would benefit, and he would not have to make up the difference in the capacity of taxpayer, as he would under the price-control system.

A lot has been written about the wage-price spiral of inflation, but very little about the parity-support spiral. It is a spiral because the floor under farm prices is a moving one, and in an inflationary period it moves upward. As higher food prices force wages and other prices up, parity automatically goes up, too, since it is a ratio between agricultural and industrial prices. Thus, despite the phenomenal rise in farm prices in recent years, they could still not drop very far before resting on the soft cushion (a more descriptive word than floor) of the support level. We have never advocated abolition of supports, because we believe a collapse of farm prices with the resultant effect on farm incomes could be disastrous to the economy. Yet the system does need to be drastically revised to give it more elasticity and give freer play to the forces of supply and demand. It is essential to have a readjustment whereby food prices will be brought into a more realistic relationship to other prices and will stop acting as a propellent of all prices.

Wallace Wrong on China, Too

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WALTER H. JUDD

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include two items, the first an article by George E. Sokolsky, who lived in China for many years, showing the falsity of the views recently expressed by Henry Wallace on events in China and America's relation to them:

(By George E. Sokolsky)

Rebecca West, reporting on Wallace's press conference in Philadelphia, reaches the sad conclusion that Wallace does not know what he is talking about on the subject of Yugoslavia. I wish to report that Henry Wallace does not know what he is talking about on the subject of China. This is what he says:

"Educated Chinese, who know that Chiang's days are numbered, nevertheless fear that United States foreign policy will finally result, after Chiang's fall, in America's controlling what might be called a 'comisery sphere, consisting of Japan, the port cities of China, and Dutch Indonesia.' They fear that in the final show-down it would be Japan that would dominate this area rather than the United States. Others ask what difference it makes whether Chinese slavery is continued directly, through the United States and Chiang, or indirectly, through Japan. The Chinese students who have been demonstrating against the American policy of rebuilding Japan have been told by the United States Ambassador that they must stop or 'prepare to take the consequences.' The mayor of Shanghai told the students, 'America's policy toward Japan is concentrated on preventing the spread of communism. Your protest will not benefit China, but the Soviet Union.'"

First question: Who are these educated Chinese? What are their names? Has he spoken to them, communicated with them, or did he get this information from the Cominform?

Second question: Wallace's premise is that should Chiang Kai-shek fall, the United States would be in charge, to use his treacherous phrase, of a "Co-misery sphere, consisting of Japan, the port cities of China and Dutch Indonesia." In a word, if Chiang falls China will be a political vacuum which some power will take over. Why, and this is my question, is Soviet Russia preferable to the United States of America from any standpoint?

The Chinese Communists have, within the past month, declared themselves part of Stalin's international machinery by a normal Cominform device. All the Stalinist parties were required to declare that Tito was wrong. The Chinese Communists signed on the dotted line, proving their obedient orthodoxy.

Therefore, should the Chinese Communists conquer China, they would act as the Czech and Hungarian Communists acted in their countries, namely, as puppets of the Cominform. Why, and this is the third question, does Henry Wallace prefer that? Is it because he also is a puppet and birds of a feather flock together? Does he believe that world peace will be achieved if all the nations of the earth are members of the Cominform, presided over by Andrei Zhdanov?

His quotation from the mayor of Shanghai is accurate, and the mayor's views are accurate, but Henry Wallace's mind is so distorted that he really does not understand what he says and picks a quotation to disprove his point. That is all right with Henry because in his argument at Philadelphia with Westbrook Pegler and H. L. Mencken he established that he was wrong and they were right, and that he did not know it.

Wallace in this same article attacks the Christian missionaries in China. He says: "* * * Some are said to serve as spies for the Kuomintang or for the American Embassy, and these are looked on with increasing suspicion. * * * When Christians get into politics against the people they must always expect trouble, because they then cease to be Christians."

I do not wish to enter into a discussion with Wallace on the application of Christianity to politics. He once wrote on this subject and said just the opposite of his implications in this article. Henry not only changes his tune but forgets that he is singing.

However, the magazine China Missionary publishes the names of the Catholic missionaries who have been murdered by the Communists in China since the end of the war with Japan. The list gives 45 victims of authenticated murder (shooting, bayonetting, beating, dragged to death), 24 who died in prison, 2 who died immediately after release from prison, 11 who were led off into captivity and have never been heard from since and are presumed dead, and 4 listed as probably dead or executed in prison.

Henry Wallace says nothing about that. Maybe he now believes that murder is a fine thing if done by the right people in the right cause.

Mr. Speaker, the answer to Wallace's unsupported statements about the alleged views of "educated Chinese" is given in an open letter to America written and signed some months ago by 18 distinguished Chinese professors in the six leading universities in north China. These men are living in Communist-surrounded and infiltrated areas. They know what they are talking about when they discuss the nature and the objectives of the Chinese Communist movement. They are willing to risk their heads to inform us in America what the significance of events in China is for the United States and its security:

AN OPEN LETTER TO AMERICA BY 18 CHINESE PROFESSORS

FEBRUARY 18, 1948.

Mr. WALTER H. JUDD,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C., U. S. A.

DEAR MR. JUDD: We deeply appreciate your efforts in aid to China. For your reference, we like to make known the present critical situation in China, and to clarify the standing of Chinese intellectuals that represents the overwhelming majority of the honest and patriotic Chinese citizens.

We do not want communism which is by nature totalitarian and aggressive. Since VJ-day the Communists in China have overrun an area as big as the whole of western Europe, and have come to control a population as large as the total population of the United States. We hope that America would not overlook this fact before it is too late.

Like the Communists elsewhere, the Chinese Communists take their orders and receive military assistance from Moscow. It explains why the Communists could have expanded their armed forces so fast that by now almost the whole of Manchuria and several North China provinces are in their orbit. Only a few big cities and their adjacent areas are not actually taken by the Communists, but they are being encircled and the encirclement is ever tightening.

The cruelty and brutality of the Communists are beyond imagination. They drive the ignorant farmers in front of the Red troops as their shields to meet the first firing. Whenever they take a village they would stage a kind of "liquidation," that is, they seize many scapegoats as "rich farmers" and have them eliminated. They order the mother to kill her son, and the wife to shoot her husband. By so doing they aim at the "destruction of human nature and the elevation of the nature of the Communist Party." This has become so unbearable that always whole villages flee before the drive of the Communist army. Refugees are streaming into the big cities that are still in the hands of the National army.

In the Communist area everyone is strictly regimented. In the name of "new democracy" and "people's opinion" they can commit any crime they deem necessary, so that a threatened mass is more readily at their disposal. The Chinese farmers are helpless; they are unorganized and have no means of resistance, while the Chinese Communists are not agrarian reformers as they themselves claim to be. They supplant democracy with totalitarianism, replace intellectual freedom with educational regimentation, both of which are so dear to the liberal hearts.

Our Government and our people have been fighting this world-wide expanding barbarism alone for nearly 2 years. We desperately need America's help, military as well as economic. We consider our present fight against communism a continuation of our struggle after World War II for the true liberation of the Chinese Nation. And in this struggle United States' aid to us is both urgent and indispensable—not for China alone, but for the liberty and security of the world as well.

We admit that our National Government is far from satisfactory. But it is the Government which, we sincerely believe, has a fairly good chance of becoming really liberal and democratic as it has already been moving toward that end under the leadership of President Chiang. Whether we like this Government or not, the fact remains that any weakening of it under the present situation will be detrimental to the future of Chinese democracy and independence, for Communist control would be the only alternative.

We have no partisan bias and no practical political leaning, simply being stung by the brutal acts of the Communists and shadowed in the constant fear lest more would fall into the same fate as those unfortunates. Our voice is from our deep conscience. We appeal to you for immediate help to save civilization and fight this new totalitarianism before America would have to fight it alone.

The Special Session

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLIFFORD R. HOPE

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I am including an excellent radio address delivered by Senator ARTHUR CAPPER over Station WIBW at Topeka, Kans., on July 25, 1948.

The address follows:

Friends in the radio audience, by the time this talk is broadcast over WIBW, this Sunday afternoon, I will be in Washington for the extraordinary session of Congress called by President Truman. I am making the record for this broadcast by electrical transcription Thursday evening, just before leaving for the special session.

I do not know just what is going to happen in the coming special session. I am not even certain exactly why it was called.

On the face of it, President Truman called the special session in order to put the Republican Eightieth Congress on the spot, so to speak. That was the plain meaning of the language he used in his acceptance speech at Philadelphia early Thursday morning, just preceding the adjournment of the Democratic National Convention.

Here is what President Truman said in his acceptance speech, and I quote exactly from the Associated Press report, giving the text of that speech:

"The Republicans came here a few weeks ago, and they wrote up a platform," said President Truman. "I hope you have all read that platform. They adopted a platform, and that platform had a lot of promises and statements of what the Republican Party is for, and what they'd do if they were in power.

"They've promised to do in that platform," I still am quoting President Truman, "a lot of things I've been asking them to, and that they've refused to do when they had the power."

And so on. He elaborated on some of the things he said he has asked the Republican Eightieth Congress to do which it had not done. For example, he said this:

"The Republican platform cries about cruelly high prices," said President Truman. Then he says: "I have been trying to get them to do something about high prices ever since they met the first time."

Well, President Truman did ask the Congress to do something about high prices.

In the first place, he and all his Government agencies fought at every turn of the road against any decrease in Government expenditures, and decrease in the number of Government employees.

He not only insisted that Congress appropriate for continued Government spending at around $40,000,000,000 a year, he also sent us a so-called economic recovery program for the United States that would have increased Government expenditures to around $50,000,000,000 a year.

How are Government expenditures paid? Well, the Government has just one way of raising money to spend—by taxing its people. Government borrowing is just another form of taxation—delayed tax collecting.

He bragged in that same acceptance speech that the national income under the New Deal had jumped from $40,000,000,000 to more than $200,000,000,000.

In other words, the Government must collect as much for 1 year's expenditures today as the entire national income ($40,000,000,000) in 1932.

Now, where does the money come from to pay taxes? Sifting it down through the sources of collection (farm income, business income, salaries and wages) the money to pay taxes comes from the prices people pay for the goods they use and consume.

Now, if the prices paid for all goods bought in 1 year were only $40,000,000,000, and the Government had to collect that much for its own expenditures, where would you be? Where would the Government get its taxes? The answer is obvious. It would not.

Similarly, he bragged that under the New Deal salaries and wages paid workers had increased from around $29,000,000,000 to $128,000,000,000. Those are not my figures, my friends, those are President Truman's figures. I believe them to be approximately correct.

But, I ask you, and I ask President Truman, how are the dollars raised to pay out $99,000,000,000 more in salaries and wages for 1 year? Where do the dollars come from?

The dollars have to come from prices paid for goods used and consumed. There has been some increased consumption—but not five times as much more consumption.

I leave it to you, my friends, is it fair—is it even intelligent—for anyone, even the President of the United States, to brag that his New Deal administration has increased the amount of money spent in 1 year five times, while the amount of goods that can be purchased is considerably less than twice as much, and then blame the Congress because the prices of goods have gone up?

If the prices received for goods had not gone up, how would that $40,000,000,000 of taxes been paid? How would the increase of nearly $100,000,000,000 in salaries and wages been paid? To say nothing of the increase of some $15,000,000,000 in farm income—from prices received for goods produced and marketed—and another increase of some $22,000,000,000, in the income of independent business men and professional men, that President Truman bragged about?

Ultimately, my friends, all those incomes, have to come from the production and manufacture and distribution and sale of goods, commodities, and services. In other words, out of the prices paid for those things.

It does no good to maintain that the increased income arises from the more cheaper dollars the Government issues. The increase in dollars in circulation, and the measure of the velocity with which the dollars change hands, also makes for higher prices. When the units of purchasing power increase several times faster than the increase in the units of things that can be purchased, that causes higher prices.

President Truman brags in his acceptance speech that his New Deal administration has brought about just about everything that forces higher prices—higher salaries and wages, higher incomes for farmers and businessmen, larger and larger Government spending (and asks for even more and more Government spending money).

He brags that his New Deal administration has brought to pass and put into operation everything to cause higher prices (except the wildest kind of inflation, and continuance of these polices will bring about the wildest kind of inflation), and then he blames the Eightieth Congress for causing high prices and inflation.

And what is his remedy?

Price control—trying to lower the temperature of the room by putting ice against the bulb of the thermometer, trying to force the sale of goods at prices less than it costs to produce them.

I leave it to you, my friends, is it fair—is it even intelligent, for anyone, even the President of the United States, to brag about creating or increasing all those causes of high prices, and then blaming another branch of the Government for not stopping the high prices by passing a law saying there shall not be high prices?

My friends, I beg your pardon for this too lengthy discussion of what causes high prices. I started out to give President Truman's reasons—as he himself stated them—for calling this special session.

Again I quote from his acceptance speech:

"My duty as President requires that I use every means in my power to get the laws the people need on matters of such importance and urgency. I am, therefore, calling this Congress back into session on the 26th of July.

"On the 26th day of July, which in Missouri, we call turnip day, I'm going to call that Congress back, and I'm going to ask them to pass laws halting rising prices," and so forth.

In addition to announcing at the Democratic National Convention that he would call the Republican Eightieth Congress into special session, I will say that Candidate Truman made a rousing and very effective campaign speech that stirred the spirits of his Democrat audience to the fighting pitch.

He made it pretty plain, it seemed to me, that calling the special session of Congress was part of his campaign for election in his own right to the Presidency.

But accustomed as we have become to the Roosevelt-Pendergast kind of political maneuvering, I can still hardly believe that President Truman will not find some other reason for calling the special session by the time Congress meets, or soon after.

I note that Senator TOBEY, of New Hampshire, a Republican who has supported the administration regularly, believes that the delicate foreign situation may have something to do with it. How valid his suggestion is, that the State Department wants Congress in session in order to be ready to deal with anything that happens abroad, I cannot say.

I would judge that Senator VANDENBERG, of Michigan, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, of which I am the ranking Republican member next to him, had not been consulted on the special session. And if the special session call had to do with our bi-partisan foreign policy, surely he would have been notified, at least.

At the same time, the situation abroad is very serious. President Truman and Secretary of State Marshall, on the one hand, and Generalissimo Joseph Stalin and Foreign Minister Molotov on the other, have got the United States and Soviet Russia in such a position at Berlin that it is hard to see how either can back up without affecting seriously their—well, face is the best word I can think of—in Europe and over the world. The Western Powers seem to be in an impossible situation at Berlin. And it seems to Stalin, probably, that it is just as impossible for the Soviet to back down as it is for the United States, Britain, and France to withdraw.

Maybe that is what Congress will face before the special session adjourns. I will try to keep you advised what the situation is.

Left-Overs Hashed Up

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HERBERT A. MEYER

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD, I include an editorial from a recent issue of the Independence (Kans.) Daily Reporter. The editor of this county-seat daily, Frank C. Sands, has a State-wide reputation for his thinking through processes and for the clarity and succinctness of his style in expressing the grass-roots views from the heart of America. The editorial herewith on President Truman's recent partisan political speech made under the guise of a message to Congress exemplifies Mr. Sands' capacity in this respect:

LEFT-OVERS HASHED UP

If the President's message to Congress at the opening of the special session could be described in one word we do not know of a better one than "hash." It was a concoction of scraps left over from the table of the last regular session, largely.

Designed to appeal to special interests of voters, this political message on the one hand proposed Federal controls to hold down prices and on the other asked huge appropriations with a strong inflationary effect.

The President himself had removed some of the controls he now wants restored because the people were sick and tired of them. They had learned that controls of prices meant scarcity and black markets. Higher prices at least have a tendency to increase production and bring more goods on the market which would bring prices down again in time. That they have not done it by now is because of other factors, such as shipping so much of the production abroad in an effort to combat the menace of communism in Europe.

Controls of credit are already in his hands but have not been used through the Federal Reserve System and his plea for greater controls in that field is weakened by his failure to use the powers he already possesses.

The alternative to free prices for increase of production is subsidies to producers, which come out of the pockets of the people just as much as higher prices do, though not so openly. What benefits it a man if he saves at the grocery store and loses to the income-tax collector? In the former case he places his money himself and in the latter the Government decides where his money shall go. Does he think the Government will spend it more carefully? Not much, he doesn't.

Housing is the shortage today about which the loudest cry is heard. Yet private enterprise is building houses every day as fast as materials can be had in the face of exports abroad and other shortages resulting from strikes and other causes. And there is another factor in the housing shortage. The nearest approach to wartime controls remaining is over rents. Does anyone doubt that there is a relation between the two?

Compare Mr. Truman's Record as President and as Former United States Senator

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE B. SCHWABE
OF OKLAHOMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, it is often most interesting to note the change in attitude of people, and the change in their thinking, while they occupy one position as compared with another. There is an old saying that it depends upon whose ox is being gored.

Mr. Truman, while he was a United States Senator, advocated and said that the Congress should not permit itself to be rushed in the handling of important matters affecting the welfare of the people. Now that he is President, we find him trying to give us the rush act.

The following is a very graphic statement on this subject:

"They can do it in 15 days," President Truman told the Democratic National Convention in Philadelphia when he announced he would call the Eightieth Congress into special session.

He referred to the time it would take Congress to enact legislation he said he would place before the special session.

In 15 days he felt that Congress could give him the police-state powers he wants, pledge the spending of hundreds of millions of dollars more of the taxpayers' money, set national policies which many a Democratic Congress did not see fit to establish in 14 years of solid control, and study the most critical international situation the Nation has faced since Pearl Harbor.

The man who staged this one-man gang-up on the Eightieth Congress—which he called the "worst" in history because it did not go pell-mell into every crackpot scheme the administration offered—has changed his tune since moving from the Senate over to 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue.

On March 21, 1939, then Senator Truman delivered an address before a joint session of the Missouri Legislature on the subject of present issues before congress.

"I found out very soon after I had settled down to a study of my duties," he said on that occasion, "that the business of a good legislator is not to get things done quickly and efficiently, as a good administrator has to do, but to prevent, if possible, the enactment into the law of the land many crazy and crackpot measures.

"I have found that much deliberation and study on all proposed legislation is a great deal better for the public welfare than too much hurry and immediate action."

This same man who now wants a quick appropriation of hundreds of millions, pledges of hundreds of millions more, and the power of a police state dictator, all within 15 days, made another speech as a Senator. On June 29, 1943 (just a year before he became the Democratic Vice Presidential nominee), Mr. Truman asserted:

"It seems that when public funds are to be expended no one has any interest in what happens to them, no matter what his responsibilities may be under his oath of office.

"Unless this body (the Senate) and the House of Representatives exercise their prerogatives in connection with the purse strings of the Government, much of the money appropriated will be thrown away for no good purpose whatever."

It was only a few weeks ago that President Truman decried these prerogatives of the Congress.

Merchant Marine and Defense

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, it is encouraging to realize the extent to which interest is being taken in the building of an adequate merchant marine. The necessity for such, both from a commercial and national security standpoint, is becoming more generally understood. And, in this connection, it is also recognized that the maintenance of adequate shipbuilding facilities and personnel is equally necessary if we are to be prepared to meet any emergency that may come. Shipbuilding is an art that requires skilled workers. They cannot be trained overnight. Thus, the necessity of having at all times an adequate force ready to take over the construction of ships immediately and provide the nucleus around which the larger force can be organized. The maintenance of shipbuilding facilities and trained workers can only be accomplished by providing sufficient work to keep our shipbuilding yards in operation.

I am submitting as part of my remarks, and, in accordance with the leave granted by the House, an editorial appearing in the Sunday Star, Washington, D. C., August 1, 1948, entitled "Merchant Marine and Defense." The editorial is logical, well reasoned and completely covers the outstanding elements that enter into the necessity of maintaining an efficient merchant marine and shipbuilding industry. It reads as follows:

MERCHANT MARINE AND DEFENSE

It looks as though our war-scarred merchant marine is due to take a turn for the better. There is hope, at least, in the disclosure of tentative plans for construction of several big passenger liners for Atlantic service, including a fast trans-Atlantic ship of 48,000 gross tons.

This new program is being worked out by the Maritime Commission in a series of conferences with leading shipping and shipbuilding authorities. If carried out, with the aid of Federal subsidies provided for in the 1936 Merchant Marine Act, the chief objective insofar as the Government is concerned will be the strengthening of national security. The President's Advisory Committee on the Merchant Marine stressed the defense aspect of the shipping program in a strong recommendation for prompt action last November. The committee reported that defense officials were seriously concerned over the inadequacy of our postwar merchant fleet to serve the armed forces in event of another war. It pointed out that our prewar fleet of 127 vessels, with a capacity of 38,357 persons, had shrunken to a total of 36 serviceable ships—in operation, being reconditioned or under construction—with a total capacity of only 8,333 persons. The others had become casualties of war, through sinkings, damage or reconversion to other uses.

The proposed superliner alone would be capable of transporting 12,000 troops, according to the United States Lines, which has offered to pay $25,000,000 toward the estimated total cost of nearly seventy millions. Ordinarily the liner would carry 2,000 passengers and a crew of 1,000. It would contain certain undisclosed defense features to make it readily adaptable for war purposes. Its speed would be 32 knots. In addition, the Moore-McCormack Lines has offered to invest twenty millions toward the cost of two 23-knot liners for the South Atlantic passenger trade. Other lines are expected to join in the movement to revive the merchant marine.

Viewed solely from the standpoint of our economic welfare, the building of a strong merchant marine under incentive of a subsidy program could be justified. But the President's committee declared that even if the ships were not commercially important, they would be invaluable for troop-carrying purposes in another emergency. Their construction not only would provide transports essential to security but would keep shipbuilding facilities in a state of readiness for defense work. And two world wars have shown the desirability of maintaining at all times a healthy shipbuilding industry, manned by men with the know-how required to produce good ships quickly and in great numbers. The proposed program would be a long step toward this safety goal.

The Fight on Inflation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WAT ARNOLD
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, August 2, 1948

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, on the much-discussed subject of inflation, its causes and remedies, an editorial in the Wall Street Journal of July 27, 1948, contains some excellent advice. Under unanimous consent, I quote the article in the RECORD:

THE FIGHT ON INFLATION

From any point of view, the most important question about the special session of Congress now sitting is what it does or does not do to check the price-wage spiral. All the deliberations of this session will be shot through with politics, the efforts of each major party to put the other on the spot. Mutual recrimination will be the order of the day. One, if not both, of the parties will blame the antisocial greed of corporation management.

Near the end of wartime price control, the spokesmen of business passionately argued that free markets would surely stimulate production enough to relieve shortages and prices would come down. Why was the event so different from the prediction? Why, while production greatly increased, did prices continue to rise? Here are the main reasons:

1. Businessmen forgot the monopoly power of labor unions in most of the basic industries—coal, steel, rail transport, building construction, motor vehicles. If they were aware that the wage level could be further elevated before production could respond to marketing freedom, few said much about it.

2. Businessmen assumed, not unnaturally, that Federal Government expenditures were to be greatly reduced, reversing the stream of Government-created purchasing power not matched by production of goods. Probably they also overlooked the addition to personal incomes arising from increased States and municipal borrowing and spending.

3. Our Government proceeded to extend great credits to foreign governments, to be used largely for purchases in this country; a number of Export-Import Bank and International Bank loans were made to the same end; then came the European recovery program and a huge appropriation for its first year's spending.

4. A normal postwar shift of manpower from economically unproductive Government functions to productive private enterprise employment was to be expected; the actual shift was relatively slight and now appears to have been reversed.

5. Bank borrowing and capital issue flotations for industry, services, and trade, instead of substituting for Government requisitions of capital funds, made a net addition to the latter.

6. Price support of foodstuffs and some raw materials was continued on the wartime scale, with the result that export of our surplus products had to be subsidized. Our foreign-aid programs are indirect forms of domestic price support.

7. The easy money policy of the Treasury and its satellite, the Federal Reserve System, however appropriate it may have been to the great depression or the war emergency, was inappropriate to the postwar conditions of high and rising wage and price levels and materials and manpower shortages. Earlier and more rapid modification of that policy would have helped to restrain the spending of Federal and local governments and to confine bank-loan expansion to strictly essential purposes.

Clearly enough the blame for the price situation can be spread pretty thickly over both political parties, business management, labor organizations, and most all the agencies of the executive department of the Government. All have been timid in action, probably because they all knew that checking an incipient boom is a delicate matter, in both economics and politics. None cared to risk inducing a mild recession lest worse befall.

Which is to say that there was no commanding leadership anywhere. It should be noted that during his chairmanship of the Federal Reserve Board, Marriner S. Eccles did give the country warning of the inflationary potential hanging over it. Unfortunately the corrective measures he proposed, which included new discretionary powers for the Federal Reserve Board, had too much of a totalitarian coloration to win the support of either the banking fraternity or a Congress which after the end of 1946 was under Republican Party control. The existence of a Republican legislature and a Democratic executive did much to block effective leadership.

Just that situation, however, will continue throughout the special session. Congress will waste its time this summer if it only squabbles about who is responsible for an oppressive and dangerous price trend. It cannot approve any of the administration's spending programs without making matters worse. On the other hand, it cannot, in the midst of a rancorous political campaign, reopen this fiscal year's appropriations; in every practical sense it is now too late to effect the reduction in Federal spending which Congress should have attended to last spring. Nor is there a chance that price and wage controls such as President Truman has repeatedly demanded would offset the inflationary force of public expenditures already authorized, combined with the pressing necessity of trade and industry to enlarge their facilities.

We hold that the special session can undertake only to undo some of the Government's fiscal and monetary policies which were born of the war emergency. We again propose that it restore the original gold reserve requirements for the Federal Reserve Banks and forbid any further issuance of Government obligations eligible for either commercial bank or Reserve bank investment—and then adjourn.

NOTE.—President Truman wants restored controls to get prices to the consumers down. But last week the administration announced plans for using some of the controls it already has over farm production. Its wheat planting goal for 1949 was reduced 8 percent from this year's acreage. Beef breeding stocks would be cut half a million head next year. And yesterday Secretary of Agriculture Brannan asked farmers to hold back on their farms a substantial portion of this year's grain crops to help maintain prices. Said the Secretary: "The pressure of fast-flowing grain upon the markets has the effect of lowering prices received by farmers."

The plan is that the farmer shall "sell dear" and the consumer shall "buy cheap." It's a neat trick if you can do it.

Unification of Western Europe

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HENRY CABOT LODGE, JR.
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Tuesday, August 3 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, during the debate on the Economic Cooperation Act, commonly known as the Marshall plan, the statement was frequently made that the act would especially justify itself if it provided an incentive which would lead toward the unification of western Europe. Certainly this was my feeling, and subsequent events have only intensified my conviction that in such integration lies Europe's only hope and one of our own best prospects for peace.

All Members of the Senate, and, in particular, those who are members of the Foreign Relations Committee and of the so-called watchdog committee, are now watching the rate of progress toward western European union. For this reason, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an editorial from Life magazine entitled "Western Union: It Is in the Doldrums Now, but Energy and Faith Here and in Europe Can Make It a Reality," and a statement made by the Economic Cooperation Administrator, Mr. Paul G. Hoffman, at the time of his visit in Paris toward the end of July.

These two statements should be read, in my opinion, by the Congress, by the press, and by the representatives of foreign nations here in Washington.

I ask unanimous consent that they be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Life magazine]

WESTERN UNION: IT IS IN THE DOLDRUMS NOW, BUT ENERGY AND FAITH HERE AND IN EUROPE CAN MAKE IT A REALITY

Last week we had a war scare. It became starkly apparent that any one of a dozen incalculable events could place us at war with the Soviet Union. The tension eased off toward the end of the week, but the measure of the alternatives now before us was President Truman's indicative remark in Washington that the chances of peace are excellent. He could be wrong. We know now that when we take a stand, as we have in Berlin, we run the risk of war. That fact and that risk will be with us from now on.

Must we then, so soon after World War II, think of Europe only as a theater of war? The answer is "No." There is still in Europe the hope of peace and with it the makings of a constructive advance in the shape and life of the west. The great project of western union, which Life discusses below, continues to challenge Europeans and deserve the interest and support of Americans.

PROMISE AND TRANCE

It is just 6 months since Ernest Bevin stirred Europe and the United States with the promise of western union. His proposal, hazy though it was, seized the imagination and fired the hopes of the Atlantic world. In some form of association, however limited at the start, the free, weak and insufficient states of western Europe perceived the prospect of a strength which they could not separately regain. The United States welcomed any sign of positive thought and action in postwar Europe, and this one perfectly suited American interest and policy. The early stimulus of ERP and the shock of the Communist conquest of Prague furthered a rush toward defensive grouping, and in its editorial of March 22 Life was moved to say, "At any moment the death of nationalism and birth of unity in postwar Europe may be an accomplished fact."

Yet today, so far as Americans can tell, European nationalism is very much alive and western union is comatose or dead. Why has so little seemed to happen?

Western union is not dead, but it is badly and unnecessarily stalled. The underlying fact is that western Europe, having produced the idea of union, has not produced the energy and leadership required to make it a reality, or even an immediate possibility. This lack of leadership has been aggravated by a fatigue of the mind and soul which dulls the desire for union and blunts the popular initiative which might otherwise compel mediocre leaders to act in keeping with their times. We in our plenty and vigor are not entitled to reproach Europeans on this score, but we may properly deplore it.

This fatigue has contributed to some phenomena which Americans, inclined to give tit for tat, might be tempted to call European isolationism. There is an understandable but nonetheless regrettable preoccupation on the part of each nation with its own troubles and dangers. The mountainous difficulties of Great Britain have thus engrossed that island, inspiring a Briton to say in explanation last week, "We are like a man with the toothache who is more concerned with stopping the pain than with the ultimate fate of his immortal soul." Britain's socialists, notwithstanding that one of their number proclaimed western union, have in the group displayed a narrow aversion to anything except their own brand of socialst association which would discredit the narrowest of old-style United States isolationists. The French have similarly seemed at times to be in a trance of introversion which has inhibited the ablest of their statesmen and vitiated their genuine instinct for union.

It is truly said that western Europe is engaged in an impressive variety and number of efforts to integrate at what the jargonists of cooperation call the functional level. In London this week military representatives of Britain, France, Belgium, the Netherlands, and Luxemburg are talking toward the unified staffing and command of their armed forces, and a United States general is talking with them. Sundry committees and intra-European organizations are allocating some of Europe's coal and steel, trying to restore the free exchange of western currencies, without which continental trade can never be revived, and otherwise grasping some of Europe's prickly economic nettles. Something of the kind is what many Americans and Europeans have had in mind when they applauded western union, and most of the public officials and private experts concerned in these endeavors hold that they represent a quiet advance toward western union and are all that can reasonably be expected.

THE GREAT DELUSION

Life disagrees. They are not western union or anything close to it. We only fool ourselves if we imagine that these efforts, notable though they are, as yet constitute any real progress toward real union. Some of them are not advances toward but evasions of the painful surrender of national sovereignty which the participants in any union must acknowledge. In practically all of the joint engagements so far entered western European governments not only do not acknowledge a surrender of sovereignty; they specifically reject the merest suggestion of such a surrender. At the meeting which established the European organization to handle Marshall aid—an organization widely hailed as a great advance toward union—Ernest Bevin remarked that the question of sovereignty "does not arise." Western Europe will be convincingly on the road to union when a minister in similar circumstances announces that the question of sovereignty does arise and that his government is prepared to lose some of its sovereignty.

Should we, then, abandon the hope and idea of western union in the nearer future? We need not and we should not.

We can fairly ask of western Europe's statesmen what the astute London Economist recently demanded of British statesmen: That they either practice what they feebly preach or cease to preach western union; and we can, in the words of one of Life's European correspondents, "at all times make western union the condition of United States aid and that aid the reward of union." The factors working for and against union in western Europe itself just about cancel each other out, and it looks as though western union will never happen unless we make it happen.

That is taking a great deal upon ourselves, and we must be very sure that we act with the discretion, intelligence, and coherence which so large an undertaking demands. So far, our diplomacy has not displayed these qualities, and its failure to do so has been at least a negative reason for the doldrums into which western union has fallen.

In Europe today there is no belief in a United States belief in western union, for the sufficient reason that our State Department does not believe in it as a current practicality. On its own showing the State Department is at least as obsessed with the admittedly immense difficulties as are the Europeans whom we are supposedly urging toward union. The Economist's previously cited advice to the British Foreign Office, to practice western union or stop pretending, is equally applicable to the United States State Department if it is judged (as it should be) by the impression which it has so far conveyed to continental Europe. The new ECA, which now shares the duty of making and expounding United States policy in Europe, has very recently created an awareness that the United States wants a kind of economic integration which will be a genuine step toward western union and means to use ERP to that end. But in the crucial months which followed the initial impetus of the Marshall program the State Department was responsible for Europe's understanding of United States intent, and Europe was given no proper understanding.

OF LITTLE FAITH

Many of these shortcomings, in Washington and in Europe, could be corrected by an act of faith.

We mean faith in the United States.

When our statesmen and those of Europe grasp the nature and strength of United States purpose; when they come to believe, as they ought now to believe, that the United States is indeed prepared to defend its manifest interests anywhere on earth—then western union and a great deal else will seem simpler and emerge faster. Then it will be seen that such episodes as Congressman TABER'S last-ditch attack on ECA are significant only because they are the aberrations of United States policy and performance in 1948. They are not the norms. The norms are the Marshall speech at Harvard last year, and ERP; they are General Clay in Berlin, and Senator VANDENBERG, and the resolution in which the Senate at his behest declared its fundamental internationalism; and the platforms of the Republicans and the Democrats, who were constrained to express the same internationalism in p-ty terms. Surely the meaning is plain enough. The United States course is set, beyond the power of any party or President or Congress to alter it gravely or for long.

Europe's statesmen do not fully appreciate these facts. Nor do our statesmen. But they will. They must.

REMARKS OF PAUL G. HOFFMAN, ECONOMIC COOPERATION ADMINISTRATOR, BEFORE OEEC IN PARIS

I am happy to have this opportunity to meet you today. The Organization for European Economic Cooperation has been in existence now for approximately 3 months, and our American Economic Cooperation Administration for a little over 3½ months. We are embarked together upon an enterprise—a magnificent enterprise—of cooperative effort on the part of the free peoples of Europe and America for economic recovery in Europe and for the creation and maintenance of the conditions to freedom and peace. Our objectives are inspiring beyond measure. Our responsibilities are staggering. In the 3 years which have elapsed since the war, the free peoples of Europe have undergone and are still undergoing many hardships and privations. They have worked hard and they have accomplished much more than could have been expected in view of the desperate conditions with which they were confronted in 1945. Their achievements and their potentialities underscore our joint responsibilities for carrying through to our objectives.

It is time to take stock in broad and basic terms of our objectives and of our present position in relation to those objectives. Most of that stock taking must be done by you—I can perhaps make a contribution by reporting as accurately as I can upon the present attitude of the American people toward the European recovery program.

A substantial majority of the American people, President Truman, and Mr. Thomas E. Dewey, candidate of the Republican Party, all our great labor organizations, business organizations and farm organizations enthusiastically support the European recovery program. But this should be noted: The support of the American people stems from their belief in your pledge as set forth in the report of the Committee of European Economic Cooperation and later reaffirmed by you in the convention for European economic cooperation. In the convention for European economic cooperation, participating countries pledged themselves to combine their economic strength to join together to make the fullest collective use of their individual capacities and potentialities and to undertake the elaboration and execution of a joint recovery program in order to achieve as soon as possible and maintain a satisfactory level of economic activity without extraordinary outside assistance.

To the American people and I am sure also to yours, this pledge has a very real, a very simple meaning. I should like to focus attention on three elements of the pledge which was made: The promise of joint action and collective use of your capacities and potentialities; the responsibility of each nation to develop an inclusive program in the fields of sound government finance, production, and trade; and the terminal date.

To the American people each of these elements was and remains a determining factor in their decision to embark on the task. It is not hard to explain why.

While there has been a growing conviction that it is in the deepest interests of the United States that Europe should again become a living, workable, and independent economic and political organization, there has at the same time been a growing conviction that this goal cannot be set in the frame of an old picture or traced on an old design. It cannot be brought about by old ways of doing business or through old concepts of how a Nation's interests are best served. New patterns of intra-European trade and exchange must be found and new directions in the use of Europe's resources. These are made necessary and not alone the drastic consequences of two wars, but also by the tides of change that run longer and deeper.

Each participating nation, looking at the operations of its own national life, must face up to readjustments to satisfy the requirements of a new world. These readjustments cannot be made in the course of national action along the old separatist lines. They can only be accomplished if each nation seeks its new goal in terms of the economic capacity and the economic strength of Europe as a whole. America understands that these readjustments are exceedingly difficult and that they require immense efforts by people who have scarcely had time to catch their breath after the ordeal of war.

America also understands that it will not be easy for the participating nations to develop programs to conform to the fundamental readjustments of which I have been speaking but if the recovery we hope for is to be achieved, programs must be so developed. It is the responsibility of each government to develop its own program, and it is the responsibility of each government to work out the mutual adjustments which will be the basis for a master plan.

What seems to me to be called for, and quickly, is such a master plan of action based upon the full recovery of the European economy by June 30, 1952, when American aid terminates. This master program would, of course, be a composite of programs developed by the 16 participating nations, western Germany, and Trieste. I want to make clear as crystal the fact that what I have in mind is a program of action, not a rigid and ponderous 5-year plan which tries to compress the life processes of a nation into a set of formulae and a sheaf of statistical tables. Surely for freedom-loving peoples, no plan must ever lose sight of the creative force of individual human beings and of the extent to which a nation of free men renews itself from unknown and unsuspected sources of strength in the minds and spirits of its men and women.

These 4-year programs of action which I envisage would in part be stated in terms of production in agriculture and in key industries, in part in terms of exports or imports of key commodities but would also include programs for action in such fields as monetary and fiscal policies and trade policies where governments and governments only can take action. In addition to the programs for each of the countries, the OEEC should have a 4-year plan of action of its own calling for specific accomplishments in the direction of making free the movement of goods, services, and peoples among the nations. I would hope that the 4-year program of action would be supplemented by four 1-year programs so that at the end of each year progress could be measured. The steps in the program, the measures which are planned, and the individual accomplishments which are scheduled should be stated clearly and concretely. Such a statement would furnish understandable gages against which every citizen in Europe, and in America too, could measure the degree of progress.

Above all, I would hope that the plans would not be little plans, for as a great American city architect said, "Make no small plans—they have no magic to stir the imagination of man." But plans alone are not enough. They must be supported by faith, and the will to carry through. We believe in you, believe that your greatness lies in the future and not in the past. We are backing up that belief by not only sending you the products of our workmen and farmers but also some of our ablest citizens. The United States special representative for Europe is a former member of our Cabinet. Every head of mission is a man of exceptional qualifications. We are sending you our products and our men because, like you, we have a vital stake in the success of the Marshall plan. It must succeed. In justice to the hopes and efforts of all free peoples, we must make it succeed. Much remains to be done vigorously, and to be done soon. We stand ready, as a partner, to help. But the initiative lies with you.

Keynote Speech of Governor Green, of Illinois, at Republican National Convention

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. C. WAYLAND BROOKS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Tuesday, August 3 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD the excellent keynote speech delivered by the Honorable Dwight H. Green, Governor of the State of Illinois, while acting as temporary chairman of the Republican National Convention at Philadelphia.

An estimate from the Government Printing Office indicates that Governor Green's speech will take more pages of the RECORD than may be printed without an estimate of cost, and that the cost will be $213.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KEYNOTE ADDRESS OF GOV. DWIGHT H. GREEN, OF ILLINOIS, BEFORE THE REPUBLICAN NATIONAL CONVENTION, CONVENTION HALL, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Delegates, Republicans, my fellow Americans, we are here to nominate the thirty-fourth President of the United States.

Here in Philadelphia, the Declaration of Independence proclaimed the freedom of America. We in this convention reaffirm American freedom and independence.

Here in Philadelphia wise men shaped the Constitution of the United States. We in this convention hail once more that immortal charter as the keystone of our faith.

In this sacred atmosphere of great events we meet in solemn convention. This is no place for narrow partisanship. This is not an hour for personal ambition. It is for us to dedicate our common effort to serve the Republic which, long ago, was born in this city.

This is a people's convention. It is of the people, for the people, and by men and women in the service of the people. This convention belongs to the millions to whom radio and television are carrying this message. It belongs to the 145,000,000 Americans in the 48 States and the Territories of this Republic. We send our greetings to freemen everywhere and to men, though in bondage, who long for freedom that is lost. To them we say, we will keep the faith with you wherever you are.

The Republic here established has learned that government best serves its high purpose through the competition of two great political parties. One of those parties has had the responsibilities of executive Government for 16 years. Our Republican Party challenges a further grant of power to that party. It asserts that freedom, stability, justice, and peace demand a new leader for a greater America.

The Republican Party, today as always, is the party of faith in the individual American—of faith in the great destiny of our Republic. We are not going back to any yesterday. All our yesterdays have taught us that we have a duty to tomorrow.

The New Deal party can have no real program, because it is no longer a real party. It mustered its majorities from a fantastic partnership of reaction and radicalism. For years, this strange alliance was held together by bosses, boodle, buncombe and blarney.

Such a party is all things to all men. The New Deal was just that. Its offspring was the sorriest series of broken promises in the history of our Nation.

It promised economy and gave us unproductive spending, unbalanced budgets, oppressive taxes and massive debt. Its deficit spending was first used to build majorities. Then, to save its majorities, it piled up bigger deficits. In final desperation, its only hope is in promissory notes payable in other people's money.

It promised jobs. It gave us bureaucracy. It promised prosperity. It paid in the regimentation of agriculture, labor, management and business, large and small.

It promised efficiency. Its Grecian gift was a Trojan donkey filled with swarming bureaucrats turned loose within our citadel.

It promised peace again and again and again, when it knew war to be inevitable.

Apparently, the only promises that were really kept were those it gave to Joe Stalin.

And now it promises to promise again and again.

As its boat sinks, the skipper's piano still pounds out "Meet Me Next Year in Dreamland."

Like a man, a political party is judged by the company it keeps. The New Deal Party invited the lunatic fringe to share its feast of power. They stayed a long, long time—the men who came to dinner.

The New Deal lived with those radicals in unholy intimacy for many years. When Wallace departed, it begged him to return: "Henry, come home and all will be forgiven." The merry men of Wallace were not fired. They quit. That the New Deal Party was never a legitimate majority is now proved by the fact that it cannot win without them. Its dying hope is, win without Wallace. Our answer is, it couldn't win with Wallace.

Indeed, the great flop of the recent western invasion has made it clear that the New Deal can't win with Truman. Let me add that they can't win if they drop Truman. For whatever candidate is nominated by the Democratic convention here next month must run on the New Deal record, which now is discredited by the American people.

Human institutions have human faults. The Republican Party is a human institution. But it has never harbored anything like the motley collection of embittered failures, back-alley revolutionaries, and parlor anarchists with which the New Deal has disgraced the party of Jefferson and Jackson.

That group of crackpots was never competent to hold responsible office. The lunatic fringe is neither competent to govern nor to let others govern.

For 16 years the Republican Party was out of the control of Congress. It earned the right to return to that control 2 years ago.

For 16 years it has been excluded from the executive branch of the Government of the United States. The Republican Party has earned the right to return to the Presidency.

The Republican Party's vitality and integrity were shown again in those years when defeats drove it back to the county line. But it did not stay there. The Republican Party was not founded to elect sheriffs. It was founded to elect Presidents.

The Republican Party began its return by giving clean government in small cities and communities. It recaptured the governorships of many States 10 years ago, and because it gave competent government it won repeated reelections in those States.

It slowly regained its influence in Congress. Finally, 2 years ago, it was restored to power in both the Senate and the House. It made promises then. And it kept those promises.

It has administered its trusts with integrity and efficiency. It has been a faithful steward in lesser things. It has earned the right to greater things. It has the stuff it takes to serve a greater America.

We ask only to serve. We say to the American people: Rebuke us when we fail, give us measure for measure what we deserve. But let us serve as Americans should be served.

Republican Congressmen promised to free American economy from regimentation, and they did it. They restored both the fact and the good name of American free enterprise.

Republican Congressmen promised to balance the budget, and they did it. They promised to reduce Federal spending, and they did it. Over the outcries of bureaucrats they cut between two and three billion dollars from New Deal bureaus.

They promised to reduce Federal income taxes, and they did it. They did it over three Presidential vetoes. They promised to increase the take-home pay of the head-of-the-house in every American home, and they did it. The New Dealers opposed the tax cut on the false ground that more money in the people's pockets would increase spending and inflation. We Republicans believe that more money in the people's pockets is good for the people and good for the country.

We know that more take-home pay is the first concrete help given the American people to meet the hight cost of living. The second is increased production, resulting from the stimulation which the tax cut has given to investment and enterprise.

In 1946 the Republican Party promised to correct the chaotic conditions in labor relations which were paralyzing American production and recovery. They did that, too.

The Republican Congress relentlessly has exposed waste, inefficiency, and corruption in the Federal administration. Its investigations uncovered the scandals of the Meyers aviation contracts and the Pauley grain deals.

The American people owe a great debt to the Eightieth Congress. It has restored faith in representative government.

The Republican Party was created nearly a century ago to stop the spread of slavery in America. It vindicated that principle. When it takes office in 1949, the heart of its foreign policy will be to check the spread of slavery in the world. It will vindicate that principle, too.

We learned, long ago, that the way to stop slavery is to build more freedom. That is what we propose to do at home and in the world.

Today, tonight, America is losing the peace. The blood and treasure which we so willingly gave are being wasted by confused and incompetent foreign policy.

We fought for justice and freedom, but almost a dozen nations have lost their freedom, and millions of men and women have been despoiled of their property, robbed of their liberty, driven from their homes, or murdered in cold blood. In a rich world, Europeans and Asiatics are facing starvation. Civilization itself is crumbling in nations which over the centuries have been leaders in culture and progress.

We fought to end dictatorship, but despairing peoples are bowing to tyranny because they can find no hope in liberty.

We fought to make America safe from attack in the Pacific. Japan is crushed, but Russia holds the Kuriles and northern Korea, dominates Manchuria, and literally has the power and position to endanger Alaska and the Pacific coast.

We fought to remove the threat of war from the American home. Now the young men who won the war and their younger brothers face a new call to arms.

The truth is that New Deal diplomacy threw away victory long before our fighters had won it. It permitted the Russians to take Berlin. At Tehran and Yalta one New Deal President agreed to Russia's domination of Poland and much of China. At Potsdam, another New Deal President confirmed the Soviets' domination of the satellite countries and their sole right to occupy eastern Germany and eastern Austria.

Their futile policy of appeasement of Communist Russia set back the clock of Polish freedom two centuries and paved the way for the destruction of the republic of Czechoslovakia. Their political maneuvering with the Palestine issue, their failure to insist upon the fulfillment of long-standing pledges, was a tragic farce which culminated in war and bloodshed.

What will history say of this wholesale record of bad judgment? History will say that the inept leadership of two Presidents permitted Russia to slash Europe in half, prostrated European economy, imposed upon America the burden of supporting western Europe, and lost us a stable peace.

The cold war we face today is the lusty child of the New Deal's rendezvous with communism. That rendezvous began with recognition of the Soviets in 1933. It continued with the socialistic compromises with communism preached by Henry Wallace and the vote-catching compromises engineered by Harry Hopkins. It reached its tragic climax in those years when we supinely suffered communism to master half of Europe.

The New Deal cannot escape this indictment by double talk about a bipartisan foreign policy. The Republican Party was not present at Tehran, Yalta, or Potsdam.

Real bipartisanship shares the making of decisions as well as the meeting of the consequences. The New Deal's idea of bipartisanship is that one party launches the ship and the other salvages the wreck. It is high time to make this fact clear. On the rare occasions when Republicans have been consulted, blunder and disaster have been avoided.

The Republican Party has a very definite program for an American foreign policy. That program was created at the Mackinac conference in 1943 and confirmed in our platform in 1944. It is a simple and clear pledge to work for a lasting peace based on justice and freedom and to preserve the strength of America. We adopted the Atlantic Charter—that abandoned waif, forsaken during the New Deal's tryst with communism.

The Republican Party in Congress has supported its own principles of international cooperation in full measure. Republicans helped to create the United Nations, and have done their best to make it work. Republican Congressmen voted funds for foreign relief and recovery because they wanted to check the spread of communism and to aid freedom in Europe.

Our next step to save the peace and to achieve the goals of Republican foreign policy is to elect a Republican President of the United States.

A Republican President will man the State Department with personnel who will make our diplomacy respected in every corner of the world. It is an old and tried Republican tradition that American influence shall be felt wherever America has a legitimate duty in the world outside our gates. It was Lincoln's Secretary of State, William H. Seward, who held off European intervention in our Civil War. It was a Republican—Seward—who reaffirmed the Monroe Doctrine in Mexico where foreign despots had seated Maximilian on a paper throne. It was Lincoln's Seward who saw our great stake in the Pacific and who purchased Alaska and sought the annexation of Hawaii.

It was another Republican Secretary of State, James G. Blaine, who originated pan-Americanism and who created the policy of reciprocal trade.

It was a Republican President and Secretary of State who made Hawaii a part of this Nation and an outpost of defense in the Pacific. It was Republican Secretary of State John Hay who opened the doors to China. It was a Republican President and Secretary of State who tried to check Japanese aggression at its outset in 1931.

These are not the marks of a timid foreign policy. They are the wise tradition of a nation growing in world-wide influence.

Seward, Blaine, Hay, Root, Hughes, and Kellogg—these were the makers of real American world policy. Merely to recall them is to blast the New Deal falsehood that the Republican Party is timid or provincial in its foreign policy. It is the New Deal Party's retreat before the iron curtain in Europe and Asia which threatens to isolate America.

The Republican Party proposes to restore the respect and confidence of the world in American diplomacy.

Intelligence and firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, can yet save the peace and answer the prayer in which the whole world joins.

We shall not deceive you, as did the Democrats before two world wars, by crying peace when there was no peace. We not only hate war but we shall do nothing to provoke war; rather we shall pursue every avenue to peace. We make in this convention a real covenant for peace.

With our best will and our best skill we must meet the challenge of communism. Communism is a world-wide infection of false doctrine. It grows upon darkness and poverty and hunger. Our defense at home and abroad is not in arms alone, but in every means that builds for freedom and human welfare, or that propagates the truth concerning economic well-being and personal freedom under our republican form of government.

Our best answer to communism will be a sound America, in which all the people shall enjoy the prosperity produced by our free economy, and which shall offer effective cooperation to free men throughout the world. A Republican President will provide that answer. He will provide it in the honest and efficient administration of our domestic affairs and in the management of our foreign relations.

The Congress has voted a European recovery program because it believes that the free nations of the world can grow in strength and unity—so that they can defend and support themselves. This is an expensive plan and we have a right to expect a real return on our investment—a real return in peace and security. It must not be merely a continuation of lend-lease and give.

Such a plan requires sound principles in its administration. Certainly it should be no refuge for fugitive pay rollers from New Deal bureaus which have been abolished by Republican economy.

Above the Administrator of that plan and above the Secretary of State there is a crying need of a Chief Executive who had administered something more than a county board of supervisors under the shadow of a corrupt political machine.

Speed and efficiency are absolutely essential to the success of our European aid. We cannot permanently support the world. Our task is to put the world on its feet and not on our back. Atlas, who was said to support the world, is still only a myth.

The great but limited strength of America is not a myth. It must be constantly built up at home and it must not be overextended abroad. Upon that strength depends the peace and security, not only of the world but of the United States of America.

The New Deal administration has failed to preserve that strength. It has neglected the fundamentals of defense, despite the willing appropriation of billions by a Republican Congress. It has surrendered supremacy in the air. It has neglected the acquisition of sea and air bases in two hemispheres which are essential to our safety. It disbanded an Army in being before it planned an Army to be.

It has had little to suggest in meeting new emergencies other than new plans to shackle and regiment American business. It can never learn that only an unregimented economy can be strong and only a strong economy can keep us free.

The New Deal administration has been a tragic failure in labor relations. Again and again it has blundered to the very edge of national paralysis and then has had no solution except Government control.

A body of law does not grow in a day. In many of the relationships in economic life, such as those between buyer and seller, lender and borrower, shipper and carrier, it took generations to build mutual respect and stability on a basis of law.

Labor relations present a new challenge. The cardinal principles of industrial peace are high levels of real wages, continuity of employment, efficient mass production, health and security in employment, full protection against monopoly in any form, and a free market for goods. Upon these principles we can build the ultimate temple of industrial peace—big enough for labor, management, and ownership working together for a greater America.

The present Republican Congress has made a real start toward labor peace by enacting the Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947. The door is open—and the door must be open—to the full consideration of every criticism of this law, and every proposal for its change which may come from labor, from management, or from the public. Whatever changes may be made in its provisions eventually, this act will stand as a proof of the courage of its sponsors and the willingness of the Republican Party to deal fearlessly with every vital problem.

The President we choose here, and the next Republican Congress, will proceed to deal fearlessly and concretely with every problem confronting America. They will meet the fundamental needs of American farmers and American consumers for the conservation of the fertility of our soils, for the production and control of surpluses of basic food crops, and for the maintenance of the prosperity and buying power of rural America, which is always the barometer of our national prosperity.

The Republican President and the Republican Congress will deal realistically with the problems of housing, of the strengthening of social security, and of the full protection of the public health without resort to the dreary and inadequate regimentation of state medicine.

Republican leadership will discharge, as fully as a great nation can, our tremendous obligation to our veterans. We shall never seek, as the New Dealers did in 1933, to achieve economy by voiding or trimming our payments to sick and disabled veterans. Rather we shall seek constantly to give all veterans new and greater opportunities to build happy and useful lives.

Republican leadership will carry out the mandate of the people to end the pampering of Communists in America. We shall ferret out and drive out every red and pink on the Federal pay rolls. We shall guard carefully the freedom of speech and thought of every American, but we shall expose every subversive individual and organization. We shall change the social climate which has permitted foreign exponents of Marxism to bask in the profitable sunshine of publicity while they abuse our American hospitality.

The Republican President we choose here will believe in the sound principles of efficiency and economy which the Congress has espoused. He will conduct a thorough examination of every department, agency, and commission; he will remove every pay roll parasite living off the taxes paid by American producers; he will free the American people from the costly burden of the New Deal bureaucracy.

The Republican President will live by the Constitution. He will live by its letter and its spirit. He will not try to circumvent it by tricks or stratagems or secret deals with foreign powers. He will respect the constitutional powers of the Congress; he will never tamper with our courts.

Under a Republican President we shall restore to our local and State governments their rightful authority to exercise the home rule which has always been the cornerstone of our liberties.

Above all, Republican leadership will preserve the freedom and initiative of our American economy. It was the good fortune of Americans to find a country rich beyond measure in resources. Americans on a virgin continent achieved a civilization, an agricultural and industrial production, a general distribution of wealth and well being, a standard of health and education, an emancipation of women, an openness of opportunity, which have never been equaled in the 6,000 years of the world's recorded history.

It is for the Republican Party to realize, to point out, that America is only at the threshold of its material destiny, the foothills of its glory.

Our party and our Government have been an effective part of that development. The westward march of progress goes on from frontier to frontier. We must further the expansion of industry in the West, in building a great commerce in the Pacific, and in promoting the prosperity and usefulness of the resources of our Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, now on the threshold of statehood.

The triumphal march of inventive genius must proceed. In the half century of my own lifetime, the daily life of every American has been enriched beyond comprehension by the miracles of the laboratory and the inventor's attic.

Let us not forget that these achievements have not been the products of an overpowering government. They have taken place under economic freedom. No Socialist or Communist government has produced anything even relatively comparable.

These productive marvels are not the mere windfalls of the fortune that gave us great natural resources. Nor are they the products of a superior mind or race. They are the products of honest work, of devoted service, of thrift, energy, courage, and faith.

And all we have accomplished can be just a sample of what is ahead. The inventions, the processes, the formulas we learned in war can be made to serve mankind in peace. Particularly the science of nuclear physics, which produced the atomic bomb with its fearsome possibilities of world destruction, offers hope for tremendous progress in our quest for new sources of power, and in our endless war on disease.

The results of our inventions and research are the visible fruits of American character. But a national character is made of more than material achievements.

We have built standards of justice. We have learned to live together. We have all but obliterated the harsh lines of class. We have learned to respect virtue and ability wherever they may be.

Our Republican leadership will strengthen the character of America. Its program will give new meaning to the Bill of Rights. It will replace the New Deal's shadow-boxing on the issue of civil liberties with sound measures to make America, more truly than ever before, the happy land of opportunity.

A political party should be the ever-sensitive channel through which the will, the hopes and the ideals of the American people direct and control their Government. A party is what the ether is to the radio, the power line to electrical energy, the ocean to sea-going commerce. Unlike the single-party system of communism or fascism, American parties are the servants, not the masters of the people.

The Republican Party of 1948 in this convention is well aware of that principle.

It should seek—it should always seek—the true answer to this question: What have the American people a right to demand of their Government?

The answer of our party to this question should not be an effort to please all. That answer, in the long run, pleases none.

We can find the true answer in the best qualities that men have a right to expect of themselves. What are the things that make a man's life worth while?

Years ago, a great American spiritual leader answerd this. He laid down three essentials of a philosophy of life.

He said that the things worth while in a man's life are character, influence, and happiness. To be what we ought to be, to count as we can, to enjoy what we may—these, he said, are really worth while.

These can well be what the people expect of their government. For a nation is many men. Its character is the best there is in all its people. Its power is their cemented strength. Its happiness is their happiness. Its destiny is their destiny.

Let us, therefore, expect of our Government these three personal essentials: Character, influence, happiness.

We begin with character. The very core of a government should be honesty and integrity. Is it true to itself? Is it true to its people? Does it cultivate the virtues of truth, industry, and fair dealing?

An honest nation deserves honest government through an honest party.

It expects its government to tell the truth and all the truth; to keep its accounts as honest men keep their accounts; to make no promises it cannot keep; to keep those that it has made; and to match material with moral character.

To bring that sort of character to government is the pledge of the Republican Party.

A sound influence is the next characteristic that the people have a right to expect of their Government. A nation does not live unto itself alone. America is one of a great community of nations. American industry, culture, science, commerce, and, in war, its arms, have profoundly influenced the world at large. Its influence, however, is and must be unselfish. It must seek no imperial power and no foot of another nation's territory.

True, the greatness of America raises high expectations everywhere. And the influence of America must justify those expectations wherever or whenever they are legitimate. It must teach by example fair dealings among nations and between nations and their people. America must not in the future—as our present leaders have done so tragically in the recent past—squander our influence in the support of reaction, exploitation, and tyranny.

Our Nation must count as it can. Its great institutions, public and private, that have extended health, science, and education, must continue to enrich the world. It must teach the miracle of American productive know-how wherever it can. It must join in all common efforts to destroy disease, superstition, and intolerance. In a world of neighbors, it must be a trusted and helpful friend.

Finally, the happiness of its people is the supreme purpose of government. That is what Aristotle, the father of philosophy, wrote 2,000 years ago. That is what Jefferson in this city wrote into the Declaration of Independence—"the pursuit of happiness."

That objective implies the right of a man to seek a full life and to grow in mind and spirit. It means the right of a child to be protected against disease and ignorance. It means the right of a man or woman to work where and when he can best serve. It means the right of a farmer to plant when and what he chooses.

Freedom is the basis of happiness. Freedom to speak and write, to vote, to travel, and to worship as a man's spirit prompts him to worship.

Those rights are the marks which distinguish our Republic. While that Republic stands, Americans will be free, and ours will be a happy nation. But let us keep that Republic safe.

We have, as Benjamin Franklin said here in Philadelphia, a republic, if we can keep it.

The American people, despite storm and stress, despite assaults from enemies within and without, have kept our Republic.

Let this convention, eight score years later, give our Republic the leadership it deserves.

These three—national character, world influence, and a people's happiness—these are the concerns of this Republican Party.

This is the challenge that generations of free Americans offer to the Republican Party and this convention. This is the challenge of men everywhere who are weary of war and heavily laden with tyranny. This is the challenge of our youth who ask a better chance to live. This is the true voice of America.

Above all, the enemy of happiness is war. Peace is its first essential.

Two generations have been asked to give their youth to the grime and blood of conflict. The happiness of another generation hangs in the balance. Those boys who gave their chance of life and happiness are our reminder of our duty to build a better peace:

"To what avail, alas, to what avail
If we resume the old futilities;
Have mercy on our souls if we should fail."

Peace cannot be kept without government. Upon those chosen by this convention must rest that awful responsibility.

May God grant that this convention meet this challenge with truth and courage and vision. By God's grace, may we choose wisely and well.

Declaration on States' Rights by Southern Democratic Convention

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAMES O. EASTLAND
OF MISSISSIPPI
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Tuesday, August 3 (legislative day of Wednesday, July 28), 1948

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Appendix of the RECORD a resolution adopted at the Southern Democratic Convention at Birmingham, Ala., on July 17, 1948, on the subject of States' rights.

There being no objection, the declaration was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DECLARATION ON STATES' RIGHTS

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., July 17.—Following is the declaration of principles reported by the resolutions committee of the States' rights meeting today:

"We affirm that a political party is an instrumentality for effectuating the principles upon which the party is founded; that a platform of principles is a solemn covenant with the people and with the members of the party; that no leader of the party, in temporary power, has the right or privilege to proceed contrary to the fundamental principles of the party, or the letter or spirit of the Constitution of the United States; that to act contrary to these principles is a breach of faith, a usurpation of power, and a forfeiture of the party name and party leadership.

"We believe that racial and religious minorities should be protected in their rights guaranteed by the Constitution, but the bold defiance of the Constitution in selfish appeals to such groups for the sake of political power forges the chains of slavery of such minorities by destroying the only bulwark of protection against tyrannical majorities. The protection of the constitutional rights of a minority does not justify or require the destruction of constitutional rights of the majority. The destruction of constitutional limitations on the power of the central government threatens to create a totalitarian state and to destroy individual liberty in America."

BILL OF RIGHTS CITED

"We believe that the protection of the American people against the onward march of totalitarian government requires a faithful observance of article X of the American Bill of Rights which provides that: 'The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.'

"We direct attention to the fact that the first platform of the Democratic Party, adopted in 1840, resolved that: 'Congress has no power under the Constitution to interfere with or control the domestic institutions of the several States, and that such States are the sole and proper judges of everything appertaining to their own affairs not prohibited by the Constitution.' Such pronouncement is the cornerstone of the Democratic Party.

"A long train of abuses and usurpations of power by unfaithful leaders who are alien to the Democratic Parties of the States here represented has become intolerable to those who believe in the preservation of constitutional government and individual liberty in America."

COURT DOMINATION CHARGED

"The executive department of the Government is promoting the gradual but certain growth of a totalitarian state by domination and control of a politically minded Supreme Court. As examples of the threat to our form of goverment, the executive department, with the aid of the Supreme Court, has asserted national dominion and control of submerged oil-bearing lands in California, schools in Oklahoma and Missouri, primary elections in Texas, South Carolina, and Louisiana, restrictive covenants in New York and the District of Columbia, and other jurisdictions, as well as religious instruction in Illinois. By asserting paramount Federal rights in these instances, a totalitarian concept has been promulgated which threatens the integrity of the States and the basic rights of their citizens.

"We have repeatedly remonstrated with the leaders of the national organization of our party but our petitions, entreaties, and warnings have been treated with contempt. The latest response to our entreaties was a Democratic convention in Philadelphia rigged to embarrass and humiliate the South. This alleged Democratic assembly called for a civil-rights law that would eliminate segregation of every kind from all American life, prohibit all forms of discrimination in private employment, in public and private instruction and administration and treatment of students; in the operation of public and private health facilities; in all transportation, and require equal access to all places of public accommodation for persons of all races, colors, creeds, and national origin.

"This infamous and iniquitous program calls for the reorganization of the Civil Rights Section of the Department of Justice with a substantial increase in a bureaucratic staff to be devoted exclusively to the enforcement of the civil-rights program; the establishment within the FBI of a special unit of investigators and a police state in a totalitarian, centralized, bureaucratic government."

POLICE STATE SEEN

"This convention hypocritically denounced totalitarianism abroad but unblushingly proposed and approved it at home. This convention would strengthen the grip of a police state upon a liberty-loving people by the imposition of penalties upon local public officers who failed or refused to act in accordance with its ideas in suppressing mob violence.

"We point out that if a foreign power undertook to force upon the people of the United States the measures advocated by the Democratic convention in Philadelphia, with respect to civil rights, it would mean war and the entire Nation would resist such effort.

"The convention that insulted the South in the party platform advocated giving the Virgin Islands and other dependencies of the United States 'the maximum degree of local self-government.' When an effort was made to amend this part of the platform so as to make it read that the party favored giving the Virgin Islands and the several States the maximum degree of local self-government, the amendment adding the words 'these several States' was stricken out and the sovereign States were denied the rights that the party favors giving the Virgin Islands."

POINT TO VOTING RECORD

"We point out that the South, with clocklike regularity, has furnished the Democratic Party approximately 50 percent of the votes necessary to nominate a President every 4 years for nearly a century. In 1920 the only States in the Union that went Democratic were the 11 Southern States. Notwithstanding this rugged loyalty to the party, the masters of political intrigue now allow Republican States in which there is scarcely a Democratic officeholder to dominate and control the party and fashion its policies.

"As Democrats who are irrevocably committed to democracy as defined and expounded by Thomas Jefferson, Andrew Jackson, and Woodrow Wilson, and who believe that all necessary steps must be taken for its preservation, we declare to the people of the United States as follows:

"1. We believe that the Constitution of the United States is the greatest charter of human liberty ever conceived by the mind of man.

"2. We oppose all efforts to invade or destroy the rights vouchsafed by it to every citizen of this Republic.

"3. We stand for social and economic justice, which, we believe, can be vouchsafed to all citizens only by a strict adherence to our Constitution and the avoidance of any invasion or destruction of the constitutional rights of the States and individuals. We oppose the totalitarian, centralized, bureaucratic government and the police state called for by the platforms adopted by the Democratic and Republican conventions."

RACE SEGREGATION SUPPORTED

"4. We stand for the segregation of the races and the racial integrity of each race; the constitutional right to choose one's associates; to accept private employment without governmental interference, and to earn one's living in any lawful way. We oppose the elimination of segregation, employment by Federal bureaucrats called for by the misnamed civil-rights program. We favor home rule, local self-government, and a minimum interference with individual rights.
